Every American and every other human being who is interested in the victory of the democratic armies fighting Germany should see this picture. While some might call it a propaganda picture and others a war picture, at the same time the least that can be said is that it provides an excellent entertainment from all angles.

The accompanying article is an illustration of how MOTOGRAPHY purposes to handle big pictures in view of the abandonment of its Review department in favor of "What the Picture Did for Me." Whenever a really great picture is produced, MOTOGRAPHY will dignify it with a special article. But when the reader wants a "review" of this picture, or any other picture, he will get it in "What the Picture Did for Me." And he will not be getting a one-man opinion but a dozen-man opinion. Furthermore, he will get one that is based on dollars and cents instead of on the forecast of a writer.

Acting is Exeellent

The battle scenes and trench scenes are done in a very realistic manner and the cast of characters, which includes Empey, Lois Meredith and James Morrison, has contributed about as good a brand of screen acting as has ever been done.

Giving a brief synopsis of the action, the story begins with Empey's honorable discharge from the United States army while serving on the border. Shortly after returning to civil life, the Lusitania is sunk, and one of the victims happens to be Empey's aged nurse, who had served him faithfully in his childhood.

When he learns that the kaiser has perpetrated such a deed, he can no longer restrain his fighting instinct and sails for England. There he enlists in the British army and "does his bit," "goes over the top," etc.

Romance Is Unfolded

Later, after being wounded and invalided home, while doing Red Cross work, recruiting, and other things toward promoting the cause in which he had been wounded, he makes the acquaintance of Helen Lloyd (Lois Meredith), who is also interested in Red Cross work.

While visiting at Miss Lloyd's home he meets her brother, who might be termed a slacker or a coward. Also, he comes in contact with one Friederich Von Emden, one of the kaiser's emissaries working in this country. Empey, Miss Lloyd and Von Emden form the triangle about which the fictional part of the story is woven.

Later Von Emden after succeeding in having Miss Lloyd, with whom he has fallen in love, be the innocent perpetrator of a successful plot to blow up American munitions, abducts her aboard a submarine and transplants her behind the German lines in Europe.

Hero Goes to Europe

In the meantime, her brother, Albert Lloyd (James Morrison), has joined the American army. Empey also is in the United States army, having been commissioned a captain. Both go to Europe. It so happens that Albert Lloyd is attached to Empey's company and during a violent action between the American forces and the enemy, Lloyd loses his nerve and deserts. He is finally brought back before Captain Owen (Empey), who orders him court martialed.

While in prison behind the American lines, the Germans storm the American troops, and Lloyd's prison is blown down. Seeing his company in danger of being annihilated, his manhood regains complete control of his actions and he jumps in the fight in time to operate an American machine gun and save his company from disaster. However his gallant redemption of himself costs him his life.

Hero Kills Von Emden

Empey is captured and when Von Emden, who is directing the enemy forces, learns of it, he orders Empey brought before him to witness his marriage to Helen Lloyd, which he is about to force upon his American captive. The end of the picture, however, shows Empey having ample revenge upon Von Emden for all the sorrows he has caused him. After killing Von Emden in a duel he escapes to the American lines with the girl, whom he has long since fallen in love with in America.

"Over the Top" should be a sure-fire box office attraction for every exhibitor. The topic is timely, the story is a thriller and the acting of every member of the cast is superb, and finally, the picture throbs with wholesome Americanism.

Expand "Blue Bird" Campaign

In addition to the big advertising and exploitation campaign now being conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the new Artcraft special, "The Blue Bird," a gigantic direct-by-mail appeal to the public has been started. One of the most tremendous campaigns of its kind, this drive should bring about immediate returns to the exhibitors showing this production from Maeterlinck's world famous masterpiece.

Thousands of appeals are now being sent out daily from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters in New York in large and small communities throughout the country, going to the most influential people in every town. The mailing list includes names from the Official Register and Directory of Women's Clubs in America, county and town superintendents, presidents of boards of education and secretaries, city superintendents, principals of high schools, presidents, superintendents or other officials in all universities and colleges, preparatory schools, colleges for women and "prep" schools for girls, "prep" schools for boys, non-military and military schools, normal and teachers' training schools, music, art, elocution, oratory and dramatic art schools.

The literature brings out the particular timeliness of Maeterlinck's great message of happiness and directs its appeal to those who are desirous of seeing a "better" film. The nature of "The Blue Bird" as an entertainment makes it particularly appropriate for exhibition in conjunction with all schools, colleges and civic as well as social institutions. It's great message to women is also expected to attract unusual support from women's clubs.

Paper Conducts Novel Contest

The Cincinnati Post is conducting a contest for the pointing out of inconsistencies in motion pictures. Free tickets are given by managers of many of the theatres to readers who notice inconsistencies. Many interesting observances are being made. I. Libson, manager of four down-town houses, reports that quite a number of tickets have been given away.

"The Woman in the Web" Now Before Public

First Episode Replete with Thrills, Among Which Is Heroine's Escape Over a Chain of Human Bodies

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, announces that the first episode of "The Woman in the Web" is being shown in all parts of the country following its release April 8.

The picture introduces a new serial combination made up of two young players already well known throughout the United States and Canada. They are Hedda Nova, the beautiful young Russian actress, and J. Frank Glendon, star of many O. Henry features.

"The Woman in the Web" again presents Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, in the role of author, he and Cyrus Townsend Brady having collaborated in the writing. They also were the authors of "Vengeance—and the Woman," the sensational sequel to Vitagraph's other great serial, "The Fighting Trail," and the success which has attended their previous effort is a fair guarantee that "The Woman in the Web" will be an extraordinary offering.

David Smith, brother of Albert E. Smith, directed the first episode, which bears the title of "Caught in the Web," and on several of the other episodes had Paul Hurst for his aid. The latter part of the serial was made under direction of Mr. Hurst, Mr. Smith having been placed in charge of a big Blue Ribbon feature.

As in the other recent Vitagraph serials, the supreme efforts of the authors and directors have been to provide original situations calling for a degree of skill and daring on the part of the players. In this they seem to have succeeded, for in the first episode, which was screened for the trade press in advance, thrills come in rapid sequence and the spectator's interest is gripped from the very opening of the story.

Hedda Nova, who scored her greatest success in "The Bar Sinister," "The Sign Invisible" and other independent pictures, is one of the most beautiful girls who have come to the screen. She is an excellent actress and a girl of consummate daring, this being indicated in the very first episode when she flees from the roof of one building to another across a human bridge, formed by half a dozen men linking their bodies together. Some of the riding she does, mounted on a spirited horse, is the most thrilling that has been seen.

J. Frank Glendon, remembered for his work in Metro, Fox, Gaumont and the Vitagraph O. Henry series, is a product of the Montana range, a master horseman and a daring athlete. In the first episode he leaps fifty feet from the top of a tower into a tree.

"The Woman in the Web" is a "different" serial in theme and treatment from anything which has gone before. It has the world-wide espionage system of Germany as part of its background and it introduces features of many varieties, including a collision at sea in which one boat cuts another in two, and the destruction of a fast-flying train.

David Smith to Direct "Baree, Son of Kazan"

Vitagraph Picturization of Noted Curwood Story to Feature Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces that David Smith, his brother, will direct Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in "Baree, the Son of Kazan," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon Feature founded on James Oliver Curwood's famous story, at Vitagraph's western studio in Hollywood. Mr. Smith has been directing Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon in "The Woman in the Web," Vitagraph's latest 15-chapter adventure serial.

Recognized as one of photoplay's ablest directors, David Smith came to moving pictures with Vitagraph after a successful career as stage manager and business manager in stock. His first connection with Vitagraph was as scenario writer in the Brooklyn studio, next becoming a director and going to the Pacific coast.

He has directed a score of Vitagraph's most successful productions, notably "The Dangers of Doris" series, "Her Gethsemane," "Dr. Blinn's Repentance," "Barriers of Prejudice," "Nobody Home," "The Hoyden," "John, Tom, Little Bear" and the O. Henry pictures: "The Enchanted Kiss," "The Law and Order," "A Dollar's Worth," "The Two Renegades" and "The Fourth at Salvador."

Mr. Smith is enthusiastic regarding the production of "Baree, the Son of Kazan" and has planned a practical method of portraying his visualization of the story, which differs little from that of the author, who gives such a real and appealing story of Baree, part dog and part wolf. The scenario, adapted by Ronald Bradbury, well-known Vitagraph player, furnishes strong heart interest for the dog and also weaves a powerful and gripping dramatic story around the principals of the cast.

Mr. Smith says he will retain much of the atmosphere of the book and will discard little of the story. Five dogs will be used to portray Baree, as he is shown first as a puppy and throughout the stages of development until a grown dog.

"The Girl From Beyond" Released April 15

New Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Is Adaptation of Cyrus Townsend Brady's Widely Read Novel, "A Texan Romance"

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph company, announces the release on April 15 of "The Girl from Beyond," adapted from Cyrus Townsend Brady's widely read novel, "A Texan Romance," and starring Nel Shipman with Alfred Whitman.

The scenes present a variety of exterior and interior settings from the palatial Eastern home of a young Texan millionaire to the oil fields of his native state.

The picture, which was directed by William Wolbert, opens with an unusual situation which is said to take an immediate grip upon the interest of the spectator. In a beautifully furnished boudoir is seen a transparent Japanese screen. Behind it, in silhouette, is the figure of a woman in negligee. She lifts her lips to a small vial and a moment later crumples up on a chair. A maid raps on the door of the room and, receiving no response, enters, passes behind the screen and makes an appalling discovery.

The brother of the girl, the young Texan, is summoned at once. He finds the inert figure of his sister and on the dressing table a note telling him that a man was the cause of her suicide. He sets about the punishment of the culprit and in so doing is imprisoned for five years on the charge of criminal assault with intent to kill.

Upon his release he goes back to his oil fields where under another name he commences a career of degradation. He is lifted from his sordid rut by admiration for a girl, only to find that he is not capable of inspiring her respect. Through a series of incidents, woven by fate, the man and the woman are brought to understand their own mistakes and to set about the search for happiness.

Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, who have been gaining popularity in such Vitagraph plays as "The Home Trail," "The Wild Strain" and "Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers," are said to be provided with even greater opportunities for a display of their dramatic talents than in their previous features.

Throughout the picture, Director Wolbert employed many new photagraphic effects, similar to that of the opening scene. One of the most impressive takes place at twilight in the oil regions, with the great scaffolding of the wells towering black against the sky.

"A Pair of Sixes" Catches On

George K. Spoor's latest feature production, "A Pair of Sixes," featuring Taylor Holmes, is now playing to first run houses in several of the largest cities of the country. An unprecedented number of bookings is reported by the Kleine releasing offices and the picture bids fair to be even more popular than the stage play which had a long run on Broadway and later throughout the United States.

The play, written by Edward Peple, is unusually well adapted for the screen, and is declared by critics to be the best of the Taylor Holmes' pictures. There is an all star cast and Taylor Holmes is ably assisted by Maude Eburne, Alice Mann and Robert Conness.

Maude Eburne, who played the same part in the original stage production, is one of the strongest characters

"Rich Man, Poor Man" Has Drawing Power

New Marguerite Clark Picture to Follow the Story in Magazine and Book and Production on Stage

IN these days of modern exhibition, when the theatre owner scans each release for its box office value, the Paramount picture starring Marguerite Clark, "Rich Man, Poor Man," released April 22, bids fair to be seen upon the screen under auspicious circumstances.

Marguerite Clark admittedly has a large following of admirers and the vehicle in which she makes her next appearance is known to millions. "Rich Man, Poor Man" was published serially in the Saturday Evening Post, after which it was issued in book form and extensively advertised. Maximilian Foster was the author.

The dramatic value of the story appealed to George Broadhurst, the playwright and producer, and he adapted it to the speaking stage with eminent success. The motion picture version follows the stage piece.

The picture was staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, who has produced a long string of successful Paramounts in the past.

In the supporting cast are found names well known to Paramount audiences, including Frederick Warde, the tragedian who was at one time one of the most prominent figures on the American stage, and Richard Barthelmess, George Backus, J. W. Herbert, Donald Clayton, William Wadsworth, Augusta Anderson, Ottola Nesmith and Mary Davis.

This combination provides exceptional advertising possibilities

Triangle Makes a New Japanese Drama

"The Loyalty of Taro San" Features Jack Livingston and Jack Abbe, Oriental Juvenile—Other Productions Move Ahead Fast

A NEW Japanese-American drama, "The Loyalty of Taro San," has been put into production during the last week at the Triangle Culver City studios. This is an adaptation of the story by the same name by E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband," the recent Triangle release featuring Darrell Foss.

Frank Borzage is directing the picture. The action opens in the Land of Cherry Blossoms, where Taro San, a rickshaw driver, attracts the attention of an American lawyer, who becomes so interested in him that he takes him to America. Then Taro San's loyalty is tested and he saves his employer and benefactor from a life of sorrow and bitter regret.

Jack Livingston, who has appeared with Pauline Starke in "Innocent's Progress" and with Margery Wilson in "The Hard Rock Breed," has the role of the lawyer. Jack Abbe, the Japanese juvenile who was seen in "Her American Husband," is Taro San. Maud Wayne of the comedy forces will make her initial dramatic appearance in this picture as Livingston's leading woman.

Jack Conway has nearly completed "Her Decision," in which Gloria Swanson has the featured role. This is the third dramatic appearance of the former Keystone comedienne, "Smoke" and "Society for Sale" being scheduled for early release. J. Barney Sherry, who recently completed work in "Who Killed Walton?", has a featured role in "Her Decision" and Darrell Foss and Ann Kroman are included in the supporting cast. The plot is based on a girl's sacrifice to save her sister, who has been betrayed. To obtain funds, she gives up Foss, her boy sweetheart, to marry an older man of wealth, at the time believing that her action is justified.

Director Raymond Well is forging ahead rapidly with "Mlle. Paulette," a comedy drama in which Wallace MacDonald and Claire Anderson are featured. A summer camp in the mountains in the vicinity of New York provides the locale and a "wedding with police supervision" comes as a climax.

With the Triangle punchers augmented by a round dozen of other cowboys, Director Cliff Smith has been getting thrilling chases for Roy Stewart's latest western subject, the working title of which is "A Man Worth While." The company is now doing interiors at Culver City.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton has found something new in the way of a location for a fishing village scene for "Judith," in which Alma Rubens has the featured role. The Japanese fishing village above Santa Monica has been used so many times that Hamilton did some scouting of his own and finally decided on Laguna beach, where he discovered just what he wanted. He has been working there several days with more than sixty extras beside his regular cast taking ship-wreck scenes.

Considerable difficulty was experienced bringing in life boats, laden with survivors from the wreck, through the heavy surf, the boat upsetting several times. When the landing was finally made the survivors gave every appearance of having been through two or three wrecks, so wet and bedraggled were they.

Pauline Starke has a leading role in this production. Edward Piel supports Miss Rubens.

"Mr. Miller's Economies," is the title of a two-reel comedy which is nearing completion under the direction of William Beaudine. Mrs. Kate Corbaley is the author of this play. Two other of her comedies, "First Aid" and "Mr. Briggs Closes the House," are also scheduled for early release. Edwin J. Brady, Myrtle Rishell, Myrtle Reeves and Charles Dorian have the leading roles in "Mr. Miller's Economies."

Director Harry Edwards, who recently completed the two-reel comedy, "Their Neighbor's Baby," is awaiting a new story. Thomas N. Heffron has completed the John A. Moroso story, "The Lonely Woman," in which Belle Bennett is featured, and is likewise awaiting a new subject.

"The Siren in the House," a new society drama, which Jack Dillon is directing, is well under way. Olive Thomas and Wallace MacDonald have the leading roles.

"The Swami" Retitled

World Pictures has renamed "The Swami," since the title is not entirely clear. The new title is "Vengeance." It is the first Barbara Castleton-Montagu Love picture and will be released May 20.

Montagu Love appears in the role of an Indian mystic and priest, and the support consists of George MacQuarrie, Madge Evans, Jack Drumier and several other prominent World players.

Three promising Triangle juveniles. Wallace MacDonald, Thurston Edwards and Jack Gilbert.

Triangle Offers Well-Balanced Bill

"The Law of the Great Northwest," "Who Killed Walton?" and Keystone Comedy on April 14 Program

A ROMANCE of the Canadian wilderness, "The Law of the Great Northwest," with Margery Wilson in the stellar role, is the first Triangle release for the week of April 14. It is followed by "Who Killed Walton?" a mystery story by Norman Sherbrook, in which J. Barney Sherry, Mary Mersch, and Frank Bonn have leading parts.

The Canadian wilderness is a fertile field for romantic picturization, but seldom touched. Ralph Westfall, the author of "The Law of the Great Northwest," was for many years a member of the Royal Mounted Police. During this time he met with hair-breadth escapes and thrilling adventures, many of which have appeared in popular magazines. When Mr. Westfall joined the Triangle scenario staff he was given a free hand and he is satisfied that the "atmosphere" of his story has been maintained throughout the production.

A big trading post, such as maintained by the trading companies in the Canadian forests, was built for this picture. Director Wells was able to obtain many Indians, which the script called for, as well as many quaint French Canadian types.

The play is laid in the Fort Roscher district of Canada and portrays a reign of terror which breaks out when the free traders threaten the great trading company. Hal Sinclair, factor of the Northern Trading Company at Fort Roscher, robs the trappers pitilessly while ruling them with a rod of iron. Independent traders open a store and bring Sinclair to the verge of ruin by their square dealing.

Entering into a murderous conspiracy with his henchmen, Mont Brennan, Sinclair shoots up the independent traders. The Royal Mounted Police are informed of the outrage. Officer Jamieson is sent to investigate. He arrives at Fort Roscher simultaneously with Charles Morin, scion of a rich French Canadian family. There also comes into the romantic life of the district Petain Monest, whose fortune has been lost in a bank failure. Accompanying Petain is his daughter Marie.

Morin enters the fur trading business. Sinclair decides to drive him out. Marie wins the hearts of Morin, Sinclair and Officer Jamieson. She loses her heart to Morin. Overhearing a plot between Sinclair and Brennan to kill Morin Marie steals into the saloon where the murder is to be committed and slays Brennan as he is about to fire a fatal shot. She is handed over to Jamieson as a murderer. When the officer realizes that her act was justified, however, he sees Marie and Morin happily united, and wins promotion for ending the reign of terror.

Margery Wilson is Marie. Her most recent vehicles have been "Flames of Chance" and "The Hard Rock Breed." William V. Mong as Petain has his first role since "The Hopper." Will Jeffries is Jamieson, Eugene Corey is Morin and William Dyer is Sinclair. The cast also includes J. P. Wild, Leo Willis and Arthur Millett. Raymond Wells directed.

"Who Killed Walton?" the second release of the week, has been adapted from Norman Sherbrook's story, "The Veil." It is said to present a gripping mystery situation, combined with an interesting love theme. The heroine must choose between two men. One of them is the despised type of politician—strong, domineering, powerful and tender hearted; the other is a reformer, selfish, shallow and narrow. Walton is a character who sprung into prominence less than a decade ago as the victim of one of New York's prominent murder cases.

Mary Mersch is the Marian Emlen of the story. Struggling as an authoress to make her name and engaged to the shallow reformer, Austin Booth, she wanted the great name of the famous illustrator, George Hamilton, on her book. At first Hamilton refused. After he had seen her, however, he admired her beauty. She appeared to be easy prey. He would trap her as he had trapped the jealous Elsa Armytage. An invitation to dine with him at the notorious Schloss restaurant was eagerly accepted. Elsa watched the two. Then Hamilton's filthy innuendoes struck terror into Marian's heart. She rose from the table in indignation and fled.

A telephone call from her fiance halted her. Bitter words were exchanged, she grew faint and swooned. When she awoke she found herself in Hamilton's apartments. Beside her, seated in an armchair, was Hamilton. Suddenly she became conscious that she was with a dead man. How she got there, how she escaped the toils of the law are told in the final scenes.

J. Barney Sherry is the politician. His last appearance was in "A Soul in Trust" and "The Hard Rock Breed." Mary Mersch as Marian Emlen makes her initial appearance as a Triangle player. Frank Bonn, who has hitherto appeared in Triangle Keystone comedies, is Walton. Dora Rodgers, also of the comedy forces, is Elsa Armytage. Edwin Brady is the reformer. Thomas N. Heffron directed.

"First Aid," a Keystone comedy, completes the program.

Triangle Gets Line on Fans in New Way

Gives Special Exhibitions for Clerks and Stenographers, Who Report in Writing, But Do Not Sign Names

FREQUENT comment has been aroused by original innovations of the Triangle management. This organization is in the hands of young and aggressive men with their ears close to the ground. Some of the innovations they have inaugurated have been little less than sensational. Occasionally they are of the opportunistic order, such as the rescinding of rental charges at the time the fuel was inaugurated and whereby exhibitors were not compelled to pay for the films contracted for fuelless Mondays. But in the main the innovations have been of the consistent all-the-year-benefit type that definitely stamp a policy for a period of time. Such an innovation was the assumption of the reel tax.

But one of the most interesting and yet one of the least heard of innovations has been Triangle's effort to find out just what patrons think of its pictures.

The innovation came about when the general manager at New York sent a rather inconspicuous letter to all departments asking that employes write their impressions of the various pictures.

To understand how it happens that this letter was sent out, it must be known that Triangle holds several showings of its pictures. The first showing is given for the benefit of the publicity and sales departments. Informal discussions of the merits or demerits, the appeal or the photographic beauty of the pictures are held. These opinions, although valuable, are prejudiced.

The general manager wanted to go deeper. He wanted the simple, untrained minds of the vast mass to express itself. Therefore, it was announced that special exhibitions would be given for all employes.

From the first showing it was evident that the idea was a success. The letter asking for comments stated that all criticisms could be sent in without signatures. The result was the influx of a large number of unsigned letters from stenographers, bookkeepers, clerks, and other employes.

To the gratification and astonishment of the management, many of the criticisms were of the keenest and most interesting order. They came displaying a marked appreciation of what was good and fine. At the same time prejudices against certain situations, dislike of certain actors, praise for certain types of productions were registered in the most illuminating and helpful way.

Pictures that were enthusiastically received were of the heart interest order. "Limousine Life," with Olive Thomas, appealed immensely to the rank and file. "Real Folks," a simple heart-interest Irish play, won enthusiastic commendation. "The Sea Panther" completely won the approval of the audience because of its unusual character, appeal and adventure. "Little Red Decides" made a great hit.

There were also interesting comments on continuity, personality of actors, and truth in detail of production that proved of immense value.

But Triangle does not seek the impression of the unsophisticated in the clerical ranks alone. Exchange managers are requested to keep the home office constantly informed of the appeal of each and every picture.

Nathan Ascher Praises "The Danger Game"

Chicago Exhibitor Declares Public Wants Love and Suspense in Pictures Along with Comedy

HOW exhibitors throughout the country will regard Madge Kennedy's venture into the more serious side of drama in "The Danger Game," her newest Goldwyn picture, described as a romantic melodrama, is forecast, Goldwyn believes, in a letter received from Nathan Ascher of Ascher Brothers Amusement Enterprises of Chicago, by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn.

"Dear Mr. Goldfish," Mr. Ascher writes, "It is with great pleasure that we greet Madge Kennedy in 'The Danger Game.' Miss Kennedy is becoming very popular in Chicago and many of our patrons are hailing her as the coming screen sensation.

"But the public wants love and suspense in pictures along with comedy, and I believe that this new production, 'The Danger Game,' will whirl this beautifully talented star to the highest point of screen popularity.

"Make more pictures like Madge Kennedy in 'The Danger Game' and we will break your own wonderful record for box office successes."

Those who have been permitted to see advanced screenings of the new Madge Kennedy vehicle in New York do not hesitate to pronounce it the best of any of her Goldwyn pictures. Mr. Goldfish predicts for it even greater success than was scored by her popular "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife," which have been and are money-making box office attractions throughout the world.

"The Danger Game" is from an original story by Roy Somerville and directed by Harry Pollard.

Producers Get Better Line on Public

Goldwyn Investigator Says Co-operation Rather Than Technique Has Elevated Pictures to High Plane

The motion picture industry owes its present high estate more to the co-operation of the public and exhibitors with the producers than to the remarkable strides made in directorial work or to the advanced science of present-day photography.

The public—the motion picture fans—is getting what it wants because it is being given a vote as to its choice of productions. At least that's the way it looks to a Goldwyn publicity representative, recently returned from a trip that took him to almost every section of the country.

He cites as proof a batch of suggestions from audiences and exhibitors received in the north, south, east and west, all of which are being given consideration in the Goldwyn offices. Some of these suggestions are practical, others are not; but the fact that they were received and are being sifted in the hope that some of them may prove of assistance in production is ample testimony that there is co-operation of a sort helpful to the public and to the industry as well.

That Goldwyn appreciates these suggestions is revealed in the surprising fact that "The Splendid Sinner," "The Floor Below" and "The Danger Game" sprang from them. While the Goldwyn publicity man was in Duluth, Minn., a week before Mary Garden's "Thais" was shown, Thomas Furniss, owner of the Rex Theatre, asked him what Goldwyn intended doing about a second picture for the star.

"What will it be; another opera?" Mr. Furniss asked. The Goldwyn man, having been away from the home office a considerable time didn't know, but the exhibitor's question gave him an idea: Why not let the Rex Theatre audience express a choice during the week "Thais" was shown?

Two weeks later Goldwyn officials received more than 1,800 slips of paper from the Rex Theatre. The large majority of them contained urgent requests that Miss Garden's second picture be a modern story. Some even suggested a patriotic war drama. The knowledge that Miss Garden had seen valiant service in the hospitals of Serbia and northern France apparently promoted this.

At the time the votes were received the Goldwyn organization was considering Kate Jordan's story, "The Splendid Sinner," and the suggestions helped not a little in deciding the issue. The story is a strikingly modern one with a surprise war touch at the close.

So it was with Mabel Normand's second picture. Months before the famous comedienne was seen in "Dodging a Million," letters by the hundred poured into the Goldwyn offices urging that Miss Normand try her hand in a mystery play. "The Floor Below" was the result.

Madge Kennedy is shortly to be shown in melodrama—in "The Danger Game"—at the request of many of her admirers, who believe she can provoke them to thrills as well as she has made them shout with laughter.

All of which proves that "the public be pleased" policy now diligently cultivated by successful exhibitors everywhere has brought the motion picture public into close touch with the producers. The result is co-operation. Film fans tell exhibitors what they want and the producers make it for them.

"Joan of Plattsburg" Described as Patriotic Comedy-Drama

With the release of Mabel Normand's newest production, "Joan of Plattsburg," scheduled for May 5, Goldwyn is offering to exhibitors and the public what it believes to be the first patriotic comedy-drama ever screened, with confidence that the combination of this unusual story by Porter Emerson Browne and the artistry of Mabel Normand, "the star who never disappoints," will bring money to box offices everywhere.

Retakes of important scenes have just been completed by George Loane Tucker to make the production conform to governmental request for the elimination of certain scenes which have an indirect bearing on training methods pursued at the great Plattsburg military camp, where much of the action of the play transpires. Goldwyn says unhesitatingly that the picture in its new form is a greater, more powerful production than was the original.

"Joan of Plattsburg" is notable for its timeliness, and while it is in no sense a war story, nor can it be interpreted as propaganda, the story of the orphan who developed into an inspired soldier-girl is uplifting and thrilling. It is designed to teach the truth that no matter how humble a person may be, he or she can serve America.

O. Henry Story for Alice Joyce

Alice Joyce, who is nearing the completion of "The Strength of the Weak," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, soon will begin work on "Find the Woman," the famous "Cherchez La Femme" of O. Henry.

The story is laid in New Orleans and plans are being made for Miss Joyce and her company to go to the old Creole City to make the picture.

Tom Terriss, who has directed Miss Joyce in her last five productions, will direct her in this and he promises that the picture will have in it all of the local color and romance which O. Henry found in New Orleans and which gives his story such a charming background.

Goldwyn Officers Meet Exhibitors

Three Vice-Presidents and Southern Division Manager Tour Country in Interest of Co-operation

PERHAPS for the first time in the history of the industry, three executives of a big producing company are making a concerted effort to meet exhibitors face to face and discuss their problems with them. The three are vice-presidents of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation—Alfred Weiss, F. B. Warren and Harold Bolster. Working in conjunction with them is Arthur Lucas, southern division manager.

In a two-weeks' tour of the Atlantic states, a territory with which he has been intimately familiar for many years, Mr. Weiss has talked with hundreds of men in whose theatres Goldwyn pictures are being played and with scores who have not yet contracted for them.

Mr. Warren has been for nearly a month on the Pacific coast, where his itinerary embraces most of the important cities between Los Angeles and Seattle.

Mr. Bolster is in the middle west. Making temporary headquarters in Chicago, he is working through all of the larger cities. Mr. Lucas is covering the south.

No unusual conditions, it is said, are responsible for this simultaneous tour. Samuel Goldfish, president of the company, simply felt it was time to demonstrate further to the exhibitors the honesty and earnestness of Goldwyn's established policy of co-operation.

"Goldwyn wants its exhibitors to feel that their problems are its problems," said Mr. Goldfish. "If Goldwyn can continue to please the exhibitor it can continue to please the public. The Goldwyn executives who have gone to talk to the country's theatre owners are well equipped to help solve any perplexities which may have arisen in the comparatively few months in which our productions have been on the market. I expect profitable and lastingly good results from their tours."

High Praise for News Reel

"The Screen Telegram is the best short reel subject of its kind on the market today," writes Herb. J. Weil of the Weil Theatrical Enterprises, Port Huron, Mich., to Mutual.

"My sincere wish is that the present quality of this feature will be maintained," he adds. "There's a good news punch in every foot of that which I have run. Keep up making each of these subjects bright, crispy, intelligent and educational and you will have the world whipped in news weeklies."

Three Big Artcraft Pictures in April

"The Tiger Man" Presents William S. Hart, "The Lie," Elsie Ferguson, and "Mr. Fix-It," Douglas Fairbanks

DURING April three extraordinary productions will be released by the Famous Players - Lasky Corporation under the Artcraft trade-mark. William S. Hart appears in a sensational western picture, Elsie Ferguson in a high-class society drama and Douglas Fairbanks introduces new methods of producing laughter in a comedy-drama.

Hart started on the first day of the month with "The Tiger Man," a Thomas H. Ince production from a scenario written by J. G. Hawks especially for the star, and directed by himself. Hart plays the part of Hawk Parsons, a fierce bandit whose soul, deadened by crime, is strangely regenerated through the refining influence of a good woman, but is not quickened into life until he comes to the realization that she is purity herself and he a moral monster unfit to stand in her presence.

He redeems himself by making a great sacrifice, so that after all he proves himself a hero deserving of fame. The title is indicative of the character portrayed by Hart, cruel and ruthless. There are thrilling scenes of battle, as well as dramatic suspense.

Jane Novak plays opposite the star. Others in the cast are Milton Ross, Robert Lawrence and Charles K. French.

On April 8, "The Lie," starring Elsie Ferguson, was released. Aside from the fact that it provides Miss Ferguson with an intensely emotional role, it is a vehicle entirely different from anything she has appeared in on the screen. It was adapted by Charles Maigne from the play by Henry Arthur Jones which was produced with eminent success on the speaking stage of England and America. It deals with high social circles of England and the characters are shown in splendid surroundings. An incident is a fox-hunt, with blooded horses and dogs.

The story is one of heart interest and adapted to any community. Miss Ferguson plays the part of Elinor Shale, who sacrifices her hopes of happiness with the man she loves to save the family honor by going away with an erring sister. Whispers of suspicion arise, however, and the sister shields herself by making it appear that Elinor is the mother of her child, and succeeds in marrying the man Elinor loves and who loves her.

The maternal love is aroused by the fatherless child, which has been practically abandoned by its mother, and Elinor lavishes her affection on it. Later, when she discovers the duplicity of her sister, the photoplay reaches the heights of emotionalism.

An exceptional supporting cast appears in "The Lie," including David Powell, John L. Shine, Percy Marmont, Mabel Normand as she will appear in "Joan of Plattsburg," the first picture she made for Goldwyn.

Charles Sutton, Bertha Kent and Maude Turner Gordon. J. Searle Dawley directed the production.

"Mr. Fix-It," is the title of the Douglas Fairbanks offering which is released April 15. This picture was produced by Allan Dwan from a scenario by himself based on a suggestion by Ernest Butterworth and presents Fairbanks as the expounder of the theory that happiness is a habit that comes only to those who afford happiness to others.

Aside from the entertainment afforded by the display of his remarkable talents, both physical and artistic, Fairbanks is imbued with a sincere desire to teach a lesson of cheerfulness with each picture, and "Mr. Fix-It" is said to fulfill his wishes in this direction thoroughly.

Clever acrobatic stunts were devised for Fairbanks to perform and it is claimed that he risks life and limb a great many times, one of the startling feats being a hand over hand climb across a political banner swinging high in the air in the street.

Fairbanks has doffed his western make-up and appears in conventional clothes. The leading members of the cast include Wanda Hawley, Marjorie Daw, Catherine MacDonald, Frank Campeau, Leslie Stuart, Fred Goodwin and Margaret Landis.

Strong Cast in "The Judge"

A stellar combination of June Elvidge, George MacQuarrie and John Bowers is at work on "The Judge," a World picture. Travers Vale is the director.

"His Majesty, Bunker Bean," Released

Keen Public Interest Expected as Piece Is Rich in Satire—Characters Modeled After Famous Men

"HIS MAJESTY, BUNKER BEAN," a Paramount picture featuring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, released April 8, will undoubtedly be greeted with the keenest interest because the story is such trenchant satire on certain phases of American life and also because several of the characters are modeled after famous Americans. Notable among these are Jim Breede, the czar of Wall Street, worth a round hundred million, and "the greatest left handed pitcher in the world."

The character of Breede, an explosive little man who was always working at high pressure, is said to have been modeled by Harry Leon Wilson, the author, after the late E. H. Harriman. Harriman, like Breede, was a little man physically, and he had the same incisive way of going to the heart of things that Breede has.

The character of the financial wizard has been called by one enthusiastic critic, "one of the realest and most human portraits in American fiction." Bunker Bean, as all readers of the charming satire will remember, was Breede's stenographer. He was the only stenographer of a long line who could understand Breede's queer enunciation and take dictation from him.

But Bunker, who had his snobbish side, scorned Breede, because the financier wore detachable cuffs. So during the pauses in dictation Bunker used to write in shorthand on the margin of his pad, "Why don't you get a decent pair of cuffs?" and similar remarks, which was all very well as long as the remarks remained on the pad, but one day one of them inadvertently slipped into a business letter. Then there was perdition to pay.

The other character taken from life, "the greatest left handed pitcher in the world," is said to have been modeled after Rube Waddell, the famous eccentric southpaw, who several seasons ago was famous for his pitching and personality when, almost single handed, he won the pennant for the Philadelphia Athletics.

The part of Bunker is said to give Pickford the best comedy part of his career, and as Jack is now in the government service, this is one of the last chances film fans may have to see him in action for some time. Pretty Louise Huff also has a part suited to her in "the flapper," and the direction given the comedy by William D. Taylor, the producers say, will mark another triumph for him.

Mae Marsh in Georgia

Easter week found Mae Marsh among the peachblossoms and oleanders of southern Georgia, her first visit to the happy hunting ground of all stars.

A neglected mansion of the type which is fast disappearing was the direct object of Director Hobart Henley's journey and the success of his mission is attested by stills received by the Goldwyn home offices. They show precisely the sort of decaying grandeur described by the author, Edith Bernard Delano, in the story from which the photoplay is adapted.

The big house stands in the midst of a rank garden overrun with shrubs and weeds, its fine old portico tumbling into ruin. In this setting were played the scenes requiring Mae Marsh, a modern girl wearing the quaint clothes of a past generation, to leave the old home in search of romance along the broad highway.

This unusual situation grows into adventures which begin simply and end in a highly dramatic manner. Miss Marsh, the only player, by the way, concerned in the scenes immediately connected with the house and garden, naturally was the only artist accompanying Mr. Henley. With her mother and a corps of assistants they made a happy party.

Enter—an Innovation in Reviewing

IN the first days of motion picture trade journalism, about the only stories worth publishing were reviews and descriptions of films about to be released. They constituted real news, of value to all the exhibitors, and so became the chief stock in trade of the film publishers.

As the length standards of films increased, and the intervals between releases decreased, the trade paper "Review Department" took on greater and greater responsibility and size. One paper, a general dramatic weekly, made quite a reputation with a few pages of reviews and little if anything else of a film nature.

With the increasing complexity of picture production, however, the reviews gained ponderance and lost effectiveness. When a "feature" (as they called them even then) was only nine hundred feet long and cast but five or six players, the average result was plainly either good, bad or indifferent, and could readily be so classified. The reviewer had to consider little beyond his general impression.

But the aspirations of ambitious and capable producers soon carried the pictures into the highest reaches of art. More significant still from the reviewer's viewpoint, the magnificent productions that presently became the order of the day were intricately interwoven fabrics of all the arts combined. They demanded literary excellence in the story; dramatic skill in the interpretation and direction; histrionic perfection in the studio; photographic ability behind the camera; chemical knowledge in the darkroom; mechanical knack in cutting and assembling; an aptitude for physics in the projection; and an almost intuitive, acquired mastery over the long list of details peculiar to this particular art and none other.

It becomes obvious at once that so complex a product must make distinctly different impressions upon different people. While some few films might gain universal and unanimous approval, and a few others as complete disapproval, the vast majority of productions were open battle grounds for differences of opinion. When three reviewers studied a picture together, it was not at all unlikely that the first would pronounce it excellent, the second classify it as indifferent and mediocre, and the third unqualifiedly call it bad. All three would be wholly sincere, and each would have logical arguments to prove his contention.

Not infrequently, therefore, it has happened that exhibitors have found nothing but disappointment in productions which, from the reviewer's standpoint, were almost beyond criticism. And conversely, experienced reviewers have sometimes criticised and perhaps condemned pictures which were later received with enthusiasm and acclaim by uncritical audiences.

In short, the trade paper review, as it is customarily presented, is a one-man opinion. Its difficulties are greater than those involved in the conscientious recording of most one-man opinions, because there are no laws, no previously recorded opinions on similar subjects, no books of rules that would help to define the cause of public approval or disapproval.

Those wise men of the middle ages who devised the jury system had already learned that safety lay only in consensus of opinion. That principle is just as true for the trial of a picture as it is for the trial of a human being. Art societies use it in judging paintings—a subject much less complex than the art of recorded motion.

The decisions of a jury of twelve, or even six, reviewers who had passed upon a single picture would be worth offering to prospective users of that picture as a reliable guide. It is emphatically no reflection on the capabilities, the experience, the acumen or the sincerity of a single reviewer to say that his decision is unreliable as a guide to future public opinion. The National Board of Review recognizes this principle, and the decisions of its juries are wholly reliable. The official censor boards do not recognize it, and their opinions are wholly unreliable.

The opinion of an exhibitor who has run a picture before his audience is at once divested of all its frills, and becomes merely a practical report on the public's reception of the picture. With such a report before them, other exhibitors have merely to consider, as closely as may be, the kind of audience which liked or disliked the picture. With several exhibitor reports on the same picture, practically all uncertainty is removed and the group of reports become an almost infallible guide to successful film selection. This parallel information MOTOGRAPHY always attempts to give in "What the Picture Did for Me."

That, as clearly as we can explain it, is the reason why MOTOGRAPHY'S department, "Reviews of Current Film Releases," is discontinued with this issue. We realize that the step is a considerable innovation in trade paper practice, since the department is supported by all the traditions of the business. But that is about all that does support it. Every trade publication, new or old, has slavishly followed the review custom, regardless of the fact that the "service" had long passed its usefulness.

Every really exceptional film will continue to find a place in the descriptive pages of MOTOGRAPHY—as a news story. EVERY film released will continue to be recorded in our departmental pages, without critical comment—that is, if the producers of every film co-operate to the extent of supplying information. It is scarcely possible for us to describe productions when the producers withhold the descriptions.

In thus boldly departing from history and discarding the worn out "review" system, we expect to be followed by other publications—just as we have been followed with imitations of "What the Picture Did for Me" and a dozen other things we originated and which subsequently became standard practice among our contemporaries. Against their policy of adopting our improvements as their own, which we have observed for nine years, we have no defense. We are content, however, with the knowledge that we are credited in the minds of the exhibitors with all that we have originated.

The department "Reviews of Current Film Releases" having been retired, the section "What the Picture Did for Me" will be enlarged and strengthened as fast as a careful supervision of the work will permit. The department "The Story of the Picture" will be started with as complete a digest of current film stories as the information supplied will permit. The "Complete Record of Current Films" will continue to be the exhibitors' calendar of film releases. These several weekly catalogs of film information, together with our own stories of new masterpieces, will constitute the most complete guide to the exhibitors' market that it is possible to assemble.

A great many exhibitors are now relying solely upon MOTOGRAPHY'S pages for booking information, and have found that method perfectly safe and extremely satisfactory. If there are any of our readers who want first hand testimony to the responsibility of this statement, we will be glad to refer them, upon request, to other exhibitors who will assure them that booking films through MOTOGRAPHY'S pages is the ideal way.

Alice Brady as she appears in a new Select picture, "The Ordeal of Rosetta."

"The Ordeal of Rosetta" Is Completed

Picture Is Fifth to Be Made by Alice Brady for Select—Star Gives Dual Characterization

ENGINEERING a puncture sounds trivial, but Albert Lena, who assisted Director Emile Chautard in the production of Alice Brady's most recent Select picture, "The Ordeal of Rosetta," spent a harrowing afternoon last week trying to bring on tire trouble at the right and appointed place.

A small charge of gunpowder was placed in one of the tires, a picturesque bit of road selected, and with everything timed for the blowout, the automobile, carrying Miss Brady and her leading man, Craufurd Kent, set forth along the camera range. But nothing happened. Not until the machine had left the photographer and director raging far in the rear did the gunpowder get in its deadly work.

A new start was made with a fresh tire, carrying more explosive and timed for quicker results. But the action was too quick and the results startling in the extreme. The tire, overcharged this time, blew out with a resounding roar before the car had covered half the alloted distance, and the force of the explosion was more in keeping with Keystone comedy than Select drama. The perfection of practice, however, was demonstrated in the third tryout and Assistant Director Lena breathed a sigh of relief.

"The Ordeal of Rosetta" is now completed. It will be the fifth of the star's Select pictures. The story, which deals with the fortunes of a beautiful Sicilian, is an absorbing tale of love and adventure, some of the scenes being taken from Sicily and South America. Most of the action is laid in the United States, however.

The star plays a dual role of great emotional force and is supported by an excellent cast including Craufurd Kent, Ormi Hawley, Maude Turner Gordon, Henry Leoni and Hazel Washburn.

United Theatres Open Nine Offices

New Branches Are in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake, New Orleans and Dallas

ONE of the busiest weeks since the inception of United Picture Theatres of America has marked the activities of the executives and sales force in a dozen or more states east and west of the Mississippi. New branch offices have been organized in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinati, Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, New Orleans and Dallas.

The tour of President Lee A. Ochs through the Mississippi Valley and in the eastern part of the south has been productive of large accessions of membership. His meeting in mid-April with the exhibitors of the Pittsburgh territory, where E. E. Erickson has been appointed branch manager, is looked forward to with great interest by the motion picture people of that district. In Baltimore and Washington, where Mr. Ochs ended his southern trip, some of the most important exhibitor interests have allied themselves with United Theatres.

Vice-president Seelye's work as field organizer of branch offices has gone on apace. Some of the most influential exchange men of the old-line organizations have given up their posts to join the growing fortunes of the new co-operative enterprise and already the need of division managers to handle the large forces is evidenced by the promotion of C. S. Edwards from the Kansas City office to the new position of Southwestern manager. The names of the new exchanges and their managers are as follows:

Philadelphia, Stanley W. Hand (transferred from Boston); Pittsburgh, E. E. Erickson; Cincinnati, C. C. Hite; Detroit, A. J. Gillingham; St. Louis, Floyd Lewis; New Orleans, Karl Bugbee; Dallas, W. G. Underwood; Denver, C. R. Gilmour; Salt Lake City, I. P. Arnold.

Ernest H. Horstmann, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has accepted the Boston managership, owing to Stanley Hand being called to organize the Philadelphia office, and C. S. Edwards, Jr., has taken the Kansas City managerial post.

As the result of the week's activity there are now seventeen branches of United Theatres, covering most of the country with the exception of the Pacific Coast, which will be organized within the next six weeks.

Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer of United Theatres, addressed a meeting of the executive committee of the Tri-City Exhibitors' League in Albany on April 2. Mr. Blumenthal found the exhibitors' committee, headed by President Lewis H. Beuttner, keenly interested in the new plan, which is being brought to the attention of all the picture theatre managers in the Albany, Troy and Schenectady district.

In New York Arthur S. Abeles, eastern representative, and Aaron Corn, city sales manager, report a larger number of accessions than have been received in any previous week.

World Picture Called "Tinsel"

"Tinsel" has been chosen as the title of Oscar Apfel's second World picture in which Kitty Gordon is the star. Muriel Ostriche and Frank Mayo are featured in the cast.

Crowds Storm Lyric to See "Over the Top"

New York Theatre Swamped First Week of Premiere for New War Picture—Empey Cheered When He Appears

ENORMOUS crowds and unbounded enthusiasm that have marked the first week in the Lyric theatre, New York, of "Over the Top," Vitagraph's super-production and screen adaptation of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's world famous war book of the same name, are believed to assure a long and successful run.

Patriotism surcharged the atmosphere in the playhouse the opening night and gripped the throng on the sidewalk, unable to gain admittance, but who were satisfied to spend their enthusiasm in cheering the doughty little American hero as he entered the theatre to address the spectators.

So widely has "Over the Top" been read and exploited that Vitagraph had a mighty task in the production of the picture to give to the public all that was expected. If any testimony of the success of the undertaking were needed, in addition to the capacity business, it is found in the trade and daily press reviews, which have been unanimous in their praise.

"Even the most enthusiastic readers of Empey's book could not have anticipated the screen possibilities as unfolded in this Vitagraph version," says one reviewer.

"Over the Top" was produced to awaken the American people to a keener realization of just what their sons are up against "over there," and is built on actual conditions as they exist and as Sergeant Empey himself found them in his eighteen months of fighting in the front line trenches in France, and as he pictured them in his book.

Produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, the picture not only has accomplished this mission most faithfully, but stands, in the unanimous opinion of newspaper and trade critics, as an artistic masterpiece.

Swift moving and realistic in the extreme, but never grewsome, and with fine regard for the truth, trench scenes, the rush of "our boys" over the top and out into No Man's Land, swept by bullets and lurid in the glare of exploding shells, the hand to hand fighting with the Germans—all these hold the spectators spellbound.

These scenes were filmed at Camp Wheeler near Macon, Ga., by special permission of the war department and have received the official O. K. from Washington. Wilfred North, who directed the picture, had the active assistance of Sergeant Empey in the making of the trench scenes and more than 7,500 American soldiers took part in the several battle scenes, their commanding officers acknowledging actual benefits from their experience before the camera.

Not less effective, perhaps, than these fighting scenes, is the expose of German intrigue spelling death in most cowardly form, striking under the guise of Red Cross workers, undermining the industrial structure of the nation and seeking to obstruct even the government machinery. Not going beyond the realm of facts, agents of the Kaiser, women as well as men, are shown putting powdered glass into Red Cross bandages, placing deadly poisons into canned provisions intended for our soldiers, blasting and burning munition plants and obtaining by blackmail advance information of troop movements across the Atlantic.

Relief from these realities is afforded in a charming romance, with Sergeant Empey, of course, the hero, and with principal roles taken by such widely known Vitagraph screen favorites as Lois Meredith, James Morrison, Betty Blythe, "Mother" Mary Maurice and Arthur Donaldson.

Clara Kimball Young and her leading man, Milton Sills, in "The Reason Why," her latest picture for Select.

Rivalry Over Snow Scenes

What is the most wonderful snow scene ever filmed? Three of the Vitagraph western companies claim to have it.

One is the Hedda Nova Company, working in the serial, "The Woman In the Web." The players, with Director Paul Hurst, journeyed to the Santa Cruz islands to film "sunny summer weather," demanded in the script. But they bumped into a full fledged snow flurry and stoutly maintain that the scenes made of snow clinging to the blossoming trees and plants are the most beautiful ever recorded.

William Duncan and his company, having dug themselves out of snow drifts forty feet high in the Big Bear Valley, where they are living for two months in specially constructed log cabins and making exteriors for a forthcoming serial, telephone they have the greatest pictures in the way of "snow stuff" ever taken.

And then there is the third, the Nell Shipman Company, lost a fortnight in the mountain passes beyond Truckes, whither they journeyed to take rugged scenes for the Blue Ribbon feature, "Bares, Son of Kazan." Over frostbitten wires, Director David Smith telephones that all is well and that despite blizzards beyond imagination, raging night and day, the players have fared forth on snow shoes and that snow scenes, "incomparable and beyond comparison with any ever filmed," have been taken.

United Theatres Illustrates its Plan

New Booklet Shows How a Short Subject Could Be Shown by Small House for Sixty-five Cents

IN THE form of a fourteen-page booklet of convenient pocket size, United Pictures Theatres of America has published the details of its plan for the information of exhibitors. The most interesting part of the book concerns the proposed buying of negative rights and the fixing of rentals according to the rating of the individual members.

Since the organization will make its own positive prints, it will go into the picture market for negatives only. Negative cost is figured on "the certified detailed studio cost of each picture with the addition of a reasonable percentage for producer's profit."

To the above must be added the expense of making the necessary prints and the comparatively small distributing expense of the co-operative organization. The book takes up a five-reel feature which costs the society $50,000 altogether, and then calculates what each class of members is to pay.

These classes range from the first-run or Class A house, which is charged one one-thousandth of the total cost, down through the later-run theatres to the Class E establishment which shows the pictures last and pays but one ten-thousandth of the cost. The table of charges for the $50,000 picture is as follows:

On a similar plan the cost of a $6,500 single-reel comic is prorated from a top price of $6.50 for the Class A house down to $1.30 for Class D and sixty-five cents for Class E.

The new prospectus also makes it plain that the society is not producer-controlled or financier-controlled. "Democratic control is assured," it is said, "since United Picture Theatres will be your organization through your stock ownership and the power to elect directors from year to year is in your hands."

Another fact emphasized is the absence of any stock-jobbing element. The funds being raised by subscriptions to the extent of 90 per cent of the total are "deposited in a special fund, and the company agrees not to touch any of it except in accordance with the terms of the contract. As soon as 2,000 booking days are obtained—that is, $500,000 altogether — the plan of co-operative buying will be put into operation."

In the event of failure to obtain 2,000 booking days, the 90 per cent of the subscriptions trusteed in bank will be returned to the subscribers, who will then be out only the small amount spent in attempted organization. "Even this little 10 per cent," the statement says, "should be regarded in the light of a film insurance, much like your fire hazard, liability or other insurance; it is as much for your protection as any other kind of insurance."

The officers of the United Picture Theatres express the fullest confidence that the organization will be a success and they predict a substantial reduction of film rentals as well as other savings and benefits incidental to co-operative buying.

The officers are Lee A. Ochs and Louis F. Blumenthal, prominent exhibitors; C. R. Seelye, former sales director of World, Vitagraph and Pathe; and C. M. Rosenthal and M. M. Goldsmith, the latter being counsel of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

A new picture of Norma Talmadge, Select star, who has just begun work on "De Luxe Annie."

Star Has Sympathetic Role

Up to the time that Louise Glaum became a Paralta star, her great reputation in the motion picture world had been built up largely upon her ability to portray roles which combined the vampire type of characterization and that of sympathetic delineation.

With the undertaking of her first production under the Paralta banner, which has just been completed under the direction of Wallace Worsley, from Monte M. Katterjohn's story, Miss Glaum will be introduced as a thoroughly sympathetic character, at certain episodes of the story, however, having an opportunity to display those rare qualities which have made her delineation of intensely dramatic roles famous.

The title of the story is "An Alien Enemy." The scenes are laid around the history of a German-American born girl of high ideals and instincts, who, though having been reared in the midst of an American nest of German "Kultur" enthusiasts, is able, through the course of stirring events of international politics, to surmount the bonds laid upon her by her Prussian ancestry and associates, and emerge as a thoroughly loyal American.

"Unclaimed Goods" Is Praised

The exhibitor who knows the appeal of a Vivian Martin picture of the Paramount brand—and there are no others—may rest assured, according to the promises of the releasing organization, that her newest film, "Unclaimed Goods," will please his patrons, in colloquial parlance, down to the ground.

The novelty of seeing dainty Vivian sent as an express package to a mining town, held for charges, fed with the calves and chickens, and otherwise treated as so much merchandise, would in itself be sufficiently novel to attract and hold the attention, but Paramount insists that there is a lot more to the story—a charming romance, a lot of exciting episodes with bad men, gamblers and other western types, and withal a connected plot affording the star and the supporting cast many real opportunities for original character depiction and realistic acting.

Petrova Pictures Are "Over the Fence"

Negative Cost Met, Though Only Two Productions Have Been Released—Success Attributed to Advertising

COINCIDENT with the signing of Ralph Ince as exclusive director of Petrova pictures and the leasing of a separate studio for Madame Petrova's productions, comes the following announcement from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, contained in a letter from John D. Williams, general manager, to Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company.

"You will notice from the reports submitted to you that we are 'over the fence' regarding negative cost on Petrova. I think this a very satisfactory showing when you consider that the first picture was only released Christmas."

This is particularly gratifying when it is considered that only two pictures have so far been actually released and in many parts of the country the first of them was not shown until about thirty days ago. Moreover, more bookings were received in March than in December, January or February, so it is fair to assume that the Petrova figures are still on the rising side of the booking arc.

Reports from the road indicate that any disappointment that some exhibitors have felt in the quality, or lack of it, of some of the productions in which Madame Petrova appeared before undertaking her own productions, has been entirely erased by the excellence of "Daughter of Destiny," "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask," and from now on, the stage is set for a "draw up."

The impression is general that Madame Petrova has still to release the best of her pictures, "Tempered Steel," by George Middleton, author of "Polly with a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince. It was the screening of this picture that led to the immediate signing of Mr. Ince at the sacrifice of important productions.

The new arrangement of a permanent Petrova directing staff has already had two results that augur well for the future: The purchase of the rights to Gertrude Atherton's famous novel, "Patience Sparhawk," the first great American novel in which Madame has appeared, and the selection of a separate studio.

The officials of the Petrova Picture Company are inclined to credit the success of Petrova pictures first to the quality of the productions and the renewed popularity of the star, and second to the trade paper and nation-wide advertising campaign.

Incidentally, Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, is authority for the statement that more money has been spent during the last year in the trade press and for nationally exploiting Madame Petrova than has ever been spent for any one star in the history of the business; and further, that the success of this company has been such that he is planning an even greater advertising campaign for the summer and fall, exploiting the new Petrova pictures directed by Ralph Ince.

Big Feature at Popular Prices

The Grand Theatre, Cincinnati, will open May 5 with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at popular prices. This is the first time this feature has been presented in Cincinnati at popular prices.

Petrova Gets Own Studio

Madame Petrova, for some time the possessor of her own company and her own productions, now has her own studio. The Petrova Picture Company has leased one of the best equipped studios in New York, built by the Bacon-Backer Company in West Thirty-eighth street. Madame Petrova is installed in a suite of rooms on the ground floor while Ralph Ince is in active production on the spacious stage, where he is directing the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's famous work "Patience Sparhawk."

April 1 marked the christening of the new enterprise — with flowers instead of champagne because poor Patience suffered in her childhood from too much fire-water in her family life—and by the afternoon of the same day a casual visitor would never have guessed that the Petrova Company's cameras had not been grinding for weeks in the glare of the powerful batteries of Cooper-Hewetts which are the pride of the new studio and, incidentally, of Director Ince, who promises some light effects for future Petrovas that have hitherto been impossible. As a matter of fact, not only the tenant is new, but the building and the equipment are so new that no picture made in the studio has yet been released.

Many Book "Chase Me Charlie"

Bookings are coming in rapidly for "Chase Me Charlie," the latest Essanay-Chaplin comedy, the George Kleine releasing system reports. This is a British version of Chaplin's funniest films and is comprised of the "punch" scenes of twelve of the Essanay-Chaplins.

It has been woven into an entirely new story with rhyming subtitles. It is known in Britain as a Chaplin Jingle. It was released in five parts April 6.

Ralph Ince to be Petrova's Sole Director

President Frederick L. Collins Says He Has Been Selected Because He Has Proved Himself the Best of All

CONTRACTS have been signed between Madame Petrova and Ralph Ince whereby the latter will direct the Petrova productions exclusively. In explanation of this step, Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company made the following statement:

"Madame Petrova's plan of changing directors with each feature until a man of Mr. Ince's known abilities was available has been found a very wise one, partly because she has been fortunate in obtaining at least this excellent successor to George Irving, Larry Trimble and Frank Crane, but chiefly because she has not been committed to any one man's work until she has found by months of testing that particular man best fitted to bring out her highest abilities and the greatest possibilities in her productions.

"Those who have seen 'Tempered Steel,' the first of the Petrova pictures directed by Ralph Ince, are unanimous in stating that Mr. Ince is that man. People tell me that we have a new Petrova. I don't know about that. The old Petrova was good enough for me. But I do think that the chances to work with a man so entirely in sympathy with her ideals and so thoroughly expert in the technique of production has enabled Madame Petrova to relax from the cares and responsibilities of personal direction and to do what the trade calls 'loosen up.'

"I am told that the effect of Madame's increased activities before the camera has proved physically disastrous to some members of the cast, one venerable old lady retiring to the hospital with a broken arm as the result of a temporary absence of that 'restraint' which is usually characteristic of Madame Petrova's work.

"Mr. Ince, who has been at the head of his own producing company since leaving Vitagraph, has laid aside all other plans for the present and will devote himself exclusively to Petrova pictures. It is possible that Mr. Ince will return to the screen as an actor as well as director in support of Madame Petrova in a special feature that will follow the production of 'Patience Sparhawk,' by the famous novelist, Gertrude Atherton.

"Madame Petrova and Mr. Ince have chosen an entirely new supporting cast for 'Patience Sparhawk' and Madame Petrova herself appears in a role unlike any which she has hitherto portrayed on the stage or screen."

Shaw Goolsby, an operator at Pine Bluff, Ark., has been drafted and sent to Camp Pike for work in his own line.

Kenyon Cast Completed

Doris Kenyon has completed the cast of "The Street of Seven Stars," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story in which she will appear at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc.

In addition to Miss Kenyon, the cast includes Hugh Thompson as leading man; Carey Hastings, Stephen Carr, Iva Shepard, Frank Crayne, Harriet McConnell, Marie McConnell, George Moss, John Hopkins, Eliza Helen Criswell, Raphael De Mise, Hattie Fielding and John Sunderland.

Each is especially fitted to portray his or her character. No member of the cast wears a wig in any scene and none of the men's faces is adorned with false whiskers. In the search for types Miss Kenyon invaded even the Metropolitan Opera House, where she obtained Harriet McConnell, famous opera, concert and church vocalist, for the minor part of "Sadie, the soprano." Her sister, Marie McConnell, a concert pianist, was selected as Scatchett, the little pianist of the story.

Another true-to-life type is Eliza Helen Criswell, who portrays the keeper of the coffee-house. Miss Criswell is a member of the bohemian colony of Greenwich Village, where she conducts a coffee-house in real life.

"Blue Blood" Based on Life

The surest sign of a man's mental dissolution, psychologists tell us, is flung out when he indulges in magnificent dissipation. Nero had his hanging gardens, Louis XVI had his Versailles with its love courts, and countless other rulers and men of power have had their pavilions, their pleasure palaces and retreats.

Decadent modern millionaires have their "studios" and mountain lodges, concealed until some tragedy reveals their existence to the public. In view of this it is only natural that the authors of "Blue Blood," a Selexart drama starring Howard Hickman, should have devised a like form of indulgence for the principal character in their play. He is Spencer Wellington, the last of a long line of supposedly aristocratic ancestors, who marries a girl of fortune without telling her of the taint of madness in his blood.

In a secluded part of his estate there is erected a building of marble and gilt. Inside all the luxury of the Orient is recreated for the jaded young man, including a harem. The end of his orgies occurs in a mad revel, the like of which is never seen in public, preceding the death of the pitiable wreck of manhood. Wellington's folly is said to have been inspired by the life of a California profligate whose exploits are known everywhere.

New Paralta Studios Near Completion

Cover Ten Acres of the Eighty-Acre Tract Recently Purchased by Company in Los Angeles

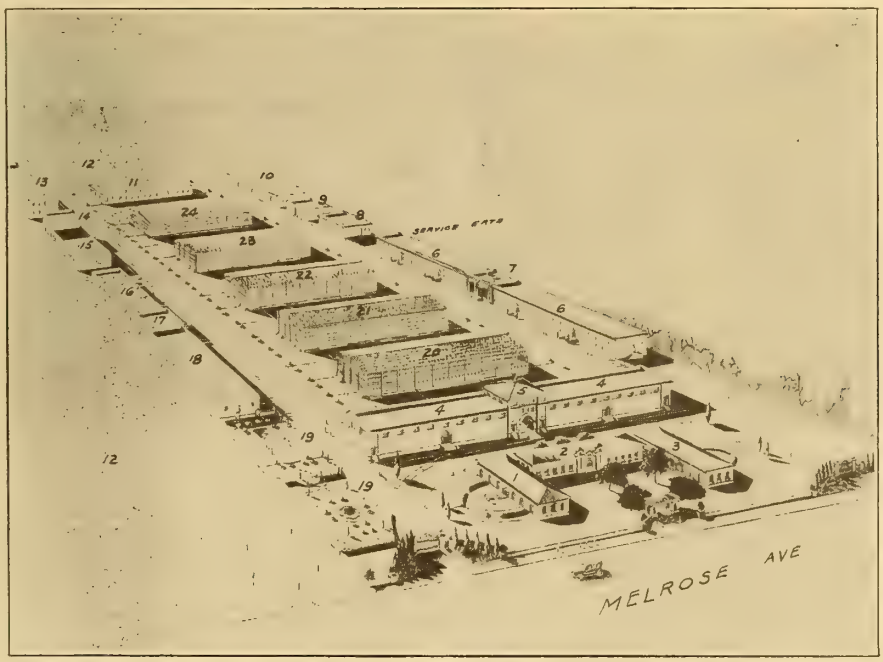
WORK on the new Paralta studios in Los Angeles is rapidly nearing completion. When finished the studios will be not only of the largest, but finest in existence.

They are located on the north side of Melrose avenue just beyond Van Ness street. The buildings cover ten acres of the eighty acre tract which was purchased by the company a few months ago. Several of the buildings are already completed and work is being rushed to finish the rest, including the administration building, cafe and dressing-room buildings, five glass-enclosed stages, property buildings, warehouses, carpenter shops, electrical shops, garages and other structures, each designed with every modern appliance known in the making of pictures.

The buildings are just across the street from the old studios. Centered as they are in a compactly planned group, the buildings will serve as the hub of studio grounds to be utilized for the construction of large settings of buildings, street scenes and replicas of entire towns, if necessary.

The expansion of properties has been made necessary by the enlarged scope of production undertaken by the Paralta organization, which is now producing not only Paralta plays featuring Paralta stars, but also work for other film companies, which though separate in organization, entered with Paralta into the plan for centralized co-operative producing activities.

Immediately facing Melrose avenue will be the central administration building flanked on either side by the buildings of the scenario department and the cafe. Behind these structures is a mammoth brick property building separated by a central archway leading back to the five steel and glass-enclosed stages, each of which measures sixty by one-hundred and fifty feet and which has ample space to accommodate six to eight settings.



These stages are to be higher than any glass stages now in use, this being done to arrange for better manipulation of the light-diffusing system and to make possible the suspension of certain scenic effects from the supporting girders in the top of the structures.

A novel feature of the dressing-room buildings which will take up almost the entire eastern side of the stages, is a luxuriously furnished green room which will offer an ideal meeting place and club room for the personnel of the organization and professional forces. The dressing rooms range in size and equipment according to the use they are to be put to, the dressing rooms of the stars being suites composed of a reception room, dressing room, wardrobe room and bath.

The small portions of the grounds not occupied by buildings are being laid out in formal gardens of the French and Italian type.

The studios will also include a laboratory building, a building for the wardrobe department, one for draperies, one for plaster and wood-working, a stock room, a planing mill, scene painting docks, etc.

The Paralta stars include Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Rhea Mitchell, Henry B. Walthall and J. Warren Kerrigan, who are now appearing before the cameras in the new studios. Beside the Paralta company, Selexart, Pathe and Mastercraft are also enjoying the exceptional opportunities which this completely equipped producing center affords.

New Paralta Studios, Los Angeles. 1, scenario department; 2, administration building; 3, cafe; 4, property department; 5, wardrobe and draperies; 6, dressing room; 7, green room; 8, plaster workers; 9, cabinet workers; 10, garage; 11, carpenter shops; 12, open spaces for exterior settings; 13, laboratory; 14, power plant; 15, electrical shop; 16, 17, 18, scene docks and store house; 19, floral gardens; 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, glass-enclosed stages.

Miss Barriscale Completes Play

Bessie Barriscale has completed her Paralta Play, "Blindfolded," under the direction of Raymond B. West and will start immediately on her next production, "Patriotism," which has been written especially for her by two of the staff writers, R. B. Kidd and Jane Holly.

"Blindfolded," which is from the pen of E. Richard Schayer, is considered by Miss Barriscale as one of the most complex roles she has ever enacted. Miss Barriscale is seen in the role of a young girl who is educated by a crook, a sort of Fagan, who teaches her all the science of yeggdom instead of her A. B. C.'s.

She learns to open safes by touch and her sense of hearing and the numbers of the combinations constitute her arithmetic. Surrounded by these environments, she will still be seen as the natural, lovable little person who will win the hearts of the audience, the kind of a girl that Miss Barriscale can portray so well.

Alice Joyce to New Orleans

Having completed work on "Strength of the Weak," a forthcoming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, Alice Joyce, under the direction of Tom Torriss has begun the production of "Find the Woman," adapted from "Cherches la Femme," one of O. Henry's best known stories.

Preparations are under way for Miss Joyce and her company to go to New Orleans, the locale that forms the background of the story, and it is expected that the company will leave within the next few days.

Numerous historic landmarks of the old Croole City will be incorporated in the picture, including the picturesque old French market, the St. Louis Cathedral, the old French Absinthe House and many other historically famous show places.

Church Paper Praises "The Cross Bearer"

Catholic News Describes World Picture as "Thrilling, Entertaining," and "A Splendid Spectacular Photoplay"

THE CATHOLIC NEWS, a weekly magazine closely affiliated with the clergy of the Catholic church, under issue of March 30 devotes a half column to a description of "The Cross Bearer," which is remarkable for its tone of superlative praise. The picture, which is distributed by World, is described as "thrilling, entertaining, a splendid spectacular photoplay of timely interest." This is one of the first times recorded that a church organ has given spontaneous praise to a motion picture.

Under caption of an "Impressive Film Play," the Catholic News says:

"Thrilling, entertaining, a splendid spectacular photoplay of timely interest is 'The Cross Bearer,' with Montagu Love in the role of Cardinal Mercier, Belgium's heroic churchman and the world's idol. The production has aroused the enthusiastic admiration of audiences wherever it has been given. The background is Belgium shortly after the outbreak of the war. The miseries of his afflicted country, complicated with the romance of a young Belgian officer and his sweetheart, the latter the Cardinal's pretty ward, supply material for the connection of a clever plot that holds the spectator's interest through the succession of intensely dramatic scenes and episodes leading up to a gratifying climax.

"Mr. Love plays the role of the eminent churchman with dignity, passion, brilliancy and power that reveal in convincing manner his ability. Jeanne Eagels impersonates 'Liane de Merode,' the heroine, with winsome grace and charm, and the remainder of the cast is excellent. No expense has been spared in staging the production, which has been adapted to the screen by Anne Maxwell and photographed by Philip Hatkine, directed by George Archinbaud.

"Some of the scenes are magnificent, reproducing for instance the interior of the Louvain cathedral, of the Vatican and the Cardinal's palace, and the street scenes are also on an elaborate scale. There are no battle scenes proper, but many tensely dramatic military episodes give the chief figure fine opportunity for splendid acting.

"As a film play, 'The Cross Bearer' ranks among the best present-day war dramas, and is well worth seeing."

Star Goes Up in Airplane

Hedda Nova, Vitagraph's young Russian actress and heroine in Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady's forthcoming serial, "The Woman In the Web," has fractured the rule prohibiting women from flying in army airplanes.

It happened outside San Diego at the Aviation School of California, where by special permission from the United States government, several flights were made for the eighth episode, where an automobile is wrecked by bombs dropped from an airplane.

Otto Lederer had gone up several times when Miss Nova, who had never been aloft, began to beg the army officers to let her go up "just once." The officers had seen her driving her racing motor car and riding cowboy's horses and sized her up as a woman with iron nerve and not at all likely to get squeamish. So they said she might go up and no more delighted woman ever climbed in behind a pilot.

Ten thousand feet above the field the Vitagraph star soared and then spiralled safely, but all too quickly for her, to earth. She immediately wanted to go up again, but as one permit only had been signed she had to be content.

"Mary Had a Little Lamb"

In Mary Miles Minter's American-Mutual production, "The Greater Call," now being produced, the little star appears in a ravishing Bo-Peep costume.

A flock of sheep were driven across the stage in one scene and a tiny lamb made its professional debut with its mother. The owner of the sheep christened the lamb Mary Miles Minter and at the end of the day's work presented Mary with her namesake.

Mary Miles Minter the Second has now joined the Minter menagerie and true to the ancient legend, Mary's little lamb follows her to work each day.

Crane Makes First World Film

Frank Crane is directing Madge Evens and Johnny Hines in a new World photoplay bearing the working titles of "Clarissa." Mr. Crane is a new accession to the directorial staff of World. His last picture before joining World was "Thais," with Mary Garden.

Adolfi Back in Gotham

John Adolfi, the director whose first World picture will be "The Heart of A Girl," written by Maravene Thompson, has returned to New York with his company after taking numerous scenes at Washington. Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings are starred in this production.

Work on "Beloved Blackmailer"

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley of World are actively engaged under the direction of Dell Henderson in a new picture which bears the working title of "The Beloved Blackmailer." This picture was written by Harry C. Hoyt, one of the new members of the World scenario staff.

A strong moment in "Journey's End," a World picture starring Ethel Clayton.

Gambling Den Feature in "Stolen Orders"

Set Resembles Club Exposed in Recent Sensational Scandal by District Attorney in New York

WITH public attention focused on gambling and gamblers and with the recent sensational events incident to the prosecution of the John Doe gambling inquiry by District Attorney Swann of New York, one of the most interesting scenes in William A. Brady's big feature picture, "Stolen Orders," promises to be that depicting a fashionable gambling club operating under full steam.

This institution is said to resemble closely—in fact, almost to be a reproduction of one of the clubs recently brought out of its discreet retirement in richly furnished quarters through the activities of the New York authorities. This particular place and its less particular methods of separating patrons from their cash has been the unwilling recipient of considerable attention from the newspapers.

Kitty Gordon, playing the wife of an American admiral and possessed of an uncontrollable desire to make big bills grow from little greenbacks, gets into the toils of certain suave men whose business it is, apparently, to offer every facility to that end. She is introduced to the club and to the paraphernalia incident to chemin de fer and other indoor sports.

She plays, winning a little at first, as is ever the custom of the newcomer in these select circles, and then the game of chance becomes one of certainty for those on the right side of the board.

The wife of the American admiral, to use the proper parlance, is cleaned out, and it is then that the sinister force behind what develops to be a carefully concealed plan begins to make itself manifest. What that force is and how its machinations eventuate is part of the stirring story, which is interpreted by a remarkable cast of favorites—Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, George MacQuarrie and Madge Evans being in the principal roles.

Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Montagu Love in William A. Brady's new picture, "Stolen Orders."

Thrills in "House of Silence"

In the new Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid, "The House of Silence," by Elwyn Barron, there is everything that goes to make a story full of mystery and strange adventure.

Darkened chambers, wherein mysterious crimes are committed; rooms with trap doors, fights in the dark, underground passages, a pretty girl and a young millionaire clubman with a leaning toward detective work—these form some of the elements of what should prove one of the most exciting stories ever devised for screen entertainment.

And it is to be entertainment purely; the sort that between book covers keeps you up reading till all hours and which on the screen will hold the spectator on the edge of his chair, ready to jump at the least noise, tense and thrilled to the inner fibres of his being.

Not often is a picture of this character offered by Paramount, but when one is presented it is certain to be a good one. It may be termed a sublimated detective story, not the trashy sort, but genuinely clever, difficult of solution, with thrill after thrill and a big, sensational climax for a finish.

Wallace Reid is the detective—the analytical sort, who reads men's purposes and characters from their hats or coats; Ann Little is the charming girl, involved in the network of crime and mystery. Adele Farrington is a very wicked villainess. Winter Hall, Ernest Joy, H. A. Barrows and others are in the cast.

Donald Crisp directed the subject, assisted by Nat Deverich.

Miss Fisher Proves Agile

Margarita Fisher, the sprightly little comedy star of the American Film Company, who has just finished "A Primitive Woman," in which she displays some beautiful gowns, is an expert at turning somersaults, which doctors say are wonderful for unkinking tense muscles.

In this play Miss Fisher turns somersaults one after another so rapidly that the audience follows with a prolonged "o-o-o-h-h-h-h-!" She tries to teach the dignified professor—played by Jack Mower—but the "prof" is a bit too heavy for graceful somersaults and keels over on one side every time he tries it.

But little Margarita can turn somersaults square in her tracks—every time.

Uses Church Soloists

Manager William Griffith Mitchell of the Regent theatre, Toronto, presented a special program during the week of April 1, when the feature attraction was "Mother." A church setting was used on the stage and as an introduction to the picture a chorus of church soloists sang several selections under the leadership of Director Arthur. The choir was enhanced by the presence of Alan Turner, a professional soloist, who had just terminated an engagement at the Imperial theatre, Montreal.

Confer Over Wage Scale

A committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce consisting of A. G. Hettesheimer, chairman, John Weinig and I. Libson, met with a delegation from the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, local No. 65, headed by John Kirsch, last week to consider raising the operators' pay. No agreement was reached and both committees reported back to their respective organizations for further instructions. In all probability another meeting will be held in the near future.

World Announces Its Program for May

Bill Is Headed by "Masks and Faces," with Cast of Fifty Stars, Including Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson

THE release sheet of World Pictures for the month of May holds forth to the enterprising exhibitor four opportunities of exceptional merit, one of the photoplays being a special of hitherto unknown excellence distributed on the program. The names and release dates are as follows:

May 6—Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson with a cast of 50 stars in "Masks and Faces."

May 13—Ethel Clayton in "Journey's End" with John Bowers, Frank Mayo and Muriel Ostriche.

May 20—Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton in "Vengeance."

May 27—June Elvidge with John Bowers in "The Oldest Law."

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson leads the list in an adaptation of Charles Reade's famous novel, "Peg Woffington," in which he has a supporting cast without parallel either on the stage or screen. Most of the stars are household names to picture-goers, among them George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur Pinero, Sir James Barrie, Irene Vanbrugh, Sir George Alexander, Lillah McCarthy, Lyall Swete, Gertrude Elliott, Gladys Cooper and Viola Tree.

Only the circumstances under which this photoplay was produced permitted the concentration of such a distinguished cast. The Academy of Dramatic Arts decided to produce a picture for the benefit of the orphaned children of English actors who died during the war and a committee composed of Shaw, Pinero, Barrie and several other notables selected Charles Reade's novel as the most suitable story for picturization.

The publicity possibilities which lie in this film for the exhibitor are an unlimited mine of money-making advertising material.

In the succeeding picture, "Journey's End," three players possessing a following almost equivalent to most stars support Miss Clayton, namely John Bowers, Muriel Ostriche and Frank Mayo. The picture deals with the results of an unusual arrangement entered into by a husband and wife who are seemingly of incompatible temperaments and who decide to part for a period of three months, during which interval their actions are to be entirely unrestrained. The resulting confusion is full of humorous and serious episodes which make for clean entertainment. Some of the backgrounds are of surpassing beauty. The greater part of the picture was filmed at Palm Beach and gives an excellent glimpse of the life lead at that famous resort.

"Vengeance," the next picture, marks the first appearance of Barbara Castleton in World Pictures. Miss Castleton is well known to fans because of her success in independent productions such as "God's Man," "On Trial" and "The Lone Wolf."

The picture deals with the fortunes of an English family in India. Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie both have important roles in the support. The picture is produced on the most lavish scale, several of the interior scenes requiring an unusual outlay.

"The Oldest Law," the final feature of the month, presents June Elvidge in several dramatic situations requiring marked and unusual capacities. The play deals with the adventures of a girl unaccustomed to the fevered life of the city who is lost in its whirling vortex. How she succeeds in reaching the pinnacle of happiness and navigates her way without relinquishing her ideals, forms a play of great intensity.

Big Scenes for "Gismonda"

The interior scenes of the ducal palace of Gismonda were taken last week for the Paramount picture of that title, starring Lina Cavalieri, at the Fort Lee, N. J., studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The settings have been reproduced from old paintings of a Grecian palace and indicate the luxury enjoyed by the nobility of that country in the year 1500. An exceptionally large set is the reception hall containing the dais of Gismonda, on which she sat in her stately robes and received her subjects and the suitors for her hand.

This week scenes are being filmed in the private garden of Gismonda, which has been staged inside the studio. In this garden a massive fountain of marble was erected and beautiful plants and palms arranged about, giving the impression of a giant conservatory.

In the outside grounds the carpenters are constructing the amphitheatre in which the gladiators fight with each other and with wild beasts. These scenes will be taken next week, showing the rescue of Francisco, the four-year-old son of Gismonda, from the lion's den, by Almerio, who kills one of the savage beasts.

Publicity That Makes for Profits

CLEVER AND ORIGINAL IDEAS IN ADVERTISING

Motography Launches New Department

Will Be Devoted to Best Methods of Creating Interest in Pictures and Boosting Box Office Receipts

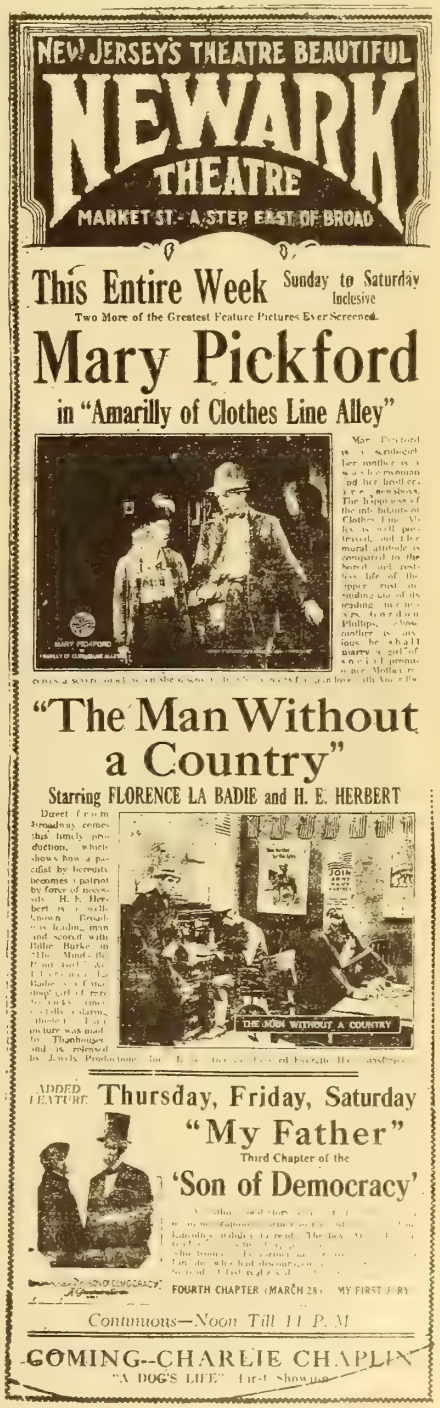
THE success of a manager depends altogether upon his ability to fill his house. He can increase attendance and hold patrons by showing programs that are better than his rival's, but he cannot smash box office records without going farther. He must advertise!

This theory, disputed when the industry was young, no longer is even questioned. It is a fact as well as a theory. The trade as a whole now recognizes that advertising is the key to success, assuming, of course, that the pictures involved are meritorious, and it is not a question of merit as much as excellence, as bad pictures are the exception, not the rule.

Though recognizing this fact, many managers do not advertise as they should. Many could afford to double the space they are using in the newspapers, not to speak of personal letters to the patrons, proper distribution of programs and original stunts that can be carried out with nearly every film. Realizing what a vital part advertising has in the exhibitor field, MOTOGRAPHY has decided to create a publicity department in which striking and original advertisements will be reproduced along with clever and original publicity methods attaining success in various parts of the country.

The department begins with this issue on this and the following page. It will appear weekly or every other week as the occasion demands. Exhibitors are urged to send in samples of their work together with a description of it and the success attained.

The first illustrations which appear show some really good work from an advertising standpoint, and certainly must have had the effect of boosting receipts.



The advertisement of the Strand Theatre of Syracuse, N. Y., (next page) is striking. It catches the eye where others would not. Of course, "there's a reason." There always is. The advertisement is an engraving, and not put together in the ad alley. It cost money, but it is pretty safe to assume that it compelled attention all out of proportion to the extra expense.

The advertisement of the Newark Theatre of Newark, N. J., stands out unusually well. First it is of unusual shape, being of full column depth, two columns wide, with an engraved name plate at the top.

The advertisement of the Colonial Theatre of Albany, N. Y., is in the "something different" class. It is laid out in a clever fashion after the program style, and with illustrations of uniform size makes a layout that will catch the eye of many fans.

Seeks New Ideas from Other Managers

Harold E. Edel of the Strand Theatre, New York, Addresses Letter to Theatre Men in All Parts of Country

HAROLD E. EDEL, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, has forwarded a communication to the managing directors of prominent photoplay houses, urging a direct and thorough spirit of co-operation.

"The Strand Theatre has always endeavored to be entirely original in the conduct of its house," he said, "and to employ every means and method, regardless of expense, to invest its performances with the most advanced ideas, but I do maintain that no individual possesses a monopoly of ability and that no man by himself is the last word in either managerial ability or judgment as to what is meritorious and how to make it better.

"It is not alone possible, but probable that some man or men, far removed from the activities of New York, may possess an original idea which he is willing to share with his brother exhibitor. It is because I always welcome suggestions that I conceived the idea of this co-operative movement.

"This movement, I believe, should be extended to reviews of productions playing at our houses, how they were received by the audience, and any original ideas of presentation. This should extend to the entire program, including the picture and musical effects.

"To some exhibitor far removed from New York, even a worth while single reel production which has not been called to the attention of the New York managers would prove to be of decided merit and information as to such release would certainly be welcomed by me.

"I appreciate that perhaps because of our institution being in New York, the film mart of the United States, I will be in a better postion of affording greater co-operative service to exhibitors in other parts of the United States than those in other cities, but I would consider my endeavors well recompensed if I received but once out of the year information or advice which would be worth while taking advantage of.

"I do not mean to form any organization. My whole idea is an open plan of unselfish co-operation among exhibitors."

Dog and Cat in Comedy

Teddy, the big Dane dog, and Pepper, the cat, both of whom have become internationally famous in Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, play important parts in the next picture, "Friend Husband."

The story has to do with an old uncle who was willing to give $10,000 to see a baby in the family of a nephew he had never met. When it was discovered that Uncle was about to arrive there was a wild scramble to produce the infant. Wayland Trask, the nephew, determines to dig up a baby if he has to kidnap it. Charles Murray, the bachelor neighbor, also decides to get an infant at all hazards, and Teddy, the dog, loyal to Wayland, his master, realizes that the case is desperate and goes in quest of one also. Unfortunately, Teddy did not discriminate in the kind of baby he kidnaped.

The result was that too many babies appeared at a most embarrassing time. Teddy and Pepper, the cat, have a little argument in the flour bin, and both fur and flour fly.

It is expected that this comedy will have a particularly strong appeal to women in view of the innocent character of the story, the "cute" actions of the babies and the remarkable sagacity displayed by the animals.

Besides Trask and Murray, prominent parts are played by Mary Thurman, Gene Rogers, Harry Gribbon, Earl Kenton and Laura LaVarnie.

American Film Employes to Army

The American Film Company has contributed two more of its studio staff to the service of Uncle Sam in the persons of Sheridan Hall and Frederick Smith. Mr. Hall was recently made assistant to Director Edward Sloman, while Mr. Smith has been rapidly coming to the front as a juvenile heavy. Mr. Hall has been assigned to the Aviation Division at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, while Mr. Smith joins the 309th Engineers at Camp Freemont, California.

Will Keep Operators on Job

It is intimated that the Ontario government in Canada will shortly adopt a regulation which will require the equipment of all projection machines with trip mechanisms that will prevent operators from leaving the machines unattended.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

"Carmen of the Klondyke" Sets Standard

Declared to Be Best Alaskan Picture Ever Made—Successor to "Flame of the Yukon" and "The Spoilers"

IN EVERY era of the motion picture there has existed some Alaskan production by which all other pictures of the same nature were judged—always some stirring drama of the Frozen North which was established in the minds of the public as a criterion.

There was something in the elemental existence of the early days of the Yukon which has fascinated the theatregoer as no other phase of contemporary life, and productions which accurately depicted that life have prospered accordingly.

So in the early days of the motion picture, "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, was rightly regarded as the finest example of an Alaskan photoplay, and its popularity was enormous. It remained at the head of its class until "The Flame of the Yukon" was written by Monte M. Katterjohn. This production has occupied much the same position as its predecessor and film critics and the general public came to consider this or that picture as "the best since 'The Flame of the Yukon.'"

A. L. Jekyll, manager of the Jekyll theatre, Parker, S. D. Mr. Jekyll is one of the frequent contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me."

Nothing to exceed it, however, had been produced until a few weeks ago, when another Katterjohn story, "Carmen of the Klondike," was produced by Selexart Pictures, and was immediately hailed as the most powerful drama of the Yukon country ever presented on stage or screen—a tense, absorbing tale of the gold-seeking hordes who swept like an avalanche over the mystic land of the North, living amidst the elemental passions of unrestrained men, and staking their futures on the turn of a card.

This production is now being presented as the initial offering of the State Right Distributors.

Diando Makes Pathe Serial

The first episode of "The Wolf-faced Man," being made by Diando for Pathe, is well on its way under Stuart Paton, the well known serial director. George Larkin, leading man, is lined up for some sensational stunts, while the leading lady, Betty Compson, is entering into the serious drama with energy. Horace B. Carpenter is more than living up to his reputation as a handler of heavy roles, while True Boardman, the hero of "The Stingaree" serials, Frederick Malatesta, William Quinn, Harry O'Connor and the female heavy, Ora Carew, who all have prominent parts in the new serial, are well started in the production.

As an illustration of the care for details taken by the director, the entire company was ordered to the mountains east of Fresno, 300 miles away, where the company took one scene showing George Larkin and the leading lady, Betty Compson, taking a dive for life on a log down a precipitous mountain side in a flume, the end being projected into a chasm below.

Welcome "Sterling System"

Arthur F. Beck, president of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, is in receipt of a letter from his manager of sales, Herbert R. Ebenstein, in which he states that independent exchangemen throughout territory he has visited are welcoming the "Sterling System" method of placing pictures.

"The Hypocrites" and "The Natural Law" are two of the de luxe dramas placed under the "Sterling System."

"The Hypocrites" is Sir Henry Arthur Jones' successful play that was given under Charles Frohman's management at the Hudson Theatre, New York, for seven months. "The Natural Law" played at the Republic Theatre, New York, for eight months under John Cort's direction.

Henley Sees Own Picture in Home Town

Hobart Henley, who directed and takes a leading part in "Parentage," visited Cincinnati while the picture was shown at the Walnut Theatre there. Mr. Henley is a former Cincinnatian, having been graduated from the University of Cincinnati.

Inasmuch as "Parentage" treats of certain sociological subjects concerning vital truths of life, the Social Unit of Cincinnati is taking special interest in the picture. Wilbur Phillips, head of the Social Unit, accepted a special invitation from the management to review the picture.

Billy West in Twenty-first Comedy

The twenty-first comedy produced by the King-Bee Films Corporation, will be entitled "The Handy Man." Billy West, as in all previous releases, is the star.

This comedy will be released on May 1, the day the King-Bee Films Corporation celebrates its first year in business.

The records made by this new organization to date are film history, and the territory for the entire world has been sold by King-Bee's sales manager, Nat H. Spitzer.

Sydney Abel in New Select Post

Sydney E. Abel, executive office representative of Select Pictures Corporation, has taken charge of Select's St. Louis branch, the managership of which has been made vacant by the resignation of E. W. Dustin in order to join the General Film Company.

Mr. Abel, who will devote his attention exclusively to the St. Louis branch and the territory which it supplies, has started a tremendous sales drive in this territory.

"Buster" Keaton and "Scoop" Conlon, the former a comedian in the Fatty Arbuckle company and the latter Mr. Arbuckle's press representative, have been accepted under the draft. Neither has been called out, however.

Garrett Promises to Unloose a Bombshell

Prediction That Export Business Was in Danger Unless Reductions Were Made in Tax Now Recalled

SIDNEY GARRETT, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., one of the largest of export and import film concerns, who several months ago predicted that the export trade was in jeopardy unless certain reductions were made in the tax, will make an announcement next week that it is said will startle the whole industry regarding the effect of new conditions in foreign markets.

Mr. Garrett at the age of 34 finds himself president of a concern of international reputation with home exchanges in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, New Castle, Birmingham, Glasgow, Cardiff and Dublin, and foreign branches in Paris, Turin, Moscow, Barcelona, Copenhagen, Sydney, Cape Town, Bombay and Tokio.

Before May 1, Mr. Garrett will ship over a million feet of new film to London to be distributed throughout the various exchanges. In considerably less than a year Mr. Garrett has established himself as a force to be reckoned with in the American film business. Owing to the expansion of his various interests he has found it necessary to take extra quarters in the Godfrey building, New York, and he will have the largest offices of any export concern in the world.

Mr. Garrett personally handled the deal which he closed last week as a result of which he shipped 750,000 feet of film to Paris, including the latest Charlie Chaplin picture, "A Dog's Life," "The Whip," "Bar Sinister," "Cold Deck," "Submarine Eye," "The Barrier," and the latest Metro, Paralta and King-Bee Billy West comedies.

These pictures were shipped to the newly formed Mundusfilm Company of Paris, of which Mr. Garrett has been elected exclusive purchasing agent.

He has recently been elected president of the Bengar Pictures, Inc., organized to export Selig productions.

Essanay Has Studio Army

On the anniversary of the United States entering the war, the Essanay volunteer company, which has been drilling in the Essanay studios in Chicago for several months, was mustered into the service of the state as Unit 380, Illinois Volunteer Training Corps.

Major Lathrop Collins, commanding the Cook County District I. V. T. C., officiated. The major was met at the entrance of the studios by a military guard and escorted to the drill hall, where after inspection of the records and company drill, he administered the oath of allegiance to Captain Richard N. Woodman, First Lieutenant F. Lee Powers, and Second Lieutenant Lee Metford. The seventy-seven enlisted men then were sworn in a body.

Major Collins presented Capt. Woodman with a soldiers' wrist watch, the gift of the company. The colors and the Essanay service flag for twenty-five of its members who have gone to the front were then saluted.

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has turned one of the studios over to the organization for drill purposes two nights in the week, and has furnished the company with guns and signal flags.

Trick Photography in Metro Play

Unique and original photographic effects are being obtained by Cameraman Antonio Gaudio for Metro's production of "Lend Me Your Name," a new Harold Lockwood starring vehicle prepared by Fred J. Balshofer and John B. Clymer from Francis Perry Elliott's novel, now in course of production under Mr. Balshofer's direction.

"Lend Me Your Name" is a comedy which gets its many amusing situations from complications that ensue when the Earl of Gilleigh trades identities with his double, a second story man whom he discovers in his home, in order to escape his fiery tempered wife, Sophronia, who is scheduled to arrive from abroad the following day.

Harold Lockwood enacts the dual role of the earl and the second story man and it is in the scenes playing the two characters that Cameraman Gaudio has displayed his best skill. One of his most striking trick "shots" is a double exposure view of the earl and the burglar as they gaze at one another in a mirror and note with amazement their remarkable resemblance.

Film May Show Wilson

Essanay is negotiating with George Creel to have President Wilson appear in the patriotic picture, "Young America," the next George K. Spoor feature. It is the aim to have the president pose for a short strip at his desk or on the capitol grounds.

The picture, while not a war play, is intensely patriotic in sentiment and the strip of the president is intended to show the youth of the country what it may aspire to: That in the United States every boy may in time come to lead the nation.

HOW TO GET THE BEST RESULTS TOLD IN DETAIL

Coast Theatre Mechanically Perfect

California in San Francisco Has Wonderful System of Lighting and Electrical Equipment

THE California theatre of San Francisco is as perfect mechanically as it is beautiful. It contains many innovations and some of these were mentioned in a special article which appeared in a recent issue of the Journal of Electricity. The article says:

"From the motion picture equipment itself to the aisle lights and the telephone systems, the latest in electrical devices has been sought out to make the California theatre of San Francisco a thing of beauty and of comfort for its patrons.

"The building itself is of reinforced concrete in the gothic style, with main auditorium, vestibules, lounge room, rest rooms, try-out rooms, offices and store rooms. Both within and without (for the theatre is flood lighted), its main feature of attractiveness lies in the artistic lighting scheme.

"The stage is framed in a fan-like sounding board of metallic finished filigree work which provides space for the organ pipes, as well as offers an effective reflecting surface for the stage illumination. The color effects are particularly good and the changes of light with the gradual brightening of the blue back-curtain in peacock design, in contrast to the side hangings of old gold, provides a picture of rare beauty.

"The auditorium lighting is semi-indirect and is arranged so that a dim light is provided even during the exhibition of pictures, and then brightened during organ solos and intermissions. Aisle lights alongside each row and exit lights provide effective illumination underfoot and for emergencies.

"The organ itself is electrically driven with an ingenious arrangement by which it sinks down out of sight while the film is running and then rises to within view of the balcony as it is being played.

"A lounge room of considerable size is provided for the convenience of patrons, which is effectively illuminated by central fixtures, side brackets and portables. An illuminated fountain forms an interesting feature here.

"Telephones are provided on this floor for the free use of the public, and a house system connects offices, ticket booths, stage and organ rooms.

"The details of electrical equipment are most complete. Beginning at the service switchboard, we find a duplicate set of services both for A. C. and D. C., with necessary single throw switches on each current for the general lighting and power, and an automatic throwover switch on the exit and emergency feeds.

"From this point connection is made to sub-distributing panels in the basement directly below the stage switchboard, to the stage board and panels in the lobby controlling the exit and emergency lighting, general lighting throughout the lounging room, exterior lighting and motors on roof, to panels in the operating room, to the try-out room, to each motor in basement, stage and attic, and to each heating unit in each of the organ chambers.

"The panels in the operating room are fed from each A. C. and D. C. service and double throw switches are provided for each machine, dissolvers, spot-light and motors. Weston ammeter and volt meters for arc and primary voltages are provided on the panels with necessary switches for taking the reading on any machine off either service. Rheostats are placed in a special chamber under the room, this chamber as well as the operating room being ventilated by forced draft created by fans placed on roof. Equipment is complete with the Motiograph projecting machine, spot-light, dissolvers and winding and rewinding apparatus. All panels are provided with sliding doors.

"The try-out room is located in the basement, fully equipped with projecting machines and all necessary apparatus.

"The stage equipment is complete with three sets of borders, side and foot-lights, each containing lamps of four colors, viz.: white, red, blue and amber, seven three-gang incandescent pockets, seven D. C. arc pockets in the stage floor, four D. C. arc pockets in spot and fly galleries, and two flood lights on the balcony front. General Electric Company dimmers are provided for each color in each border, side and foot-light, and two of the three-gang incandescent pockets. These dimmers are provided with individual and master levers. All circuits are controlled by knife switches on the stage board, master control by push-button switches here operating contactors on the board in the basement.

"The auditorium lighting is semi-indirect and is also wired in four sections to each outlet for as many colors, viz.: white, red, blue and amber. These lamps are fed through four sets of motor-driven dimmers, including a duplicate set of dimmers for footlights. These footlight circuits are provided with double throw switches on the stage board so that they may be fed through the auditorium or stage set of dimmers as desired. All of this lighting and the motors are controlled by three sets of push buttons in the operating room and on the stage board, operating contactors placed on the board in the basement.

"Exit and emergency lighting consists of aisle lights placed in the floor of the auditorium and attached to the rails or set in the walls of balcony aisles, in addition to the regulation lighting required under the ordinance in corridors, lavatories and exits. The lighting of the main vestibule is a combination of semi-indirect and indirect lighting, as is also that of the lobby and lounging room.

"The exterior lighting of the theatre consists of three projectors on the marquise on Fourth street and five on the marquise on Market street, of 1,000 watts each, which are placed so as effectively to bring out the face of the building. In addition to this, there are 1,000 lamps in the two marquise and 700 lamps in the sign, which is placed on the roof, displaying seven different designs.

"The organ chambers are electrically heated, each heater being automatically controlled by thermostats, set to keep a uniform temperature both day and night.

"The power service consists of motor-driven apparatus for the ventilating system, organs, ejector, vacuum, sprinkler, water supply, lift for the console and curtain. All motors are provided with safety first equipment. The lift for the console is operated by a push button on the console and is equipped with limit switches and an electric brake on the motor. The curtain is operated by eight push buttons (five on the stage and three in operating room) which permit of its being raised, lowered and stopped at any point.

"A call and signal system is provided which consist of signal lamps placed at points throughout the auditorium and lobby, which may be operated from a switch in the ticket booth. A full automatic non-interfering Decker intercommunicating telephone system of eighteen stations connects all executive offices, ticket booth, operator's room, stage, etc. Five of these stations are equipped with the Decker loud-speaking receivers, which permit the party called to carry on a conversation without the necessity of having to remove the receiver from the phone. A Couch system of phones between the six organ chambers and the console permits of conversation between any chamber and the console."

New Camera Declared Best in the World

Akeley Apparatus Adopted by Government for War Work Following Perfection by Inventor

THE Akeley motion picture camera, about which much has been heard recently, but little divulged, is the subject of a special illustrated article in the Scientific American of recent date. Motography has obtained special permission from the Scientific American to use the illustrations and the story. The illustrations appear below and the article follows:

"There had been little improvement in the motion picture camera and this branch of cinematography had failed to keep up with rapid progress in other directions when Carl Akeley, the famous naturalist, sculptor and big game hunter, started out on a motion-picture expedition through Africa. He took along a standard camera such as was, and is still, employed in motion-picture studios and in the field.

"But practical experience in the field soon convinced Mr. Akeley that existing cameras were not adapted to the hard service and many requirements of the naturalist-photographer. So he set about designing his own camera, disregarding from the very start the features which had come to be looked upon as the pillars of motion-picture photography, so to speak.

"Beyond doubt Mr. Akeley has produced a camera which is far in advance of any other, due largely to the fact that his design is quite revolutionary. To begin with, his camera is made in the circular form shown instead of square. It is made entirely of metal.

"The operator can watch the image photographed on the film itself during actual filming, so that he sees exactly what is being recorded. This is made possible by the use of an eye-piece and automatic light gate, the latter opening only when the eye is pressed against the eye-piece so as to exclude daylight.

"Focusing can be done on a ground glass finder without disturbing the film; this is accomplished by a knife mechanism which cuts a circle in the film at the bid of a pull-and-push rod leading to the outside of the camera.

"An improved film movement is employed, and the shutter is said to possess an exposure efficiency considerably above that of the usual camera. A gyroscope stabilizer makes it possible to use the camera without a tripod; and where a tripod is employed it can be of the lightest variety as compared to the heavy, cumbersome tripods called for by the conventional camera.

"As his work neared completion, Mr. Akeley realized that the requirements of the big-game photographer were much the same as the war photographer. So he at once came to Washington and placed his invention at the disposal of the newly created photographic division of the U. S. A. Signal Corps. Major Barnes, chief of the division, was quick to see the possibilities of this revolutionary camera and adopted it as the 'box' for our official war photographers.

"Since his camera has been taken over by the government, Mr. Akeley has added several new features which it is not possible to speak of here. Suffice is it to state, however, that in this camera the signal corps has beyond doubt the most highly perfected motion-picture camera extant."

Manager Designs Film Box

The Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, has just installed a projection booth which is constructed of steel and reinforced concrete. The booth has an electric re-wind and has a new kind of film box, which was designed by A. G. Hettesheimer, the manager. This box, in which the films are stored, consists of various compartments, each compartment having automatic closing lids.

The booth has a comfortable work bench and good ventilation. It is large enough for four machines if necessary. The Cincinnati building inspector complimented the management on the booth and considers it one of the best in the city.

Hart Works on New Picture

William S. Hart and company, with Katherine MacDonald as leading woman, left Los Angeles last week for location in the northern part of the state. Later they will probably go to San Francisco or Seattle to do other exterior scenes.

The picture is by C. Gardner Sullivan. Mr. Hart is to direct it himself. It will be an Artcraft release following the Ince production for Artcraft entitled "Selfish Yates." "Selfish Yates" follows "The Tiger Man," released April 1.

Heads Montreal Exchange Men

Announcement has been made in Montreal that Ernest Lafontaine, of the law firm of Bercovitch, Lafontaine & Gordon, has been chosen president of the Montreal Exchange Managers' Association. Mr. Lafontaine said he wanted to kill any impression that the exchange managers were hostile to the exhibitors.

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

I. BERNSTEIN of the Star Theatre at Lincoln, Ill., called on Walter L. Hill, publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week and arranged for exploitations of "The Son of Democracy." Mr. Bernstein told Mr. Hill that the war had created a problem for him, many of his best patrons having been taken away by the draft. Lincoln has a population of 12,000. It has 100 men at the front and two companies of Home Guards comprised of 130 men drill on four nights a week. The women of the town are busy day and night making comforts for the fighting men. The result has been decreased attendance and Mr. Bernstein has been compelled to use all of his ingenuity to make up for the losses.

Walter L. Hill, publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation office, says that Ludy Bosten, manager of the Amuse-U Theatre at Muscatine, Ia., is one of the most progressive exhibitors in the middle west. For illustration, he says that Mr. Bosten is daily using ten inches or more of space in the newspapers of Muscatine and has six 24-sheet stands, eight 6-sheet stands, six 3-sheet stands and twenty 1-sheet stands working for him.

From the secretary of state Mr. Bosten obtained names of all the holders of automobile licenses in Muscatine and each week mails them notes about his pictures. A boy on the outside checks up the results among the automobiles at the curb. From the library Mr. Bosten obtained a complete list of book borrowers and he canvasses the list on every picture that is an adaptation of fiction.

In addition to all these publicity methods he gets after the society leaders on every picture of special note, such as Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird." His efforts are slowly but surely being rewarded.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

MANAGERS in Cleveland are in a battle over censorship, due to the alleged offense of a few houses showing questionable pictures. Officials of the Cleveland Federated Churches are seeking a censorship ordinance from the council.

At the first hearing the managers made it plain that they did not object to "common sense supervision," but were against the ordinance proposed by the church body. The churchmen, following the presentation by the theatre men of their side, expressed themselves as willing to have the measure modified, providing it would have the effect of protecting the city's young people.

Theatrical men attending the session were John F. Royal of B. F. Keith's Hippodrome; John S. Hale of the Colonial; Frank Drew of the Star; Jack McNamara of the Empire; John Lyons of the Prospect, and George A. H. Gardner of the Opera House. Representatives of the church body included Rev. E. R. Wright, secretary; Rabbi Louis Wolsey of the Euclid Avenue Temple; Rev. Francis T. Moran of St. Patrick's church and Attorney E. J. Hart.

Rev. Mr. Wright stated that the stand of Federated Churches for theatrical censorship was prompted by strong appeals from Western Reserve university that something be done to eradicate evils in certain theatres which were being visited extensively by its students. Officials of the institution, the clergyman declared, expressed themselves as helpless to cope with the problem.

He stated the objectionable features sought to be eliminated did not obtain in most of the theatres. Where they did exist, he asserted, the performances were frequented chiefly by boys and men.

Rabbi Wolsey characterized the institution of the theatre as a greater agency of uplift than the church, because the former reaches a larger audience.

"However, the greater its power for good, the greater its power for evil if abused," he continued. "Most of the theatres here would not need censorship."

Nat C. Goodwin, the comedian, has won his suit against the Mirror Film Company. Casting aside the countercharges of incompetency and tardiness for work, a jury in Justice Greenbaum's part of the Supreme Court at New York awarded Goodwin $15,200, the full amount, with interest, asked for breach of contract.

The case was before the court about ten days. The actor had a contract with the defendant for six months' work as their star, it was brought out in the testimony, at a salary of $1,250 a week. He further alleged the defendant organization was eleven weeks behind in its pay when he was unlawfully discharged.

The defendant company asserted that Goodwin was discharged for "incompetency" because of his irregular habits and his propensity for always being late. Almost every day, the Mirror folk charged, the work on their pictures in which Goodwin was involved, was delayed by the non-appearance of the star, and the money they were forced to give up to the cast for their services in waiting around, they declared, was a considerable waste and drain on the exchequer.

The United Photoplays Company, 180 West Washington street, Chicago, has clashed with the law. Joseph L. Withers, head of the organization, is awaiting trial on a charge of operating a confidence game. Withers, it is charged, advertised that he could get jobs for girls in pictures. Then he would sell them grease paint at $2.25 a box, profiting $2.00, it is alleged, and also a pamphlet, entitled "How to Get on the Stage," for $1, the overplus being 97 cents. Mrs. Esther Lindegren, one of his "students," brought the company to the attention of the police.

"He said if I went into the movies I must become broad-minded on sex questions, as artists had to give up the common restricted idea of those things," Mrs. Lindgren told the police. "He also insisted on measuring me for costumes, and was most indelicate about it, to say the least."

And so Policewoman Alice Clement and Miss Lillian Flyborg, 19, a friend of Mrs. Lindegren, dropped up to the studio. Withers seemed shy of Mrs. Clement. He was right. She arrested him.

New York Bill Now Before Senate

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, delivered a strong appeal for the passage of the bill. He said:

"Every Y. M. C. A. organization and the cantonments have motion picture exhibitions on Sunday and the reason is that they keep the soldiers from going to worse places and now we find the disreputable places closed.

Opposition More Lenient

"I am glad to note the ladies and gentlemen in opposition to this bill are handling the motion picture business a little more tenderly than they did a year ago. A year ago I understand we were referred to as second story workers, children of the devil and people raised in hell. And now I wish to read a letter.

"'The motion picture theatres of the country are rendering so substantial a service in aiding the four-minute men as spokesmen of the national cause that I could not willingly fail to acknowledge the debt the country owes these theatre managers. Their response to requests has been hearty and their co-operation has been most helpful.' The letter was signed Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States."

In behalf of organized labor, Peter J. Brady said that motion pictures are a great factor in keeping the families of the working classes together, and while the rich enjoy their automobile rides, golf and tennis on Sundays, others should not be restrained from enjoying their entertainment on the Sabbath. The great mass of people want to go to the motion picture theatres, he said, and they should have that privilege if they desire.

Pastor Speaks for Bill

Rev. William H. Jackson of Glen Head, Long Island, who has in the past been opposed to films on Sunday, declared he is strongly in favor of them now.

Others who spoke in favor of the measure were: Helen Duey, associate editor, Woman's Home Companion; William Capes, secretary of the Mayors' Conference, and Judge Kenefick of Buffalo.

Among the prominent film men present were Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Arthur Friend, counsel for the Metro Film Corporation; John Manheimer, president of the Brooklyn Exhibitors; John Whitman, Cinematograph Exhibitors' Club; Sidney Cohen, Manhattan Exhibition League; M. J. Gerson, vice president, Queens Borough Exhibitors' League, and Charles O'Reilly of the Harlem Exhibitors' League.

The speakers against the bill were Mrs. Ella Booles of the Women's Temperance Union, Rev. T. R. Good of Schenectady and W. W. Duncan of the Kings County Sabbath School Association.

The Story of the Picture

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Artcraft

THE TIGER MAN—(Five Reels)—April 1.—Features W. S. Hart. Hawk Parsons, a bandit chief, widely known as "The Tiger Man," because of his ferocity and cruelty, lurks on the borders of the desert in search of prey. A wagon train is halted, owing to the lack of water, and the emigrants suffer great privations. Among these is Ruth Ingram, wife of a minister of the gospel, who is apparently dying, and she volunteers to go in search of aid. She encounters Hawk, "The Tiger Man," and after she has told him her story he goes to the relief of the imperiled emigrants. The party is attacked by Indians, but after a desperate battle the savages are driven away by the emigrants under the leadership of Hawk Parsons. Hawk conceives an infatuation for Ruth and he carries her away with him to his cabin in a secret recess in the desert. She attempts to slay herself, then swoons. This is the beginning of "The Tiger Man's" regeneration. He kidnaps a physician and when her health is restored he escorts her to a settlement, where she rejoins her husband. Later he gives himself up to the officers of the law on condition that the Ingrams be permitted to hold their religious services unmolested.

The Lie—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Elsie Ferguson. Directed by J. Searle Dawley, from a scenario by Charles Maigne from Henry Arthur Jones' stage play of the same name. Sir Robert Shale (John L. Shine) lives with his two daughters in Shale Abbey, in a little town near London. Their fortune is very much depleted and because of their poverty they have little social life. Gerald Forster (David Powell), a young man of wealth and social standing, is introduced into the Abbey and he falls in love with Elinor (Elsie Ferguson). She promises to go to the county ball with him and just as she is ready to start her sister Lucy (Betty Howe) returns home from a visit in London, where she became infatuated with Dick Tallerton. They had arranged an elopement, but before it could be carried out Dick was killed in a motor accident. Lucy faces disgrace with approaching maternity and confides in Elinor, who gives up the country ball and makes many sacrifices to aid her sister. The two go to Brighton, where Lucy's child is born. Elinor finds a foster mother for the child and decides to seek financial aid from Dick's uncle. Meanwhile Gerald, disappointed by Elinor's silence, is sent to Egypt for the Government. Two years later he returns to England and Noll Dibdin, an old friend, tells him of Dick's paternity, but reveals only part of the truth, and Gerald gets the idea that Elinor is the mother of the child. Gerald talks with Lucy, hoping to have his impression changed, but Lucy betrays her sister. Lucy then returns to Egypt with Gerald and marries him. When Elinor learns the news she decides to take her sister's child to its mother in Egypt. Noll Dibdin accompanies her. In Egypt Elinor decides to tell Gerald the real truth, but seeing how happy the young couple are resolves not to interfere. She later finds happiness as the baby's foster mother and the wife of Dibdin.

Bluebird

The Red, Red Heart—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. Directed by Wilfred Lucas from Honore Willsie's novel, "The Heart of the Desert," adapted by Bess Meredyth. Val Paul, Gretchen Lederer, Allan Sears and Monte Blue are in the cast. Rhoda Tuttle, a young girl from the East, has been brought by her fiancé, John De Witt, to Arizona to regain her health and nerves, which had been shattered by the tragic death of her father and mother in a railroad wreck. She had lost all interest in life. Jack Newman and his wife Katherine made life as pleasant for her as possible, but no amount of devotion seemed to cheer her. On a big irrigation project Newman had employed as chief engineer a full-blooded Indian, with a Yale education, named Kut-Le, half Apache and half Pueblo. He was the chief's son, and the leader of his people. He alone could do anything with the Indian workmen. Kut-Le took an immediate interest in the melancholy white girl. He told her that the only remedy for her melancholy was the great desert. De Witt and Billy Porter, a western friend, were both extremely suspicious of the Indian. Realizing that the only way to cure Rhoda was to take her out of herself, he kidnaped her one day, and in spite of every effort that her friends made to capture her he kept her in the desert, always fighting for her freedom, but suffering no injury and no discomfort. The proximity drew the two very closely together, but Rhoda would not permit herself to love the Indian. When the pursuit finally overtook them, Kut-Le in self-defense conquered both De Witt and Porter, and then voluntarily gave the girl back to them. They treacherously endeavored to shoot Kut-Le from behind, and this unsportsmanlike conduct determined Rhoda to give her life, which he had saved, and the spirit which his magic desert had brought back to her, to her Indian lover.

A Rich Man's Darling—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Features Louise Lovely. Julie Le Fabrier (Louise Lovely), a young model employed in a modiste shop, yearns for romance. Lee Brooks (Philo McCullough), a millionaire sportsman, is her idol. Lee is troubled about an affair between his father and Madame Ricardo (Edna Maison), whose husband is thought to be conducting a lively revolution in South America. A chance glimpse of Senor Ricardo in the streets sends his undutiful spouse scurrying to the concealment of a neighboring town. Thither goes Lee Brooks, for a view of his father's charmer, and, in due time, Julie, with an armful of the wonderful dresses. To save Madame Ricardo, the modiste's assistant assumes her identity, and young Brooks, taking her to be the real charmer, nevertheless falls head over heels in love with her. The next morning's papers appear with the headline, "Young Hunter Poaches on His Father's Preserves," and there is a deal of consequent excitement, the end of which finds Julie with her long-sought romance, and her long-dreamed-of lover.

Fox

The Camouflage Kiss—(Five Reels)—April 7. Features June Caprice. In the cast are Bernard Thornton, Pell Trenton, George Bunny and Lola May. Harry Millarde directed. The story is by Stephen Fox; scenario by Ralph H. Spence. Martha Thorne becomes engaged to a Simple Simon sort of a youth, who one day sums up enough courage to kiss her in the dark. This pleases her, but subsequent repetitions prove unsatisfactory. After many hurryings and scurryings, and much merriment, she discovers that it was not the Simple Simon who kissed her the first time, but a handsome youth, to whom she summarily transfers her affections. Family opposition is strong for financial reasons, and the young pair have a certain amount of difficulty in eloping, especially as the girl does not seem particularly willing to leave her happy home. But love and a strong man conquer, and they all live happily ever after.

Goldwyn

The Splendid Sinner—(Six Reels)—March 24. Featuring Mary Garden. In the cast are Hamilton Revelle, Anders Randolph, Hassan Mussalli, Henry Pettibone and Roberta Bellinger. Edwin Carewe directed. The story is by Kate Jordan. Dolores Fargis is the reigning queen of a dissolute set, among whom Rudolph Van Zorn, who claims Dolores, is a brutal figure of wealth and influence. Dolores, awakened to the folly of her existence, leaves Van Zorn, and in a country village meets Hugh Maxwell, a young physician. A mutual interest in music, Dolores being a violinist, is the keynote of their romance, and in spite of Van Zorn's threat to expose her past Dolores marries Maxwell. They go to New York, where Maxwell makes an unsuccessful attempt to establish a practice. To help him, Dolores plays roulette in a fashionable resort, where she again meets Van Zorn. Later he calls at her home, and while he is making a contemptible effort to induce Dolores to return to him Maxwell enters. Realizing the truth, he leaves Dolores. By this time the world war has begun and the triangle are discovered in Europe, Dolores as a Red Cross nurse in a hospital located on French soil, invaded by Germans commanded by Van Zorn, and Maxwell as a young Canadian soldier, a wounded prisoner. Dolores attempts to get papers which Maxwell had concealed in his boot heel to the Allies. Apprehended, she is brought before Van Zorn and sentenced to weath. At the last moment he offers her life if she will return to him. She refuses and dies a martyr.

Heart of the Sunset—(Seven Reels)—April 6.—Special release. Features Alice Q. Nilsson in a picture version of the Rex Beach novel. Frank Powell directed. Herbert Heyes, Robert Taber, E. L. Fernandez, Jane Miller, William Frederick and Irene Boyle are in the cast. The story deals with an American woman's experience with Mexican bandits. Alaire Austin (Anna Q. Nilsson) falls exhausted at the edge of a water hole while seeking succor after her horse has died under her out in the hot sand and stinging cactus. Here she is found by Dave Law, a Texas ranger. This is the beginning of an acquaintance which later grows into love. Alaire's worthless husband is slain by orders of Longoria, a rebel Mexican general, infatuated with Alaire. The chief's men meanwhile have stolen a herd of cattle from Mrs. Austin's ranch, and she, without Law's knowledge, starts into Mexico to recover them. She is captured by Longorio, who has vowed to wed her. He summons a priest and demands that Alaire become his wife. Law, in the meantime, has been searching for her and finally succeeds in penetrating to Longorio's camp. In Longorio's absence he persuades the priest to marry him to Alaire. On his return, the chief, enraged at the marirage, orders Law shot. The priest saves him by telling Longorio the killing of Law and the taking of a woman by force is certain to defeat his ambition to become ruler of Mexico. On their way to Texas, Law reveals a secret which made him promise never to wed. He has learned that his father died in an insane asylum. A sudden twist of fortune proves this false, however, leaving Law and Alaire to live in happiness.

Kleine

Chase Me, Charlie—(Five Reels)—Essanay—British version of the Essanay-Charlie Chaplin comedies. Charlie Chaplin, while wandering along a highway, sees a girl attacked by a hobo. He rescues her and her father gives him a job on the farm. Charlie falls in love with the girl, but she has a sweetheart and he leaves, broken-hearted. He gets a job as a moving picture actor, but he cannot get his mind off the girl. Later he meets her while at work as a plasterer, she being in the city on a visit. But again he fails to win her and quits his job. But once more he finds her, and at the third wooing he is partly successful. That is, he wins her love, but her father will have none of him. He wishes his daughter to wed a count. They finally elope and after a long chase by the irate parent and police are caught and the girl taken home. Charlie is in the depths of despair when he finally meets the girls again in a bank where he is employed as janitor. Robbers enter the bank and gag the girl, with other persons in the place. But the bold Charlie comes to the rescue. Single-handed he routs the thieves and saves the girl. In gratitude the father consents to the wedding.

Metro

Social Hypocrites—(Five Reels)—April 6.—Features May Allison. Directed by Albert Capellani. Upon the death of her father, who has been accused of cheating at cards, Leonora Fielding is cared for by Lady Mountstephen. Later, Lady Mountstephen tires of Leonora, and refuses to pay her extravagant bills. Lord Royle, who has been attentive to her, pays the bills. She afterwards learns that he is married to Lady Norton. Leonora, desiring to repay Lord Royle, determines to win the necessary money at cards. Lady Norton, having learned that her husband paid Leonora's bills, determines to be revenged, and, after substituting duplicate marked cards, accuses Leonora of being a cheat. Leonora is ordered to leave. A friend whose love she has not reciprocated, Dr. Sampson, comes to her rescue, and announces he is going to marry her. A hand-bag which Leonora picks up by error results in her establishing her innocence, and her father's memory is cleared by the dying words of Earl of St. Albans.

Mutual

The Primitive Woman—(Five Reels)—American—April 15.—Starring Margarita Fisher, Jack Mower plays opposite. Nan Graythorpe, a wealthy orphan, meets a distinguished looking guest at a war entertainment, whom she learns is Professor Learned, a writer on prehistoric subjects. When she expresses a desire to meet him he returns a message to the effect that modern woman is repugnant to him. Considering this an insult and determined to be revenged, Nan decides to startle the conceited high-brow, and succeeds admirably in a daring dance which she calls "The Eskimo Fling." The professor says that the dance showed some good points, but was an exhibition of bad taste, and Nan becomes more peeved than ever. Later, Nan learns that the professor is going to his lodge in the Catskills to write a story on primitive woman as contrasted with modern woman, and that he will use her as a type of the modern woman. Determined to humiliate the man of learning, Nan repairs to the mountain hut of a woman whom she has befriended, in the neighborhood of the professor's lodge. She dons the rags of a poor girl of the mountains and roams the woods in a primitive state. As the professor goes out for a morning stroll, Nan rolls down a hill across his path, and he carries her to his lodge, believing she is badly hurt. Thinking he has found a specimen of primitive woman, he endeavors to train her, while Nan, carrying out the deception, succeeds in making the professor fall in love with her. In the meantime, Nan's brother goes in search of her. Finding her gamboling around with the professor in her naive costume, he is puzzled. Nan goes to her brother's hotel in conventional garb and tells him of her plan to be revenged on the professor. The action of the professor and the wild girl is a fruitful topic of gossip among the guests, and Nan in her conventional character adds to the gossip. The professor's mother and sister, overhearing Nan discussing the subject, ask her to take them to the cabin. Arrived at the lodge, the professor indignantly denies that he has a wild woman in his cabin. Nan, who has not been recognized by the professor, then exposes the trick she has played on him. The professor utters loud imprecations, tears up his manuscript, and emphatically proclaims: "I'm through with the primitive woman. The beautiful, well-gowned modern woman is the woman for me."

Her Helping Hand—(One Reel)—Strand—April 16.—Starring Billie Rhodes. Jack and Jim were both in love with Mary, but Jack had the inside track. Jim finds Jack's diary and forges Jack's writing in the following entry: "Bet Jim Monroe that I will be engaged to Mary before the week is out. Easy money." When he shows the diary to Lillian, Mary's chum, Lillian tells Mary, who decides she will make Jack pay for his conceit. Their engagement is announced at a party, and whenever Jack wanted to take a drink, play cards, smoke or dance with some other girl, Mary interferes with: "No, Jack, dear, as long as you are engaged to me, you mustn't do that." This gets on Jack's nerves and he decides to retire in Jim's favor, but Jim believes in personal liberty and passes it up. Mary tells Jack he must keep the engagement as long as he won the bet from Jim, and Jack's suspicions are aroused. Jack forces Jim to confess and kicks him out, and Mary, convinced that Jack is innocent of exaggerated ego, forgives him, and all is lovely.

Paramount

The Honor of His House—(Five Reels)—April 1.—Features Sessue Hayakawa as a Japanese count. The story is an original one by Marion Fairfax and was directed by William C. DeMille. It has its beginning aboard a new Japanese liner, where the three central figures are thrown together—Lora, a beautiful outcast, half Japanese; Count Onato and Robert Farlow. The Japanese Count is a wealthy scientist and Farlow is also noted in scientific circles, but is unfortunately addicted to alcohol, which has prevented the full realization of his powers. Both men are infatuated with Lora, and when a wreck ensues and the three are cast ashore on a deserted island the situation that develops is naturally one of great strength. Deprived of liquor, Farlow develops his better qualities, but he is insanely jealous of Onato. The latter, through sheer force of character, takes command of the party, and Lora, realizing that she is the stake in the game, plays to both men, hardly knowing her own mind. When the inevitable struggle arises, she asserts her own right to choose, but before a decision can be reached they are rescued. Again in civilization, they reassume their respective positions, but Farlow again gives way to his enemy and in disgust Lora marries Onato. They are happy until the young American once more appears in their lives. His love asserts itself and he endeavors to induce Lora to leave her husband. The Oriental, learning that his wife has really lost her love for him, and plans to meet Farlow, inoculates her with the germs of a deadly disease, and leaves. Feeling ill, Lora sends for her doctor and learns that the thing that has been the dream of both her's and her husband's lives before their estrangement has really come to pass—and that she is to become a mother. She confesses the fact to Farlow, who is much humbled. She then tells the great news to Onato. In horror of his deed, in poisoning his wife, he works through the night, endeavoring to find an antidote to the infection. His only hope finally is to carry blood transfusion to the 'nth degree and literally pump her blood out of her veins and his own into them. He asks Farlow to help and in the end succumbs himself, but with his last breath asks Farlow to care for Lora and the child that is to carry on the "Honor of His House."

A scene from "The Scarlet Drop," Harry Carey's five reel feature to be released April 22 by Universal.

His Majesty, Bunker Bean—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Jack Pickford. Directed by William D. Taylor. Bunker Bean (Jack Pickford), an insignificant little stenographer in a stock broker's office, becomes a successful financier because of something he believes. Bunker Bean is convinced, from his evening work for a certain theosophist, that he has lived before in some other form or incarnation and he seeks out a fortune teller, who assures him he was formerly Napoleon. Bunker decides that he does not care to claim the relationship, and he returns to the fortune teller, who this time assures him that he is the reincarnation of Rameses the Great, a famous king of Egypt whose mummy lies in state in an old tomb. Bunker is much impressed and an opportunely inherited fortune from a forgotten relation allows him to buy the mummy. From the acquisition of the mummy to its untimely finish at the hands—or the paws—of Bunker's inquisitive puppy, Bunker lives and has his being in a world apart. He fancies himself at heart a king—and acts in a way that is as strange and startling to himself as to his friends. He not only becomes acquainted with his awesome boss' family, especially the youngest member, the Flapper whom he later marries, but he also meets the greatest pitcher, a baseball star he has long worshipped from afar. Also, he makes a tremendous "killing" in Wall street and eventually marries "The Flapper." All this, however, before the inquisitive puppy investigates the mummy's filling.

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies

Friend Husband—(Two Reels)—April 8.—When a rich uncle announces that he will give $10,000 to see a baby in his family, the nephew, who is childless, makes up his mind to win the money even if he has to kidnap an infant. The uncle arrives unexpectedly and there is great commotion in the nephew's household. He goes out, finds a babe, an old bachelor friend also kidnaps an infant, while Pep, the family dog, follows suit. but without paying attention to race, creed or color in his selection. The complications arising from this situation are laughable. Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, Mary Thurman, Gene Rogers, Harry Gribbon, Earl Kenton appear.

Triangle

The Love Brokers—(Five Reels)—April 7.—Features Alma Rubens as a young song writer. E. Mason Hopper directed. Cast includes Texas Guinan, Joe Bennett, Lee Hill, Betty Pearce and George Pearce. Charlotte Carter is a struggling song writer and the innocent tool of Olga Grey and Madge l'Estrange, feminine sycophants, and Peter Ladislaw, a weakling of the opposite sex. Peter forges several checks and makes Charlotte believe it was to supply her with flowers and candy. Gerard Townsend, a millionaire, and also interested in song writing, is injured in an automobile accident, and not expected to recover. Olga, playing on his sympathetic interest in Charlotte, engineers their marriage, persuading Charlotte that she must do it for money to save Peter from prison. Naturally, Townsend, being the hero, recovers. Then Olga schemes to arrange a divorce for Charlotte and a handsome settlement. But Charlotte confesses to her husband. The shock and excitement miraculously restore to him his ability to walk, it having been previously suggested that he would be a cripple for life. Thus "love" defeats not only the "brokers," but also the doctors.

Universal Special

The Risky Road—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Dorothy Phillips. In the cast are William Stowell, George Cheseboro, Edward Cecil, Joseph Girard, Juanita Hansen, Claire DuBrey, Sally Starr. In the city where she has gone to earn her living as a stenographer, Marjorie Helmer makes the acquaintance of Melville Kingston. Poverty forces her to accept a proposition from Kingston which provides that she is to be set up in a luxurious apartment, and that at the end of a specified period she is to come to his way of thinking or he to hers. She is constantly depressed over the idea, and when she sees that Kingston has a wife she sends for her country sweetheart, Robert Grant, who, seeing the elegance of her home, becomes convinced, notwithstanding her protestations of innocence, that she is not an honest working girl. Kingston, however, sees "her way of thinking," and, after explaining that the woman Marjorie believes to be his wife is his sister-in-law, proposes to her, and is accepted.

Vitagraph

Little Miss No-Account—(Five Reels)—April 1.—Features Gladys Leslie. Directed by W. P. S. Earle. Cast includes Frank O'Connor, William Calhoun, Eulalie Jenson, West Jenkins, Stephen Carr and others. Patty Baring is practically a prisoner in her own home, held by her stepfather, who, with his sister, plans to force the girl on her eighteenth birthday to sign certain papers conveying to them her large estate. Her best friend is Stebbins, the negro servant of her own father, who gives her an idea of the fortune which belongs to her. Rebelling at last against the cruelties of her guardian, Patty runs away, and is rescued by Bobby, her little newsboy friend. He takes her to his grandfather, who runs a little store, and who adopts her for the time being. Here she meets two men, a gambler and an assistant district attorney, both of whom are impressed by her beauty. Both pay her attention and the young prosecutor falls in love with her. There is a gambling house near where Pat is staying, and to which she is lured, supposedly to do some sewing. This, however, proves to be a last attempt of her stepfather to gain her property. The house is raided, and Pat is locked up with the other occupants. The young gambler who had been attentive to Pat, hoping to discredit her with the prosecutor, tells him of her arrest and also that she owns the property occupied by the gamblers. His charges are all explained in the end and Pat is taken care of by the prosecutor's mother, her property is restored, and the audience is given reason to suspect future nuptials with Edwin Sayer, the prosecutor.

The Business of Life—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Alice Joyce. Story by Robert W. Chambers. Tom Terriss directed. Cast includes Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Betty Blythe, Templar Saxe and Nellie Spaulding. Jacqueline Nevers, when the story opens, is carrying on the work of her father, who had been a dealer in antiques, when she meets James Desboro, bachelor and man-about-town, who calls to consult her about the sale of the Desboro collection of ancient armor, he being in need of funds, especially to buy a necklace for "The Girl in Blue." Jacqueline goes daily to Silverwood, the Desboro country home, to catalog the armor, and the business acquaintance is soon a love affair, the "real one" with her and the usual kind at first with him. Elena Clydesdale, wife of one of Desboro's friends, is in love with him, and she leaves her husband and comes at night to the Desboro home, but her husband's unexpected arrival puts an end to that adventure. However, she has heard of the "pretty shop girl," and is determined that Desboro shall not marry her. Desboro, for devilment, gives a big house party, to which Jacqueline and Elena both are invited. There is a game of hide-and-seek and a girl is hidden, the penalty being she shall marry the man who finds her. Jacqueline's name is chosen and she hides in the armor of Joan of Arc astride a horse in the armory. Elena, fearful and suspicious, manages to hold Desboro in the library until the time limit of the hunt is almost expired. The scene she creates so disgusts Desboro that he determines to end it all by finding Jacqueline and marrying her at once. He finds her and she agrees to the wedding the next day, refusing to listen to any explanations and trusting entirely to him. On the evening of the wedding day they are in the library in Silverwood when Elena arrives, pretending to keep an appointment she had previously made and not knowing Jacqueline and Desboro were married. Jacqueline believes her husband insincere and leaves him. Elena's illness the next day reconciles her to her husband and she sends him to Jacqueline, returned to her store, to tell her that what she had acted and implied the night before was an untruth. Jacqueline hurries to Silverwood and there, with a kiss, seals her faith in Desboro.

Scene from "Lend Me Your Name," a new Harold Lockwood starring vehicle now being produced at Metro's west coast studios.

World

The Witch Woman—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Ethel Clayton. Story by Willard Mack. Directed by Travers Vale. Frank Mayo, John Ardizoni, Jack Drumier, Louise Vale and Robert Tansey in the cast. Marie Beaupre, a very attractive Alsatian girl, falls in love with Louis La Farge, a French artist, when she meets him in the mountains where he has come to paint. Louis is a waster, however, and when he deserts the girl her mind becomes deranged. Her relatives and friends discovering her secret, Marie is turned out of her home, forced to live as best she can in a cavern in the mountains, and comes to be known as "The Witch Woman." Finally Marie is taken to Paris by Dr. Cochefort, who is interested in her case, and gradually her mentality is restored. She is then adopted by Monsieur Delaunay, a wealthy Frenchman, whose lawyer happens to be Maurice La Farge, a twin brother of Louis, who looks exactly like him, although his character is fortunately different. In her new home Marie comes face to face one day with Maurice and, believing him to be Louis, she collapses, but recovers within an hour or two. Meantime Louis is continuing his riotous living in Paris, where his domicile is governed by a notorious woman, Andrea Montignac. Maurice has found his efforts to save his brother futile, and is devoting himself more zealously to his own hopes and political ambitions. Incidentally he finds new interest in the youthful charm of Marie, who, believing him to be the man who had destroyed her happiness, puzzles over desires for revenge. Andrea gives a masked ball one night, at which Marie, disguised as an Alsatian shepherdess, attracts Louis's troubled attention. At the end of the evening of revelry, Louis, having acquired a little too much wine, attempts to seize Marie in his arms, whereat Andrea shoots and kills him. Andrea then drains a bottle of poison and dies as the police are leading her from the scene of the tragedy. Maurice arrives, and Marie, realizing the mistake she has made, asks him to take her home, which he does, and there she gives him the answer for which he has been waiting for some time.

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

TRIANGLE

The REAL Tax

THE REAL TAX is not altogether the REEL Tax.

The REAL Tax is levied before you ever receive the picture.

It is frequently levied in the sumptuous offices of picture promoters who handle stars and who spend their time in the promotion of pictures.

This tax is then added to the cost of the film rented to the exhibitor. The exhibitor, carried away by the sound of the promoter's voice, the supposed reputation of the wonderful star, the glowing tales of a press agent and the big, black display type in advertisements, rushes into the pit especially dug for him by the promoter.

There is also another REAL tax.

That is the tax levied by what is politely called competition, but which in reality is merely artificially promoted cut-throat bidding.

That is the tax which the exhibitor pays when he is forced to bid against his brother exhibitor to get a picture which he thinks he should run, but which if he does show, usually means a loss to him. Both exhibitors shove up the price by their mutual bidding until neither is able to make money.

There is still another REAL tax.

That is the tax in unjustified expenses and waste, found at so many motion picture studios. It is the waste which comes from irresponsibility, from lack of executive talent, from the domineering tactics of stars who show up any old time, keep a big force waiting for them and thus eat up the bank balance by their idleness.

TRIANGLE service is the salvation for exhibitors who believe the exhibition of motion pictures is a legitimate business, who believe that they are entitled to a reasonable profit and who believe that they should not be forced to pay these REAL taxes.

As far as the REEL tax is concerned, Triangle has borne it since its inception by the government and is still maintaining the policy of not passing it on to the exhibitor.

TRIANGLE plays absolutely fair and square with each exhibitor.

TRIANGLE prices enable every exhibitor to make money.

TRIANGLE co-operation is a powerful force for success.

Every new TRIANGLE exhibitor means one more protest registered against the REAL tax extortions of the industry.

Co-operative Field Getting Crowded

MAY RESULT IN SERIOUS UPHEAVALS

UPHEAVALS expected in the producing end of the industry were brought nearer last week when the men back of the co-operative booking arrangement that has been known as the Exhibitors & Producers Affiliated met in New York and formally launched themselves under a new plan.

With the Exhibitors & Producers Affiliated in the field there are now at least three formidable co-operative movements under way, the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and the W. W. Hodkinson plans being the others.

One or Two May Lose Out

Conservative exhibitors are of the opinion that the co-operative field is getting crowded and that before long one plan, possibly two, will have to go down to defeat. On the other hand the success of any one, or possibly all, will affect the big producers, and with conditions none too stable now, several crashes would not be surprising.

The absence of ready money, the inability to get more because of the status of the money market and the burden of high-priced stars, it is believed, would explain the failures.

All Are Optimistic

Optimism, or an appearance of it, is evident in all ranks, however. With the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., according to the gossip, it is justified, for that organization is forging onward to success rapidly. Men connected with the other plans are equally as confident, however.

Those back of the Exhibitors & Producers Affiliated say they have 1,900 booking days already pledged. Furthermore, they assert, their organization is more stable as it is "controlled solely by motion picture theatre owners." But so is United Theatres, too, according to its officers.

New Plan Outlined

The Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated plan is predicated on one of several propositions that were submitted. It provides for the operation of exhibitors' booking units, bound together for the purpose of the purchase of pictures in a central organization, the offices of which are to be located in New York and Chicago and the representatives of whom are to be stationed in each of the units for the purpose of co-operating with the exhibitors in the marketing of their films.

The selection of film is to be made by the exhibitors themselves through the board of directors of each unit before a franchise is awarded the producer. Upon the acceptance by a sufficient number of units to guarantee the cost of the productions, the producer is to be given the right to market his offerings through the new organization by a contract which provides for a sixty-day cancellation clause.

Six independent producers have already made application for membership, and it is understood that consideration is being given to several others.

Exhibitors to Divide Profits

The exhibitors are to receive, in addition to a substantial concession in rental prices, a fifty per cent interest in the excess profits earned by the pictures in their individual territories.

Units already formed and operating are the Exhibitars' Booking Syndicate of Greater New York; the Associated Theatres, Inc., of Indianapolis; the Motion Picture Theatre Association of Illinois; the Associated Theatres, Inc., of Illinois; the United Exhibitors' Association of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania; the North and South Carolina Exhibitors' Booking Association; the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Michigan; the Tri-state Exhibitors' Circuit of Pittsburgh, and the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Indiana.

With these as a nucleus, work will be started immediately upon the organization of other units.

Prominent Men Present

The convention drew to it a large representation of exhibitors. Among those present were: Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Fred C. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Philadelphia; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; C. R. Seelye, United Pictures Theatres, Inc.; Tarleton Winchester, Pathe, New York; Harry Rapf and Oscar I. Lasberger, Ivan Film; Chandon Brenon, representing Herbert Brenon Production; Edward W. Bring, W. W. Hodkinson Corporation; Joseph A. Golden, president, Triumph Film Corporation; Byron Park, Salt Lake City; John Manheimer, New York, and Louis Frank, Chicago.

A committee of five will handle the executive affairs of the organization for the present. The committee consists of Sydney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitiors' League; Joseph Hopp, president of the Illinois Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Louis Frank, Chicago; Frank Rembusch, Indianapolis, and Kind Perry, Detroit.

"Treat Pictures Just Like the Press!"

"WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE TWO?" PRODUCER ASKS

By John R. Freuler

President, Mutual Film Corporation

A NUMBER of recent decisions from courts, a number of legislative enactments and several other important utterances indicating the trend and condition of public opinion and official attitudes convince me that we, the exponents of the motion picture as an industry and an institution have yet a large task before us.

It is unfortunately true that the motion picture is still largely viewed as merely an amusement, a luxury—almost as a public vice in some quarters.

We must insist continually and never cease reiterating that the motion picture is an instrument of public service as much available to the common good as the press, the pulpit and the lecture platform.

Recognition Will Stop Persecution

We must keep on insisting until the picture is completely recognized in every quarter. When the picture gets that recognition it will automatically free itself of many parasites of graft and persecution.

It must be fully understood and admitted that anything which a newspaper or magazine may print we can present in pictures. It must be understood and admitted that the greatest public good demands that we be given the same consideration, privilege and license as the press.

Indirectly a vast official recognition has been given the screen in the calling of three great stars to aid in the selling of the third Liberty loan.

War Aid Wide and Varied

Another important recognition is in the large service we are giving the government in screen publicity for food conservation, for the Red Cross, for the war loans, for the savings stamps and in kindred lines.

We need some more recognition on the other side of the ledger where legislators gather to draft tax laws and restrictive legislation. We need similar recognition when censorship advocates come forth with their job-building propaganda. We need to be recognized not only when we can help, but when we should be helped.

No one who has breadth of vision or will take the time to think will deny the tremendous influence of the motion picture in the improvement of social conditions. The screen has been an unmeasured and infinite means of binding the American family more closely together. Admittedly the motion picture has been a very vital and positive factor in the gradual elimination of the saloon not as an antagonist, but by presenting a constructive substitute in the social order of things.

What a pity this article, or the substance of it in condensed form, could not be flashed on every screen in the land daily! On second thought, however, what is to prevent it if the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry stepped in and made up such a reel? The thought is not such a dream as it sounds. Newspapers foil attacks on their methods and mold sentiment because they control what is put before the public in print. But the newspapers are not going to champion the motion picture industry until public opinion forces them to do so. And how can public opinion be crystallized? Through the one and only and vastly powerful means that the industry is ignoring—the screen iself. Why not?—(Editor.)

Public Owes Much to Films

The screen has taken the drama to the great multitude of people, who, before its coming, were unable to enjoy it or profit from it except in its worst form. The motion picture has not only taken to the smallest hamlet the pleasures and enlightenment of travel, but it has portrayed to those who live under varied conditions how other people live. It has socialized, educated, broadened as well as entertained.

The motion picture industry is paying vast sums each week into the war chest, glad to do its share to win the war. The amusement park was exempted as the poor man's amusement. I am not able to understand quite, having been a patron at different times of various amusement parks, exactly how the amusement park can be classified as a poor man's amusement.

It would take, at the least calculation, the average laborer's week's pay envelope to take the average laborer's family to an amusement park for an evening's entertainment. Motion pictures are available to him and his entire family every night in the week for less money than one evening's trip to the average amusement park.

Perhaps the most signal recognition which has been bestowed on the motion picture came in the recent fuel conservation order. The fuel administration was quick to realize that with millions of workers idle on Mondays the motion picture theatre was essential.

There is no doubt that the opening of picture theatres on heatless Mondays contributed in large measure to the public's good natured acceptance of the government decree. The people were kept entertained on their day of enforced idleness. It was an evidence of excellent judgment, a sign of keen understanding of the psychology of the masses, and an unconscious tribute to the motion picture.

Governments have found pictures second only to the daily newspaper as a means of spreading propaganda. The screen drives home its story with greater force than the editorial. The picture is more easily comprehended and more quickly assimilated than the printed page.

Value in Propaganda

Everybody knows now the efforts made by the German empire to spread propaganda in America by means of the motion picture screen. The Germans realized the value of the motion picture in reaching the masses of the people long before the war began.

Today the allied governments are using the screen in neutral countries to build good will toward the entente and one of the first efforts to combat the Bolsheviki surrender of Russia to the Hun was by the use of motion pictures. It was possible to tell the story of American democracy with greater force to the hordes of ignorant peasants than by any other possible means.

The motion picture is truly an international language and certainly, once it is turned systematically in that direction, will be a tremendous medium of international understanding. I predict the moving picture will do great service in the ultimate consummation of a world brotherhood.

Newspapers Never Harassed

Senseless rules of censorship, endless restrictions, have been wound tightly around the motion picture, harassing its every development. Newspapers are permitted to publish in their news columns and as fiction stories which, were they screened, would be universally condemned by motion picture censors.

No newspaper fears police suppression. The instances of governmental suppression of publications are so few that they are notable. Those which have been effected have been suppressed by the postal authorities and not by state or municipal boards and officials.

Despite the latitude permitted the public press—magazines and other periodicals as well as newspapers—none whatever is permitted the motion picture, which bigoted officialdom is allowed to hamper and suppress without compunction. I could cite scores of incidents of ridiculous, unfair and unjust acts against the motion picture which, had they occurred in the other field of publication, the public press, would have brought a storm of disapproval and immediate demands of rectification and justice.

Industry Itself Partly to Blame

The motion picture industry is in a sense at fault itself. It has submitted to the indignities which have been cast upon it until it has become perfectly safe to abuse. The newspaper has been quick to resent attack and criticism. It has fought, with the great power it yields, every effort to shackle it. The motion picture has seldom given evidence of the tremendous power it has developed.

The motion picture asks only fair play. It makes no claim to perfection. It is not above criticism. It deserves and asks constructive, sane criticism, but there is no reason why its development and its progress should be harrassed at every turn. It has an important mission. It fills a vital place in the life of the people. It is growing more useful and of greater service every day despite obstacles. It asks no subsidy. It does not want to shirk. It wants to do its share to help win the war and it is. It's a healthy infant despite its turbulent childhood.

Let pictures alone for a while!

Bertram Grassby Injured

An injury to Bertram Grassby, well-known leading man, who has played opposite Gladys Brockwell in more than a half dozen pictures for William Fox, has forced a change in the cast of Miss Brockwell's new vehicle.

A telegram from the coast studios states that Charles Clary had been substituted in Grassby's role and that all of the picture already made in which the latter appeared is now being re-photographed with Clary in the part. The production has just been titled "The Scarlet Road." Edward J. LeSaint is directing it from a story by Charles Kenyon.

Bertram Grassby has scored notably in almost a dozen Fox films, his most recent work having been done in "The Moral Law" and "Cheating the Public."

Gets Players from the Speaking Stage

Petrova Engages Strong Cast for "Patience Sparhawk," Fifth Picture, Upon Which She Is Now at Work

AN exceptionally strong cast has been engaged for Madame Petrova's fifth picture, "Patience Sparhawk," on which the Polish actress is now at work in her new studio on Thirty-eighth street, New York. Because the story from this well known novel by Gertrude Atherton is full of tense, dramatic situations which call for considerable stage technique, Madame Petrova has selected most of the members of her company from the "legitimate" drama.

Vernon Steele will play the heavy in the role of "Beverly Poole," a good-looking cad who is the husband of Patience. Mr. Steele has made a name for himself in Goldwyn productions. He is a recruit from the "legitimate." It is interesting to recall that Steele was a member of Madame Petrova's cast a few years ago when she appeared in the Shubert production of "Panthea," winning plaudits which immediately put her in the front ranks of emotional actresses.

The leading man, who plays the part of "Garan Bourke," a young Irish lawyer, is Rockliffe Fellowes. Mr. Fellowes has played many important roles on the Broadway stage, some of his more recent appearances being with Grace George in "Eve's Daughter," with Mrs. Fiske in "Erstwhile Susan," with Helen Ware in "Within the Law" and with Lucille Watson, who in private life is Mrs. Rockliffe Fellowes, in "Under Cover."

In the film field Mr. Fellowes has had an equally successful career in many Fox, Brady and World productions. He has lately been supporting Ethel Clayton.

Mr. Fellowes and Mr. Steele have parts of equal prominence.

Frederick Truesdale, well known on the speaking stage, and especially remembered for his appearances with Mrs. Sol Smith Russell, De Wolf Hopper, E. H. Sothern, and in more recent years with Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlan and Emily Stevens, will have the part of Beverly's father.

Matilda Barring will play the part of Patience's mother-in-law. Violet Reed, who has appeared in many former Petrova offerings, when the star was with Metro and Lasky, will have the role of "Honora Mairs," the poor relation in the Peele family—a young woman with an angelic face, but a tiger's claw.

Other members of the new cast are Gene Burrell, who plays "Hal;" Herbert Patee, the district attorney; Margaret Seddon, Norma Seifert, James Ferry and Captain Harry Lambart.

Pretty Jewel Carmen as she appears in the title role of "The Bride of Fear," a new William Fox production.

Freckles, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A good picture that broke the house record for everyone knows the book. Film in excellent condition. Good boosting will clear big money on this."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

The Undying Flame, with Mme. Petrova (Paramount)—"A play out of the usual run. Based on the reincarnation theme, with ancient and modern Egypt as background. Business good."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

A Petticoat Pilot, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"A pleasing picture. The star is not well enough known to draw very much."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

The Things We Love, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"A fairly good picture. Did not draw heavily but the patrons liked it."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Flare-up Sal, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Pretty fair business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Keys of the Righteous, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—"Just a fair picture. Star not sufficiently well known to draw much."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Hidden Pearls, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"An excellent picture which went over very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

One More American, with George Beban (Paramount)—"Great. This picture has a better plot than any he has been in. Beban is wonderful but the people here don't like him."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Sunshine Nan, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—"A nice little picture, but not Ann Pennington's kind. The public would rather see her in a picture in which she dances."—M. Berling, Madlin Theatre, Chicago.

The Family Skeleton, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"Not up to Ray's standard."—M. Berling, Madlin Theatre, Chicago.

Pathe

The Angel Factory, with Antonio Moreno (Pathe)—"Plot good. Lighting extra good. Feature ought to please anywhere."—J. Walton, Auditorium Theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Under False Colors, with Frederick Warde (Pathe)—"We considered this a good one but the title is a little misleading."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

Hidden Valley, with Valkyrien (Pathe)—"A picture that draws but is too much of a myth to please many."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

Innocent, with Fannie Ward (Pathe)—"Good. The star is a favorite here. Everyone was pleased."—M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

Her Beloved Enemy, with Doris Grey (Pathe)—"Excellent mystery story. Pleased all patrons."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

Max Wins and Loses, with Max Linder (Pathe)—"Can't be beat for one-reel slapstick. Max always puts them over."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

The Empress, with Doris Kenyon (Pathe)—"Story unreal but interesting. Star fine but not well known here."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

An Amateur Orphan, with Gladys Leslie (Pathe)—"Star rapidly growing in popularity here. No better farce comedienne in screen work."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

Iris, with Alma Taylor (Pathe)—"Poorest picture

Pathe ever released. No punch, no action, no story. Foreign plays are not popular here."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

The Little Patriot, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"Extra good. We never fail to please our patrons with little Marie's pictures."—Grafton Nutter, Royal Theatre, Republic, Kansas.

Select

The Moth, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"This is a knockout. Everyone was very well pleased. Capacity business."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

Shirley Kaye, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"Great. Miss Young surely is some business getter for us. Capacity business."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

By Right of Purchase, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"This is a very good picture and pleased all."—M. Berling, Madlin Theatre, Chicago.

The House of Glass, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"A very good picture. Star very good. Business excellent."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Triangle

Her American Husband, with Darrell Foss (Triangle)—"Quaint scenes and Japanese settings. Pleased our patrons."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Gun Woman, with Texas Guinan (Triangle)—"Good western and dance hall stuff."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"An excellent picture, as full of action as any Hart production I have ever shown. Acting is excellent. The star is a comer. Patrons were pleased."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Apostle of Vengeance, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Second run. As good business as the first time shown."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

A Soul in Trust, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"A fair production, a little too drawn out. Business fair."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo, No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

An Heiress for a Day, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"A good picture. Business fair."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

Law's Outlaw, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A good offering. Business good."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Gown of Destiny, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"A good picture to good business."—E. R. Prigmore, Idle Hour Theatre, Charleston, Miss.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"Just fair. The plot is very thin but Miss Glaum holds her own."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Clodhopper, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A sure winner. A good star and a good title. Photography perfect."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

Madcap Madge, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"If you want something light and very entertaining, book this by all means."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

Sudden Jim, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"Triangle pictures seldom fail here. A very fine fight scene in this. Book it."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

The Sawdust Ring, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"The title and a one-sheet is all that is needed to fill your house."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

The Larnin' of Jim Benton, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"Patrons well pleased. Business fair."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This is the third time we have run this production and we did a good business on it each time. Fairbanks is a favorite here."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"A good re-issue. Went over well. This is the first Fairbanks picture we ever ran."—Grafton Nutter, Royal Theatre, Republic, Kansas.

The Disciple, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Drew less than any Hart picture we ever ran."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Devil Dodger, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A little too dark, but it pleased my patrons and brought good business."—G. L. Williams, Dixie Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Tenn.

The Sudden Gentleman, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A good comedy drama with Irish and American settings. It pleased a good crowd on a rainy night. Desmond is growing in popularity."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Between Men, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Hart in a dress suit, something novel. Picture proved an exceptionally good drawing card. Hart is the third best drawing star here."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Betty Takes a Hand, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"A splendid picture that should please any crowd."—E. R. Prigmore, Idle Hour Theatre, Charleston, Miss.

Framing Framers, with Charles Gunn (Triangle)—"Poor. Didn't please ten per cent of the audience."—E. R. Prigmore, Idle Hour Theatre, Charleston, Miss.

The Good Bad Man, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"A poor picture, bad print and the smallest crowd in months."—E. R. Prigmore, Idle Hour Theatre, Charleston, Miss.

Vitagraph

The Song of the Soul, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A good play with an excellent story, one that appeals. Alice Joyce as usual interprets her part well. Business fair."—A. E. Ableson, Zelda Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

The Song of the Soul, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"Another Within the Law. The star is regaining her former popularity. Business very good."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Battle Cry of Peace, with Charles Richman (Vitagraph)—"Did big business but the film was in wretched condition."—R. Ross Riley,. Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kansas.

A Woman Between Friends, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A pretty fair picture. Satisfied the patrons, but it did not draw very much."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

A Woman Between Friends, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A mighty fine production. Patrons were all pleased with it. Business good."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

The Other Man, with Harry Morey (Vitagraph)—"A good picture which drew pretty good business and satisfied."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

An American Live Wire, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"A mighty fine production. We did a very nice business on it. Star well liked by all."—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

The Home Trail, with Alfred Whitman (Vitagraph)—"An unusual production. Patrons did not seem to like it. Business fair.—M. M. Thompson, White Way Theatre, Concordia, Kansas.

World

The Cross Bearer, with Montague Love (World)—"A very good picture, which drew very well and was well received."—John Bardonski, Chopin Theatre, Chicago.

The Cross Bearer, with Montague Love (World)—"A fine picture; and it pleased our patrons."—M. Berling, Madlin Theatre, Chicago.

The Witch Woman, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"A good picture. Patrons liked it. Drew the best business of the week."—John Bardonski, Chopin Theatre, Chicago.

The Way Out, with Carlyle Blackwell (World)—"A very good picture. Satisfied everyone and drew fairly good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Wanted a Mother, with Madge Evans (World)—"A pretty good picture. Pleased the audience and drew fairly good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Serials and Series

Pearl of the Army, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"At the twelfth episode this is holding the crowd and pleasing everyone."—J. Walton, Auditorium Theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Best serial ever run in this house. Action never lags. Plays to the best business of the week each Friday."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"About the best serial for thrills we have seen. Photography very clear."—W. B. Smith, Idle Hour Theatre, Wellsville, Kansas.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"The first episode of this serial went over well. Story opens with a thrill and plenty of action."—P. G. Estee, Star Theatre, Alexandria, S. D.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"As a whole, good. Playing to fine business and getting better all the time."—G. L. Williams, Dixie Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Tenn.

State Rights and Specials

Today, with Florence Reed (State Rights)—"Splendid. The star does great work and the support is of the best."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

Shame, with Zena Keefe (State Rights)—"Miss Keefe's acting is great. A few improbabilities, but a fine production, nevertheless."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

The Submarine Eye (State Rights)—"Wonderful under-sea photography, but the story is weak. Business poor during Holy Week."—H. N. Jennings, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

Redemption, with Evelyn Nesbit (State Rights)—"Repeat engagement. Picture fair. Business fair during bad weather."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Whip (State Rights)—"Excellent picture, full of pep and punch. Well produced. Business fair."—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Whip (State Rights)—"A very fine picture and good business at advanced prices."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Public Defender, with Frank Keenan (State Rights)—"A pretty good picture, which went over all right, although it is not a typical Keenan play."—M. Berling, Madlin Theatre, Chicago.

All Houses to Show Red Cross Film

PICTURE IS LIKENED TO "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

ISSUED as frank propaganda to aid the big drive soon to be made throughout the country in aid of the Red Cross, "The Spirit of the Red Cross," a beautifully directed two-reel picture with a wonderfully virile appeal and delicately shaded pathos will be shown in all theatres in the United States.

A statement to this effect was issued this week by Jesse L. Lasky, chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry appointed to co-operate with the Red Cross, from his office in the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Made Up in Two Reels

This film, produced by Jack Eaton, one of the best known young producers in the country, is conceded to be one of the greatest two-reel productions ever presented and has been termed by many critics as "a Birth of a Nation in two reels."

The picture tells a story of Sammy, an American youth (played by Ray McKee), who is leaving his sweetheart, Ethel (played by Peggy Adams) to sail for France with his regiment. She is scheduled to follow and arrives later as a Red Cross nurse.

Traffic Scenes Enacted

Sammy soon actually sees the magnificent work the Red Cross people are doing for the refugees as well as the wounded. All through his battling experiences Sammy constantly sees a vision of Ethel, clad in her white uniform, watching over him. After a charge he lies on the ground with a bullet in his chest, half conscious. The vision of Ethel awakens him just as a Hun comes forward, slaying the wounded. Sammy grips his revolver and shoots the foeman dead. Later, removed to the base hospital, Ethel finds her sweetheart a patient and nurses him back to health.

There has never before been a propaganda picture of this kind that deserves such universal recognition. Many others with love and war as their basic theme have been produced and have met with considerable success, but here is one that strikes the true keynote of the dread battle anthem, whose warning, resonant notes echo unceasingly around the world, and displays in a most vivid manner the wonderful work the Red Cross organization has accomplished during this world conflict.

The picture will be released all over the country a few weeks before the Red Cross drive. Upon a preliminary showing in New York one of the critics said:

"This little drama, modestly heralded, compactly put together by a master hand, devoid of superfluous material and unnecessary padding, scores a triumph, which for its size is nothing short of marvelous.

"There is no attempt to produce a skillfully woven plot with ingenious complications. For here is a simple, homely tale which countless American mothers, fathers, wives, sisters, sweethearts will accept not as fiction, but as a grave symbol of the deep shadow which has crossed their path."

Everywhere there has been any preexhibition of this production it has been acclaimed as one of the greatest features of its kind. James Montgomery Flagg, the well-known illustrator, wrote the scenario.

Horrors Brought Home Vividly

There is brought home in a vivid manner to those who know not the sinister chill of the enveloping war clouds, the horrors of modern warfare, and intermingled through the story is impressed the crying necessity for immediate and unselfish aid for the angels of mercy who are laboring uncomplainingly amid scenes of death and devastation.

The battle scenes are the very acme of realism, made with painstaking attention to detail, and the work of the American troops, both on the march and in action, is performed in true soldierly style, worthy of our army's best traditions. Whether portraying the domestic side, or illustrating the grim savagery of the field of combat, this picture accomplishes wonders. The trick photographs of "fade in and fade out" and "double exposure" are tremendously effective in showing the vision of Ethel when she confronts Sammy during all his trials and tribulations.

Despite the fact that the picture is propaganda, the feature will awaken intense enthusiasm and undoubtedly result in being one of the greatest aids to the Red Cross drive that was ever inaugurated, for the appeal of the moving picture drama, when its influence is brought to bear in such vivid fashion, is more than likely to outdo the most strenuous efforts of the most accomplished and persuasive orators and writers.

Rothapfel Praises "Ruggles of Red Gap"

Says Picture Will Do More to Uplift Industry Than Any He Has Seen in Last Two or Three Years

THE George K. Spoor feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap," featuring Taylor Holmes, has been having an unprecedented run, according to reports of the George Kleine exchanges. It has been shown now in the first run houses in practically all the large cities of the country and bookings are said to be pouring in.

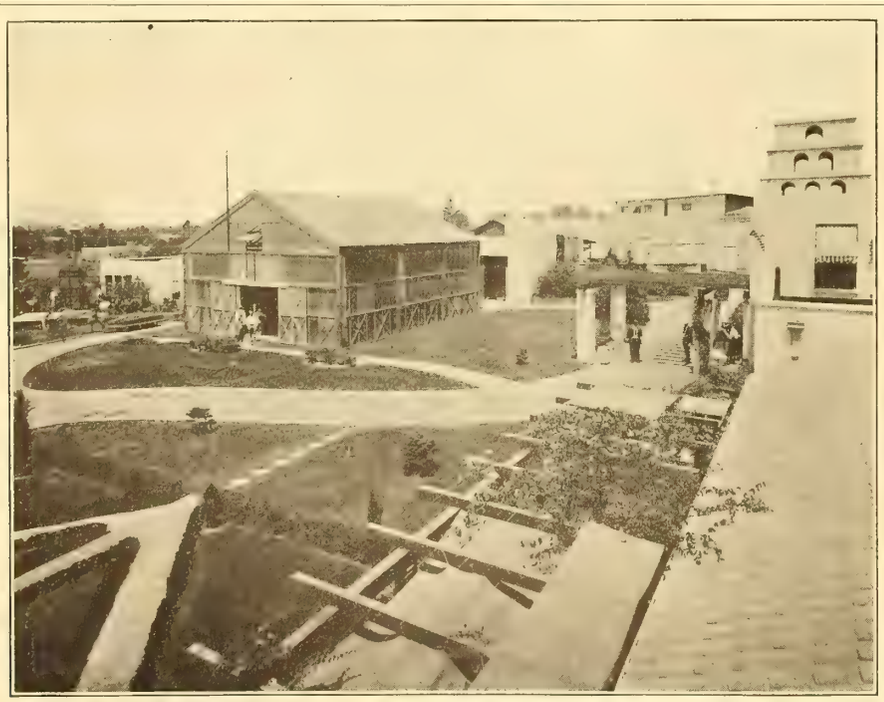
This picture, taken from the story by Harry Leon Wilson, has come in for an unusual share of commendation by the exhibitors showing it. Scores have written telling of their delight in it and of big business done. One letter, which is typical, was written to Mr. Holmes by S. L. Rothapfel, who ran it for a week in the Rialto Theatre, New York. Mr. Holmes appeared at the theatre in person during the entire week's showing. Mr. Rothapfel writes:

"I have just finished showing 'Ruggles of Red Gap' at the Rialto Theatre and to say the least it was a perfect delight. Not alone is it one of the most amusing, but, in my opinion, it strikes a new note in the production of motion pictures. To me it proves without question that the most subtle humor can be portrayed upon the screen if done intelligently and with artistry of which 'Ruggles of Red Gap' is a perfect example.

"Not alone did my business jump up in leaps and bounds from the first showing, but I have received hundreds of commendatory letters and any number of personal compliments on its showing. Clean, wholesome and in good taste, this picture, so ably presented by yourself, will do more to uplift and bring the motion picture into good repute than any film I have seen in the past two or three years.

"I shall indeed look forward to whatever you may do, and I congratulate you and Mr. Spoor and Mr. Windom, and I trust that I may again have the honor of being able to present you in my theatres."

The latest Holmes picture, "A Pair of Sixes," has been pronounced by exhibitors as the greatest comedy which he has appeared in. He is supported by an all-star cast, including Maude Eburne, Robert Conness and Alice Mann. It is taken from the stage production by Edward Peple. The Kleine offices have already reported a large number of bookings.



Many Tourists Visit Studios of American Film

It is conceded, even by competitors, that the studios of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, in point of structure as well as locality, are the most beautiful in the country. When S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, went through California six years ago to select a site he chose the spot at Santa Barbara without hesitation.

No expense has been spared in the erection of buildings, as well as in the landscape features and greenhouses that form such a large part of the attractiveness of the place. Tourists who come to visit the studio not only exclaim at its beauty, but say that they came because of reports from other tourists who advised them to visit it as one of the beauty spots of California.

While the area is not large, there are close to fifteen acres in the company's holdings and new buildings are constantly being constructed to allow for the increase in activities.

At present there are three companies working constantly at the place—the Mary Miles Minter Company, the Margarita Fisher Company and the William Russell Productions Company.

Miss Minter Gets New Play

"The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," a picture adapted from the story in the Saturday Evening Post by Josephine Daskam Dodge and in which Mary Miles Minter of the American Film Company will be starred, will be possibly the most pretentious story in which the little actress has yet been featured.

Edward Sloman, her director, has allowed nothing in the way of artistic creation or expense to stand in the way of producing the best story of the season.

As the plaintive little girl who has lived abroad with her eccentric father so long that she is delighted to get back to America, even though she is penniless, fatherless and friendless, Miss Minter makes an appeal that is bound to keep the exhibitor's theatre filled to capacity.

Little Rhoda Eldridge Sayles, the heroine, who is forced to undertake the job of a cleaning girl, is at first suspected to be a ghost because of her habit of slipping noiselessly about her work and next she is taken to be a thief by the son of her employer, who finds her gathering up the family silver to be cleaned.

So poor little Rhoda has a variety of thrilling experiences before they discover that she is really the niece of the haughty lady for whom she cleans silver and rooms and rugs and things.

Alan Forrest is the leading man and George Periolat is the father, while Helen Howard and Emma Kluge are in the cast. This will probably be a May release.

Caillaux Case Made Into Photoplay

HELD UP TO INCLUDE EXPOSE BY BOLO PASHA

THE sensational Caillaux case of France is soon to be shown on the screen. Together with an announcement that Bolo Pasha, alleged associate of Joseph Caillaux, former premier, has made far-reaching disclosures on the eve of his execution for treason, comes a parallel announcement that the entire Caillaux-Bolo intrigue has been filmed by William Fox. Mr. Fox also announces that the release of this big photo-drama has been withheld, but solely that the picture may include the momentous episodes which are expected to follow Bolo's revelations.

News Interest Capitalized

The Fox organization has centered its energies in the production of "The Caillaux Case." It has capitalized the news interest of the events surrounding the unsavory public career of Joseph Caillaux—the trial and acquittal of his wife on the charge of murdering Gaston Calmette, editor of the Paris Figaro; Caillaux's alleged connections with Bolo in spreading pro-German propaganda in France and America, the exposure of these activities by the United States government, Bolo's condemnation to death, Caillaux's imprisonment on a charge of treason—and has also woven into the play various scandals, intrigues and marital sensations in the lives of the "evil genius of France" and his beautiful wife.

Speaking of the production, William Fox declared that "The Caillaux Case" in all its intricate international ramifications was the greatest intrigue of modern times.

Dreyfus Case No Comparison

"The famous Dreyfus case," he declared, "cannot be compared with this affair in scope, in the prominence of its leading character, or in its vital significance to the democracies of the world.

"We have learned beyond a doubt that Caillaux was active in France, Italy and South America in the interest of a premature peace with Germany. We have learned that vast sums of money, furnished by Berlin, were sent to France through an American bank and used by pacifistic organs with which Caillaux was associated. We have learned of sinister pro-German influences exerted by a powerful secret order of which Caillaux was leader. And we have even found evidence going far to prove that Caillaux had laid elaborate plans for a coup by which he hoped to become the ruler of a Germanized and defeated France.

"Naturally, we have made every effort to produce this great drama in a manner worthy of the theme. The 'woman in the case' in this instance is one of the most sensational feminine characters in all history. Her ruthless ambition has been proved, not only in the notorious criminal case in which she was the chief figure, but in various other episodes in her highly romantic life. There is little question that she was the power behind Joseph Caillaux, and in 'The Caillaux Case' we have portrayed her as such—a modern Lady Macbeth.

"In order that the commanding importance of the characters in this picture might be transferred to the screen we have produced 'The Caillaux Case' with an all-star cast. Not only this, but we have taken the greatest care that each player who portrays one of the historical principals should in appearance be as nearly the 'double' of the original as we could find in the screen world. Almost all of the actors are French, all are thoroughly familiar with the events reproduced and some are acquainted with the real persons about whom the drama is built. Thus the 'atmosphere' of the play has been re-created with the utmost accuracy.

Emphasis Laid on Secret Service

"Even the sets are exact duplicates of scenes in the original action, and have been made from photographs and drawings obtained at great trouble and expense. Particularly notable in this respect are the set of the editorial office in which Mme. Caillaux shoots Calmette and that of the court scene in which she is tried and acquitted of murder.

"We have laid special emphasis upon the part played by the United States Secret Service in unearthing evidence incriminating Caillaux and Bolo in machinations with Berlin. Thus the picture has a powerful patriotic attraction, because it shows American fighting not only France's enemies without, but the enemies within her gates.

"And the end is not yet! We are holding the picture pending publication of the revelations which Bolo has just made to the French authorities. Dispatches say that these disclosures will stir both continents and will vitally affect the course of the war.

"I believe 'The Caillaux Case' is the most far-reaching, the most vital drama that my organization has ever made for the screen. I doff my hat to the excellent work done by Richard Stanton in directing it. I shall release it with a sense of supreme pride and satisfaction."

Louise Fazenda, Metro's all-star, in "The House of Mirth."

Mutual Release Date Changed

The release rate of "Hearts or Diamonds," the first picture William Russell has made for William Russell Productions, Inc., which was announced by Mutual as April 22, has been changed to April 29.

Both Mr. Russell and William Hamilton Osborne, the author of the story on which the photo drama is based, express themselves as highly pleased with the production.

The story is full of impetuous moments and spectacular scenes, with just enough of the comedy element to relieve the tension and give "Big Bill" opportunity to display the comic touches which were evident in "The Midnight Trail" and "New York Luck."

"Hearts or Diamonds" was made under the direction of Henry King, who was responsible for the last Mary Miles Minter production for Mutual, "A Bit of Jade." Mr. King also directed Gail Kane in several Mutual successes, notably "Souls in Pawn" and "A Game of Wits."

Miss Charlotte Burton plays the leading role in the new Russell production. Miss Burton made a sensational screen success as the siren in "The Diamond from the Sky," the American-Mutual photonovel in thirty chapters, and subsequently appeared with Mr. Russell in the Mutual star productions, "Soul Mates," "The Highest Bid," "The Strength of Donald McKenzie," "The Love Hermit" and "The Torch Bearer."

"Joan of Plattsburg" Expected to Take

Goldwyn Believes People Want Pictures That Have War Background—Former Successes Cited

THE release on May 5 of Mabel Normand's "Joan of Plattsburg" is awaited with confidence by Goldwyn officials. The Porter Emerson Browne play is unique in many respects. It is distinctly patriotic in tone, yet it is in no sense a war drama. Rather is it a play of imagination and charm with a background of martial maneuvers and all the day's reminders of America's part in the great conflict.

It is this factor, as well as the presence of the ever popular Mabel Normand, which is responsible for the confidence of everyone concerned, and, of course, the timeliness of the production. The public wants timeliness in pictures just as in clothes or in any other phase of everyday life, in the opinion of many of the most successful exhibitors everywhere.

Wiseacres, who at the time of America's entry into the war, predicted dismal failure for motion picture productions which touched on the conflict abroad, have been thoroughly disillusioned. Some so-called war pictures have been frowned upon by film devotees, but mediocrity in either story or production was alone responsible. In the main, well-produced pictures from worth while stories dealing with incidents, real or imaginative, of the French battleground, have "gone over."

Especially is this true of "Fields of Honor," "The Spreading Dawn" and "The Splendid Sinner," three Goldwyn productions which contain an element of war, and "For the Freedom of the World," the stirring war spectacle distributed by Goldwyn. All four are tremendous box-office winners and have evoked unstinted praise of the press and public.

The Goldwyn organization, like all other producing companies at the time, was a bit skeptical as to how the public would take a production that had an element of war in it. But so responsive were exhibitors and their patrons to the appeal of "The Spreading Dawn" that Goldwyn lost no time in producing another of its kind and "Fields of Honor" came into being.

"Fields of Honor," starring Mae Marsh, has exceeded all Goldwyn expectations, its thrilling scenes of conflict, coupled with the beautiful love story it tells, winning high praise even in communities generally looked upon as hotbeds of pacifism.

The tremendous vogue enjoyed by "For the Freedom of the World" is in a measure due to the marked success scored by "Fields of Honor." No production within the past year has achieved such financial returns for exhibitors, it is claimed, and received such approbation from their patrons. Goldwyn records show that the big war special has been played, or is booked for showing, in nearly every town in the country of 10,000 population or over. To date more than seventy exhibitors have repeated on it to big business.

Though only two weeks before the public, "The Splendid Sinner," with Mary Garden, has played to capacity houses in every section of the country.

The situation is best summed up by a prominent eastern exhibitor, who says:

"All this talk that people want to forget the war is bunk, pure and simple. Give me a war picture carrying a good story dealing with happenings in France, and I'll play it every time in preference to some wishy-washy artistic thing that means nothing."

Goldwyn Boosts Mae Marsh Cast

For the drama of the secret service, "The Face in the Dark," in which Mae Marsh appears April 21, Goldwyn has assembled an uncommonly interesting cast of contributing players.

A leading man new to Goldwyn Pictures plays opposite Miss Marsh. He is Niles Welch, often called the handsomest hero on the screen, as well as one of the youngest. He has played with practically every star, his last production being Metro's "Her Boy," in which he was co-starred with Effie Shannon.

Alec B. Francis essays the role of Miss Marsh's father, a retired secret service man who chooses to sacrifice his daughter's love rather than reveal the truth about himself. Mr. Francis will be remembered as the kind hearted friend who brought the lonely little rich girl and the poet together in "The Cinderella Man."

Madge Kennedy Boosts Loan

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn star, scored a triple triumph at Detroit last week. Besides being tumultuously received by hundreds of admirers on her stage appearances and enjoying the sight of them applauding her performance in "The Danger Game," Miss Kennedy assisted materially in launching Detroit's third Liberty Loan drive.

Miss Kennedy literally had to fight her way into the Madison Theatre, the scene of her triumphs. Fully two thousand picture fans swarmed the theatre doors an hour before the star put in an appearance and there was little abatement of the crowd throughout the day.

The theatre management used a novel method to introduce Miss Kennedy. The introduction was made by a short film reading: "Miss Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, is in Detroit today at the request of John H. Kunsky to speak in behalf of the Liberty Loan." A roar of applause, in which everyone in the spacious playhouse joined, greeted the introduction.

First Griffith-Artcraft Under Way

Picture Is Based on Experiences of an American in Europe Who Is Caught in the Wave of War

AT the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president and head of the producing department, last week announced that the initial D. W. Griffith production to be released under the Artcraft trade mark is now under way on the west coast.

"While Mr. Griffith does not desire at the present time to give any inkling of the plot, it is permitted to state that the story covers the experiences of an American in Europe, who is caught in the wave of the war," said Mr. Lasky. "Though at first actuated by the spirit of the adventurer, he rises to the best emotions and ambitions and performs noble deeds, presenting many thrilling scenes. Big battle views are also included in this story, offering an international romance as its chief theme.

"Mr. Griffith has not as yet decided upon a title for this production, although it has been temporarily named, 'Women and the War.' Among the popular players are Robert Harron, Lillian Gish, George Fawcett and Adolph Lestina. In addition to the well known artists, many noted personages will be seen in this film, including the Princess of Monaco, the Countess of Masserene, Lady John Lavery, Miss Bettina Stuart-Wortley, Miss Violet Keppel, the Countess of Droghda, Lady Diana Manners, the Hon. Mrs. Montagu, Miss Elizabeth Asquith and Miss Lilly Elsie.

"Lady Diana Manners is the daughter of the Duke of Rutland and is the most famous beauty in English society. Miss Elizabeth Asquith is the daughter of the famous ex-prime minister of England who preceded the Hon. Lloyd George, the present premier.

"This production should not be confused with 'Hearts of the World,' Mr. Griffith's current release, staged in conjunction and under contract with the British government. That subject is being handled by Mr. Griffith's own organization.

"The first of the D. W. Griffith productions to be released under the Artcraft trademark will, it is expected, be ready for presentation early in June. Initial preparations for the staging of this photodrama are now well under way at Mr. Griffith's west coast studio. The cast is practically complete and actual filming will be undertaken immediately upon the noted director's return from New York."

Immediately prior to Mr. Griffith's departure for Europe last year to take motion pictures in conjunction with the British government, the famous producer became affiliated with Artcraft for the exploitation of a series of superphotoplays. Actual work in connection with this contract was postponed until the other work was finished.

"Heart of the Sunset Promises Well"

Exhibitors Who Have Seen Picture at Pre-release Showings Declare It Is Better Than "The Auction Block"

THROUGHOUT North America special pre-release showings of Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset" have been arranged by various Goldwyn branches, with the result that exhibitors everywhere are enthusiastic over this screen classic of the great southwest.

This was demonstrated with especial force in New England, where the play was shown to an invited audience at the Fenway Theatre in Boston.

All the prominent and most successful exhibitors in that territory were present, including representatives of Nathan Gordon's offices and the Keith interests, with Jacob Lourie of the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston and Victor Morris, representing Marcus Loew. The Castle Square Theatre management also was represented, as were the Allston Theatre and the Fox Theatre of Springfield. Mrs. Ayer of the Exeter Street Theatre also witnessed the play, with exhibitors from Haverhill, Salem and many other wideawake centers in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The consensus of opinion is that Goldwyn in "Heart of the Sunset" is offering an even greater attraction than the last Rex Beach box-office magnet, "The Auction Block."

Similar showings have been held in Minneapolis, reflecting the opinion of the Northwest; in Atlanta, the center of Southern showmanship, and in Dallas, the heart of the Southwest, the locale of "Heart of the Sunset." From the last named territory came praise even warmer than from New England.

"Without doubt 'Heart of the Sunset' is the strongest, most artistic production ever made of a Rex Beach novel," said a well-known Texas exhibitor. "It is true to life as we see it and has more punch than any of the other Rex Beach productions. We predict that it will coin money wherever it is shown."

"Laugh and the World Laughs with You"

A THREE COLUMN CURE FOR THE BLUES

A BUDDING magazine writer seeking to interview Edith Storey, Metro star, was ushered with some ceremony into her dressing room at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood while she was making up for her stellar role in "Treasure." The young man was plainly nervous. After the introduction he blurted out:

"Er, Miss Storey, how do you like America?"

The star elevated her brows, registering astonishment. Consulting his notebook the scribe went on.

"Tell me about the revolution. Did you find it hard learning English? What did you think of the statue of Liberty? Did you see any submarines on the way over and if so, were you frightened?"

Miss Storey gazed at the young man, speechless. The silence could be heard.

"Why, I saw you in 'The Legion of Death' and I was sure you were Russian," the youth apologized, adjusting his tortoise-shell glasses.

"Oh," returned Miss Storey, suppressing a smile, "I'm so sorry I can't oblige you, but I'm an American girl, born and raised in New York City. I never saw Trotzky nor any revolutions. I think the United States is the finest country in the world. Anything else?"

"Then you're not Slavonic?" the scribe inquired, chagrined.

"No, I'm a vegetarian," was Miss Storey's rejoinder, and the interviewer fled, leaving his notes behind him.

As one of the press agents looked up from his desk at Triangle's Culver City studio during the production of the western story, "Paying His Debt," he found himself looking into the muzzle of a ferocious forty-four automatic. The business end of the gun seemed as big as the opening to the Hudson tubes. Behind the gun, the press agent could dimly make out the huge, menacing form of Roy Stewart.

"You have here," drawled Roy in a cold, threatening tone, as he held up a newspaper clipping, "a slanderous and lying tale to the effect that I furnished my movie audiences a thrill in my last picture, 'The Boss of the Lazy Y.'"

"Is it not true?" whispered the guilty P. A. as he sucked his breath through his arm pits and felt his heart beating it.

"Villain," thundered Roy as the muzzle of his gun commenced to assume the proportions of the Grand canyon. "The only thing I ever furnished was a suite of rooms." With that he turned contemptuously on his heel, fearless of consequences from a treacherous foe.

Conway wired back:

15,000 Persons to Take Part in "Gismonda"

Production Will Be Biggest and Most Spectacular Ever Attempted by Famous Players-Lasky in East

THE Fort Lee studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation resembles a big military camp these days because of the number of people assembled and the construction work which is going on in connection with the production by Edouard Jose of "Gismonda" for Paramount release. This photoplay is a starring vehicle for Lina Cavalieri and the production is said to be the biggest and most spectacular ever attempted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the east.

"The plot is laid in the year 1500," says Mr. Jose, "and there is no architecture of that period in this country for the requirements of this story. We have, therefore, been compelled to build all settings, both exterior and interior, which are of exceptional grandeur and splendor as reproductions of the palaces of the Greek nobility in their days of wealth and extravagance.

"These settings are of necessity extraordinarily large, as thousands of people appear in the various scenes, and when the picture is finished between 10,000 and 15,000 persons will have taken part.

"Among the largest setings are the palace of Gismonda, the church and the convent, where the principal action takes place. To support the weight of the many people, in many instances mounted on horses, the floors were constructed on heavy foundations and covered with concrete and cement. The solidity of these settings prevents vibration and assures good photographic work.

"In the grounds of the convent is being built the cemetery where the nuns were laid to rest. Gismonda was the widowed Duchess of Athens and was a devout Catholic. She frequently went in retreat at the convent where she prayed for guidance in the affairs of state which perplexed her. When her child is about to be torn by the lion she swears on the cross that she will give her hand and the dukedom to his rescuer. When Almerio, beloved by the people, though a humble peasant, proves to be the only man brave enough to attack and slay the enraged beast, she hesitates in carrying out her oath and retires to the convent. The populace, horrified at the violation of her oath and enraged because of her snobbish treatment of Almerio, follows her to the sacred portals and makes a hostile demonstration against her.

'The building of the amphitheatre containing the lion's den necessitated the use of dynamite as Fort Lee rests on the solid rock of the Palisades. As long 'shots' are taken by the camera at the lion's den it could not be raised and the quickest way to blast the rock out to the required depth.

"The interiors, of course, harmonize with the massiveness of the exteriors, and are furnished with elegant appointments of the period.

"Madame Cavalieri, internationally famous for her beauty, makes an ideal Gismonda, who was the most attractive woman of her time, and the ladies of her court were noted for their pulchritude."

"Crauford Kent, who has played important parts in many Paramount and Artcraft pictures, plays the leading male role of Almerio."

Edward Jose, director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, now engaged in producing "Gismonda," starring Lina Cavalieri.

Next Minter Subject May 6

The next Mary Miles Minter picture from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., will be "The Greater Call." It is set for release on May 6.

Miss Minter has been appearing in a distinctly different type of picture—plays of more dramatic force—and "The Greater Call" provides her with new opportunity to show her ability in pictures of this kind.

"Planter" Breaks House Record

"The Planter," Mutual's big feature in which Tyrone Power is seen in a screen adaptation of Herman Whitaker's celebrated novel of the same title broke all records at the Washington Theatre, Granite City, Ill.

In a letter to Mutual, Louis London, manager of the Washington, gave a glowing report.

"I desire to extend my personal thanks for you insisting I show 'The Planter,'" Mr. Keller wrote. "I wish to add I broke all records in the theatre matinee and evening and it was a most pleasing picture to my patrons, for I heard many remarks in passing out how 'grand' it was, and even after several days have heard many fine remarks. The next time you say you have something good it will not be hard for you to book me."

Clever Plot in Strand Comedy

Wouldn't it be fierce if you had to caddy for your best girl, while your rival, a handsome guy who sports diamonds and everything, makes love to her, holds her hands and tells her what "booful blue eyes" she has? Wouldn't you feel justified in mopping up terra firma with his anatomy?

In "Mary's Frame-Up," a Strand Comedy starring Billie Rhodes, Cullen Landis is forbidden by Mary's parents to see her. Determined to be near, however, he camouflages himself as a Senegambian of the darkest hue and pushes around a wheel-chair in which is seated his rival and his girl.

How he proves to be a hero and is decamouflaged in the act is one of the most amusing bits seen on the screen in some time.

World Starts "The Judge"

Work on "The Judge" has been started in World's Ford Lee studio under Director Travers Vale, with June Elvidge supported by a notable cast, which includes Walter Pratt Lewis, Albert Hart, George MacQuarrie, Marguerite Gale, John Bowers and Marie Pagano.

William Russell, who is starring now in pictures of the William Russell productions, Inc., released through Mutual.

World Gets Fay Tincher, Noted Comedienne

First Comedy, "Some Job," to Be Released May 1—Others Will Be Made at Los Angeles Upon Her Return From East

FAY TINCHER, celebrated comedienne and for a year and a half the head of her own company, is the latest addition to the World Film Corporation staff, according to official announcement.

The announcement puts to rest several rumors that have originated in various sources since the arrival of Miss Tincher in New York from the coast this week. She came East, it is said, on twenty minutes' notice, from Hollywood, where, in the Willis-Inglis studios, she has been making her own comedies under Al Santell's direction. Her first picture on the World program is scheduled for release May 1.

Besides being an important departure in announcing the highest type comedy for almost immediate release on the World program, the signing of Fay Tincher is of unusual interest.

Miss Tincher received her training for the legitimate stage under the tutelage of Arthur Hopkins and appeared with marked success in vaudeville in New York and on tour. Returning to New York three and a half years ago after a brief tour, a director for David Wark Griffith approached her and asked her if she would like to go into pictures.

"I don't mind," Miss Tincher is quoted with having replied.

The director, who did not know her identity, then took Miss Tincher to see Griffith, and Miss Tincher, who did not know who Mr. Griffith was, decided that she might as well play a part in "The Battle of the Sexes." Such artists as Donald Crisp, Lillian Gish, Owen Moore, Robert Herron and Mary Alden were already at work on the feature.

It is to be recorded with truth that Miss Tincher became a featured player in this Griffith production which packed the Lyric Theatre, New York, and that in ten days after her first appearance in Mr. Griffith's office he had signed her to play leads in comedy drama.

Her activities were then transferred to the coast, where the Reliance-Majestic, releasing on the Mutual program, very successfully offered the "Bill, the Office Boy" series with Miss Tincher making a hit as the stenographer, a character which created for her a following. When Mr. Griffith left Reliance-Majestic, Miss Tincher was co-starred with De Wolf Hopper on the Triangle-Fine Arts program and her work in "Don Quixote," "Mr. Good, the Samaritan" and "Sunshine Dad," with Mr. Hopper, made for her a tremendous following in every part of the country.

Following her work with De Wolf Hopper, she was featured as a star in her own comedies on the Triangle-Fine Arts program and "Laundry Liz," "The Two O'clock Train," "The Calico Vampire," "The Lady Drummer," "Love's Get-A-Way" and "Bedelia's Bluff" firmly established her at the very top of comedy-drama star ranks.

"Some Job" and "Main 1-2-3" will be her first World releases.

She will return to California this week and in the Inglis-Willis studios will begin work on a new feature for World program release. A rumor that she would return east, following this, to do a five-reeler in World's Fort Lee studio, has not been verified.

Miss Tincher is about twenty-three, a Topeka, Kansas, girl and a member of a non-theatrical family.

Play Hookey to See World Zoo

Truant records were broken at Fort Lee, N. J., one day last week when nearly all the school children played hookey to see the monkeys and other animals brought to the World studio for use in the filming of new features.

The disappearance of the children from school not alone created annoyance to the teachers, but also at the studio, as the children insisted upon feeding so many peanuts to the monkeys that they paid more attention to the children than to their work.

Finally the director was forced to have a screen placed on the outdoor stage, where the picture was being filmed, between the children and the monkeys. Even then, at the most inauspicious moments the monkeys turned back and looked toward the source of food supply instead of doing the stunts the director intended them to do.

As the result of the day's experience the Fort Lee truant officer has requested World Pictures to keep the menagerie carefully hidden from the gaze of the children so as not to interfere with the youngsters' school duties.

Whole Staff Writes One Story

One of the most unusual things in the history of scenario departments has just been undertaken by World Pictures. The seven members of the staff are engaged in writing one five-reel story.

Charles S. Sarver, scenario editor, is acting as general supervisor of the work. Another member of the staff is acting as sort of a free-lance, able to jump in whenever needed, while the remaining five each build up one reel.

The experiment is being watched with great interest because of the fact that in novel and serial story writing such a combination has never proved a success.

Bi-weekly conferences are being held at which the story is being rounded into shape, all discrepancies removed and perfect continuity and sequence assured. As the story is of striking strength and extraordinary interest, great things are expected.

Glimpses of the action in the new Triangle picture, "The Hand at the Window." This production features Margery Wilson and Joe King.

Moroso Play Heads Triangle Program

"The Hand at the Window" Is Title of Production—"Society for Sale" and "Their Neighbor's Baby" Complete Bill

THE New York underworld forms the background for "The Hand at the Window," a mystery story which is scheduled as the first release of the Triangle April 14 program, with Margery Wilson and Joe King in the leading roles. An English society play, "Society for Sale," is the second release of the week, in which William Desmond and Gloria Swanson are the featured players.

Almost as interesting as the Paris haunts of the Apache and the famous old Barbary coast of San Francisco, now a thing of the past, is life in the Italian quarter of New York. Around this setting John A. Moroso has woven a mystery story, "The Hand at the Window," an adaptation of his Collier's Weekly story "In the Spring." Moroso was the author of another underworld drama on the recent Triangle schedule, "The Shoes That Danced," and of "The Lonely Woman," which is now in production.

A New York police inspector and a girl secret service agent have the leading roles in "The Hand at the Window." The action hinges upon a mysterious finger print which is found on a window. This presents an interesting problem in criminology. The New York police force is baffled by it. It is thought to be the mark of Tony Bracheiri, convicted counterfeiter, who has long since been identified as dead. If some other criminal has a corresponding fingerprint then this is the most amazing coincidence in the history of criminology.

According to the story, Roderick Moran, detective sergeant of the New York police department, obtains the conviction of Bracheiri. The latter swears revenge in these words: "When you get married, Meesta, look out!"

Moran becomes interested in Laura Bowers, who takes a room at the boarding house at which he lives. Her business is a mystery to him. She wins his love. He recalls the words of Tony, uttered more than five years ago, but his mind is set at rest by the shooting of Tony, who has attempted to escape from prison.

Moran and Laura are married. A few moments after they enter their new home a bullet crashes through the window and almost kills Moran. A thumb-print is found on the window. It corresponds with Tony's. The police are baffled.

Laura follows her former mysterious occupation. Her husband fears that she is a reformed habitue of the underworld. She brings "the Calabrian Kid" into Moran's office one day and exposes her as the would-be murderer. "The Calabrian Kid" is the woman who married Tony and swore to obtain revenge. Moran learns that his wife is a secret service operative in the government employ, who has been on the trail of a gang of counterfeiters. Following this triumph she leaves her work to make a happy home for her husband.

Joe King, who has appeared in "Heiress for a Day," "The Answer" and "The Vortex," makes his fourth Triangle appearance in this drama as Roderick Moran. Margery Wilson, last seen in "The Law of the Great Northwest," is Laura Bowers. Francis McDonald is Tony. Irene Hunt is "the Calabrian Kid." Raymond Wells directed.

"Society For Sale," the second release of the week, was scenarioized by Charles J. Wilson from the story by Ruby M. Ayres. William Desmond is cast as "The Honorable Billy," a good-natured, thriftless society man. "The Marriage Bubble" and "The Sea Panther" have been his latest vehicles. "Society For Sale" introduces Gloria Swanson, formerly of the Keystone comedies, in her first dramatic role.

The story is laid in London and relates the adventures of "The Honorable Billy," a member of exclusive English society, who squanders his fortune. Phyllis Clyne, formerly a fashion shop mannikin, wishes to break into society and offers him a financial consideration if he will become engaged to her. Bill's sense of honor causes him to balk, but Phyllis refuses to allow him to pull out of the agreement.

She meets a dissolute rake, Lord Sheldon, against whom Billy warns her. She accuses him of jealousy. He is treated as an inferior by her. He learns that Phyllis has been a mannikin and is shocked by her deception. Placed in a bad position with his friends, Billy has nevertheless learned to love her. She leaves Billy. Lord Sheldon and Phyllis are out motoring and meet with an accident in which Sheldon is killed. Then the real purpose of her desire to break into society is revealed—to meet Sheldon, who is really her father. The Honorable Billy renews their agreement and all ends happily.

Four-year-old Barbara Connelly, who made her initial Triangle appearance with Goro Kino, Chinese actor in "Little Red Decides," is cast in the concluding feature of the week, "Their Neighbor's Baby." Fritzie Ridgeway of the dramatic forces and Charles Dorian have leading roles in this production.

Help Keep Your Block Clean

IF the city block in which your house is situated has a rather questionable reputation, you probably think it is none of your business. It is the duty of the police to prevent actual law-breaking. It is the duty of the people to behave themselves. It is the duty of parents to keep track of their children. It is your duty to run a show that will keep the house full, and that, you think, is all.

So far as duty goes, you are probably right. But if that is as far as you care to go, you will fall far short of your opportunity. You will never realize the value of the good will, the friendship of your patronage that it is possible to build up in your neighborhood.

It is a strange thing that the more unsavory a neighborhood is, the more its inhabitants appreciate a "square guy." Not so strange either, maybe; they appreciate him more because he is a rarity. And if he goes just a little bit out of his way to help along the street, the neighbors will do more to keep him happy than any "respectable" neighborhood in the world would do.

The picture theatre man carries a lot of responsibility—and some of them do not seem to know it or care about it. In a block of the kind we mean, the theatre may be the only meeting place. It may be the only place, besides the saloon, where a little crowd of friends can get together without being told to move on. It is likely the only place where young folks can make a date. It is certainly the only place where the kids of that kind of a block can get any fairy story stuff.

That means a lot. It means that the exhibitor has charge, for several hours a day, of the morals of some hundreds of children and young folks. It does not mean that the exhibitor should be a police reserve; but he certainly should know his neighbors and his patrons. The children and the young folks ought to be Mary and Bill and Lizzie and Heinie to him. Just that little friendly touch, with his presence somewhere about the place, helps to keep a lot of things straight.

It is astonishing how little it takes to help some people. When old Mrs. Murphy breaks her leg and cannot do any washing for a spell, a few dollars' worth—almost a few cents' worth—of meat and vegetables will keep her from fretting. You bet the neighborhood exhibitor ought to be on that list—at the top of it. It isn't just Mrs. Murphy's blessing he gets; it is the good wishes of the whole block. You see, he is a square guy.

That is only an example. Something of trouble or tragedy is happening all the time in places like that. A few cents, a bit of friendly counsel, some left-over circulars for little Katie to draw her pictures on, maybe some help in getting big Tom a job—why, do you think that exhibitor could fail? They would go to his shows if they disliked them, just to keep him among them.

The less other interests people have, the more human interest they have. The exhibitor who cannot feel enough of that to extend his presence along the whole block is in the wrong block.

Highbrow and Lowbrow

THE successful purveyor of goods or amusements to the public is usually a firm believer in the theory of "lowbrowism." That is to say, he is convinced that true amusement is founded on a "lowbrow" basis, and that even the habitual "highbrow" on pleasure bent becomes temporarily "lowbrow." The terms, like most extreme slang, convey so clear a meaning that we would not think of apologizing for using them.

President Wilson, an intellectual of the highest type, goes for entertainment, we are told, to detective stories and baseball. In this he has the good company of thousands whose daily lives are surrounded by ethics and esthetics and mental atmosphere from which they are glad occasionally to escape.

Charlie Chaplin, as an institution, has both admirers and detesters. But these two classes refuse to be analyzed as "lowbrow" and "highbrow." Chaplinism is lowbrowism; yet among the stanch friends of Charlie's screenings are college professors, poets and scientists.

But while the intellectual turns for relief to "lowbrow" amusements, it cannot be said that the "lowbrow" takes up intellectual pastimes for his leisure moments. Therefore, there is a substantial, logical basis for the idea that amusement classifying as "lowbrow" comes nearest to universal appeal. That, of course, explains the marvelous success of the Chaplin school of entertainment.

Nevertheless, we must not forget the glorious success of certain productions which would be classified by the nonanalytical as "highbrow." Most of Griffith's works so classify, because they are grouped around ideals. The studies of Abraham Lincoln worked out by a serious student of the great American would doubtless be included in the intellectual catalog. These bits of pictorial history have achieved such popularity as was never vouchsafed to any history in ink. And we find that the people who most enjoy them are not necessarily of the "highbrow" class.

Perhaps, after all, we do not fully grasp the significance of those expressive bits of slang. We are prone to use them in mild reproach: Lowbrow, a "common person"; Highbrow, a species of "nut." But the "common people" are so only because they are a majority; and they can cry as well as laugh, suffer as well as enjoy.

However carefully the exhibitor may study his audience in order properly to judge its wants, he need never try to classify it as highbrow or lowbrow. There are no such serious divisions of the human race. When it comes to simple sentiment and emotion, in the enjoyment of truthful, worthy, clean, real entertainment, we are all common people; all lowbrows, if you like.

Those Music Royalties

SINCE Justice Goff of the New York Supreme Court has denied a motion for an order restraining the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers from collecting royalties on its music, the theatre man is still confronted with the problem of choosing between taxable music and tax-free music. The long list of tax-free music published by MOTOGRAPHY some time ago, through the courtesy of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, proved that business can be conducted without payment of royalties.

As Justice Goff explained, the music association is exercising only its lawful rights. There is no restraint of trade, because plenty of music may be had and played without fee. The list of publishers who have elected to keep their publications on the free list may be obtained from the Chicago offices of the League.

The music association's royalty scheme naturally would be profitable only if its publications were used. Whether they are sufficiently superior to warrant the difference in cost represented by the royalty is for the users to decide.

Gripping scenes from the new Triangle play "Society for Sale," featuring William Desmond and Lillian West.

J. Barney Sherry Takes Role of Raffles

Picture, to Be Called "High Stakes," Is Directed by Conway —Two Other Triangle Features Started During Week

A CROOK story, with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role as a modern Raffles, has been put into production during the past week at the Culver City Triangle studios. Director Conway has just finished "Her Decision," and is directing this drama, "High Stakes," written by Andrew Soutar.

Jane Miller will make her initial appearance as a Triangle player as Sherry's leading woman. The supporting cast also includes Harvey Clark, Myrtle Rishell, who was in the recent comedy, "Mr. Briggs Closes the House," Ben Lewis and J. P. Wild. Dick Rosson, whose last dramatic appearance was with Pauline Starke in 'The Shoes That Danced," has a prominent role.

The second feature production commenced during the week is "Old Hartwell's Cub." Thomas N. Heffron, who directed William Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman" and "The Sea Panther" is handling the megaphone. Desmond has the title role. His latest vehicles have been "Society For Sale" and "An Honest Man." Mary Warren, remembered for her work in "The Sea Panther" and "The Vortex," has the leading feminine part. Walt Whitman, the white-haired Triangle character actor, is cast as the venerable parson of a small western town.

Desmond will again wear the flannel shirt and leather apron of the village blacksmith, a character which he portrayed in "The Sudden Gentleman." Eugene Burr, Percy Challenger, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette and William Ellingford are in the supporting cast.

"Old Hartwell's Cub" is a human interest story. It shows the rise of a young blacksmith from sodden indifference to one of the foremost citizens of the town, inspired by the love of a good woman. Although brimming with small town comedy and pathos, the story makes a jump to the west, where the hero is saved from a mob lynching as a horse thief.

Director Harry Edwards has started on the third new picture of the week, a two-reel comedy which is yet untitled. Billy Franey will have the featured role. Five other Triangle directors are working on their respective productions and two directors are awaiting stories.

Cliff Smith, with two smashed ribs and much the worse for wear, is putting the finishing touches to the Triangle western, "Wolves of the Border," Roy Stewart's latest vehicle. This story was formerly titled "A Man Worth While." Smith was injured while filming scenes at the Triangle ranch studio in the Santa Monica mountains. Stewart, who has digressed from his usual characterizations in "The Boss of the Lazy Y" and "Paying His Debt," his most recent vehicles, has a typical "western" role in "Wolves of the Border." Josie Sedgwick has the leading feminine role.

Director Frank Borzage is finishing the interiors in "The Loyalty of Taro San," a picture in which the mysticism of old Japan is vividly set forth. This is a screen adaptation of the story by the same name by E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband." Preparations are being made for the exteriors, the Japanese angle of which will probably be done at the Triangle ranch studio, where a bit of the orient will be transplanted.

Jack Livingston, who played opposite Pauline Starke in "Innocent's Progress" is the featured player. Jack Abbe, Oriental actor, is Taro San. He had a prominent role in "Her American Husband."

Three features have been sent to the film editors in the past week.

"Mlle. Paulette," a comedy drama laid in the Adirondacks, is one. It was directed by Raymond Wells. Wallace MacDonald, who played opposite Pauline Starke in "The Shoes That Danced," and Claire Anderson have the featured roles.

Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry have the leading parts in "Her Decision," another which has just been completed under the direction of Jack Conway. Darrell Foss, who was featured in "Her American Husband," also has a prominent role.

A John A. Moroso story, "The Lonely Woman," is the third picture completed. Belle Bennett has the featured role.

New Theatre at Triangle Plant

A new theatre is being built at the Triangle Culver City studios. When completed it will make the fourth projection room at the plant. The theatre is 60 by 30 feet. It will be handsomely furnished and probably will be used to show the latest productions to exhibitors. The seats will be arranged so they can be moved and the theatre will also serve for a banquet hall when such occasions arise.

Gets First Comedy Role

Dick Rosson has his first comedy role in "Mr. Miller's Economies," a two-reel Keystone scheduled for April release. Rosson, who has appeared in "The Haunted House," "Cassidy" and "The Shoes That Danced," Triangle dramas, is one of many Triangle feature players who have temporarily deserted the dramatic end of the lot.

Background of "Salome" is Gorgeous

One of the Settings Is That of Jaffa Gate, Through Which British Recently Marched Upon Capture of Jerusalem

NOTEWORTHY among the screens of spectacular settings embodied in the Theda Bara super-production, "Salome," is an almost exact duplicate of the famous Jaffa gate, through which General Allenby and the British forces marched recently into Jerusalem.

Beyond the gate are the ancient buildings and streets leading up to the palace of King Herod, the central tower of which rises more than 200 feet, and was quite the most striking structure in Hollywood, Cal., where the big production was screened by J. Gordon Edwards.

On either side of the tower are wings 200 feet long, making the building itself 400 feet in length. Stretching away in the distance from the gate, beneath which Jesus Christ passed two thousand years ago, are the houses of the city.

Another impressive set is said to be the throne room of Herod. This chamber covered an entire stage. The King's throne on a raised dais was surrounded by costly tapestries and rugs. On both sides were twelve huge golden columns, scores of courtiers and a soldier bodyguard whose costumes and glittering spears radiated the sunshine in which the scene was photographed.

Miss Bara herself appeared in this part of the drama attired in cloth of gold, with a pantaloon effect. A great embroidered cape of yellow and red was draped from her shoulders in graceful folds.

A boudoir and bath set constitute an achievement in construction. An old Biblical print was used as a guide to the decorations of the room. These consist largely of gorgeous gossamer silks, golden tassels and the finest of upholsteries, as befitted the boudoir of the woman who swayed King Herod.

In the center of the huge apartment the technical staff built a fountain tanked with wonderful lilies, ferns and exotic plants. Its very appearance breathed the spirit of the first siren of history.

Slabs of the finest carrara marble, it is said, were brought from Italy to southern California for the bathing pool. One of the scenic novelties here is an immense outspread tail of a peacock who looks proudly to the pool below. From the "eyes" of the outstretched feathers sprout hundreds of streams of water.

Theda Bara as she appears in the William Fox super-feature, "Salome."

New Toronto House Building

Toronto has another good-sized theatre in the process of construction. It is being built at Bloor and Lippincott streets by Harry Rotenberg, who, it is understood, represents the Allens of the Famous Players' Film Service, Limited, distributors in Canada of Paramount, Artcraft and other well-known releases.

The theatre will have a 48-foot frontage, with a depth of about 109 feet, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,000. When this house is completed it will be the third theatre in Toronto under the control of the Allens, the others being the New Allen, in the downtown section, and the Beaver, West Toronto, which was recently acquired.

Louise Glaum Starts New Paralta Play

Picture Will Be Called "Shackled" and Is by Lawrence McCloskey—Katterjohn Story Next

WORK was commenced last week on the filming of "Shackled," which will be the second Paralta play to be made with Louise Glaum as the star. It will follow the Glaum release, "An Alien Enemy," in which she made her debut not only as a Paralta star but really as a dramatic actress as well, for Miss Glaum before her connection with this organization appeared in no characterizations except those of a seductress.

"Shackled" was written by Lawrence McCloskey especially for Miss Glaum, and the author kept in view throughout the development of his plot that the star was to be confined by no limitations, but was to be given the full scope of dramatic interpretation. As a consequence, "Shackled" is a particularly strong story and affords wonderful opportunities for Miss Glaum to equal or even excel her work in "An Alien Enemy."

The star will be supported by an eminent cast, composed of Lawson Butt, an English actor of prominence in America as well as abroad; Roberta Wilson, sister of the Paralta leading lady, Lois Wilson, who will make her debut as a Paralta player in this production; Jack Gilbert, Roy Laidlaw and Charles West.

Wallace Worsley, who directed "An Alien Enemy," and to whom much credit is due for its wonderful success, is also staging "Shackled."

Upon the completion of the picture it is probable that Miss Glaum will appear in a drama by Monte M. Katterjohn, entitled "One of the Multitude." Announcement was made several weeks ago that this picture would be made to follow "An Alien Enemy," but for various reasons its production was postponed and "Shackled" was chosen instead.

There are several other stories under serious consideration to follow "One of the Multitude," but no definite announcement concerning them has yet been made. The schedule of production of "Snapdragon," from the novel by Horace Hazeltine, which had been at first planned for Miss Glaum's initial play, is yet undecided, although it is certain that it will be one of this star's releases in the near future.

Winnipeg House Varies Prices

Starting with the week of April 8, the Starland Theatre, Winnipeg, adopted a policy of presenting three different shows each week at 5 and 10 cents, in the afternoon and 10 and 15 cents at night. The features presented the first week included "Dodging a Million,"

Harry Morey as he appears in the new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "A Bachelor's Children."

Harry Morey Heads Vitagraph Program

"A Bachelor's Children," the Vehicle, a Story That Presents Star as a Strong Man of the Big Outdoors

HARRY MOREY, with Florence Deshon playing opposite, heads the Vitagraph program for the week of April 22 in "A Bachelor's Children," a Blue Ribbon feature. There is a strong supporting cast, including Alice Terry, Denton Vane, William Shea, Jessie Stevens and little Aida Horton.

The play, which is from the pen of William Addison Kathrop, a regular contributor to the Vitagraph program, was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon. It is a vehicle which presents Mr. Morey in the type of character in which he has made his strongest appeal, that of a strong man of the big outdoors, heroic and just.

This is the third feature in which Mr. Morey and Florence Deshon have appeared as a combination, and a fourth, to be released later in the season, has just been completed.

In "A Bachelor's Children," which is as original in theme as it is striking in title, Mr. Morey plays the role of Hugh Jordan, a robust mining prospector seeking his fortune in the hills near Loco City. He gets word that his wealthy uncle, for whom he had been named, is dying in the East, and he hurries thither, accompanied only by "Whiskers" O'Brien, a faithful camp pal. The uncle dies before the train arrives and in due time Jordan is awarded the old man's estate, amounting to several millions of dollars.

Hugh settles down to the easy going life of a young and very wealthy bachelor surrounded by scheming and jealous women and idle men, but yearning all the time for the mountains and the plains.

In another part of the city live Penelope Winthrop and her sisters, one time in affluence, but now in dire poverty. They are served with dispossess papers and in preparing to move Penelope comes across an old letter in her father's handwriting, saying he had transferred his mining claims to Hugh Jordan, uncle of the present Hugh, and that he would see they got their due. Penelope and her sisters go at once to Jordan's home, interrupting a great house party, and present the letter to Jordan.

Hugh has never heard of Winthrop, but realizing his uncle may have wronged his old partner, gives the girls over to his housekeeper and starts an investigation. The sisters receive every courtesy from Hugh, but Penelope (Alice Terry), who is unusually beautiful, is an object of hostility on the part of Mrs. Beaumont (Florence Deshon), who intends to win High and his millions. In her plans she is allied with Larry Kendall (Denton Vane).

Learning that Hugh is determined to give the girls a "square deal," even though it cost him most of his fortune, Mrs. Beaumont goes to Penelope and tells her she and Hugh are engaged and that her presence there is blackening his name. The young girl, horrified, prepares to leave at once and is intercepted by Kendall, who professes love, and says he will care for her and her two sisters.

The youngest of the sisters, however, although not realizing what it is all about, gets "Uncle Hugh" on the phone at the club and tells him Kendall is there "trying to make Pen go away with him."

Hugh gets home in time to undo the plotters and the next morning at a general councils of family and lawyers formally tenders the girls the millions rightfully theirs, although there is no legal claim.

Penelope tears up the papers and she and her sisters thus give Hugh to understand that the millions without him mean nothing to them, that is, to Penelope, and that the old poverty is preferable. Penelope becomes Mrs. Hugh, and all share equally in the Jordan Winthrop millions.

"Over the Top" Stirs Blase New York

Continues to Play to Capacity at Lyric Theatre—Prominent Patriots Speak at Every Show

ENTERING its third week at the Lyric Theatre, New York, "Over the Top," Vitagraph's reproduction of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's famous book, in which the soldier-author appears as the star, continues to play to capacity.

The big production, which brings the front line trenches and No Man's Land vividly before the eyes of the American people, has been one of the sensations of the year in New York theatricals, both from the standpoint of spoken and screen dramas.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, under whose supervision the production was made, and Wilfrid North, who directed it, have been the recipients of congratulations from all branches of the industry.

The week of April 8 was American Defense Society week, the patriotic organization having had speakers on the stage at every performance. The speakers included some of the most notable public men and women engaged in patriotic work. Among them were George H. Mann, Mrs. B. Bennett-Burleigh, daughter of one of England's most famous war correspondents; Corporal R. Derby Holmes of the British Army, author of

Three Select Pictures Await Release

Include Alice Brady in "At the Mercy of Men" and Clara Kimball Young in "The Reason Why"

STAR SERIES productions on the eve of public showings by Select Pictures Corporation include Alice Brady's latest picture, "At the Mercy of Men," and Clara Kimball Young's big production of Elinor Glyn's story, "The Reason Why," as well as the previously announced picture starring Constance Talmadge, "Up the Road with Sallie," which follows her preceding release, "The Shuttle."

"At the Mercy of Men," which follows the Brady production of the Eugene Walter drama, "The Knife," is one of the most ambitious bits of work which Miss Brady has yet done for the screen. The play is a daring love story of modern Russia and the cutting and titling of the scenes has been most ingeniously done.

Alice Brady has a huge role in this photoplay and one which gives her ample scope for a great variety of work. Her acting ability is acid-tested in several places during the five reels of action and Miss Brady comes out triumphant.

"At the Mercy of Men" was directed by Charles Miller from the scenario of Paul West. Frank Morgan is again seen as Miss Brady's leading man.

That the author of "Three Weeks" is he author of "The Reason Why" is a uaranty of the heart interest in this ıtest Clara Kimball Young production. linor Glyn was most enthusiastic when ıe learned that the distinguished Select tar desired to present her successful ovel on the screen and she signed a con-act giving Miss Young the screen ghts while still at an advance base hos-tal nursing English wounded in France. Miss Young has given the Glyn masterpiece a notable production. No less a person than Lady Duff Gordon, known as Lucile in the world of fashion, has designed Miss Young's gowns for the entire production. And as the story is laid in fashionable London society these gowns are many in number and rich in character.

Fairbanks and Wife to Part

Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, wife of the actor, gave the film world and the general public much to discuss when she made the statement last week that she and her husband had agreed to separate. She said a well-known picture actress was the cause of the trouble, thus confirming rumors which have been in circulation for some time. The husband of the actress is threatening now to bring a suit for alienation of affections with Fairbanks as defendant, the amount of the damages asked to be $250,000.

New Food Conservation Films Produced

Present Such Stars as Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson and Mabel Normand Illustrating Economy

CATHERINE STUART has just finished the production of several new films for the United States Food Administration to be used in the campaign for conservation, it was announced last week by Arthur S. Friend, chairman of the motion picture division of the department of public information for the food administration.

These films present such stars as Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson and Mabel Normand showing how to save the various commodities most needed. The pictures were produced free of cost to the government and will be released following the present series of cartoons on the conservation of food from the Paramount-Bray studios. These cartoons have gained countrywide popularity. They were produced at cost for the Government.

Miss Stuart will shortly leave New York for the west coast, where she will co-operate with Cecil B. DeMille in preparing films showing the most famous stars there in subjects that will carry the message of the food administration to the public via the exhibitor. Among the stars who are expected to appear are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin.

The distribution is in the care of the various news weeklies, being included in the regular programs.

"Various prominent members of the industry have contributed their time, money and effort to do everything possible toward reaching the public in connection with the conservation of food via the screen," said Mr. Friend at his offices in the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters on Fifth Avenue, New York.

"The newest films, staged under the supervision of and conceived by Miss Stuart, bring out most effectively their purpose. The appearance of these famous stars in these patriotic pictures offers the exhibitor an attraction that will boost his box-office receipts in addition to offering him another opportunity to help his country."

"Baree, Son of Kazan" Nears Completion

Vitagraph Company Returns From Truckee, Where They Spent a Month Among Blizzards and Snow

FILMING of exterior scenes has been practically completed for "Baree, Son of Kazan," a forthcoming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, under direction of David Smith and featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. The company returned to the Hollywood studio last week from the snow-clad mountains around Truckee, California.

Reports of wonderful snow scenes have reached the Eastern Vitagraph offices from the log cabin settlement built specially for this picture in the big timber region north of Truckee. The entire company passed a month in the wilds and experienced several of the worst blizzards in recent years, which boded ill for personal comfort but assured excellent photographic results in what promises to be a remarkable picturization of James Oliver Curwood's famous story of Baree, half dog and half wolf and his amazing devotion.

Director Smith has been enthusiastic from the start about this picture and has striven to retain much of the atmosphere of the book, at the same time discarding little of the story.

Five malamute dogs were used to portray "Baree," as he is shown first as a puppy and throughout the stages of development until a grown dog. Quite naturally these dogs have been the special interest of Miss Shipman, the heroine in the picture. It has been her special effort to win their friendship so she could command them in the taking of scenes.

Her task was easy enough as regards two, one a mere puppy and another a few months older, but with the others, snapping and surly brutes at the outset, it was a constant struggle. Kindness and liberality at meal times won out, however, and the dog scenes are said to be just as remarkable as the snow scenes.

On the trip from Los Angeles to Truckee Miss Shipman almost wished Baree's life never had been wrtiten. The company occupied a special Pullman and the five Barees were quartered in an express car ahead. Puppy Baree was first to register protest at being thus separated from his fair mistress and his howls persisted until he was carried to Miss Shipman's drawing room, when he curled up asleep in her arms. Next, the next youngest took the cue and he shortly followed the puppy and with the same results. Then the grown-ups started a chorus that got on the nerves of the express car crew. There was nothing to it but give in to the malamutes, who enjoyed drawing room service all the way to Truckee and snapped haughtily at any member of the company who dared approach the door.

Explains Why "American Buds" Was Put on Program

"Exhibitors who wish to know whom they have to thank for our unusual action in placing a Standard Picture such as 'American Buds' with the Special Feature schedule," says William Fox, "may learn now that they themselves are responsible."

"American Buds" stars Jane and Katherine Lee and was made under the direction of Keanan Buel in Georgia, for the most part. From the first day on which work was begun and even when it was finished it was intended for a Standard Picture. It was produced with a large supporting company of adult players and the members of the cast spent many weeks on exteriors alone.

It was during the period that the film was being cut and made ready for release, Mr. Fox says, that pressure brought to bear by the organization's branch managers forced the change.

"Those in charge of our exchanges," Mr. Fox said, "wrote that the exhibitors in their territory were asking whether there was any hope of their getting a Jane and Katherine Lee subject in one of our 52-a-year pictures. Our managers were emphatic in their declaration that nothing we could do of a similar nature would be more appreciated.

"We have never forgotten—and are not forgetting—that it is the exhibitor who shows our product week after week that has made possible the growth and success of our organization, as much as the public which sees the films. I think I may say that we have always manifested a desire to meet the exhibitor halfway, at least, and as the present wish was still possible of fullfilment, we met it."

Prison Organ Lauds Select Film

"Ghosts of Yesterday," Norma Talmadge's Select picture which is creating a favorable impression wherever it is being shown, was recently projected on the screen of the theatre maintained by the Mutual Welfare League, the honor association of the prisoners at Sing Sing.

"The Star of Hope," the monthly magazine issued by the league, devoted a page to an enthusiastic review.

"In the dual roles of Ruth, the loving and gentle wife, and Jeanne, the demimonde and idol of the Parisian cabarets, Norma Talmadge portrays all the emotions of her art, surpassing even her previous performances in the silent drama," says the review. "Her facial expressions and her eyes reflect the action with such intelligence that few captions are needed; and in roles so widely different, she rises to the pinnacle of perfection.

Publicity That Makes for Profits

CLEVER AND ORIGINAL IDEAS IN ADVERTISING

A What's What in Advertising—and Why!

Give Patrons Useful Souvenirs If You Want to Hold Their Favor and Keep Theatre's Name Constantly in Mind

By P. G. Smith

Advertising Expert, Cahill-Igoe Company

EXHIBITORS are learning that advertising pays. There was a time—not so long ago, either—when all you had to have was a screen, a box of film and a projector, and you could bank pretty well on the supposition that people would come to see your picture. But nowadays competition has become so keen that it keeps a chap hustling for some manner of focusing attention on his house rather than on the house of the competitor. Competition has taught the theatre manager the value of advertising.

However, to most of us advertising means something printed on paper—something to read, something that tells what is going on at your theatre, something that will catch the prospective patron's attention and hold it long enough for the name of your theatre to soak in. But why stop there?

What is advertising, anyway? Isn't it keeping people constantly reminded of you and your theatre, whether you do it by means of the printed page or by firing a gun off in front of your theatre? One is perhaps more dignified and acceptable than the other, but they're both advertising.

Advertisement of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, in the Minneapolis News. This ad stands out and compels attention.

Now, printed advertising is without doubt the most efficient form of advertising for the motion picture theatre. By printed advertising we mean programs—which are as necessary as a screen to the success of the usual theatre—dodgers, lithographs, etc. But printed matter is only a temporary advertisement.

To make it really valuable it must be backed up with something permanent.

Put yourself in your patron's shoes. You receive a program or a dodger. Maybe there is something striking about it.

"Pretty good looking," you say, "and he's got a good line up of plays at that theatre. I'll drop over this week." Then you throw the program away and forget, until something else reminds you of the theatre whose program you have read.

The best advertisement is the one that lasts the longest. For instance I have upon my desk a calendar pad, a blotter pad and two rulers, each bearing the name of some firm who put them out as an advertisement. I need them. I'm constantly using them. Every time I use them I see the name staring me in the face.

Now, these people that so kindly presented me with the above mentioned articles have lots of competition—but the chances are, when I want something they handle they will be the first people whose names will occur to me. They will be old friends. I will feel I can trust them and they'll get my business.

Premium advertising is a good thing that managers overlook. True it is expensive—and you can't trace the returns it brings. But it is bound to bring returns.

Here's an example. Suppose some special occasion arose at your theatre—the anniversary of the opening of the theatre, we'll say. You want to make it a day long to be remembered. You get out special programs, pluggers, put something unexpected over in the way of entertainment and give your patrons a show that beats your regular show forty miles.

They come in droves, see your show, go home and forget it. Why should they remember it? It was a rare entertainment, no doubt—something they couldn't get every day—but entertainment is the easiest thing in the world to forget unless something is constantly reminding you of it.

Suppose, in addition to the items named above, you had given a souvenir of some kind—a pencil holder, a cup and saucer, a silver spoon, a pair of knitting needles—anything that folks would take home with them and use. Don't you see how that would back up your printed advertising?

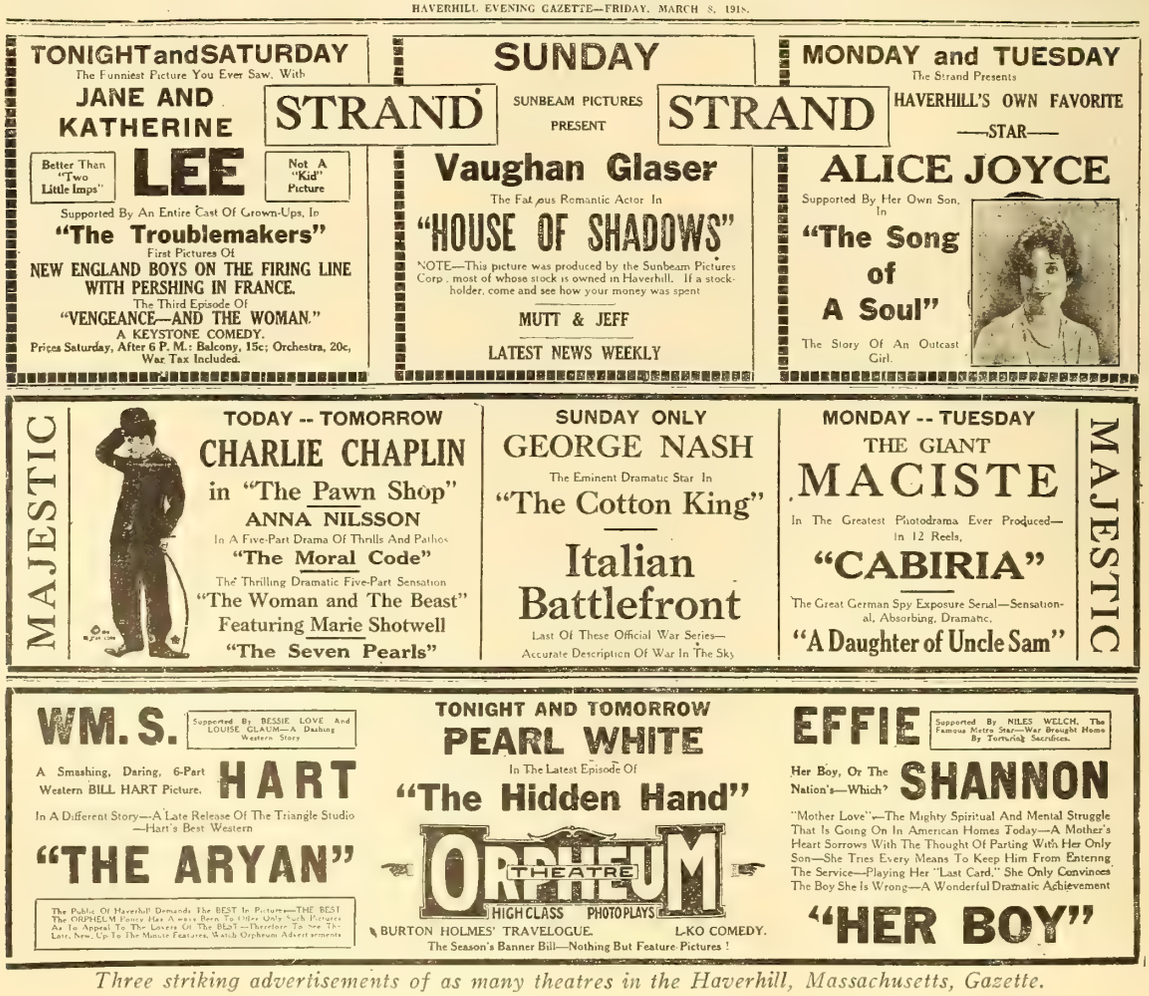
Every time Mrs. Jones sits down to knit and picks up the knitting needles you gave her, her mind travels back to the "big night" at your theatre—she remembers the good time she had there; you've got her attention. Every time she sees those needles you've got her attention. And once you've got something in her hands that will constantly speak the name of your theatre to her you can safely bet that your competitor will have to step some to make her remember his theatre.

Your souvenirs don't have to be expensive. They must be attractive, useful or clever—something folks will want to take home. Get something past the front door of your patron's home—something that will hang around the house for a good long time—and you have got a steady patron. There are lots of ideas for souvenirs—pictures of the stars, pillow slips, knitting needles, yarn holders, cups and saucers, thimbles, pocket mirrors, little purses, sachet bags—endless things that you can use. And be sure to have your name stamped on it somewhere; that helps.

You needn't give out souvenirs frequently, but spend money on them. Get something that folks won't dare to throw away. Every time you give a special performance give your patrons something to remember it by. Every spring hold a Spring Opening and give away a souvenir. Give a cheap novelty out every holiday—hatchets filled with candy to the kiddies on Washington's birthday, cloth shamrocks on St. Patrick's day, candy eggs on Easter, a little flag on the Fourth of July.

But once every little while spend some real good coin on something good, something worth while, that your patrons will want to keep—something that will say to them every time they see it: "This man So-and-So, he's a pretty lively chap; he put me here to help you out as much as I can—and say, by the way, how about taking a run down to his theatre tonight with the wife and kiddies? Look in the paper and see what picture he's got for tonight."



Look into this souvenir and premium advertising thing—it's a business builder.

Actor Has Narrow Escape

Wallace MacDonald, Triangle leading man, who is supporting Claire Anderson in "Mlle. Paulette," had a narrow escape from death while filming some of the closing scenes on the Malibu ranch in the heart of the Santa Monica Mountains. MacDonald was caught in quicksand and only the prompt action of Cameraman Gus Peterson saved him.

The company, in charge of Assistant Director J. W. McLaughlin, motored to the Malibu for some fishing scenes in a picturesque trout stream. After reaching the location Cameraman Peterson found a good position for his instrument on a rock in mid-stream and McLaughlin pointed out a position for his leading man. MacDonald, hip-boots and all, started out with a leap. His object was a nice little strip of sand which showed in the stream. He landed on the mark all right, but was buried in quicksand to his waist.

It was then that the cameraman enacted the role of hero. Leaning far out from his rock, he caught one of MacDonald's wildly waving arms and hung on until a rope was thrown to the actor from the bank and he was dragged to safety.

Lobby posters used by the Central Park Theatre, Chicago. These posters are designed and drawn by Alexander Frank, publicity director. They are entirely original. A story by Mr. Frank in this connection appears on this page.

"Why Neglect Lobbies?" Asks Manager

Successful Chicagoan Tells How He Designs and Makes His Own Posters and Uses Them to Best Effect

By Alexander Frank

Display and Publicity Manager, Central Park Theatre, Chicago.

AT the request of MOTOGRAPHY, I am writing this article to tell of my success in poster advertising.

In our lobby we utilize two center pillars for posters. The one on the right side, being nearest the entrance, is used for advertising the feature next at hand. On the pillar to the left we advertise the one to follow. The day we show the picture advertised on the right the card is taken out and placed outside in a frame which advertised the current picture and the card on the left is moved to the frame on the right pillar and a new card is placed in the vacant frame. Thus we advertise two coming features for about a week.

No comedies are advertised inside the lobby. No printed or lithographed posters are used. In most cases I use a still on my posters and very little engraving. I mention the date, the name of the star and the title of the picture. Cards with too much lettering, I believe, are not read and are of little value inside the lobby.

In addition to this form of advertising we use display cards in the panels of four of our front doors. Here we use more lettering, as the passerby will take more time in reading these posters. All of our cards are hand lettered and ornamented by me. No two are alike and each card is in keeping with the picture. A poster on a Hart picture will be very much different from a poster on a Mary Pickford picture.

The same principle is used in our entire program—music, light effects, solo and advertising must harmonize with the picture, for the picture is and always will be the mainstay of the program and everything always must conform to it.

Another point in our advertising is to let the patrons know that our house is different in everything. All this means hard work, plugging day and night, especially as we change our program three times a week, but it pays. This is not an experiment. Before I entered the theatrical line I was a department store window trimmer and card writer and every progressive merchant recognizes the importance of his show windows.

Why do nine out of every ten motion picture houses neglect their lobbies? Circus days are gone. To paste the walls of the lobbies with unartistic posters will not do in our time. This form of advertising is very cheap and easy. The janitor can attend to it. Would the progressive merchant have his window decorated by his janitor?

Army Rejects Arbuckle

Fatty Arbuckle has been declared much too heavy for war service by a Los Angeles draft board, which placed the jovial comedian in Class Five.

Farnum Appears in Person

What was to have been a privately managed theatrical scoop on the part of Jack Root, manager of the Strand Theatre in Pasadena, California, last week, turned out to be a spontaneous public mass meeting in honor of William Farnum. The star, so far as the memory of the most zealous picture-goer can recall, had never before appeared in person at a picture house, but Root had prevailed upon him to come to the Strand.

"Les Miserables" was the attraction and many recognized the William Fox star sitting in the rear. The result was a great demonstration and the presentation to Mr. Farnum of a two-foot sterling silver loving cup, inscribed with a message.

Several prominent citizens spoke first. Then Frank Lloyd, who screened "Les Miserables," was introduced. He told how tirelessly Mr. Farnum had worked on the production and his tribute increased the audience's insistent demand for a word from the star himself.

Mr. Farnum was literally carried to the stage. He then gave his maiden speech since his entrance into filmland several years ago. He demonstrated, however, that he had lost none of the quality that distinguished his voice when he appeared in classical plays on the stage. Then the cup was presented to him.

Many fans were unable to get into the theatre, so Mr. Farnum spoke a few words to them outside and shook hands with everyone.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Tourneur to Release in Open Market

"Sporting Life," Famous Old Melodrama of Drury Lane History, Will Be His First Picture as a Producer

"SPORTING LIFE," one of the most famous melodramas that the old Drury Lane, London, ever produced, has been obtained by Maurice Tourneur as the initial production for his own recently organized company, Maurice Tourneur Productions.

Mr. Tourneur is solely responsible for the success of another Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip," which he produced for Paragon Films, Inc. Encouraged by the reception this picture has had in this country and throughout the world, he has decided that the demand for red-blooded, thrilling stories is one that must be heeded and after careful study and consideration of many melodramas, decided that "Sporting Life" would make the most satisfying companion play to "The Whip."

Theatre goers have not forgotten the furore that "Sporting Life" created when it was originally shown in this country. The success that the play had had in London was equalled by the hearty reception it received in New York and in the major cities of this country where it was shown after the New York engagement.

It is more than likely that Mr. Tourneur will introduce in the cinema version many thrills that were merely hinted at in the stage play. With his genius, imagination and experience in producing masterpieces, lovers of the screen have a right to a very pleasant anticipation in the production, which will be released in the open market in the very near future.

The work of engaging the cast, which is to be made up of actors and actresses of tested ability, is going on rapidly and Mr. Tourneur expects to be taking scenes during the current week. The policy that Mr. Tourneur has followed very successfully in his casting "The Whip" and "The Blue Bird"—that of not depending upon stars—is to be followed in the casting of "Sporting Life."

From the plans that Mr. Tourneur is working on, it is evident that he expects to make his initial production one in which expense will not be considered. He is determined that the reputation he has won as a director shall be surpassed by the reputation he is to make for himself as an independent producer.

"Sporting Life" is the joint work of Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks. Cecil Raleigh is also responsible for the stage version of "The Whip."

Fox Makes Drive on Mutt and Jeff

The three releases which have been made by William Fox of Capt. Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons have been so enthusiastically received, according to the Fox management, that the sales organization has been concentrating on a one-week drive, during which these productions have had the principal selling attention. The results are reported to have been highly satisfactory.

There has never previously been any attempt made to put over subjects as short as the Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons on so pretentious a scale. The aim has been, according to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the company, to book practically every theatre in the country and for this reason the advertising has been on exactly the same basis as if the productions were regular five to ten reel subjects.

Incidental advertising, such as cut-outs, calendars, blotters, etc., has been used extensively and letters have been mailed direct to exhibitors on an average of two or three a week. Exhibitors have generally been kept informed of what the men who have booked the pictures think of them, the number of endorsements, it is said, being very large.

The three subjects thus far released have been "The Decoy," "Back to the Balkans" and "The Freight Investigation." For April 14 "The Leak" is scheduled. The others to follow during the month are "On Ice," a skating picture, and "Helping McAdoo."

These cartoons were made prior to Capt. Fisher's departure for the battle front, but it is stated that several, bearing on conditions abroad, have been received from him and will be released soon.

J. J. Goldburg Moves

After May 1 Jesse J. Goldburg, states rights and special exploitation representative of motion picture attractions, will move his offices from the Times building, New York, to 120 West Forty-first street.

This removal is occasioned because of increased business, and his new offices which are larger and more commodious than those occupied by him in the Times building. Mr. Goldburg will have a perfectly equipped projection room for the viewing of attractions exploited by him.

Fox Starts Big Drive in Foreign Field

Campaign Under the Supervision of A. Carlos and Confidence Is Expressed That Results Will Be Satisfactory

WILLIAM FOX shows his confidence in the world appeal of motion pictures in war time by the announcement that the Fox Film Corporation has just put into operation plans for an extensive drive in the foreign field. It has required many weeks, the announcement reads, to formulate the plans now becoming effective.

The campaign is being carried on under the direction of A. Carlos and confidence is expressed that the results will prove most satisfactory.

"Although it is of course far too early to give any definite accomplishments," the statement says, "or to venture predictions because they may seem rash, it is nevertheless true that important developments will occur within the very immediate future.

"The drive is to consist, in general outlines, of a vigorous advertising and publicity program, of short and long trips by each branch manager which will cover practically all of his territory, of thorough circularization of the cinemas and of intensive salesmanship.

"Mr. Fox has always been a firm believer in the wonderful prospects for expansion abroad and is of the opinion that the present is precisely the time for a concentrated effort. The exchanges which will be the central points from which the campaign will be directed on orders from the home office will be six in Canada, nine in the United Kingdom, one covering Spain and Portugal, two for Scandinavia and Russia, four in Australia, one for New Zealand, six for South America and the agencies in Rome, Moscow and Paris.

"The foreign business of the Fox Film Corporation has already proved a potent factor in the growth of the organization. Mr. Fox was the first American producer to enter the foreign field on his own account, preferring such action to the prevalent practice of selling his product abroad. The first office established by Fox Films outside the United States was in Rio de Janeiro and it is undoubtedly due to this fact that the Rio branch is one of the busiest in the entire chain, both at home and overseas.

"Translators at the home office put the titles into French, Spanish, Dutch, Portuguese, Greek and even Chinese and Japanese."

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who has just effected an entire reorganization.

U. S. Exhibitors Gets "Men"

Contracts have just been closed between the U. S. Exhibitors' Corporation and the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, whereby the former acquires the six-reel photoplay, "Men." President Frank G. Hahn of the U. S. Exhibitors' stated:

"In obtaining 'Men' I feel that it is a photoplay having the quality necessary to be placed alongside 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' 'Those Who Pay,' 'The Belgian' and 'Just a Woman.' We are endeavoring to establish a standard of exceptional quality; a standard which will enable exhibitors to know invariably that when a U. S. Exhibitors' picture is offered, that it is Class A film merchandise.

"Everyone knows Edward Sheldon, the celebrated playwright, who wrote the play, 'Men,' upon which the photoplay is based. It is a great play; and the picture is a great picture."

Foursquare Pictures will distribute the feature.

Garrett Fears Embargo on Exports

Declares Manufacturers Must Allow Duping Abroad if Business Is to Continue Without Shutdown

SIDNEY GARRETT, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., is warning American manufacturers that the foreign market is in such a state that a complete embargo may be placed on all export of films, for a few months at least. This is the sensation Mr. Garrett promised a week ago.

"I have been authorized by the Mundusfilm Company of Paris, for which I am purchasing agent, to make no more purchases without getting the privilege of duping," said Mr. Garrett. "Manufacturers can readily see that the foreign business must be carefully looked after. Their old idea that duping was a terrible thing to allow must be entirely lost sight of if a manufacturer wishes to live.

"For instance, the companies in Paris wish to follow out the following method:

"They do not mind paying royalties, but they desire with that the privilege of having a black and white print and one full titled print-tinted. The reason for this is, cargo space is almost unobtainable. Although the governments of the foreign countries desire amusements to keep the people in the best of spirits, war supplies are first, therefore little space for film is being reserved.

"The manufacturer should not hesitate to agree to this new arrangement because he is not making any profit on his prints at the present day and therefore could get his full profit on the royalty.

"If the manufacturers insist in not allowing privileges as the needs arise, I am afraid that a good many of them will not be doing the business soon, or making that progression in the business that they intended to. In fact, I wish to impress upon the American manufacturers that a great number of the larger concerns have made up their minds that unless these privileges are granted they will cease doing any business with them."

Warren Directs Film Himself

Edward Warren, president of the Edward Warren Productions, Inc., is personally directing his third big state rights feature in which House Peters and Anna Lehr will be co-starred, supported by a cast which includes Wilfred Lytell, Corene Uzzell, Henry Sedley, Ned Burton and Ben Lewin.

This feature is founded on a play by H. S. Sheldon and the scenario was adapted for the screen by Miss Winifred Dunn. The art direction is in the hands of Mrs. Lillian A. Warren, which is an assurance of some very beautiful sets and in addition most of the exteriors will be taken in the South, which will greatly add to the atmosphere of the production. Edward Earle, who photographed all the Edgar Lewis productions, is engaged as camera-man.

"Stolen Orders" Put in the Open Market

Brady to Devote Next Year to Independent Production of Five Famous Plays, Among Them "Way Down East"

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces that his big picture, "Stolen Orders," which is said to equal "The Whip" in its thrilling qualities, is finished and is now undergoing its final cutting, titling and printing and will be shown shortly at a Broadway theatre.

Harley Knoles and Mr. Brady have been working on this picture off and on for five months, but the climatic conditions at Atlantic City during January and February delayed its completion.

It is released in eight reels and will be disposed of on a basis similar to that adopted with "The Whip"—to territorial buyers. Most of the dealers throughout the world who purchased "The Whip" have taken options on "Stolen Orders."

Sir William Jury, who handled "The Whip" in Great Britain, sent a special messenger across the ocean to bid for it. He saw it run in the rough at the Paragon laboratories last Saturday and bought it on the spot, paying $60,000 for the rights in Great Britain alone.

Like "The Whip," Mr. Brady's latest picture is a Drury Lane drama of the hair-raising type. It also has the merit of being timely, having been Americanized, and deals with the work of secret German agents in the United States before and after the beginning of the war.

Mr. Brady has had the assistance of the United States government in supplying the locale for some of the big scenes. The English government has also furnished material taken in France to build up others.

Pretty Emmy Wehlen, star in Metro pictures.

The cast is the most remarkable that has been collected in a moving picture in recent years. Kitty Gordon is said to do the best screen work of her career as the wife of an American admiral who is led temporarily astray by the trickery of a German diplomatic agent, acted by Montagu Love.

Carlyle Blackwell figures strongly in the picture as a young American lieutenant and June Elvidge plays his sweetheart, doing some very remarkable feats of daring in big balloon and aeroplane scenes. Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie also have important parts.

Mr. Brady, having severed all connections with the World Film Corporation, is out with an announcement of his plans as an independent producer.

During the next year he will devote his screen activities to the production of five famous plays—"Way Down East," which is renowned as one of the most successful plays the American stage ever knew, having played nineteen consecutive years in American theatres; "Life," a melodrama so big that it could never be produced outside of the Manhattan Opera House, New York, where it ran a full season, and the Auditorium, Chicago. "Little Women," Louise Alcott's book, the greatest selling book ever written by an American writer; "Cheer Boys, Cheer," another famous Drury Lane drama by the authors of "The Whip," and "Sinners," Owen Davis' play about New York life that ran a year at the Playhouse.

Sterling Opens Chicago Office

R. C. Cropper, who is again becoming very active in the Middle West, has just arranged with Arthur F. Beck, president of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, to have charge of the first branch office opened by Mr. Beck.

This office is at 220 South State street, Chicago, and under the "Sterling System" Mr. Cropper is to release immediately "The Hypocrites," by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, and directed by George Loane Tucker, and the big France Films production, "The Natural Law."

Through Manager of Sales Herbert R. Ebenstein, Mr. Beck has authorized the handling of the entire Western territory for Sterling by Mr. Cropper.

A beautiful suite has been opened and official notices sent to surrounding exchanges announcing the screening of all special Sterling productions hereafter in Chicago simultaneously with the New York showing.

Mr. Ebenstein will remain with Mr. Cropper for about ten days to outline matters of policy fully. Then he will continue on to the coast. It is his intention to install an office in San Francisco before returning to New York by way of the Southern exchange centers.

For the present year the three offices in New York, Chicago and San Francisco are all that Sterling intends to open.

Sunday Bill Lost in New York

Face to face with victory, exhibitors of New York state have been compelled to see their Sunday show bill virtually lost by lack of time for consideration in the upper house of the legislature, previous to adjournment.

Senator Geo. F. Thompson, sponsor for the bill in the Senate, has made a determined effort to move the measure from the general orders calendar to third reading and final passage, but his plans were blocked by Senator Elar R. Brown, republican leader. It has been reported that Governor Whitman did not desire to have this proposed measure reach him for the reason that he did not want to shoulder the responsibility of either approving or disapproving Sunday pictures. What effect, if any, this attitude had in blocking the bill, is problematical. No one can say, however, that the exhibitors of the state have not put up a hard fight, and to lose through the lack of time rather than through opposition of votes necessarily is a bitter pill to swallow.

Undaunted, they already are preparing to carry the fight into the legislature at the next session, and by introducing the bill early in the season, expect to compel its passage.

Will Produce in New Orleans

The Diamond Film Company, recently organized to produce pictures in New Orleans, have arranged to release their output through the General Film Company. R. M. Chisholm is president of this new company and W. J. Hannon is vice-president.

Clean comedies will be the principal pictures made by the company. Players and directors have been engaged and the studios on Bayou St. John began activities April 15. Frank P. Donovan, formerly with Pathe, Universal, the old Biograph and other companies, is chief director. Among the players are Diana Allen, Mae Austin, Lou Marks, Joseph Echezabal and A. Browning.

Rights to Klever Komedies Sold

Klever Pictures, Inc., has just entered into an arrangement with the African Film Trust, Ltd., of South Africa, whereby the latter company acquires the rights to Klever Komedies for several years. Klever Komedies are meeting with great success in Australia and the Scandinavian countries.

How to Overcome Breaking of Patches

Most Trouble of This Nature Is Fault of Operators Who Fail to Repair Film so it Will Stay Repaired

PERHAPS one of the greatest troubles of operators is the breaking of patches. A very large percentage of this trouble lies with the operator himself, as when a film breaks or pulls apart he does not take the proper caution to see that it is repaired right. The following advice by Arthur Newman will, if followed, eliminate this trouble to a large extent.

"Joins in film are always with us, so also are bad joins. Film joining is an irritating job, which, when imperfectly performed, leads to no end of trouble and irritation to many who are not in a position to assure the job being well done in the first instance—the sufferers from the consequences of bad film joining seldom have any say in the matter.

"Many items in film manufacturing equipment have been considerably improved during the last few years, but the film joiner has remained as it was for a long time past. And what is the film joining apparatus? Generally a sprocket wheel or a section of a wheel, because where much joining has to be done the film clamp takes too long a time to manipulate.

"But, after all, the joining of film is not a difficult or bothering job. It is the getting ready to make the join which takes up the time, and it is on this stage that the quality of the finished join depends.

"Cutting the film to agree with the picture and the perforations requires great exactness to assure that the join shall be strong enough to stand the treatment in film winders and projectors and yet flexible enough easily to pass the sprockets and gate.

"Working slowly with the film clamp, very fine joins can be made, but even with this aid the exact amount of overlap of the two films is all-important. There is want of a good expeditious means of cutting the ends to be joined, so that an invariable length is left for overlap. If too much be left the join is likely to come apart as it passes round the curve of the small sprocket in the Maltese Cross machine, and if the dog or beater happens to strike such a join, though it may not break at the first occasion it will be very liable to do so on the third or fourth journey through the machine.

"Too short an overlap is not often come across, but when it occurs is just as bad as one too long. Perhaps the fault most often met with is imperfect removal of the gelatine film. Unless this be very thoroughly done a break will occur sooner or later, according to the amount of gelatine left between the surfaces.

"Celluloid is a very soluble and a very stable substance, and when properly dealt with is capable of being joined so that complete continuity is effected; but it must be a case of celluloid to celluloid without any foreign matter intervening.

"Now there are two things wanted to help on the joining process: A cutting device which will cut the film to the exact length beyond the picture, and a means of thoroughly freeing the celluloid from adhering gelatine, so that the cement may 'bite' all over the cleaned surface instead of in parts, as is too often the case. The two processes might be effected by the same appliance and one clamping of the film do for the two purposes. As far as the actual sticking together of the two pieces, that can be reliably accomplished by the means now employed—correct cutting and thorough cleaning are the critical points to be studied."

Scores Abuse of War Tax

J. F. Hickenbottom, an exhibitor of Julietta, Idaho, writes to MOTOGRAPHY as follows:

"There is quite a lot being said about war tax and especially the admission tax, but I am convinced that it is the abuse of and the misconstruction of the law that is causing most of the trouble, i. e., many of the theatre managers have raised the admission price 5 cents and turn over 2 cents to the collector and keep 3 cents. Others have made no raise and collect no war tax, but state that they pay it themselves, and it has caused a great deal of trouble.

"People naturally object to paying 5 cents war tax when only 2 cents goes into the war fund. Others object to paying any, since some managers do not collect any. I have had comparatively little trouble, as I have collected only what the law requires, 1 cent to 3 cents, and the price of the show is based on the quality of the pictures.

"I consider the greatest injustice we have to contend with is the so-called 15-cent reel tax being collected by many of the film companies. I don't believe any one would object to paying it if the government received it, but it all goes to enrich the film concerns. Yet we are compelled to pay it before we can get our films from the express company, even if we have paid the rental in advance. It is either pay the 15 cents tribute, may I say, or lose the price already paid.

"The film concerns say: 'How are we to get the money back that we have paid for tax?' I say: 'How are we to get the powder back that was burned to throw lead into the German army?' 'By enjoying the pursuit of happiness in a free country after we have won the war,' answers both questions."

Completes Sixth Paralta

The final scenes of Bessie Barriscale's sixth Paralta production, "Patriotism," have just been taken at the company's studios in Los Angeles.

The story, while it deals with the war situation in Scotland and with modern conditions, is really not a war story. There are no battle scenes in the entire production, the atmosphere of conflict merely forming the background.

Miss Barriscale appears in the role of "Patricia Haldine," a Scotch girl who gives over her life and home to the care of the soldiers who have returned from the front.

House Saves Space in an Ingenious Way

Projection Booth Drops Into Basement When Road Show Is Attraction, Thus Making Available Extra Seats

By J. Wesley Smith

AS conservation in any and everything is the main idea of the day, it goes to the Dodge Theatre Company of Keokuk, Iowa, operating the Grand Opera House, to be the first ones to conserve space without any inconvenience either to their patrons or to their operators.

The Grand Opera House is used for both the spoken and silent drama and the manager, C. H. Dodge, was puzzled at first where the projection booth would be placed so that there would be no seats lost.

After considerable thought Mr. Dodge hit upon the idea of building the booth as an elevator, and the way he finally worked out the idea is very clever, to say the least.

A hole was cut in the floor of the theatre the size of the booth and a shaft run to the basement similar to an elevator shaft, the skid guards, however, running flush with the floor. The booth was then constructed of sheet steel and angle iron, the roof being much stronger than ordinarily.

On the roof are fastened a few chairs of the last row of seats. When the house is used for a play the booth is dropped into the shaft, the roof coming flush with the floor. When the house is used for pictures the booth is raised almost level with the floor.

As the booth is suspended by wire ropes, heavily counterweighted at the other end, it requires only one man to raise or lower to the position desired.

Mr. Dodge used Power's 6A projectors with motor generator set, drawing thirty amperes with an eighty-foot throw. The wiring is so arranged that nothing has to be disconnected, irrespective of the position of the booth.

I have seen and heard of many ingenious devices for the moving picture theatre, but in my opinion Mr. Dodge's idea is one of the best, as it does away with the raising of the booth, thereby eliminating a great angle of projection and the proportionate distortion of the picture.

120 Prints of Liberty Loan Film Ordered from Fox

One hundred and twenty prints of a smashing Liberty loan film in which William Farnum, the Fox star, plays the principal role, have just been requested by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

For more than a month Farnum, his director, Frank Lloyd, and their company have been utilizing every spare moment at Hollywood in the production of the film, which is said to be a striking argument for national support of the loan in addition to being a highly interesting feature.

Acceptance of the film came to Farnum in the form of a telegram from Frank R. Wilson, Secretary McAdoo's assistant in charge of publicity, in which Wilson expressed appreciation of the star's patriotic effort.

"We shall be very glad to receive the picture," wired Wilson, "and will put it to good use in placing before the people of the United States the necessity of subscribing liberally to the coming issue of Liberty bonds."

In addition to the production of the film, Farnum and Director Lloyd have just concluded a tour in which thousands throughout California were urged to support the loan.

"Give until it hurts," was the message of the star.

Fox Praises "True Blue"

The statement is made by the Fox offices that no production in months which has not dealt with the war has showed more clearly and more appealingly than "True Blue," a forthcoming William Farnum Standard Picture, the spirit of plucky, strong-hearted America. It is said that the story is a convincing one of powerful, courageous Americanism.

"'True Blue' only emphasizes more pointedly," Mr. Fox said, "what an excellent combination we have in Mr. Farnum and his director, Frank Lloyd. The association of these two men, geniuses both, certainly means patron-pleasing and profit-making productions for the exhibitor. Nowhere is the inestimable value of thorough co-operation between star and director better evidenced than in the photoplays upon which this pair collaborate.

"Exhibitors know that the combination that produced 'A Tale of Two Cities,' 'Les Miserables,' 'The Price of Silence,' 'American Methods' and 'The Heart of a Lion' can always be relied upon to make something that is excellent and worth-while. Such a film is their newest effort. It is just exactly what its title says, 'True Blue.'"

Bowers Renews World Contract

John Bowers, who has attained great popularity through his work in World productions, has just been signed by World for two years, with privilege of renewal for a long period. Mr. Bowers will be featured in all productions in which he appears and he will be seen in support of all the leading women stars.

Mr. Bowers has been seen in a number of World Pictures as leading man for Ethel Clayton, June Elvidge and others. One of his forthcoming pictures will be "Journey's End," in which he is leading man for Ethel Clayton, and in which his handsome face and splendid physique will make new admirers for him.

Mr. Bowers is a native of Indiana. Previous to entering pictures he had an interesting stage career with Donald Robertson, Beulah Pointer and others. Upon leaving the stage he appeared on the screen for several companies before becoming leading man at the World studios.

At the present time Mr. Bowers is working in a new World picture which bears the tentative title of "The Cabaret."

Madge Evans, the young World star, has developed vampire tendencies. Madge's devotion to Harley Knoles, her director, has long been no man's secret, but recently while playing the very, very devoted to Mr. Knoles, Madge was snapped up a tree with handsome Irving Cummings. And this week she appears to have Carlyle Blackwell tied to her bow.

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

THE motion picture committee of the Seventh Federal Reserve District, of which Chicago is the headquarters, has its Liberty Loan campaign under full swing now.

The committee is concentrating on a series of ten 50-foot trailers. These trailers were selected with a view to visualizing the fact that the United States is really engaged in a terrible struggle with a barbarous enemy. They show scenes of the devastation wrought by the Huns in Belgium and France, attacks on women and children, and without the use of any pictures that would offend the most sensitive, illustrate that the Liberty Loan is an absolute necessity, as well as the safest thing in the world.

"These trailers will be electric shocks, not sleeping powders," said Joseph Hopp, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois.

The films have been prepared under the supervision of Lucius Wheeler of the Selig Polyscope Company and Andrew Callaghan of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company.

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., through P. A. Parsons of the publicity department, has contributed cuts from news weeklies that have never been shown before. The newspapers of the district are being furnished with material urging the people to see the films and the exhibitors are being furnished with publicity matter which they can have placed in their local papers. Newspaper editors have been made members of the publicity committee, the work of which is being directed by Chairman James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine.

There are 1800 theatres in the seventh district. The trailers will be distributed by the chairmen of the exhibitors' committees of the various states. In Indiana Robert Liebler and Charles Olson of Indianapolis will handle the distribution; in Iowa Mr. Blank of Des Moines; in Michigan, A. Gillingham of Detroit, and in Wisconsin, Leo Landay and Tom Saxe of Milwaukee.

The distribution for Chicago and the adjacent territory will be in charge of Joseph Hopp and Kenneth S. Fitzpatrick, Jr.

The Atlas Educational Film Company is making a two-reel picture of the Illinois Athletic Club, which has more famous athletes competing under its colors than any other club in the country. The pictures show, among other things, wrestling, boxing, Joie Ray, the world's greatest long distance runner; the junior national track team champions, bowling, billiards with William B. Huey, retired world champion, three cushion shot; national championship basket ball team, fencing team, all members holding records; hand ball with both single champion and doubles; William Bachrach, maker of more world's champions than any other coach in the world; the national champion polo team, the national champion relay team—the latter holding all the world's relay records—Buddy Wahlen, Michael McDermott, Harry McGillivary, Harry Hevener, Arthur Hartung; national fancy diving champions, etc.

The picture closes with drills by Company I, First Infantry, I. R. M., all I. A. C. members.

"Cleopatra," the William Fox historical picture, starring Theda Bara, which has been the storm center for a vigorous struggle between the film interests and the Funkhouser regime of censorship, has finally been granted a permit, a "white," or general permit, at that.

This is a complete victory for Fox in a case which attracted wide attention and which involved two slander suits against Major Funkhouser, one for $100,000 brought by Theda Bara, and one for $25,000 brought by the Fox company. These suits are now dropped.

Following a viewing of the picture, the Chicago corporation counsel's office ordered Major Funkhouser to issue a white permit. Charles P. Schwartz is the attorney for the Fox interests in Chicago.

Rose Tapley arrived in Chicago April 11 for a ten-day stay. Her headquarters are the local Paramount exchange. Miss Tapley is making a tour of the country in the interest of Famous Players-Lasky productions, arousing interest in clean pictures. She works through women's clubs, schools and other educational organizations and also aids exhibitors. The Lincoln series, "A Son of Democracy," "The Bluebird" and "Prunella" are especially emphasized in Miss Tapley's campaign.

In addition to this work, Miss Tapley is writing a thousand-word article each week for the Paramount house organ, "Progress-Advance," in which she tells of conditions as she finds them in her travels and sets forth points by which exhibitors generally may be aided.

Miss Tapley is well known to the Chicago film people. For the past two years she has held the post of "official hostess" at the motion picture expositions here and has won many friends. She is an enthusiastic, energetic booster for the better sort of pictures and keenly enjoys her work.

Fred C. Aiken, Chicago branch manager for Select, reports a sales achievement which gives this enterprising film booster a batting average of .833.

This arises from the fact that of the twelve theatres on Madison street west of the river ten have been signed up by his staff for the entire releases of the four stars embraced in the Select Star Series: Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady.

West Madison street is in the heart of an immigrant district where the theatres have been presumed to be in the market for only the cheaper grade of films, since admission prices are very low.

"The Resurrection" a Release of Next Month

The works of Count Leo Tolstoi have attracted wide attention throughout the world to the conditions which have existed in Russia and none has been more widely read than "The Resurrection," which not only exposed the wanton cruelty and brutality experienced by Siberian prisoners, but made a terrific onslaught upon the double standard of morals.

The central figure of this story is Katusha, a beautiful young girl who is betrayed by a prince and is forced by the customs of Russia to become a woman of the streets and is finally sentenced to Siberia.

This subject was recently produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation release next month, starring Pauline Frederick in the role of Katusha.

The scenario was written by Charles K. Whittaker, who also adapted Sardou's "La Tosca" for the screen, in which Miss Frederick had the stellar role. Mr. Whittaker's great familiarity with Russia has enabled him to write an exceptionally good scenario, incorporating peculiar habits and customs, as well as indicating the proper architecture and costuming. He is considerable of a globe trotter and on his last trip to Europe was in London when the war broke out and went to Belgium to assist Hoover in his relief work.

"It is hard for an American to realize how far behind modern times the whole of Russia is," says Mr. Whittaker, "and it is amazing that such a country could have been kept in such utter ignorance. It is hundreds of years behind America."

Booking Heavy on Vitagraph Serial

"The Woman in the Web," Vitagraph's newest serial, which started on its career last week, broke all pre-release booking records in the history of the company's serials, according to announcement from the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. Ten days before release date, April 8, the advance bookings were far in excess of those on "Vengeance—and the Woman," which, in its turn, had exceeded those of "The Fighting Trail."

The mark set by "The Woman in the Web" Mr. Irwin attributes in no small measure to the success which exhibitors have had with Vitagraph's other two recent serials.

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

FIRE of mysterious origin at the Alamo Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., recently threw an audience of 1,400 into panic, destroyed $1,200 worth of films and brought to a sudden end a performance of "Still Waters" by Marguerite Clark. The fire could not be explained by E. G. Bailey, the manager, who was operating the machine in the place of striking employes.

A visit from a strikers' delegation earlier in the evening gave rise to a rumor that the fire was the result of tampering, but Mr. Bailey was inclined to believe the fire was due to an accident. Philip J. Toll, owner of the theatre, however, was threatened by five strike sympathizers if the theatre was opened for business.

"We'll do something to muss up the crowd," he was told. Mr. Toll ordered the performance to start regardless of the threat.

The presence of mind of Mr. Bailey saved the crowd from serious injury. Throwing the burning film out of a rear window the manager rushed to the floor and shouted, "It's all over." A cool-headed man near him cried, "The fire is out," and the rush for the exit was over. Mr. Bailey was burned about the hands and face. No one else, however, was injured.

Managers at Ashtabula, Ohio, have been notified by the city manager to be careful in the class of pictures they are showing. The warning is not the result of laxity on the part of all theatres, it is understood, but due to the alleged sensationalism of a few.

The warning followed the denouncement of sensational pictures at a meeting of the council. Councilman J. J. Hogan said the character of the films at some of the houses was disgraceful.

"I attended a show recently and saw a picture which was unfit for an adult to see, to say nothing of children," he said. "On the way out I asked the manager how the picture ever got past the censors and he replied: 'They must have been asleep.' Another manager told me he had to cater to that kind of pictures to make his business pay."

The council made it plain that the city manager and the police would be expected to suppress questionable films. Action was taken immediately to comply with the council's wishes.

Tennessee Exhibitors Meet

The first annual meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Tennessee convened Tuesday morning, April 9, at the Hermitage Hotel in Nashville. This league was organized on June 17, 1917, at Memphis, with Charles A. McElravy of the Majestic Amusement Company in that city as temporary president and J. F. Duthie of the same company temporary secretary.

One of the first steps taken by the Tennessee league was to pass resolutions pledging the support of the moving picture men of Tennessee to the government in the promotion of the Liberty loans, sale of thrift stamps and war savings certificates through the use of slides and in tendering the various picture houses to the four-minute men.

Chas. A. McElravy was re-elected president for the ensuing term, and J. F. Duthie secretary.

Dues have been fixed at $12 per year for each house, payable quarterly.

The following additional officers and committees were appointed: Tony Sudekum, Nashville, first vice-president; Carson Bradford, Nashville, treasurer; F. H. Dowler, Jr., Chattanooga, second vice-president.

Executive committee: Geo. W. Keyes, Johnson City; T. P. Cleveland, Lebanon; Milton Starr, Nashville.

Legislative committee: Tony Sudekum, Nashville; E. A. Schiller, Memphis; Geo. W. Shorey, Knoxville.

Indiana Company Grows

The Capital Film Company, newly organized under the laws of Indiana, incorporated in the Hoosier state and entirely financed by Hoosier capital to the sum of $2,500,000, already has or is rapidly establishing its branch offices in twenty-five leading cities in the United States, and, in addition, it will have more than thirty sub-offices in this country. Offices also are established in Canada. Ike Schlank is president and general manager of the company.

The product of three studios in the east will be distributed by the company, but the main studio and laboratories will be situated in Indianapolis.

"We believe," says Mr. Schlank, "that the day of the short picture is at hand. We shall produce, therefore, one-reel, two-reel and three-reel subjects. We are organized and equipped to produce five pictures every day in the year—a complete program, a total of thirty-five pictures a week."

The company's executive offices are located in the Merchants Bank building, Indianapolis.

Many Want New Serial

Following the announcement that William Duncan had started work on another Vitagraph serial, advance bookings have been pouring into the company's office in greater volume than ever attended another serial, according to a statement by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. The serial, the title of which has not been announced, is not to be released until July.

The story of this new serial, which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, has been pronounced by Duncan "a regular 'he-man' play."

"It's the best story I've had yet," the director-star said in conversation with the western division manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization; "full of fine action, with all kinds of opportunity for risky work and plenty of riding. I think it will be better than 'The Fighting Trail' or 'Vengeance—and the Woman.'"

Duncan, despite storms and other difficulties, is working rapidly and already has completed three episodes in addition to having made scenes for the fourth and fifth.

New Theatre at Bay City

Theatregoers of Bay City, Mich., were given a treat recently when the New Regent Theatre was opened. The thetare was packed long before the first show and there were many standing outside.

Fred B. Williams, the general manager and the man responsible for the enterprise, went to Bay City about two years ago as manager of the Bijou. He was later shifted to another Butterfield theatre, but he didn't like the idea of leaving Bay City, where he had made many friends, so he conceived the idea of building a new theatre. It didn't take him long to interest the Davidson Building Co., owners of a good site and plans were immediately prepared for the building.

The opening attraction was "The Auction Block," a Goldwyn production. The policy is continuous shows daily from 1 to 10:30 P. M. The program is changed Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Prices are 10, 15 and 25 cents at the matinees and 10, 15, 20, 25 and 50 cents at night.

Petrova Addresses Soldiers

Madame Olga Petrova, accepting an invitation from the Army Young Men's Christian Association, appeared at Camp Alfred Vail, Little Silver, N. J., last Saturday afternoon, and talked informally after the showing of "The Daughter of Destiny."

The soldiers at Little Silver are ardent Petrova fans and H. B. Peace, the camp secretary, had written to the Polish star that by breaking a general rule of never making personal appearances at her pictures she would be doing Uncle Sam a real service.

"Camp Vail," wrote Mr. Peace, "is not a big camp and it is therefore sometimes rather difficult to get real artists to come here. We know, though, that you are fully aware that these men are enlisted in the same great cause as their brothers in larger camps and on the other side. We know that with you it will be rather a matter of service than of numbers and we hope you will find time out of your busy life to come down and speak a few words to the boys."

The star answered and not only accepted his invitation to talk, but volunteered to show a print of "The Daughter of Destiny." Following this she appeared at the camp and was given a great reception afterward. The star said she would remember the day as long as she lived.

The William Fox Baby Grands, Jane and Katherine Lee, in two scenes from "American Buds," their latest production.

The Story of the Picture

Artcraft

Mr. Fix-It.—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Features Douglas Fairbanks in the title role. Play written and directed by Allan Dwan. It is "Mr. Fix-It's" theory that happiness is a habit and that real happiness comes to those who make other people enjoy life. In pursuance of this idea, he enters the home of persons of great wealth in which envy, jealousy and bickerings prevail and smilingly proceeds to "fix" things which, in his judgment, are in need of repair. There are two young women in the party who are engaged to be married to men they do not apparently love and troubles ensue. The genial heart-fixer gets busy along original lines when he learns the stories of the young women, and he almost gets into serious trouble through his methods which shock and amaze all with whom he comes in contact. But "Mr. Fix-It," after many rebuffs, which sometimes jar his pet theory to the breaking point, emerges triumphant, smiling and happy.

Bluebird

The Marriage Lie—(Five Reels)—April 22.—Featuring Carmel Myers. Kenneth Harlan. Harry Carter, William Quinn and Joe Girard are in the cast. Douglas Seward was an engineer, and applied to Terence Craver, a contractor and builder of public works, for a job on one of his big propositions in South America. Craver had one failing, and that was his mania for the pursuit and possession of beautiful women. Among other things, he told Seward that he would not employ any except a married man for this job. "I'll give you till the 14th to decide. Bring your wife in then, and I'll have a talk with her." And with that he dismissed Seward. Now Douglas had been too busy to marry, and the proposition looked pretty hopeless until one night he ran into Eileen Orton. Eileen was even more desperate than Douglas was. The murder of her father, a noted gambler, had left her penniless, and virtually an outcast in the world. She was trained in no occupation, and lost one opportunity after another, either through inexperience or through refusal to be a "good fellow." Douglas made this proposition to her. If she would consent to go to Craver's office and satisfy him that she was his wife, he would maintain an apartment for her and give her half the salary he received while in South America. But this arrangement might have been all right had not Eileen been a very beautiful girl. Craver started his campaign for her immediately and Douglas himself was more than half in love with her before he left. Several months in the swamps determined him to come back and see for himself how his wife for business purposes was conducting herself. He came just in time. The little flat was almost cleaned out before Douglas got the upper hand of his employer, but by this time dissatisfaction in "The Marriage Lie" had become so acute that he rectified it with a real marriage ring without delay.

Fox

The Bride of Fear—(Five Reels)—April 7.—Featuring Jewel Carmen. Directed by S. A. Franklin. Ann Carter, discouraged, tries to commit suicide. She is rescued by Hayden Masters, a notorious crook. Unaware of his identity and feeling the need of a friend, she marries her rescuer. Shortly afterward she realizes her horrible mistake, when, as they are about to start on their honeymoon, the police enter the room and arrest Masters for one of his numerous thefts. The girl is again left alone and obtains a position as secretary to Martin Sterling, a very wealthy man, with an eligible son. The latter, Donald Sterling, falls in love with Ann, but she discourages his attentions.

When she learns that her husband has been killed in an attempt to escape from prison, Ann becomes engaged to Donald. Just as things are progressing favorably, the convict reappears in the night and insists that she help him rob the house. She refuses indignantly. A struggle follows in which her screams are heard. Donald rushes to her aid and in the fight which ensues between Donald and the crook, the former's revolver drops from his pocket. Ann picks it up, and to save her sweetheart from being choked to death, she fires and kills her despicable husband. When the police arrive they recognize the crook, and under the circumstances report that Donald killed the man because he was caught robbing the house. Her fear gone, happiness comes to the girl at last in her new home.

The Blindness of Divorce—(Five Reels)—Fox Standard—April 7.—Cast includes Charles Clary, Rhea Mitchell, Bertha Mann, Bertram Grassby, Fred Church and others. John Langdon neglects his wife and child for his club. Arriving home early one night he discovers his wife in the arms of another man, and without waiting for an explanation, he leaves her and later gets a divorce. Years pass and the wife, broken through the injustice done her, is running a notorious house known as "Claire's." Her daughter, Florence, is grown to womanhood, and is married to a young district attorney, Bruce Livingston. She believes her mother to be dead. A scheming lawyer, wishing to make money, and recognizing Claire as Langdon's ex-wife, tells the secret to Florence. Florence goes to "Claire's" place to have the story confirmed on the very night that her husband decides to have it raided. Finding her there, and receiving no explanation from either mother or daughter, he insists upon a divorce. The mother, desirous of saving her daughter from the sorrow which had been inflicted upon her, takes the stand and tells the court just why her daughter was at her house and the real reason for her own downfall. Of course Bruce and Florence are reunited.

General

Slippery Slim and the Green-eyed Monster—(One Reel)—Essanay—April 13.—Cast contains Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt. Sophie's father seriously objects to her receiving gentlemen callers, so one night she induces him to retire early, then writes a note to Mustang Pete, telling him that it is now safe for him to come over. Slippery Slim is "green-eyed" with jealousy at the partiality shown his rival. Mustang and Sophie are no more than settled when Slim knocks at the door, waking up the "old man." Mustang hides and when father comes down stairs he finds nobody but Slim, so he kicks him out and then goes back to bed. Slim then climbs up to his window and tells him that Mustang is downstairs. Hiran goes downstairs and chases Mustang, thereby leaving the field clear for Slim.

When Macbeth Came to Snakeville—Essanay—(One Reel)—April 20.—Cast contains Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin, Harry Todd and Evelyn Van Pelt. Snakeville is all in a whirl, the world's greatest tragedian is to appear in Macbeth at the "Opry House." The "Tank Town" troupe arrives and stops at Slim's boarding house. Slim discovers his wife, Sophie, paying great attention to the leading man, and that evening at the performance she goes into hysterics at the marvelous acting of her ideal. That night she walks in her sleep, and imagining herself to be Lady Macbeth, gets a butcher knife and enters the room of the "Would-be Macbeth." The actor is frightened nearly to death. Sophie finally awakens, but it is not in her power to persuade the actor to remain in town another day, so he leaves, much to the satisfaction of Slim.

Goldwyn

The Danger Game—(Five Reels)—April 7.—Featuring Madge Kennedy. Tom Moore, Paul Doucet, Ned Burton, Mabel Ballin and Kate Blancke are in the cast. Directed by Harry Pollard. Madge Kennedy plays the role of a young girl who has been smitten with a fever for writing. Criticism only serves to fan her desire to the boiling point. When the plot of her novel is described as "impossible and untrue to life," to spite the reviewer she sets out to prove that any nice young girl can commit a burglary if she cares to. Her escapades are chiefly directed toward one Jimmie Gilpin, whose remarks upon her literary talent are slighting, to say the least. Under an assumed name, he rescues her from prison, and realizing that the only way to cure a feminine writer is to marry her, he thus terminates her budding career.

The Face in the Dark—(Six Reels)—April 21.—Featuring Mae Marsh. Story by Irvine S. Cobb. Directed by Hobart Henley. Jane Ridgeway (Miss Marsh) is the daughter of a famous secret service man, now a bank examiner. For a year a series of baffling robberies have been going on. The method is always the same. The outer doors of a bank safe are opened without apparent difficulty and a small portion of the contents taken. In reality, the entire assets have been taken, counterfeit notes being substituted. In this way the gang uses the banks of the country as a distributing channel for quantities of bogus money. Naturally the cleverest of secret service men are on the job. Ridgeway works in collusion with the crooks. As bank examiner he gives information which enables them to rob banks where currency is held in large amounts. There is a man higher up. He is the face in the dark who supplies the counterfeit money. His identity Ridgeway is trying to determine. Ridgeway fears Jane, with her almost occult powers, will suspect his connection with these transactions. It is not until the situation has a direct bearing on the life and happiness of Jane and the man she loves that the girl becomes aroused. Her sweetheart is paying teller in a country bank and is accused of a robbery committed by her father and his pals. Then Jane's faculties are set to work to discover the real criminal, for she is absolutely certain that the man she loves could never do wrong. Step by step she follows a clue accidentally discovered in a thread clinging to the demolished lock of the bank safe, and all at once she makes a discovery that drives her almost mad. Her father is the thief. There is nothing for her to do but surrender him to the authorities. But at this moment Ridgeway himself has made a discovery. He unmasks the face in the dark and gives the signal to a cordon of waiting detectives. The master criminal is apprehended by Ridgeway of the secret service and Jane and her sweetheart are united.

Metro

With Neatness and Dispatch—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Aunt Letitia does not permit Geraldine and Mary Ames, her nieces, to receive the attentions of men, but Mary nevertheless finds a way to see her lover, John Pierce. A note from John is intercepted by Aunt Letitia, and as punishment Mary is locked in her room. Daly, man of all work, is caught making love to Fanny, a servant and is discharged. Geraldine is sent to the city to engage another servant, and Mary is released and is enabled to elope with her sweetheart. A couple of burglars who are ransacking the safe in Aunt Letitia's home are captured as a result of the clever work of Paul Donaldson, nephew of Police Commissioner Roger Burgess, an old friend of Geraldine's father, whom the girl was led to believe was a reformed crook, and who at her request came to her home and aided in the release of Mary. But during the proceedings Geraldine discovered the real identity of Paul, and fell in love with him. A week or so later, Aunt Letitia receives a letter from Geraldine, who had eloped with Paul.

Mutual Pictures

Mary's Frame-up—(One Reel)—Strand—April 23.—Starring Billie Rhodes. Mary Brown's mother and Jack Gordon's father had met through a flirtation, but the young folks didn't know it. When Jack took Mary home, dad, who was calling on the widow, saw them through the window and asked Mrs. Brown to forbid Jack's calling on Mary until they could frame up something. Mrs. Brown told Jack to stop flirting with Mary. Next day Jack, blacked up as a darky, called on Mrs. Brown and asked for work. Mrs. Brown wasn't fooled a bit, but engaged him to accompany them to the beach and make himself useful. The colored maid and Percy, who is in love with Mary, completed the party. The "dinge" flirted with Jack while he pushed the wheel chair in which Percy is making love to Mary. Jack was ready to take somebody's life-blood, but dared not give himself away as papa Gordon had joined the party. Mary had an idea. While in the ocean she screamed for help. Percy also yelled for help. Jack rescued Mary and emerged with her in his arms, most of his make-up being left in the briny. He was the hero of the hour.

Paramount

The House of Silence—(Five Reels)—April 8.—Features Wallace Reid. Directed by Donald Crisp. The story deals with the adventures of a wealthy amateur Sherlock Holmes, in his self-imposed task of tracing the perpetrator of what is believed to be a murder, in a mysterious dwelling. It is true, a man was killed, and a respected judge at that, but the homicide was committed by a young woman with her hat-pin in defense of her honor. The identity of the woman in question is established by means of the hat-pin and purse found near the body. The dramatic thrills which the development of the story create, the heart interest, the comedy are happily combined, and will interest all alike. The picture is based upon the novel of Elwyn Barron and the scenario was written by Margaret Turnbull, Donald Crisp directed the production.

Rich Man, Poor Man—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Features Margarite Clark. Directed by J. Searle Dawley from the novel by Maxmilian Foster. Miss Clark is seen as an orphan girl in a boarding house who unwittingly is accepted as the grandchild of a Wall Street financier through the forgery of a man who desires to make her happy. She brings sunshine into the life of the crabbed old millionaire who, even when he discovers the imposture practiced upon him refuses to allow her to leave his fireside. It chances that Betty loves a young man who is, in fact, the grandson of the capitalist, so that all ends happily after all. Miss Clark is supported by an excellent company, chief among which is Frederick Warde, former tragedian, who essays the role of the cold, selfish millionaire and who learns at length that the rich man who does not love and who is unloved, is the poorest man on earth.

Unclaimed Goods—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Features Vivian Martin. Directed by Rollin Sturgeon. In the cast are Harrison Ford, Casson Ferguson, George McDaniel, Dick La Reno, George Kunkel and Carmen Phillips. This is a Western comedy-drama. Betsy Burke, daughter of a sheriff, is sent to a mining town by express, but on her arrival no one claims her. The reasons for this is obvious when it is known that the town is in the hands of a band of thugs and all good citizens thereof locked up while the thieves loot the community. The leader of the band seeks to buy Betsy at auction, but she is saved by the timely intervention of a man she had befriended and who sacrifices his life in a gun battle in her behalf. Betsy finds happiness in the love of the express agent in whose care she had been placed by her father and whose devotion to her wins her love.

Paramount—Mack Sennett Comedy

Saucy Madeline—(Two Reels)—April 21.—Featuring Ben Turpin, Charlie Lynn and Polly Moran. The scenes transpire in a bowling alley in which Turpin is an all round worker, while Polly Moran is the wife of the jealous proprietor. Turpin hypnotizes the bowling balls with amazing results, while "Saucy Madeline" appears in tights and abbreviated skirts at a theatrical benefit with sensational effect. The spectacle of Turpin, who is an entire orchestra, a call boy and bowler, is highly diverting.

Pathe

Twenty-one—(Five Reels)—April 7.—Featuring Bryant Washburn. Story by George Randolph Chester, directed by William Worthington. When Jimmy Mufferton becomes twenty-one and heir to the Mufferton millions he rebels at being treated like a mollycoddle by the family and decides to see life for himself. Seeing a young prize-fighter with a strong resemblance to himself he bribes him to exchange places with him for forty-eight hours. He takes up his abode in the pugilist's home and the pugilist resides at the Mufferton mansion and excites everyone horribly by his rough manners. The family thinks that it is Jimmy gone crazy. Jimmy, in the meanwhile, has found that the pugilist is known as "Battling Dave," and has a big fight on for the next night. When the effect of riches goes to Dave's head, and he refuses to leave them for the fight, Jimmy steps into the ring and saves the day. Realizing his own possibilities and that, after all, he is not a mollycoddle, he finds nerve to ask for the hand of Dixie Charlton, the girl next door whom he has always loved, and to also assert his rights in his own household.

The Busy Inn—(Five Reels)—Russian Art—April 14.—Nadya Lesienko, N. I. Panoff, Madame Orlova and N. A. Backsheef have the leading roles. Bessnye, an inn-keeper, turns highwayman when he becomes dissatisfied with the profits of his gambling establishment. Eugenia, his wife, who does her share in extorting money from those who visit the Inn, persuades her husband to force Anna, his sister, who has been reluctant up to now, to take part in the scheme. As a result of her participation Anna falls in love with Prince Myloff, one of the frequenters of the Inn, and with whom Eugenia is also fascinated, and in revenge, Eugenia poisons the mind of the prince against Anna. Disheartened, Anna drinks what she believes is poison, and, feeling that she is dying, summons the prince, who has called at the Inn, and assures him that she really loves him. Convinced, the prince has Anna taken to his home for treatment, and declares that their betrothal will be announced at once. But Bessyne relieves the tension by revealing that what Anna drank was only a sleeping potion.

Triangle

Boss of the Lazy Y—(Five Reels)—April 7.—Featuring Roy Stewart. The gradual reformation of a rough cowboy is told in this picture. Young Marston has had a bitter quarrel with his father, who dies leaving his estate in the charge of a girl for his wayward son. Marston is to get the property on condition that his actions meet with the approval of the feminine guardian. Marston receives this information in sullen silence, and a determination to live his life just exactly as he chooses. However, under the girl's gentle influence, his stubborn spirit unbends and he earns his fortune and a wife as well.

Who Killed Walton?—(Five Reels)—April 14.—Players are Edwin Brady, Mary Mersch, J. Barney Sherry, Dora Hodgers and Frank Bonn. Farnum Walton, an artist, refuses to illustrate a novel written by Marian Emlen. He sees in her an acceptable prey, and takes her to a notorious restaurant at the back of which is his studio. When Walton attempts to embrace her she rushes away only to be stopped at the door of the restaurant to answer a 'phone message from Austin Booth, a reformer friend, who rebukes her so violently that, unnerved, she faints. Meanwhile, Elsa Armytage, former sweetheart of Walton, quarrels with him, and as a result he drops dead of heart failure. Elsa and a waiter carry Marian into the artist's studio and lay her beside the body of Walton. When she regains consciousness she thinks she killed the artist, but George Hamilton, a politician friend, unravels the mystery by obtaining a confession from Elsa.

The Law of the Great Northwest—(Five Reels)—April 14.—Directed by Raymond Wells. Cast includes Margery Wilson, William V. Mong, and others. Hal Sinclair, factor of the Northern Trading Company, whose word is law with the trappers at the little settlement at Fort Rocher in the Canadian Northwest, opens war on the independent fur traders who have established a business there. Charles Morin, a member of a rich French Canadian family, also enters the fur trading game, and later he and Sinclair are rivals for the hand of Marie, daughter of Petain Monest, a banker who has come to the district after having lost his fortune. At first Marie is undecided as to the man she really loves, but arrives at a decision quickly when she hears Sinclair plotting with his henchman, Brennen, to do away with Morin. She slays Brennen as he is about to fire the fatal shot, and is committed to the custody of Officer Jamieson of the Mounted Police, who, learning the facts, says that her act was justified. Marie goes to her sweetheart.

The Scarlet Drop—(Five Reels)—April 22.—Features Harry Carey. Molly Malone, Vesta Pegg, Betty Schade and M. K. Wilson are in the cast. "Kaintuck" Cass had so many reasons to hate the Calverts that when he got a Calvert in his power his whole heart ached to do justice to his vow to get even. The Calverts were the cream of the aristocracy in the little Kentucky town; the Casses were poor white trash, not fit to associate with gentlemen even in enlisting to fight the Southern Rebellion. That was several years ago. "Kaintuck" was now a Western highwayman, and the Calverts and Graham Lyons were in the mining business. Molly was on the way to visit them when she was taken from the stagecoach by the outlaw. A Calvert is in his power at last. But here a strange thing happened. The Calvert heiress and the Cass renegade became deeply interested in each other. Molly might have betrayed her captor, but instead she warned him. It was the aristocrat, Lyons, who was the traitor. Believing that Molly had a taint of negro blood in her veins he took advantage of her brother's desperate financial condition to demand Molly—but not as a wife. Unable to stay away from the girl who filled his whole life "Kaintuck" came just in time to "defend the honor of a Calvert" and to wreak vengeance on the man who had cast so many insults upon him.

The Trap—(Five Reels)—April 15.—Featuring Alice Brady. Cranford Kent, Robert Cummings, Frank Mayo and Curtis Cooksey are in the cast. Director George Archainbaud directed the play from a story by Robert F. Hill. Doris Shaw lives in a little fishing village with her fanatically religious father. Her mother had run away with another man. Doris is wooed by Nat Fletcher, whom she hates, and in trying to escape him one day she meets Stuart Kendall, a New York artist, who has come to the seashore for his health. The two become interested in each other and the villagers decide that Doris is following her mother's footsteps and she is expelled from the town. An outcast, Doris works her way to New York, where she obtains employment in a Greenwich Village cafe. Stuart Kendall happens in one day and decides that Doris is just the model he has been seeking for his new poster. She agrees to pose, and when the poster is finisher Kendall realizes his susceptibility to Doris's charm. He furnishes a beautiful apartment for her and showers her with costly clothes and gifts. All of a sudden out of the West comes Jack Masterson, a young ranchman, who has seen Doris's poster hanging in a country store, advertising Regal Baking Powder. He comes East to find the model and ask her to marry him. Doris at first regards him as a joke, but he seems so ingenuous that she encourages his visits. Kendall disapproves of the friendship, and after several quarrels with Doris she decides to marry Masterson. Kendall then set the trap. He plans a wedding celebration. On the eve of her wedding Doris accompanies Masterson to the theatre and on their return bids him good-night at the door. On entering the house she beholds the party which Kendall has prepared and regrets not having asked Masterson to remain. Meanwhile Kendall has slipped out and telephoned Masterson to come at once—that Doris is very ill. When he arrives and discovers the wild orgy, Masterson denounces Doris and turns to go, but overhears Doris accusing Kendall of having set the trap.

Doris leaves the following morning for Boston, and just as the train is leaving Masterson jumps aboard. The picture ends with every evidence of approaching happy days.

Vitagraph

The Girl from Beyond—(Five Reels)—Blue Ribbon—April 15.—Featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. The sister of Geoffrey Hampden, a millionaire oil man, is betrayed by Philip Armond and commits suicide. Hampden meets Armond, and a fight occurs. When the police interfere, Hampden keeps his mouth shut for his sister's sake, and serves a prison term. Upon his release years later he goes West under the name of George Hammond, and, with Dick Stewart, again enters the oil fields. He rescues Cynthia, his partner's sister, from some cowboy toughs, and brings her to Stewart's cabin, as Stewart, who has been mortally wounded, comes staggering in. Dying, Stewart urges Hammond to look after Cynthia, and Hammond marries her, but only to act as her protector. Months later in New York, where Cynthia has gone, she meets Philip, who falls in love with her and who subsequently leaves with her for the West to demand her freedom from Hammond. When Armond sees Hammond and recognizes in him Hampden, he dies of heart failure, and Hammond and Cynthia come to an understanding.

Launch Drive on "Over There"

"Over There," Select's patriotic photodrama in which the work of the Red Cross is featured, is riding on a steadily increasing wave of popularity. This fact is noteworthy in connection with the impending second war fund drive of the Red Cross, which is to be held the week of May 20. Select salesmen are making a special drive on the picture to tie it up with the campaign.

Many theatre owners and managers are finding it to their advantage to present this photoplay. Gus Holub, manager of the Pastime at Ravenna, Nebraska, wrote an unsolicited testimonial to his Select exchange manager, which can be best summed up in his own closing sentence:

"As a whole, it cannot be beaten."

The Pastime worked on a percentage basis with the Ravenna Red Cross.

Completes "The Triple Cross"

Thomas H. Ince's popular star, Dorothy Dalton, has just put the finishing touches to a new screen melodrama called "The Triple Cross," and at once commenced another photoplay that has to do with the career of a jealous young southern woman.

"The Triple Cross" is by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. I. Geisy and offers to Miss Dalton and her supporting company ample opportunities for some of the most effective screen surprises and sensations of recent productions.

The story is frank melodrama, concerning the machinations of a German secret agent in this country and his efforts to obtain the plans of a new rifle that is expected to prove a noteworthy addition to the ordnance equipment of Uncle Sam.

Miss Dalton's role is that of a girl in the employ of the French intelligence department. During the enactment of the story she is called upon to prove her cleverness and daring in several ways.

Player Is Injured Through Petrova's Realism

The realism Madame Petrova is putting into the filming of Gertrude Atherton's novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," resulted in a rather serious injury to a member of her cast—Mrs. Paul Dasher, who has adopted the stage name of Norma Feifert.

In one of the tense moments the Polish artiste, in the role of "Patience," is supposed to strangle her stepmother, the part played by Mrs. Dasher. True to the part, Madame Petrova grasped the latter tightly about the neck and vigorously struggling back and forth threw Mrs. Dasher against the iron of one of the floor lights, thereby knocking her unconscious, as well as wounding her head severely.

A doctor was called to the studio and it was found necessary to take three stitches back of the left ear. Fortunately the wound was under the hair so that the scar will not show. Mrs. Dasher won the greatest approbation from Madame and all the members of the cast as well as Ralph Ince, the director, by the plucky spirit in which she laughed off the accident and insisted upon finishing the scene after the stitches had been taken.

Madame Petrova, who has killed many men in her time—in pictures—without the slightest qualm, was greatly distressed at having been the cause of Mrs. Dasher's injury, and has done everything in her power to make Mrs. Dasher comfortable.

"Honor's Cross" Available

"Honor's Cross" is announced as the second Selexart-Goldwyn feature now available to exhibitors.

Goldwyn takes pleasure in submitting this play, confident that the powerful story, the rich production and the star—Rhea Mitchell—will meet with enthusiastic approval everywhere.

"Honor's Cross" is all story. There is not a superfluous flash in the entire drama. It is a gripping tale of a girl's fight against the powers that prey, in this case being the "Hon." Thomas Dolan, a politician.

May Increase Admission

It is possible that Cincinnati, about the only city of its size which still retains the admission charge of 10 cents, may raise the price to 15.

With the prospect of an increase in wages to the operators and possibly to the musicians, and the steadily mounting expense of general overhead, many exhibitors think that a raise is inevitable.

The Gifts' Theatre, of which McMahan & Jackson are the managers, and the Walnut Theatre are the only two picture houses in the city which charge 15 cents.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

"OVER THE TOP"

The Book

—has sold at the rate of 250 copies per hour for every business hour since publication.

—has run serially, or is now running, in more than 1500 of the country's leading newspapers.

—has been advertised in the four corners of the continent by G. P. Putnam's Sons, the publishers.

—is the most widely read and talked of book in all America, the most successful book of its kind in all history.

Empey

—has been heard by hundreds of thousands of eager admirers who have packed the largest auditoriums of the country time and again.

—has sold more than $1,000,000 worth of bonds of the Second Liberty Loan, and is out to beat this record on the present Liberty Loan.

—has raised over $100,000 for Smoke Funds, Red Cross Benefits and similar patriotic causes.

—has published his special articles in many hundreds of papers throughout the land.

—has received more newspaper and word-of-mouth publicity than any other American, with the possible exception of President Wilson.

The Picture

—is still packing the Lyric Theatre, New York, twice daily with enthusiastic, cheering thousands.

—tells the world-famous story of "Over the Top" as it deserves to be told.

—was directed by Wilfrid North and personally supervised during all phases of its production by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

—has received an avalanche of praise from all trade paper and newspaper critics.

—has been nationally advertised by a chain of billboards that girdle the continent.

—is BOOKING NOW at all VITAGRAPH EXCHANGES.

The record breaking success of the book, the unprecedented nation-wide popularity of Empey and the overwhelming appeal of the picture make "Over the Top" the biggest box office feature in the history of motion pictures!

N. A. M. P. I. Takes Up Chicago Fight

MAY ADOPT LABOR PROGRAM FOR ENTIRE COUNTRY

THE difficulties between the Chicago exhibitors and exchangemen and the operators' union have ceased to be of mere local interest and have become a national affair of the film world through a step taken by the theatre interests this week in sending a representative committee to confer with leaders of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in New York City.

The fight in Chicago, described in previous issues of MOTOGRAPHY, was going in favor of the theatre men. But the affair had assumed such proportions that a decision was made to attempt to settle the matter not only for Chicago but for the entire industry.

Favor Thorough Investigation

The leaders of the Allied Amusement Association, formed to combat the alleged excessive demands of the operators' union, believed that the relations between theatre men and operators might profitably be investigated by the National Association and an agreement reached so that a recurrence of the trouble here or in other cities would be unlikely.

Led by Attorney Lewis F. Jacobson, the Allied Amusement Association has fought its battle gallantly. It asks only fair play. It has no desire to put the operators' unions out of the way or to be unfair to the men.

Much Bitterness Aroused

But conditions have come about in which there is much misunderstanding and bitter feeling and it is felt that the situation has reached a critical point requiring prompt and decisive action. Therefore the committee was sent to New York.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, upon being informed of the proposed action of the Allied Amusement Association sent out the following announcement:

Call for Session

"To the Producing and Distributing Companies:

"The situation in Chicago involving the labor organizations has reached a critical point requiring prompt and decisive action.

"A committee from Chicago will arrive in New York, Tuesday, April 23, and has requested a meeting of the executive heads of all producing and distributing companies so as to report upon the local conditions and for the purpose of considering plans for securing relief from the situation which is jeopardizing the film business in that city.

Call Authorized by Brady

"You are urgently requested to attend a meeting to be held at the offices of the National Association, 806 Times Building, on Tuesday, April 23, at 3 P. M., the call for which has been authorized by President William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, chairman, producers' branch division, and Walter W. Irwin, chairman, distributors' division.

"FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT,
"Executive Secretary."

Chicagoans are awaiting with interest the outcome of this conference, which will doubtless be of importance in determining the relations between exhibitors and operators throughout the entire United States for a long time to come.

"Caillaux Case" Proves an Innovation

The temporary withholding from release of William Fox's historical film-drama, "The Caillaux Case," to await publication of recent disclosures made by Bolo Pasha to the French government, appears to be the most striking instance in screen history of a picture play following hard on the heels of current events.

The picture, apparently, was completed and ready for the public. All the leading characters had been disposed of, not only in the play but in real life. Bolo Pasha had been condemned to death for treason. Joseph Caillaux, once premier of France, had been imprisoned on a similar charge. Mme. Caillaux had been disgraced in the eyes of her countrymen. It seemed that the whole story had been told. Then came Bolo's sudden revelations, which now promise to add new chapters, involve other prominent figures, and make the picture more far-reaching than was at first expected.

Commenting on the situation last week, Mr. Fox declared:

"We have determined to give the story complete, not only as a bigger and better picture, but because we want it to be a patriotic warning to any one who would put other interests before love of country

"It matters not whom Bolo may involve, either in France, England or America; we shall not hesitate to film this story to the end. 'The Caillaux Case' on the screen will be the Caillaux case in reality—the most notorious international intrigue of modern times."

House Expected to Pass 15-Cent Bill

ACTION BY COMMITTEE ON COINAGE IS FIRST STEP

THE idea for a fifteen-cent coin has, within a year of its conception, attained the dignity of congressional recognition. It went into the hopper of the national house the other day in the shape of a bill introduced by Representative O'Shaughnessy of Rhode Island authorizing the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece.

The fifteen-cent coin was proposed by Terry Ramsaye, who saw, with the general adoption of the fifteen-cent admission price, a necessity for a coin to replace the inconvenient nickel and dime. The idea was put up to John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who said: "Push it through."

Meets with Immediate Favor

Immediately the idea met with favor among exhibitors and gradually its merit was realized in other lines of business. It was presented to the director of the mint not long ago by a committee of exhibitors.

A general sentiment in its favor has been developed in many sections of the country and it is more than likely that the O'Shaughnessy bill will meet with early action in committee and favorable action on the floor of the house.

Need Grows with Time

Since its proposal the need of a fifteen-cent coin has grown more general. War taxes and rising prices have forced many ten-cent products to fifteen cents. Tobacco manufacturers are now generally distributing cigarettes in fifteen-cent packages. Scores of articles handled in drug stores and department stores which formerly sold at ten cents or two for a quarter are now fifteen cents straight.

An investigation carried on by Mr. Ramsaye's department within the last few weeks revealed the fact that there are practically as many fifteen-cent sales in retail trade today as dime sales. Congress' early recognition of the fifteen-cent coin idea is evidence of the widespread adoption of fifteen cents as a standard of barter in American business.

Endorsed by Big Business

The idea of a fifteen-cent coin bears the endorsement of such men as John G. Shedd, president of Marshall Field & Company, Chicago; Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company; and S. A. Perkins, head of the vast Perkins interests in the northwest. Mr. Perkins personally urged the idea upon the members of congress in his section of the country.

"Fifteen cents has become a standard in trade," said Mr. Ramsaye when he learned of congressional action on his idea. "It will surprise you to see, if you notice, how many times a day you make a fifteen-cent purchase.

Would Be Convenient for All

"The fifteen-cent piece would be a convenient coin for everybody. It would save time and annoyance beyond computation not only at the theatre, but in all sorts of retail shops."

When the idea of the coin was first suggested Mr. Ramsaye prepared a design in which was embodied the head of Helen Holmes, popular star in hair-raising picture serials. The design caused much comment and helped materially in drawing attention to the proposal. The design appears herewith.

Petrova Plans Patriotic Speaking Tour

Polish Star May Appear in All Leading Photoplay Houses Soon in Behalf of War Savings Stamps

HERBERT LUBIN, personal representative of Madame Olga Petrova and a representative of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., together with Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company, returned to New York last week following a flying trip, which embraced the principal points of the United States.

Messrs. Lubin & Ennis paid a visit to each office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which organization is distributing the special star productions featuring Madame Petrova. Arrangements were completed with the exchanges whereby an entirely new scheme of exploitation is to be worked out commencing with the fourth special feature, "Patience Sparhawk." It is planned to apply a considerable amount of intensive publicity covering each Petrova picture from now on in the various localities.

Tentative plans were also made with the representatives of the First National Exhibitors and leading newspapers looking toward a personal tour by Madame Petrova in the near future. The star may appear in all of the leading photoplay houses of the country for the purpose of aiding the drive for War Saving Stamps.

Messrs. Lubin and Ennis found that all of the franchise holders of the First National Exhibitors were enthusiastic regarding the personal appearance of Madame Petrova and the utmost co-operation will be forthcoming.

Thus far but three of the new special productions have been released from coast to coast and it is taken as a mark of distinct success that "Daughter of Destiny," the initial release, has more than lived up to the expectations of the Petrova Picture Company and the various franchise holders of the circuit.

"The Light Within," Madame Petrova's second production, has also met with approval. Thus far the box-office results on both pictures have more than justified the expectations of all concerned.

It is believed that the arrangements consummated by Madame Petrova's representatives will result in bringing the producer and exhibitor more closely together, as special pains were taken to ascertain the type of picture most in demand as well as the exact wants of the exhibitor relative to the proper exploitation materials.

Hart Speaks for Loan

William S. Hart, whose subscription of $105,000 for the third Liberty Loan is the largest thus far received from any representative of the motion picture industry, topping that of Mary Pickford by $5,000, and more than doubling Charlie Chaplin's $50,000, at the request of Secretary McAdoo began a tour of the principal cities of the Pacific Coast on behalf of the Loan on April 12, appearing first at San Diego, later he spoke in Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Ogden, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Oakland and San Francisco.

Get a Third More People In Your House

F. B. WARREN SAYS LOCAL ADVERTISING WILL DO IT

"SOME day the rank and file of exhibitors will learn that inefficient local newspaper exploitation is the weakest spot in the amusement mechanism and by correcting this will enlarge their gross patronage anywhere from fifteen to thirty per cent."

F. B. Warren, vice-president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is speaking, following his return to New York from a five weeks' tour of the west. He makes the statement after a thorough canvass of Seattle and Los Angeles, which he considers are first and second respectively, from the standpoint of S. R. O. publicity.

Found West Flourishing

Mr. Warren found the west flourishing. Pointing out that Seattle was gaining 10,000 a month in population, Portland, 6,000 to 8,000; San Francisco, 8,000 to 12,000 and San Pedro, 6,000, he declared exhibitors were filling their houses at every show despite advanced prices.

"I found of course, that exhibitors from Omaha westward had escaped the rigors of our eastern fuel situation during the early months of the present year," said Mr. Warren. "They had escaped our severe winter weather and the ice and snow. They did not suffer as the east did, and now that spring has opened up, business is at flood tide.

"In Los Angeles, J. A. Quinn, Grauman's, Mr. Kehrlein's Kinema, Tally's Broadway, the two Clune houses and Miller's two theatres are all doing record business and already there is in contemplation by outside interests another big first run house as pretentious and splendid as the Grauman.

"Miller is building another theatre that will be ready in the summer months and J. A. Quinn has taken under long time lease the theatre adjoining his successful Rialto, where he will open soon.

"Los Angeles exhibitors have risen to the realization of the growing importance of music in the presentation of pictures and much of the drawing power of their houses is attributable to their excellent orchestras.

Says Advertising Fills Houses

"It is my belief that the tremendous and well-conceived advertising employed by Los Angeles exhibitors is the vital element that keeps the population of that city so well keyed up to attendance. The newspaper exploitation is tremendous and the major portion of it is conceived and prepared by a special local organization, the System Advertising Company, which shows great originality and sales power in its retailing of pictures to the public. There are at least eight large users of newspaper advertising space.

"Personally, I should rate Seattle exhibitor advertising as being the most effective sales copy in the United States. It has an atmosphere and value all its own and it fits its community like a glove. Los Angeles I should rate as second in advertising efficiency, with Cleveland third and Toledo fourth.

"Exhibitor advertising in most of the larger cities of the east lacks distinction, individuality and selling power, and I believe that an improvement in Eastern exhibitor advertising would increase patronage twenty per cent, at least.

"In San Francisco, Turner & Dahnken's Tivoli is enjoying its usual tremendous patronage and Eugene Roth's California, a wonderful new house, has been tremendously successful from its opening day, without in any way lessening the popularity of his long established Portola, next door to the new million-dollar house. Messrs. Sheehan and Lourie are doing excellently with their Rialto. Mr. Sheehan's knack of excellent promotion and advertising has given him a distinctive place.

Shipbuilding Cause of Boom

"Like the other coast cities I have mentioned, San Francisco's recent and future gains in population are due to the heavy shipbuilding program of the coast yards in an effort to meet the government's demand for tonnage. Seattle is booming. Portland, Oakland and San Pedro, Los Angeles harbor are in active shipbuilding competition. There is a surplus of work over human labor and wages are high. These payrolls make themselves at once felt in the mercantile and amusements channels.

"Near Spokane and Los Angeles are large military camps where there are thousands of soldiers and these numbers will be increased by the successive drafts. These camps are contributing a heavy military patronage to the houses in the adjacent large cities and in addition exhibitors have built theatres beside these camps with thousands of patrons within sound of their voices and are playing 'first run' pictures.

Peggy Hyland, star in William Fox productions.

Boom in Wyoming, too

"The sudden boom in the Wyoming oil fields has brought a great influx of population to two score of towns in Montana and Wyoming and exhibitors in both states are enjoying heavy patronage. Our eastern conception of Idaho and Wyoming is that they are snow-bound states, but the fact is that Cheyenne, Laramie and all that territory enjoyed virtually a snowless winter.

"In Denver, Samuel L. Baxter of the Isis, a pioneer Colorado exhibitor, has had a remarkable winter for patronage and his spring business is now at flood tide. Mr. Baxter is one of the outstanding figures of his region, an excellent showman who never deserts his house from its morning opening until its midnight closing. He watches his audiences more closely than any exhibitor I have ever seen and in this lies the secret of his success.

Prosperity in Denver

"Mr. Ellison of the Rialto and Princess theatres feels that patronage was never better assured in Denver than at the present time and Mr. Talbot of the America, the other big new house of the town, says his patronage is at its high water mark.

"It will be good news to his many friends among both exhibitors and producers in the east that Jim Clemmer, owner of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, has come back on the high tide of success. His musical program, which is inseparably linked with his picture show-

Fields of Honor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A fair play to poor business."—T. L. Little, Majestic Theatre, Camden, S. D.

Jewel

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—"The most timely war picture of today. This shows just what the American people have in mind for the kaiser. It is positively the greatest picture pertaining to the war I have run so far. I believe it will go further toward waking up dormant America than any picture we have had yet. Carl Laemmle certainly made a strike in giving Rupert Julian this role. He is perfect in every detail. The play certainly arouses patriotism for it shows the Beast of Berlin as he is and it puts before the people the big question, 'What are you going to do to help your country?' During the two weeks this ran at the Rose theatre, we heard many remarks from young men saying that they intended to enlist that very day. The government ought to urge every citizen to see this play. Thanks are certainly due to Carl Laemmle and Rupert Julian. From the boxoffice angle, this play gave the Rose the second best week of business in its history."—Harry Miller, Rose Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—"Oh, boy, what a picture! We are still counting the receipts. Smashed every record."—P. L. Knight, Rivoli Theatre, Saugus, Mass.

Mutual

A Game of Wits, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—"This is a good picture, the best we have seen this star in, but we could not get any posters or other advertising matter from our exchange and consequently had a light attendance."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Beauty and the Rogue, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Played this picture for a Red Cross benefit. Crowds were so large that I was forced to open both of my theatres and played the same picture in both houses at the same time. Never did I show a picture that gave more universal satisfaction to my patrons."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theatre, Harvard, Ill.

Annie for Spite, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A good picture. Mary draws well."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

New York Luck, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"In this, Russell seems to be copying Fairbanks and almost but not quite succeeds. Story fair. Picture gets by."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Billie Rhodes Comedies, with Billie Rhodes five reels."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Miss Trixie of the Follies, with Billie Rhodes (Strand-Mutual)—"Great."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Whose Wife, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—"Picture O. K. Star doesn't draw."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Shortie Hamilton Series (Mutual)—"Shorty is getting to be liked better."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Charlie Chaplin Series (Mutual)—"These do not draw here."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Frame-up, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Full of action. Went over big. Business good."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Paralta

A Man's Man, with J. Warren Kerrigan (Paralta)—"We never played a much better picture, and the price is right. Good for more than one day."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Madame Who? with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—"My patrons like Bessie and we played to a big house."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theatre, Harvard, Ill.

The Turn of a Card, with J. Warren Kerrigan (Paralta)—"Seven reels, a bit too long. A good picture and it pleased the audience. Contains a few laughs. Star seems popular."—Charles H. Ryan, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Humdrum Brown, with Henry B. Walthall (Paralta)—"Good."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Paramount

The Family Skeleton, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"I did not see this myself but from reports it was not as good as some of his former pictures. Good business."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Meatless Days and Sleepless Nights, with Victor Moore (Paramount)—"About like all the rest of his comedies. The sub-titles help it out quite a bit. It is a fair comedy."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Fair Barbarian, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Another knockout. Our music had all the effects and actually kept them laughing throughout the five reels."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

The Judgment House (Blackton-Paramount)—"A good picture but it failed to draw business."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Mrs. Dane's Defense, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"An average picture but this star fails to draw any more."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

The Ghost House, with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff (Paramount)—"While not quite up to the stars' standard, this held pretty well."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

The Thing We Love, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"Only fair. Did not draw. Just an average picture."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

One More American, with George Beban (Paramount)—"Very good. The best this star has done excepting The Alien. Beban does not draw, however, and most of our patrons do not like his work. I don't know why. Personally I think him a great character actor and I enjoy his films."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Taming Target Center, with Polly Moran (Sennett-Paramount)—"A western burlesque comedy that went over O. K. Not quite as many laughs as the usual Sennett but there are a few thrills. Turpin is rising fast as a comedian. His work is natural."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Sunshine Nan, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—"This was not liked by all. Ann appears as a tomboy. She does no dancing, which disappointed some. This drew only average business."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark Paramount)—"A splendid picture. Patrons were pleased. The star is very popular here."—G. W. Johnson, Mystic Theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Excellent. These are the kind of pictures my people want to see."—G. W. Johnson, Mystic Theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

Pathe

The Inner Voice, with Ivan Mozukin (Pathe)—"Film A No. 1. Lighting good. Did not please the audience. Foreign pictures do not take here."—J. Walton, Auditorium Theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Over the Hill, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"A good average picture that will please most any audience."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Loaded Dice, with Frank Keenan (Pathe)—"Too bad to make pictures of this kind. Too gruesome in spots for any audience. I heard nothing but complaints."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Round-up at Pendleton (Pathe)—"Drew large crowds. Was well liked by all."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theatre, Harvard, Ill.

The Great Adventure, with Bessie Love (Pathe)—"The star is only third class. Picture a poor box-office attraction. Not much of a story but it contains bits of comedy that pleased the children. Bessie Love will be better liked in time."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Select

Her Silent Sacrifice, with Alice Brady (Select)—"An excellent picture to good business."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

By Right of Purchase, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"A very good picture, well staged and directed and with photography of the best. I have noticed that Select can take an old story and make a really pleasing picture where many others fail to make good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Knife, with Alice Brady (Select)—"The poorest picture Miss Brady has been in. The Chicago censorship board cut it all to pieces until there was no story and no sense. It would have been better if they had rejected it."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Triangle

I Love You, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"A good picture. It does not hold the interest in the first part but as the story takes a new twist it develops a good picture from an over-worked story."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Law's Outlaw, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A fair western picture. The director made several mistakes in continuity and plot."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Captain of His Soul, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A fair picture, well received by our pattrons."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Drew well and was a very pleasing picture. The characters in the play were wonderful."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Skirts (Triangle Comedy)—"This is the best Triangle comedy we have had for some time."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Because of a Woman, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"Star very good. Picture and subject good and well liked by all who saw it. We have been requested to show it again. Business above the average."—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Triangle Comedies—"Good, clean stuff that my people expect to see with every Triangle picture."—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Her American Husband, with Teddy Sampson (Triangle)—"Madame Butterfly done over in a most pleasing manner. Should please as well if not better than that made by Mary Pickford."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Argument, with Barney Sherry (Triangle)—"A good picture. Story unusual; settings, acting and photography very good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Universal

The Pace That Kills (Universal)—"A subject that brings out the plain facts. Pleased all."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatre, Buckeye, Iowa.

Poor Peter Pious, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (Universal)—Nestor comedies always take well."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatre, Buckeye, Ia.

The Money Mystery (Universal)—"Only fair."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatr, Buckeye, Ia.

The Right Man (Universal)—"Fair. Small business in bad weather."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatre, Buckeye, Ia.

Wild Women, with Harry Carey (Universal Special—"A scream from start to finish. As they like Harry Carey in this vicinity, this proved to be a good box-office attraction."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Vitagraph

Big "V" Comedies (Vitagraph)—"Good single reel, fast action, slapstick comedies. Larry Semon is a good natural comedian with many original ideas."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Combat, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"Up to Vitagraph standard. Star good but this is only her second appearance here and she is not yet appreciated. Business only fair."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

His Own People, with Harry Morey (Vitagraph) "Far below Vitagraph standard."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

World

The Cross Bearer, with Montague Love (World)—"Seven reels. A work of art but it went over the heads of some of our patrons. It is not just the kind of a picture that the public classes as amusement. The story is based on historical facts which occurred in Belgium during the German raids. Montague Love as Cardinal Mercier did not draw here."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Witch Woman, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"I thought the title might hurt its drawing power but it did not, as we did well with it despite rainy weather. Had many compliments on it. The star is well liked in this locality."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

At the Mercy of Men, with Alice Brady (World)—"Poor Alice, poor 'Mercy of Men,' poor exhibitor who runs it! Otherwise it's all right. This is another case where the Chicago censor board is at fault for the trouble is that it has been cut badly."—Harry Miller, Boston Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Serials and Series

The Woman in the Web, with Hedda Nova (Vitagraph)—"The first episode starts this off with a bang. There is one scene of a leap from a window to the branches of a tree which leaves the audience breathless. The Cossacks do some very rough and clever riding. It looks as though this serial will draw very well. We had some very good comments from patrons."—Harry Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood house.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Chapter 14. They will have to go some to outdo Marie. I have run serials for three years and this tops them all."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatre, Buckeye, Ia.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Chapter 13. This serial holds even in cold weather."—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Best serial yet shown in McMinnville."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

The Price of Folly, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—"Not going very strong with us."—House and Justice Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter one. Started fine on a stormy night. Everyone interested."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter two. They all came back and are talking about it."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter three. Had to announce an additional performance beginning next week to handle the crowds. What will the end be?"—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Earle Williams has a surgeon's role in "The Seal of Silence," a Vita graph Blue Ribbon feature for April 29.

Strange Plot in "The Seal of Silence"

Picture Is Third Vitagraph Blue Ribbon in Which Earle Williams and Grace Darmond Have Had Leading Roles

AN Earle Williams Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Seal of Silence," is announced for release the week of April 29 by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Grace Darmond is featured in support. The picture was made at the Vitagraph western studio under the direction of Tom Mills.

"The Seal of Silence," which was written by William Addison Lathrop, is declared to be the strongest story in which Mr. Williams has been presented in many months. Its theme is somewhat daring, but it has been handled by Director Mills with a great degree of finesse.

This will be the third feature in which Miss Darmond has been seen opposite Mr. Williams, their others having been "In the Balance" and "An American Live Wire." Kate Price, long a member of the Vitagraph stock company, will also be seen in support of Mr. Williams.

The part which Mr. Williams has in "The Seal of Silence" is that of a surgeon, a type of role in which he is at his best, and it is said to give him more opportunity than he has enjoyed in some of his recent pictures.

The story is that of an eminent surgeon who propounds the theory that in some manner a child reveals the parent, but he disproves his own theory by failing to recognize his own child.

Hugh Loring is young, wealthy and stands high in his profession of medicine and surgery. Mrs. Loring is beautiful, cold, irreproachable in character. In the family lives Ruth Carden (Grace Darmond), a young woman, loyal friend and confidant of Mrs. Loring and indispensable laboratory companion of Loring.

Loring's hobby is heredity and his desire for a child is equalled only by his wife's aversion. He broods over the subject and evolves the theory that to the close student some slight trick of manner or some mental peculiarity of the child reveals the parent.

Mrs. Loring has an admirer whom she tolerates and who takes her ostensibly to the theatre, but in reality to a gambling house. Loring learns of the deception and admonishes his wife, who leaves him for the home of a nurse of her babyhood. She first reveals to Ruth that she expects to become a mother, enjoining an oath of secrecy that she may in revenge rob her husband of the greatest joy that could come into his life.

Weeks pass and Ruth is summoned to Mrs. Loring's side. The baby is born and the mother dies, both events being kept from Loring. Ruth, who has not explained her absence, returns to the Loring home and the baby is left with the nurse.

Three years pass and it becomes necessary for the nurse to give up the child. Loring hears the telephone conversation —a child and Ruth's unexplained absence still fresh in his mind. He is stunned, for he has come to love Ruth, and he receives the child without question as hers, while she suffers under his suspicion, but hoping that his heredity theory will be proved in this supreme test and he will recognize the boy as his own.

The child falls desperately ill and Hugh, inspired by his love for its supposed mother which he always has suppressed, saves its life. As they stand by the crib, he says simply:

"I am glad for your sake."

Then in Ruth's eyes he reads what heredity theories had not told him—that the child is his and the wife's who had run away and died.

Makes Burlesque on "Cleopatra"

Vitagraph's Big V Comedy companies on the Pacific coast are breaking all safety first rules turning out two comedies which they aver are 100 per cent thrill and frenzied fun and with a slant that is quite different.

Lawrence Semon is producing a burlesque on "Cleopatra." He says he hasn't detracted a bit from the historical version and that his Cleo, as he familiarly speaks of her, is a dream of a comedy queen. Marble halls were built for Cleo on the Hollywood lot and the famous carpet purchased for the arrival scene, which he states is really elevating.

Montgomery and Rock meantime are putting finishing touches, with the assistance of six crazy motorcyclists and a racing motor car, to "Love and Lavaliers," their next Big V. Incidents leading up to a final collision with a brick wagon and a wild dash through the sides of buildings into a police station, are said to guarantee gasps of wonderment and many laughs.

The comedians are happy in having discovered in downtown Los Angeles a new girder—higher and more dangerous and narrower than any used so effectively in their last stunt of a hand-to-hand fight between two buildings. In "Love and Lavaliers" they don't fight, they simply walk in their sleep on the edges of this girder and are likely to cause nightmares to those with nerves who see them do it.

Vitagraph Goes After Louis B. Mayer

PLANS TO PUSH ANITA STEWART CASE TO THE LIMIT

THE Vitagraph Company of America last week filed suit in the Superior Court at Boston for $250,000, naming Louis B. Mayer, Colman Levin and J. Robert Ruben as defendants.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, has engaged Daniel H. Coakley, a well-known attorney of Boston, to handle the case, which is an outgrowth of the litigation started by Mr. Smith to prevent Anita Stewart from leaving Vitagraph and entering the employ of Mayer.

The complaint of Vitagraph charges Mayer and his co-defendants with conspiracy in attempting to entice Miss Stewart away from the company with which she began her motion picture career.

Affects Entire Industry

This action, like its predecessor, is certain to have an important influence on the entire motion picture industry. At the outset of the suit to enjoin Miss Stewart from leaving Vitagraph, in which action Vitagraph recently won a final decision, Mr. Smith declared that he was seeking to establish a precedent for the protection of motion picture producers in their contract rights to a star's services.

The newer action is a broader development of this principle, because if the Vitagraph Company is successful in its litigation against Mayer and his co-defendants it will serve as a further protection to manufacturers against interference from the outside with stars that they have under contract and will act as a deterrent to persons seeking to lure players away from a company by offers of fabulous salaries and other inducements.

How Vitagraph States Case

The Vitagraph Company states its position in this respect in the first part of its complaint as follows:

" . . . in this connection the plaintiff has built up a great business and has established for itself an enviable reputation for the high character of its productions and for the employment in connection therewith of motion picture actors and actresses known as stars of unusual, unique and exceptional ability, and particularly for its reliability in producing such pictures with the assistance of the stars advertised and announced to appear in its said productions, upon the strength of which announcements and advertisements many hundreds of exhibitors rent and are under contract to continue to rent the said product of the plaintiff."

After making this direct statement of the producer's rights to a star's services and the responsibility of the producer to the exhibitors, the Vitagraph complaint recites briefly the history of Miss Stewart's connection with the company. In this section it is stated that Miss Stewart came to the company in 1912, when she was about seventeen, and worked as an "extra" for twenty-five dollars a week. She was unknown, says the complaint, to the motion picture industry and to the theatre-going public.

Deals With Publicity

The complaint further recites that Miss Stewart was given opportunity to portray leading roles in costly photoplays and again taking up the cause of the manufacturer, says that Vitagraph "expended several hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising and publicly exploiting the merits of said productions and particularly the merits of the said Anita Stewart in connection therewith and in causing her to become well and favorably known to the motion picture exhibitors of the country and to the motion picture theatre-going public, not only throughout the United States but throughout the civilized world where motion pictures are exhibited."

Built Up Good Will

"By reason of her extraordinary and unique ability, her personal charm and popularity as a motion picture actress," the complaint continues, "and by reason of the plaintiff's said advertising and exploiting of her and her said pictures, the plaintiff built up and established an extensive good will and value for all of the motion pictures in which the said Anita Stewart might thereafter appear and by so doing greatly enhanced the value of the right to engage and control her exclusive services as a motion picture actress."

The complaint then reviews the making of the contract with Miss Stewart last year, which Vitagraph charged in its original suit she was seeking to break.

After citing the terms of the contract, whereby Miss Stewart was guaranteed compensation of not less than $127,000 a year, the complaint states:

" . . . The plaintiff says that between March 1, 1917, and August 23, 1917, while its said contract with Anita Stewart was in full force and effect, the defendants, well knowing of the existence of the said contract, and well knowing all of the facts herein recited, wantonly and maliciously conspired and agreed together to entice the said Anita Stewart away from and out of the employment of the plaintiff under the said contract as aforesaid and to induce the said Anita Stewart without cause to break her said contract with the plaintiff and to enter the employ of one of the defendants.

"And the plaintiff says that pursuant to the said conspiracy, the defendants caused the said Anita Stewart to break her contract with the plaintiff without cause and without justification, and thereupon still further pursuant to the said conspiracy the defendants then and there caused a contract to be entered into with the said Anita Stewart in the name of the defendant, Louis B. Mayer, for the employment of the said Anita Stewart as a motion picture actress at a salary greater than that which she had been receiving from the plaintiff.

"And the plaintiff says that thereafter the defendants caused the fact that the said Anita Stewart had entered into a contract with the said defendant Mayer to be published throughout the motion picture journals and trade and caused it to be known that the defendant Mayer had obtained the exclusive right to engage and control her services as a motion picture actress, and the defendants caused the said Anita Stewart to refuse to continue to work for the plaintiff under said contract, and caused her by means of threats and other means to continue to refuse to carry out her contract with the plaintiff and to use her utmost endeavors to defeat the plaintiff's efforts to preserve the contractual relations between the plaintiff and the said Anita Stewart with which the defendants had so interfered as aforesaid."

A copy of the complaint was served upon Colman Levin, one of the defendants, in Boston on Tuesday last, but no date has been set for the trial. Levin and Ruben are said to have been financially interested with Mayer in the Stewart contract, although Miss Stewart's agreement was with Mayer personally.

Market "Over the Top" in the Regular Way

Walter W. Irwin Denies Big Special Will Be Handled on a State Rights or Territorial Basis

"OVER THE TOP," Vitagraph's super-war picture with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey in the star role, will not be leased on a state right or territorial basis under any circumstances, according to a statement issued by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. Mr. Irwin declares that the big feature will be marketed in the same manner as the other Vitagraph specials; that is, to first run exhibitors for special runs and then on the regular leasing basis.

Mr. Irwin states that since "Over the Top" was first shown at the Lyric Theatre, New York, three weeks ago, many of the leading exhibitors have made special trips to New York to see it and have already begun negotiations for it.

In addition, he says, he has had scores of inquiries from all parts of the country from showmen seeking state and territorial rights. One bid was made for the New England rights, another for the Southern states, one for the entire state of California and others for other sections of the country. To all of these offers Mr. Irwin sent a declination, stating that the picture will be distributed solely through the Vitagraph organization and that regular exhibitors will get the first chance to present it in their respective territories.

"Over the Top," entering its fourth week at the Lyric on Sunday, April 21, is declared to be one of the most gratifying motion picture successes New York has ever known. The theatre has been crowded twice daily ever since the run began and the indications are that it could continue indefinitely.

This is an excellent tribute to the production itself and should be a source of satisfaction to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, under whose personal supervision it was made, and to Wilfrid North, who directed it.

Various patriotic organizations have seized upon the opportunity to conduct their rallies in conjunction with the showing of the picture, the appeal of which has proved irresistible. During the second week of the run the American Defense Society conducted a most successful campaign at the Lyric and last week two days were devoted especially to Liberty Loan appeals, made by the Patriotic Service League of the Brooklyn Manual Training High School.

This organization of students was formed a year ago by Sergeant Empey, formerly a pupil of the school, and it set itself the task of selling $1,000,000 in bonds during the present drive. During the two days its members worked at the Lyric they added several thousand dollars to their list, Sergeant Empey directing the students in their campaign and leading in the appeal to the audience.

In addition to his Liberty Loan work, Sergeant Empey, a soldier through and through, acted as host to other men in uniform. In order that American and Allied soldiers and sailors in New York might have an opportunity of seeing the picture Empey posted $1,000 at the theatre to be used in entertaining that number of men in uniform. He also had as his guests one night 600 members of the Forty-seventh Regiment of Brooklyn, his old command, and the first military organization with which he saw service.

On Saturday, April 20, a special benefit performance for the Red Cross was given at the Lyric under the auspices of Mrs. Albert E. Smith, wife of the president of Vitagraph. The entire proceeds were donated to Auxiliary No. 197 of the Red Cross and a tidy sum thereby was added to the organization's funds. This performance was given in the morning and to exhibitors it offers an idea for popularizing the film and for contributing to the support of the Red Cross.

Start "The Girl in His House"

Earle Williams and his company have begun work at Vitagraph's Hollywood studios on "The Girl in His House," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon feature. This pictude, which gives every promise of being one of Mr. Williams' best efforts, is adapted from the story of that name by Harold MacGrath, which was read by millions when it was run in serial form in The Ladies' Home Journal.

Mr. Williams and Grace Darmond, his leading woman, were scheduled to begin this picture some time ago under direction of Tom Mills, but were delayed by accident and illness in completing "The Seal of Silence."

First, Mr. Williams, when bathing off Santa Barbara, suffered an injury to his foot and was laid up for a week. The morning he reported back at the studio Miss Darmond was struck by an automobile and took an enforced vacation of a week. And then Director Mills suffered an attack of the grippe and was kept indoors another week.

Finally the three got together and the picture was finished and shipped last week to Vitagraph's Brooklyn plant and work begun in earnest on "The Girl in His House."

Buys New House

A. H. Jackson of Fremont, Ohio, has purchased control of the Fremont Opera House and after making improvements will present special pictures, vaudeville and road shows, and other entertainment where large seating capacity is essential. The Strand Theatre, a picture house of which he is the owner, is to be enlarged.

Sixteen Vitagraphs for Release in May

Program Includes Four Blue Ribbons, Four Serial Episodes and Eight Drew and Big V. Comedies

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, announces that the company's releases for the month of May, consisting of four units and sixteen subjects, are complete and ready for exhibitors. The list includes four Blue Ribbon features, four serial episodes, four Big V. Comedies and four Vitagraph Drew Comedies, being made up as follows:

Blue Ribbon Features—May 6, "The Little Runaway," starring Gladys Leslie with Edward Earle under direction of William P. S. Earle. An Irish drama by Paul West which was adapted from an original story entitled, "Ann Acushla."

May 13—"The Strength of the Weak," starring Alice Joyce under direction of Tom Terriss. This is a sharp-cut drama by Edith Ellis, author of "Mary Jane's Pa" and other plays, and was adapted from the stage play, "My Man."

May 20—"The Golden Goal," starring Harry Morey with Florence Deshon, under direction of Paul Scardon. A striking drama in which Morey plays the role of a labor leader who rises to great power. It was written by Lawrence McCloskey.

May 27—"Baree, Son of Kazan," starring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman under direction of David Smith. An adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's powerful story of the Canadian North Woods which ran in "The Red Book."

Serial—"The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon under direction of David Smith and Paul Hurst; May 6, Episode 5, "The Hand of Mystery"; May 13, Episode 6, "Full Speed Ahead"; May 20, Episode 7, "The Crater of Death"; May 27, Episode 8, "The Plunge of Horror."

Big V. Comedies—May 6, "Laws and Outlaws," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock; J. A. Howe, director; May 13, "Spies and Spills," featuring Lawrence Semon; written and directed by Lawrence Semon; May 20, "Love and Lavallieres," featuring Montgomery and Rock; J. A. Howe, director; May 27, "Romans and Rascals," featuring Lawrence Semon; written and directed by Mr. Semon.

Vitagraph Drew Comedies—Featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew; May 6, "The Story of the Glove"; May 13, "Fox Trot Finesse"; May 20, "The Mysterious Mr. Davey"; May 27, "Rooney's Sad Case."

These Drew comedies are selected subjects from the Vitagraph library and represent some of the best work that Mr. and Mrs. Drew have done since they began the making of comedies. They have been re-edited and retitled and new prints sent out. Reports from Vitagraph are to the effect that they are meeting with the same popularity which they enjoyed when first issued a few years ago.

The Vitagraph program for May is one of the largest of any single producing company in the industry and the fact that the sixteen subjects listed are already complete is an excellent instance of producing efficiency.

Film Will Please Married Folks

Wives who imagine themselves unhappy and those who deplore the fact that romance flits from their lives after the honeymoon will find much to interest and amuse them in Billie Burke's next picture, released April 29 under the Paramount trademark, which has been based on "Divorcons," the play by Victorien Sardou, and adapted to the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos under the title of "Let's Get a Divorce."

Divorce statistics have shown that the first few years of married life are the crucial ones, after which husband and wife will have gradually learned to adapt their lives to each other and the good old ship Matrimony will sail on smooth seas. In this satire, Sardou has shown the evil of the easy divorce laws which permit the severing of marriage ties over trivial squalls, and John Emerson and Anita Loos have brought the subject to date and introduced comedy situations particularly adapted to the talents of Miss Burke.

The story deals with a romantic girl who, soon after her marriage, imagines herself in love with another man. The husband agrees to his wife's request that he divorce her, but determines to awaken her to a realization of the folly of her infatuation. He invites his rival to share his home as a guest and arranges that his wife shall have an abundance of the man's society. The plan works admirably and the young woman becomes so disgusted with her vain and shallow lover that she flies back to the protecting arms of her husband, with romantic ideas completely knocked out of her head.

Billie Rhodes in Double Role

Billie Rhodes, the clever, captivating comedienne playing in Mutual-Strand comedies, does a double role in "Spotted," the release for April 30.

Begoggled, mustached and in livery, Billie plays the part of chauffeur, and in black dress and white apron she is a most fetching maid.

The plot revolves around the desire of a pretty heiress to be "loved for herself alone," who turns her house over to a couple of friends for the entertainment of a handsome young relative, who falls in love with the maid, confesses to her "twin brother," the chauffeur, and finds that he has proposed to a vigorously wooed debutante.

A pathetic scene in "Playing the Game," a Thomas H. Ince picture for Paramount release, starring Charles Ray.

Three interesting scenes from "Hearts or Diamonds," the first picture to be made by William Russell with his own company. The Russell productions will be released through Mutual.

"Hearts or Diamonds?" Heads Mutual Bill

Picture Is First of William Russell Productions, Inc.—Theme Based on Romance and Adventure

"HEARTS OR DIAMONDS?" the first picture produced by William Russell Productions, Inc., is the feature of Mutual's schedule of releases for the week of April 29.

The play was selected by Mr. Russell himself as one offering opportunities for the characteristic Russell action. The scenario is by William Parker from a story by the brilliant young author, William Hamilton Osborne, whose magazine fiction has attracted wide attention.

The hero of the story, Larry Hanrahan, is a collector of precious stones. He meets and becomes infatuated with Adrienne Gascoyne, a beautiful girl whose father poses as a chemist who has discovered a method of making diamonds. In reality Gascoyne is the head of a band of international diamond thieves.

When Larry is robbed of his priceless collection of jewels, he traces the thieves to Gascoyne's house, where after a thrilling fight the crooks are apprehended. Adrienne is shown to be innocent of any connivance in the robbery and ignorant of her father's criminal operations. The question of "Hearts or Diamonds" is resolved for Larry in the culmination of his romance with Adrienne.

Miss Charlotte Burton makes her reappearance on the screen in the role of Adrienne. Miss Burton, who made a sensational success in the mystery-serial success of Mutual, "The Diamond from the Sky," has played the lead in other Russell successes also, notably "Soul Mates," "The Highest Bid" and "The Love Hermit."

Screen Telegram issues Nos. 18 and 19 are released May 1 and 5. American soldiers taking their places in the line to check the Hun offensive, Secretary McAdoo opening the Liberty Loan drive in Philadelphia, the visit of Marguerite Clark, the tiny screen favorite, to Chicago to boost the sale of Liberty bonds; baptizing of negroes in the chilly waters of the Mississippi at St Louis; scenes from the training camps and up-to-the minute war pictures are some of the features of recent issues of Screen Telegram that make for popularity of the newsreel.

"Spotted," the Mutual-Strand comedy release of April 30, casts Billie Rhodes, the clever comedienne, in a double role. It is built around a novel idea, prettily staged, and well directed. The Rhodes comedies are becoming more and more popular and are being booked in big houses in every section of the country.

Sun Delays Essanay Picture

Old Sol has been a little tardy this spring but he now promises to get busy and arrange Essanay's outdoor settings for the next George K. Spoor feature, "Young America." The outdoor settings require that the trees be in full foliage.

Everything is ready to begin work and Essanay is waiting only for the buds on the trees to turn into full fledged leaves. Several of the indoor sets have been built and others planned so they can be erected at a moment's notice. Outside locations have all been chosen, awaiting nature's carpenter to complete the work.

The picture, taken from the Cohan and Harris Broadway success written by Frank Craven, will carry an all star cast. Most of the players have been tentatively selected for engagement at a moment's notice.

Arthur Berthelet will direct.

Ochs Gives Up Exhibitors Trade Review

Announces at the Same Time That Louis F. Blumenthal Has Withdrawn From United Theatres

UNDER date of April 13, Lee A. Ochs, president of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has issued the following statement:

"To the Motion Picture Industry:

"I have this day resigned as president of the Exhibitor's Trade Review and as a director and I have disposed of my stock holdings in the publication, severing completely all relations with the company and the publication.

"The activities I have recently entered upon in behalf of the exhibitors of the United States require my whole time and energy.

"I am no longer in a position to devote the amount of attention to Exhibitor's Trade Review that is required of the president of that enterprise. Nor is Exhibitor's Trade Review as urgently in need of my services as in its early days.

"I feel that I am now free to transfer my whole energies to another movement equally important to the exhibitors and that it is for the best interests of the exhibitors that I sever my connections with Exhibitor's Trade Review, as I have done.

"At the same time, it is my duty as president of the United Picture Theatres of America to announce that for equally important reasons Louis F. Blumenthal has withdrawn from that concern and severed his connections with it in every way.

"LEE A. OCHS."

Board of Review Praises "A Pair of Sixes"

Declares Essanay Feature with Taylor Holmes Is the Funniest Picture of the Season

THE latest George K. Spoor feature, "A Pair of Sixes," has received exceptional commendation from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, which calls it the funniest picture of the season.

The board in passing this picture declares the entertainment value is excellent, the dramatic interest is good, the coherence clear, the acting excellent, technical handling good, the atmosphere quality of scenic setting good and the moral effect good.

The board goes on to say: "As a play, 'A Pair of Sixes' was a comedy hit. In the photoplay the story, the partner, the lawyer, the wife, the fiancee, the cook and the star, Taylor Holmes, have all combined to make it the funniest play of the season."

The cook is one of the cleverest characters in the photoplay, the part being taken by Maude Eburne. The other leading players are Robert Conness and Alice Mann.

The picture already has been released in several of the larger cities and everywhere there has been reported a record breaking attendance, with audiences more than satisfied.

The George Kleine offices announce that the bookings are coming in fast and that the picture promises to make a record run for Essanay.

The other recent George K. Spoor features, "Ruggles of Red Gap" and "Uneasy Money," featuring Taylor Holmes, and "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," featuring Mary MacLane, also are reported to be having exceptional runs.

Mae Marsh on Song Cover

Mae Marsh, the personification of the home loving girl, is seen on the cover of a popular song published by M. Witmark & Sons, "He Has Those Big Blue Eyes Like You, Daddy Mine." In a specially posed picture the winsome Goldwyn star is seen fondling a baby, the expression on her face being calculated to endear her anew to her admirers.

More Broncho Billies to Be Released

Essanay Plans to Issue Another Block of Ten Beginning a Week After Last of First Reissues

ESSANAY announces that it has met with such a success in the first ten of its revivified Broncho Billy dramas that it will follow with another set of ten beginning probably May 10, a week after the last release of the first ten.

The pictures, which are being released through the George Kleine system, are one-reel subjects and have been found by exhibitors to be an excellent addition to any program. They have been booked in the majority of cases by the entire block of ten, the exhibitor running them on a special night each week.

New prints are made on all the pictures by new process photography which has enhanced the beauty greatly. Mostly outdoor scenes, the photography under the new process treatment stands out with unusual clearness and sharpness.

The beautiful western scenery and the daring riding has proved a great attraction to young and old alike and exhibitors report that all the pictures so far released have been received with great enthusiasm.

It is also probable that another block of ten of the Snakeville comedies will be released. They feature Slippery Slim, Sophie Clutts and Mustang Pete. These comedies have proved to be excellent attractions with feature programs and have been favorably received. They are exceptionally fast moving slapsticks and provocative of hilarious laughter.

World Gets Famous Model

Nancy Palmer, familiar to magazine readers and public both here and abroad as the model for Howard Chandler Christy, the famous illustrator, has just signed a contract to appear in World Pictures. She has been selected as a member of the cast of a forthcoming production of "Merely Players," written by Mrs. L. Case Russell, the noted scenarioist.

During the past few years Miss Palmer's striking features have served as the inspiration of all of Mr. Christy's illustrations and poster work. His famous poster, "I Want You for the Navy," created more interest than any other recruiting poster by an American artist and had a country-wide distribution. Miss Palmer also posed for the Third Liberty loan poster which Mr. Christy drew and which is at present being displayed everywhere.

Miss Palmer has appeared steadily through the medium of Mr. Christy's creations in the pages of The Cosmopolitan, Hearst's, Good Housekeeping and other prominent publications, so that her face is familiar to hundreds of thousands of readers.

The signing of Miss Palmer is another instance of the determination of World Pictures to enlist supporting female casts noted for their beauty.

Mae Marsh Tells Psychology of Kisses

Sentiment Clings Despite Fact They Are Regulated by a Director and Are Only Make-Believe

TO every girl, even a popular screen star, kisses mean a great deal. Even when it is not from the heart, but regulated by the all-seeing director, a kiss is a kiss and as such is critically looked upon by audiences and cannot fail to be regarded with a certain amount of sentiment by the star.

Mae Marsh is no exception to this. The slim heroine of a hundred screen successes has received and given quite as many kisses as anyone before the public. That they have been the kisses of a sweet young girl does not mean that they have been without enthusiasm.

Persons to whom the Goldwyn star means the utmost in screen heroines need only recall her as she appeared in "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerence," "The Cinderella Man" and "The Beloved Traitor" to visualize a succession of kisses, each different from the others.

In "The Cinderella Man," for instance, she was Marjorie Caner, daughter of a millionaire, much-traveled and not without worldly experience for all her appealing ways and tenderness of heart. The kissing scene in this play evoked a great deal of comment. The episode in the garret of Tom Moore, the poet, where the millionairess obligingly assists at a rehearsal of the composer's opera, directing his kisses and asking for more, was unanimously declared to be one of the most irresistible bits of acting ever seen on the screen. The kiss was not without calculation. Marjorie wanted the kiss and told the poet how it should be served.

"That," said Miss Marsh to an inquisitive visitor at the Goldwyn studios, "was an artificial kiss. It did not come spontaneously. It was not the call of youth, though the girl was calling to the man with all her heart. Still, he did not realize she was anything but a figure standing to receive the kiss, so it was far from the true lovers' salute."

Asked to explain the psychology of Mary Garland's kiss in "The Beloved Traitor," the star replied that in the girl of the fishing village there was the soul of all women. She typified the patient, waiting woman, offering her love silently, hopeful that it would one day be claimed.

"The kiss in that play," Miss Marsh continued, "was not born till the very last scene — the last moment — in the story. It was a beautiful, exquisite kiss and was significant of the awakening of Judd Minot's soul. He left me, you remember, to seek his fortune in the city and fell into the toils of a vampire. When finally he caught me in his arms and kissed my lips it was because he heard the call from my heart. He knew that after all the old love was the true love."

Urged to tell of other kisses, Miss Marsh said:

"You must see 'The Face in the Dark.' It has all the freshness of youth and innocence and unsought love. It comes to a child and makes her a woman. It is the loveliest kiss I have known."

Miss Marsh is Jane Ridgeway, the motherless daughter of a retired secret service man. She is ignorant of her father's connection with a gang of counterfeiters, believing him an honest man. She is visiting the home of a wealthy school chum when the interesting kiss occurs. Out in the snow, frolicking with a lot of youngsters, Jane coasts down a steep hill straight into a soft bank.

She is all but buried in the snow when along comes the rescuing hero. He is, in fact, the hero of the play. He pitches in and digs the girl out, laughingly uncovering her damp face half hidden by her rumpled hair. Thinking he has found a child, the young fellow gives the grown-up Jane a hearty kiss full upon the lips.

It is that simple, boyish kiss which stirs the heart of the girl and causes her to realize that her father is not the only man in the world. From the kiss develops the great love which causes the heroine to fight for the freedom of her sweetheart even at the cost of her father's disgrace. She becomes a woman, imbued with all the depth and passion of a primitive creature—and all, as Mae Marsh said in her quaint way, because of a little kiss.

Katzenjammer Kids Start Riot

As a special feature at leading theatres this week is a picture whose objective is unadulterated laughter and the complete success of the undertaking is evidenced by the screams of unrestrained mirth greeting its every showing. It is a release by the Educational Films Corporation of America of an International Film Service Black and White comedy, featuring those famous little comedians of newspaper comic sections—the Katzenjammer Kids.

"Vanity and Vengeance," is the title of the feature. It has to do with a dog in a fox's skin, a cat in a muff and the Katzenjammer family in church. Unfortunately the fox's skin, which the kids annexed to camouflage their dog, happened to be Mamma Katzenjammer's neck piece, and the muff in which they hid the cat was Mamma's muff, and Mamma, being late for church and not as discerning as usual, placed the neckpiece and the muff in their customary positions on her person without noticing the presence of the household pets.

Apparently this particular dog and cat were not in the habit of attending church and a discordant note was in the atmosphere even before they joined in the singing. The dog had been eyeing the cat for some time, with a not too friendly gaze, and when she lifted her voice in song it was too much to expect any self-respecting dog to stand, and a fight to a finish ensued.

The congregation, not taking the time to penetrate the disguise, looked upon the dog as a wild animal of the forests and stampeded for the doors, windows and every other means of egress, climbing over benches, on the roof, and even to the steeple's top in their fright.

The climax shows the kids hiding under a seat, the organist playing a stirring hymn and the captain exercising his parental authority in time with the music.

"The Blindness of Divorce" Has Remarkably Good Cast

"The Blindness of Divorce," a William Fox Standard Picture which has just been released and which Mr. Fox describes as "appealing to the hearts of all womankind," has a cast of such importance and prominence, says a statement from the Fox offices, that exhibitors should call special attention to it.

"We gave Frank Lloyd, the director, carte blanche in selecting the players," Mr. Fox asserted, "and told him that if his needs could not be met within the confines of our own studios in the West to seek further."

Mr. Lloyd did this, choosing for the chief role Bertha Mann, leading woman of the biggest stock company on the coast. Rhea Mitchell, well known for her stage and screen portrayals, was another woman Mr. Lloyd obtained outside of his own organization.

Charles Clary, who has been in so many of the big Fox productions, as well as in a number of the Special Features, has the most important male role. Mr. Clary is seen as John Langdon, whose unjust suspicion and accusation results in the tragedy that forms the basis of the story.

Notable in the list of films in which Clary has appeared are "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Price of Silence," "The Honor System," "The Spy," "The Conqueror," "The Rose of Blood," and "Du Barry." His most recent work was done as the English nobleman in "True Blue," starring William Farnum.

Bertram Grassby, Fred Church, Willard Louis and Marc Robbins, who portray the other characters, are all veterans of picturedom with established reputations.

Montreal Theatre Reopened

The Circle Theatre, Craig and Main streets, Montreal, has been reopened after remaining dark for the past two years. The theatre is under the same management as the DeLuxe Palace.

Goldwyn Announces Two New Productions

Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender" Is One and Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure" Is the Other

IN announcing two new productions—starring vehicles for Madge Kennedy and Mae Marsh—the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is directing the attention of exhibitors to the unusual box office strength of its three latest pictures.

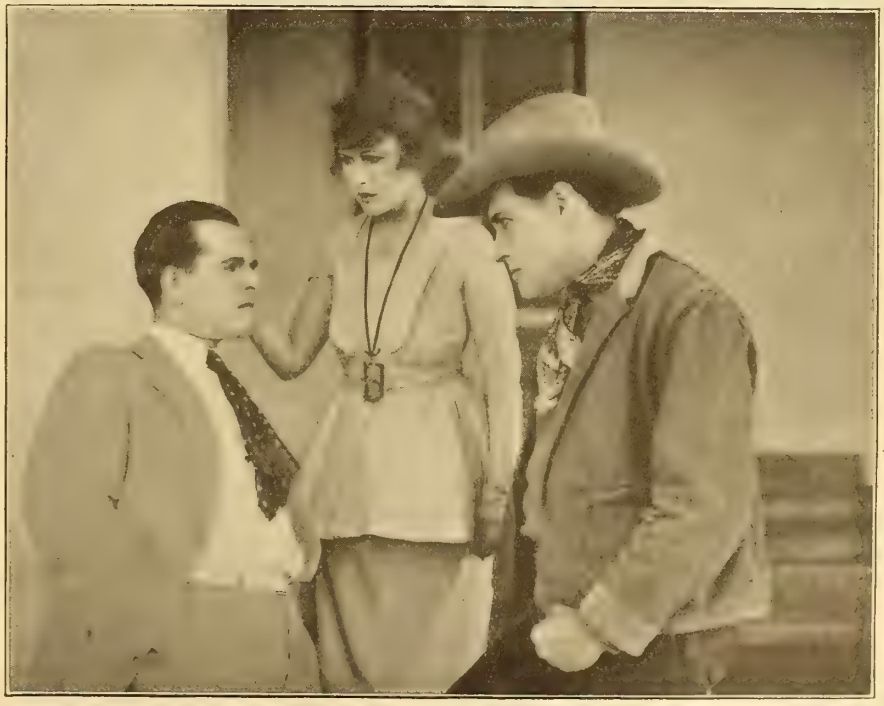
Following "The Face in the Dark," written by Irvin S. Cobb and starring Mae Marsh, come the following:

May 5—Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne.

May 19—Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles.

June 2—Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure," by Edith Barnard Delano.

Goldwyn predicts without hesitation that "Joan of Plattsburg," the screen's first patriotic comedy-drama, will sweep all before it. Never before, those who have seen the production say, has there been a screen drama so skilfully blending a timely appeal to patriotism with a plot of lively and sustained interest which, while it has an atmosphere of thrilling martial display, is distinctly not a war story. There are in "Joan of Plattsburg" none of the doubtfully thrilling "battle" scenes popular in contemporary screen fare.



George Loane Tucker made over "Joan of Plattsburg," which was ready for release several months ago, when the government stepped in and asked that certain of the scenes showing details of the military training methods in vogue at the great Plattsburg training camp for officers be eliminated

There is no doubt that Mr. Tucker has made the new production an offering even more appealing and powerful than the original. In "Joan of Plattsburg," as it is at present constituted, the star finds herself in a role more pretentious than any she has yet attempted. It is superfluous to say that she has taken every advantage of her opportunities.

"The Fair Pretender" affords Madge Kennedy a part delightfully different from those she has essayed since her entry into motion pictures six short months ago.

Famous as a luckless bride in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife," this charming star became a society crook in the serio-comic, "The Danger Game." Now she is a widow—a beautiful young girl bereaved by her own fancy. She never had a husband, but to meet the exigencies of the occasion she rids herself of one by way of the cemetery. The unsought trouble this brings about when she ventures into society is the hub about which the story revolves. Charles Miller is directing.

Hobart Henley, who directed Mae Marsh's highly praised vehicle, "The Face in the Dark," is in charge of her newest production, "The Glorious Adventure."

A thrill in the new Rex Beach production, "Heart of the Sunset," which is released through Goldwyn.

Religious and Educational Pictures

WHILE the annual convention of the National Education Association held a few weeks ago ignored or avoided the subject of instruction by motion pictures, the Religious Education Association devoted to it a full conference session. Evidently the church people have lost the leadership in the gentle art of ultra-conservatism.

School pictures and church pictures obviously belong in the same category. Both are seriously educational and wholly outside of the influence represented by the terms "entertainment" and "amusement." Both make exceptionally strict demands upon the producer, because error in production does not merely reduce the effectiveness, as in amusement work, but absolutely destroys the value of the product. In addition to that, those who handle the films must contend with the personal idiosyncrasies of the people in the education and religious fields.

In the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, Assistant Secretary Herbert F. Sherwood of the National Board of Review says of the difficulties of religious film service: "The chief problems to be met in adapting the motion picture to church use are those involved in the development of a plan of distribution and the acceptance by religious leaders of the conditions which interfere with the production of pictures intended especially for church audiences. The smallness of the profit, the relative lack of interest in definitely religious subjects, the differences in point of view regarding the methods of treating Biblical stories in order to give them dramatic form, the absence of standards to serve as a basis for the selection of pictures, and the difficulty of picturizing satisfactorily in physical form highly idealized personages, all serve to complicate the problem. There are many pictures, however, which may be used as a whole or in part as illustrations of ethical principles to point a moral, and scenic pictures which can be used in connection with Biblical study."

The problems of the school film are really much simpler, consisting in most part of a demand for absolute accuracy and authenticity. It is not even essential that school films be attractive in the entertainment sense; for any picture holds the attention more firmly than the most skillfully prepared text book.

The church workers are doing all they can to develop the use of pictures, in spite of rather difficult requirements; and there is little doubt that this field will enjoy a slow but healthy expansion.

The school situation is somewhat different. The business of publishing text books is large and prosperous because the major part of the product is sold directly to the public. School boards dictate what books shall be used; the students buy them in the open market—at least it is theoretically open. This encouragement of private enterprise makes for large and cheap production, and consequently a good product.

If some way could be devised for collecting text-book prices from the students to pay for the purchase or rental of films which took the place of such books, the problem would be simplified. The producer would be assured of a reward for his effort, and would be enabled to develop the field still further.

The matter of school board appropriations is quite likely to be the stumbling block in the path of the educational use of films. If a text book is discontinued in favor of a film, the item of expense represented is transferred from the student to the school board. Obviously there is no easy method of doing this.

That is possibly the most significant detail of resistance to an organized industry of school film production. The present producers sufficiently well equipped to undertake the promotion of a broad system of school supply have been kept busy with other demands on their time. It can be demonstrated, however, that once the problems of distribution and payment are solved, the educational field will become a large, remumerative and reliable film market.

A Long Stride Toward Perfection of Projection

ALTHOUGH alternating current, only a few years ago, was little more than an interesting experimental form of electrical energy, its transmission and distribution advantages soon proved so great that its use has developed to an extraordinary degree. Today electricity is an alternating current industry. Direct current is used only for those peculiar applications which will not readily adapt themselves to the changing direction of electrical flow: Chemical work, which demands definite positive and negative terminals; the charging of storage batteries, which practically comes under the same head; and a certain diminishing percentage of power work, using motors whose magnetic processes react too slowly to follow the rapid reversals of alternating current.

For motion picture projection—with the carbon arc, of course—every operator knows that direct current is better than alternating. It is better because the direct current arc is steadier and silent, while the alternating current arc is noisy. Then, too, the direct current arc forms a white-hot "crater" or pit in one of its carbons, due to the transfer of carbon particles from one carbon to the other in the direction of the current; and this crater is very useful as a constant bright spot of light.

These facts have all worked to the disadvantage of motion picture projection, because they kept it in the less favored class of direct current users. Demanding direct current in a world of alternating current, the theatres have had to equip their operating booths with special apparatus for converting alternating current into direct current. Such apparatus is readily available; but it adds to the complication and to the investment, and wastes current.

One of the most important things the development of incandescent lamp projection will do for the picture theatre is to put it into the class of alternating current users—or, rather, to enable it to use either class of current with equal facility.

So-called "flicker" on the screen was rather a sensitive point with motion picture operators until almost extraordinary refinements in the projection machines had partially eliminated it. To this day the most successful flicker eliminator—the three-blade shutter—gets rid of the flicker only by increasing its rapidity until it is too quick for the eye to note. Yet a large proportion of the flicker effect was not the fault of the projector at all, but of the arc.

This was the great objection to increasing the light upon the screen by enlarging the objective lenses. A bigger lens opening simply increased the visibility of the arc's defects, and made the flicker painfully apparent. With the incandescent projector a lens opening can be used which will nearly double the relative screen brilliancy.

Putting the carbon arc in the obsolete class is the one big advance that the technical side of motion picture presentation has made since the projector itself was perfected. For that reason alone the incandescent method of projection will be adopted as standard by all theatres of ambitious management, as rapidly as the supply of equipment and the growing realization of its importance will permit.

It was the motion picture that brought commercial value to the technical art of projection. Now it is reaping the benefit in the attraction of technically trained minds and facilities to its problems. Improvements in projection methods promised scanty reward twenty years ago. Now the promise is so great that we may expect remarkable, and perhaps at present unimagined, developments in the next decade.

Four New Productions Titled by Fox

"Ace High," "The Unmarried Wife," "We Should Worry" and "True Blue" Feature Mix, Miss Brockwell, the Lees and Farnum

FOUR new productions, two of which have been completed, were titled at the William Fox offices last week. The pictures star Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell, William Farnum and Jane and Katherine Lee. Mix's film will be called "Ace High." Lynn Reynolds, who wrote the story and is screening it, is almost midway in the production.

"We await with interest the finished product," said Mr. Fox, because it should be really the best thing Mix has done. He is known the country over for his pre-eminent ability as a horseman, having been in the saddle since childhood, and 'Ace High' gives him an admirable opportunity to display his equestrian skill against a most dramatic background. The story is one of brisk adventure in the service of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

"Gladys Brockwell's new vehicle, on which photography was begun practically at the same time as 'Ace High,' is to be released as 'The Unmarried Wife.' It will show the star in a role quite different from that in which she is usually seen. Charles Kenyon provided the script and Edward J. LeSaint directed. The chief members of the cast are L. C. Shumway, Bertram Grassby and William Scott, all of whom have been in many of our features.

"The Jane and Katherine Lee subject, an impish, stormy comedy-drama, will bear the title of 'We Should Worry.' The 'Baby Grands' prove conclusively that they don't.

"Written and staged by Kenean Buel, this photoplay tells the story of the exciting moments that resulted from a kidnaping. The cast is exceptionally large. Among its members, besides the little stars, are Ruby De Remer, William Pike, Henry Clive, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young, Charles Craig, George Humbert, Henry Hallam, Sarah McVicker and Ann Egleston. This is the production on which the Lees were so long in the South.

"The last of the four pictures we have named is 'True Blue,' which William Farnum recently completed as a Standard. Frank Lloyd was the director."

Tom Moore, Diplomat

Tom Moore supports each of the Goldwyn stars—Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand—in turn, and always his work evokes special commendation from the critics and the public. He was asked the other day which star he most enjoyed playing with. His eyes gleamed drolly.

"Say, do you want me to be expelled from the diplomatic set? The world is at war—can't you leave me alone? I'm willing to fight at the front, but——."

New Law Keeps Admission Below 25 Cents

Alberta, Canada, Enacts 10-Cent Tax That Picture Houses Can Escape Only by Charging 20 Cents or Less

THE legislature in the province of Alberta, Canada, in session at Edmonton, has made a change in the amusement tax act which provides for an extraordinary assessment, to say the least.

According to an original proposal it was intended to provide for a levy ranging from one cent on tickets valued at 10 to 20 cents to a tax of ten cents on all tickets worth more than $1. This plan was amended, however, so that a tax of no less than ten cents will be collected on all ticketc ranging in price from 25c to $2. A tax of 25c will be collected on all tickets costing more than $2. Under the first plan, the tax on a 25-cent ticket would have been 2½ cents.

The war tax on tickets valued at 10 to 20 cents remains at one cent.

This arrangement does not hit the motion picture industry hard but it means that exhibitors will be practically compelled to limit their admission prices to 20 cents because the ten cent tax makes the 25 cent admission price out of the question.

Exemptions from the war tax are to be made in favor of all entertainments for patriotic, charitable or religious purposes and it is not intended either that amateur athletic meets or agricultural fairs shall be liable under the act.

Even with the higher theatre taxes imposed, according to an advocate of the bill, Alberta people will be paying less than those of other provinces in the aggregate. It is claimed that the increases were made as a necessary means of raising additional revenue.

That the move did not meet with the entire approval of the legislative members is shown by the fact that a suggestion was made from the floor of the house that the legislature itself might qualify as a "place of amusement."

Vale to Take "Judge" Scenes

Director Travers Vale will film several scenes for the World production, "The Judge," while in Bat's Cave, N. C., with "The Echo Girl" company. The scenes originally were to be filmed by Director Harley Knoles, but, because of a lack of foliage two weeks ago, the filming was postponed until the present.

Theda Bara Resents Omaha Attacks

Declares She Followed Historical Data in "Cleopatra," Except That She Wore More Clothes Than the Queen

THE recent presentation of Theda Bara's super-picture, "Cleopatra," in Omaha, which stirred some of the members of the Woman's Club in that city to protest, has resulted in Miss Bara's addressing a telegram to the Omaha Daily Bee explaining her attitude in the controversy.

"I have been advised that a great deal of discussion has been caused in Omaha as to my interpretation of 'Cleopatra.' It is with a great deal of reluctance that I make this statement, rather having left my portrayal of this character to the public at large.

"It is not the mission of the artist to explain her interpretation, for if the interpretation is perfect it explains itself, but since this attack has been launched at my head I feel that in justice to myself and my manager, Mr. William Fox, that some idea be given as to the underlying and educational motive of my portrayal.

"As soon as it had been decided to produce 'Cleopatra.' I immediately began to make a study of all available historical data that could be secured. In addition I made several visits to the Museum of Art in New York, where they have the greatest collection of Egyptian relics, and with the able assistance of the curator of that department was able to gather the data for the making of the costumes, and the customs prevalent during the reign of Caesar and Cleopatra.

"Mr. Fox, myself and my director, J. Gordon Edwards, were unanimous in agreeing that this production must be historically accurate both as to my portrayal and the scenes involved. I played Cleopatra according to history as a woman who used the prerogative of her sex to gain political supremacy. In direct contrast did I show her with the same human feelings that dominate any other woman—her wonderful and true love for Anthony, for whom she eventually sacrificed her life. This was the spiritualization of the character, so that I progressed from the low, sensual love attributed to Cleopatra, to the spiritual love, which was the regeneration of the woman.

"I may add in conclusion that in some of the historical incidents recorded by eminent archaeologists, Cleopatra appeared on many occasions without any clothing whatsoever. For more accurate reference any painting extant except the Alma Tadema one, which followed the Greek idea, will bear out this testimony.

"In giving the portrayal of Cleopatra I have been faithful first to myself as an artist, then to myself as a woman and heart and soul so with the public.

"THEDA BARA."

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, points out that "Cleopatra" received special commendation from the National Board of Censorship for its artistic presentation and for its historical accuracy.

An exciting moment in "Brave and Bold," George Walsh's latest William Fox play.

Adventure Tales for Farnum

William Fox has purchased the photoplay rights of two of Zane Grey's most famous and widely read stories of romance and adventure, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail." The picturizations will be William Farnum de luxe productions, and work on the first of these stirring western photodramas has already commenced at the big Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal. The announcement from the Fox offices says that they will be filmed, for the chief part, in the picturesque regions of Arizona.

Zane Grey himself will watch the transfer from type to celluloid. He is already on his way to Los Angeles.

"Riders of the Purple Sage" is a splendid romance of the old Utah, forty years ago, when Mormon authority ruled unquestioned in the land. "The Rainbow Trail" deals with a young clergyman who had been proven a failure by his congregation and who has been driven from the calling forced upon him by his people. He becomes a wanderer, but a wanderer with a purpose. A tale which a member of his congregation had told him starts him off for the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Miss Davies Buys Bonds

Marion Davies, who is shortly to appear in a screen version of the popular novel, "Cecelia of the Pink Roses," has donated her mite to the cause of democracy by subscribing to six thousand dollars worth of Liberty Bonds, through the Allied Theatrical Committee. She is also using all her powers of persuasion urging her many friends and acquaintances to subscribe their share.

"The Soul of Buddha" Ends in a Tragedy

Theda Bara Feature Written by Herself Departs From the Conventional in Several Different Ways

THEDA BARA'S own story, "The Soul of Buddha," the first "script" she ever wrote, is the current release on William Fox's Standard Picture schedule. J. Gordon Edwards, who has screened all of Miss Bara's productions during the last two years, was in charge of the picture.

As might have been expected of a tale from the pen of the star, the story is distinctive and unusual, according to the Fox offices. Miss Bara departed for her material and situations from the beaten path of romance and has developed an atmosphere and an environment that have afforded fertile fields, it is said, for her emotional work.

The star appears first as a dancing girl in a Buddhist temple, later as a sweetheart, wife and mother; then as a favorite of the Parisian stage. The story begins in Java and leads to Paris, where it shows the gay life of the pre-war city, with its Latin Quarter and Apache dens, its intrigues and its tragedies and its clandestine affairs of the heart.

Miss Bara appears as Bava, an East Indian girl whose widowed mother, a devout worshipper of Buddha, gives her to Ysora, the high priest of the temple, as a sacred dancer. Bava is attracted by the handsome priest and readily consecrates herself as a religious dancer.

But in the course of a festival she meets Sir John Dare, a major in the English army. She leaves the temple at midnight for a rendezvous with the officer. Ysora sees her and follows the couple to the barracks. Sir John calls in the army chaplain and he and Bava are wed. Ysora vows vengeance.

Sir John is cashiered. A year later a child is born to Bava. Ysora, ever watchful of an opportunity, kills the baby, leaving the Buddhist death sign on its forehead. Heartbroken, Bava goes with her husband to Paris. Her life is hardened by the loss of the child and she turns to the stage. She has told Sir John she no longer loves him.

When Bava makes her premier appearance before the footlights, Ysora, disguised as a Buddha, comes to life and kills her in front of the audience, carrying out his oath of vengeance.

Frank Lloyd, William Fox director.

Theatres Buy Bonds

The motion picture exhibitors of Cincinnati have certainly done their "bit" to help Cincinnati raise its quota of Liberty Bonds. The Family Theatre has subscribed $5,000, the Bijou $2,000, and Mr. Libson, who owns both these theatres, has personally subscribed $2500. Besides these direct subscriptions, the exhibitors have been helping the Loan by running slides, films, and displaying posters and other advertising matter. One of the downtown theatres which is a little out of the regular theatre district, also secured permission from the local Fuel Commission to light a sign on lightless night, promising to advertise the Liberty Loan only. This same permission was later granted to a number of houses who devoted their signs to the advertising of the Liberty Loan exclusively.

Petrova Gives Banquet to Exhibitors

Polish Star Is Hostess to Sixty Members of the First National Circuit at Hotel Astor, New York

ON the evening of Tuesday, April 16, Madame Olga Petrova was hostess at a banquet at the Hotel Astor, New York, to the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. This organization is distributing the special star productions in which the Polish actress is now appearing and is comprised of leading exhibitors in every section of the United States. The banquet, which was informal, was tendered to the circuit by Madame Petrova on the occasion of a business meeting of the organization.

During the afternoon the franchise holders were personally conducted through Madame Petrova's newly erected studio on Thirty-ninth street, where they witnessed with much interest her enactment of various scenes for her forthcoming feature, "Patience Sparhawk," written especially for her by Gertrude Atherton, the famous novelist.

The banquet was held in the college room of the Astor. Madame Petrova and her personal representative, Beulah Livingstone, were the only two women present, although there was a guest list of more than sixty names.

A specially prepared menu in which was incorporated such items as an "Exhibitor's Cocktail," "Sea Bass a la Chaplin," and "Democracy Dessert," was followed by informal speeches. Among the talkers were Madame Petrova, Frederick L. Collins, president of the star's personal production organization; Ralph Ince, her newly engaged director; Herbert Lubin, her special representative, and several of the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit—Robert Lieber, the new president, and Messrs. Tally, Bru, Mandelbaum, Hulsey, Levy and Schwalbe.

The Polish actress caused the college room to be decorated in honor of the occasion with huge American flags and various styles of Liberty Bond posters, making mention of the fact in her brief talk that she is heart and soul with the Allies and in the near future expects to make a personal tour of the United States in the interests of the war saving stamps movement.

Tuesday evening was the first occasion upon which many of the different members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit had had the opportunity of meeting Madame Petrova personally and all expressed their appreciation of that portion of the star's speech in which she declared herself heart and soul in favor of the closest co-operation between the releasing and producing mediums and the willingness which she expressed to receive suggestions and comments as to the type of productions best suited to the various photoplay audiences of the country, stating her belief that the members present, due to their dual standing as exchange men and exhibitors, were in a position to voice exactly the sentiments of the masses.

Play Tests Ability of Star

"I never had such difficult acting on the stage as I did in 'At the Mercy of Men,'" says Alice Brady, Select star. "I believe I have packed more acting into the five reels of this play than I have put into fifteen or twenty reels of some three or four of my other pictures."

Miss Brady has a succession of exceptionally strong scenes before the camera in this stirring story of Russian justice which is now being shown on the screens of the picture theatres. The star is before the audience every minute of the picture's duration. She is called upon to exert all the dramatic art and facility of expression at her command in registering the strong passions recorded in passage after passage of the breathless photodrama.

Michigan Exhibitors Meet

The exhibitors of the State of Michigan held a meeting at Tuller's Hotel, Detroit, April 25. They invited their brother exhibitors from Illinois, Indiana and Ohio to attend this meeting with them, and gave a theatre party and stag smoker to the exhibitors attending from adjoining states in the evening after the business session.

Norma Talmadge Puts $200,000 in Bonds

Stops Scene in "De Luxe Annie," to Sign Blank, at the Same Time Delivering an Impromptu Patriotic Speech

NORMA TALMADGE, the popular Select star, has done her bit by subscribing $200,000 to the Third Liberty Loan. Her subscription, which is one of the largest individual purchases in the New York district, was made through the Harriman National Bank on Fifth avenue, where Miss Talmadge keeps her account. The officials of the bank have confirmed the reports of the sale.

The bank's representative obtained Miss Talmadge's signature to her subscription blank by calling at her studio in East Forty-eighth street, where she is at work on "De Luxe Annie," which will follow "By Right of Purchase," in her Select Star Series. The banker volunteered to wait until the scene was finished, since he realized the cost of keeping the entire company waiting while the star affixed her "John Hancock" to help lick the Kaiser, but she would have none of it.

"The Liberty Loan comes first," she said, as she picked up her trusty pen. "If anyone or anything is delayed it cannot be helped under the circumstances. Our boys 'over there' cannot wait; we must oversubscribe this loan, the first since we actually entered the war, and without a moment's delay."

So the Kleiglights were turned off and while the star wrote "Norma Talmadge" on the official blank, the director and the entire cast of "De Luxe Annie" waited—help up by the Government Special! Beside this welcome interruption, Norma Talmadge is permitting nothing to hold up the production and "De Luxe Annie" is going ahead under a full head of steam.

Alice Brady Aids the Liberty Loan

Goes to Boston on an Hour's Notice and Helps Close Campaign, Then Returns to Work on Picture Next Day

THE popular conception of a star surrounds her with numerous dignitaries, agents and servitors galore so that when she moves about it is only after hours of preparation and much scurrying of the servitors. But Alive Brady, the sympathetic Select star, is an exception to the popular conception, for she is a "regular feller" in every regard and has won a reputation for her willingness to help a good cause at any time.

The big Liberty Loan campaign in Boston was to have culminated on Wednesday evening, April 17, in a monster rally; consternation reigned, therefore, when the principal speaker scheduled for the occasion was unable to come.

"What famous picture star can we get who will be good and who will be willing to come on such short notice?" wailed the distracted committeemen. Up piped some inspired voice—which must have belonged to someone who remembered Alice Brady's famous whirlwind personal tour.

"Try Alice Brady, champion speedster of the world!" And so, despite the murmurings of unbelief that a star could be prevailed upon at noon to take the one o'clock train to Boston, the long distance connection was put through, and Miss Brady heard the tearful S. O. S.

"Sure," said she, "all rules are off when the Liberty Loan is concerned. I haven't a thing to wear nor any speech prepared; but have someone meet me at the depot with my ticket, and I'll be there for the one o'clock. See you later, good bye."

Click went the receiver, and Miss Brady—still in her studio costume—jumped into her car, stopped for three minutes at her apartment to change her frock, packed an overnight bag and sped on to the depot, where she made her train in the proverbial nick of time.

Miss Brady returned to New York the following morning and immediately resumed work on the Select Picture which she is making to follow her April release, "At the Mercy of Men," the gripping photodrama staged in chaotic Russia in the days just before the revolution.

Await Fox Players' Return

The William Fox photoplayers who have been in the southland on exteriors for Peggy Hyland's new production, "Peg of the Pirates," are expected back at the studios in New Jersey early next week. The players have been away already more than three weeks.

Director O. A. C. Lund reports fine results in Charleston, S. C., where most of the time has been spent.

Ocean scenes aboard a pirate ship on the Atlantic will be a feature. Among those who appear prominently are Eric Mayne, Sidney Mason, Frank Evans, L. Wolheim, Ajax Carroll and Carlton Macy.

Norma Talmadge as she will appear in "De Luxe Annie," the Select picture upon which she is now working.

The Star on the Cover

"CECELIA OF THE PINK ROSES" is the title of a picture in which Marion Davies will appear early in June. It is taken from the widely read novel of the same name by Katherine Haviland Taylor and was chosen by Julius Steger, the director of the picture, not alone for the dramatic worth of the story—although of course this had a large bearing on his choice—but also because the part of Cecelia Madden affords Miss Davies such wonderful opportunities to inject into the story some of her own inimitable charm and grace. If the part were written especially for her it couldn't fit her better.

The presentation will be made by the Marion Davies Film Co., Inc., an organization recently formed for the purpose of presenting this fortunate girl in pictures, and the backers of this company have such implicit faith in her genius that extensive arrangements have been made to follow this production with a series of features based upon other popular current literature and successful plays.

There are very few people of either sex who have climbed the ladder of fame so rapidly or have arrived so near its pinnacle at so early an age as this young star. Of course her great beauty has helped wonderfully, but it requires other things besides loveliness of face and figure to be recognized throughout the country as one of the brightest luminaries of photoplay stardom. And this is the enviable position Marion Davies has attained in her short career.

With the wonderful ability of Director Julius Steger to bring out into the limelight and develop to its fullest extent every ounce of talent she possesses, it is safe to predict for her a very brilliant future.

Makes Debut in Film

Irene Vanbrugh, England's greatest actress, will make her screen debut in "Masks and Faces," a World Pictures release on May 6. She plays opposite Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson. Miss Vanbrugh has created innumerable roles in famous contemporary plays, such as "Gay Lord Quex," "Trelawney of the Wells," "The Masqueraders," "Passers By," "Twelve Pound Look" and a hundred others. She appeared twice in the United States.

"Over There" Good Box Office Attraction

Managers Find it Advantageous to Link Up Select Drama with Loan, Stamp and Red Cross Drives

"OVER THERE," Select's patriotic drama featuring the work of the Red Cross, is the subject of daily unsolicited testimonials which pour into the home and branch offices of Select Pictures Corporation. Patriotic societies, as well as theatre owners throughout the land, are finding it advantageous to show this soul-stirring photoplay and are linking it up with drives for the Liberty Loan, War Savings Stamps and the forthcoming second war drive of the Red Cross.

The Chicago office reports that "Over There" was seen by Thomas H. Adams, proprietor of The Daily Commercial, the leading newspaper of Vincennes, Indiana, and also chairman of the State Council of Defense, who was so enthusiastic about it that he voluntarily advised theatre managers in his locality to book the picture, which they did to their profit. Mr. Adams' reason for boosing "Over There" is best expressed in his own words:

"This picture will prove of more benefit than all the orators it is possible to obtain."

Along this line, too, is the comment of James Schoonover, manager of the Mazda Theatre at Aurora, Neb., who characterized "Over There" as "a story you will never forget and which will make you more proud of your soldier son, brother or sweetheart," and who wrote, after showing it at a large profit: "The picture went over fine; it is one of the most pleasing attractions that has ever been shown on our screen. 'Long may you wave.'"

It is figures, however, which tell the tale; so here is the story of what "Over There" caused Mr. Dunlap, owner of the Dunlap Theatre at Wakefield, Neb., to write to his Select branch manager: "We did a day's business of $228 at prices of 25 aud 15 cents, with a total population of 861 souls."

"Over There" is not a war picture, but a story of humanity told in a mighty way, and its patriotic stress makes it especially meritorious.

World Gets Marie Dressler

Marie Dressler has just signed a long-term contract to produce a series of two-reel comedies for World Pictures. Miss Dressler's new comedies will undoubtedly prove even more successful than her first famous success, "Tillie's Nightmare," and her later success, produced for World Pictures, "Tillie Wakes Up."

Miss Dressler will produce the comedies—which will be in two reels—with her own company, the Marie Dressler Corporation having just been incorporated for this purpose. Release dates for the first comedies in the series will be announced by the World within a short time.

What's Back of a Year's Program

AN efficiency expert at the World studio at Fort Lee has compiled figures of the amount of material required to go into the making of a year's program. In the past year, he found, for the sets built for 52 pictures it was necessary to use 1,500,000 feet of lumber, 12,000,000 nails, 100,000 screws, 5,000 locks, hinges and door knobs, 75,00 feet of wall paper, 1,500 gallons of paint, more than 100,000 pieces of furniture and 300,000 props.

There was consumed in lighting these sets 1,000,000 amperes of current. The film exposed amounted to 1,500,000 feet. A countless number of horses, cows, sheep, goats, birds, goldfish, dogs and oxen were employed. As for bears, snakes, raccoons, lions and elephants, the number of these animals would equip the Barnum and Baily circus several times over.

"True Blue," Farnum's Latest

William Farnum has finished his newest production at Hollywood. It will be released by Fox as a Standard picture under the title of "True Blue."

"True Blue" is Mr. Farnum's first photoplay in the West in approximately a year. Mr. Farnum came East in 1917 to make "The Heart of a Lion," "Les Miserables" and "Rough and Ready." The first two of this trio were filmed under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who staged Mr. Farnum's newest production.

General Manager W. R. Sheehan describes the distinguished star's present picture as a smashing, fighting tale of life in the Rocky Mountains.

"The story is an original one by Director Lloyd himself," Mr. Sheehan says, "and presents Mr. Farnum in the role that is always associated with his name—that of a strong-hearted, sturdy son of the West. While we are always careful to provide Mr. Farnum with a supporting company of the sterling quality that he and his photoplays merit, we have, I believe, outdone ourselves in 'True Blue.'

"In the cast will be seen some of the most prominent players on the screen. The most important male part, next to Mr. Farnum's, was assigned to Charles Clary, certainly a splendid actor and known for his fine portrayals in so many productions. Francis Carpenter, who gained fame and friends by his 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' 'Babes in the Wood,' 'Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp,' and "Treasure Island,' is also cast in a leading role.

"The Lonely Woman" Heads Triangle Bill

"Paying His Debt," Which Features Roy Stewart in a Dual Role, and Keystone Comedy Complete Program

AMONG Triangle's most popular magazine - writer contributors is John A. Moroso, author of "The Lonely Woman," the opening release of the week of April 28. Belle Bennett has the featured part. In "Paying His Debt," which follows, Roy Stewart has his first dual role since joining the Triangle forces.

The keen understanding of human nature and dramatic values which characterized the two Moroso plays which Triangle recently produced are apparent in "The Lonely Woman." The former stories, "The Shoes That Danced" and "The Hand at the Window," dealt with the New York Underworld. "The Lonely Woman" is a story of woman's love and loyalty, of faith and of prayer, of unshaken belief in the character of the man she loved and undying devotion to the cause of his acquittal and exoneration.

While the man lingered in the Tombs, paying the penalty of another man's crimes, in tears and agony his wife, Martha, took up the hunt for the guilty man. Intuition brought her to a Hudson river town within an hour's ride of New York. There she pitied the village drunkard, Jim Ransom. Gradually a conviction dawned on her consciousness. She prayed for the Miracle to happen!

The sullenness of Jim Ransom gave way to gratitude and gentleness. But the Hudson river town became suspicious of "the mysterious" Martha Sellers. The citizens discovered that she was receiving letters from Ossining prison, more commonly known as Sing Sing. They hounded her. Life became unbearable. Finally the storm that was brewing came to a head. A deputation marched to the Mayor and demanded her removal. She was proclaimed to be an undesirable character.

But Martha Sellers had been praying. She had turned to a Higher Spirit in her hour of need. Jim Ransom found himself at death's door. To cleanse his soul, he made the confession that freed Martha's husband.

"The Lonely Woman" marks the return of Belle Bennett to the screen after her appearance in the recent Los Angeles premier of Ashton Stevens' play, "Mary's Way Out." Miss Bennett was loaned to the Morosco Stock Company for the occasion. Her last picture was "A Soul In Trust," with J. Barney Sherry.

"Paying His Debt," the second release of the week, pictures the efforts of a human "derelict" to come back and the magnetic sweetness of a pitying woman who bestows a kindly word and lends a helping hand.

Roy Stewart, Cliff Smith and Steve Rounds are a trio who have worked together in many productions, of which "Faith Endurin'" and "Boss of the Lazy Y" have been the most recent. Steve Rounds took numerous difficult double exposures for this picture. Stewart has a dual role, appearing as Frank Borden, "The Man," and Peter Morton, "The Vanishing Bandit."

Broken in health, Frank Borden seeks the dry climate of a Western town. Starving and penniless, he arouses the sympathy of Nan Christy, daughter of the owner of the Bar L ranch, who induces him to accept a gold piece as a loan. Borden is found half dead by Pete Morton, his double, who takes him to his shack and nurses him back to health. Then Morton explains to Frank Borden that while the townspeople accept him as a prospector, he really is the mysterious bandit who has been holding up the stage-coach. He proposes that Borden go into the town on the days that he, Morton, decides to hold up the stage, thus establishing an alibi.

Anxious to repay Morton for saving his life, Bordon agrees. During a stage robbery the father of Nan Christy is shot in the arm. He sees the bandit's face and declares he will shoot him on sight. Returning from the town where he played his alibi role, Borden finds a child unconscious by the roadside. He takes the child to the Christy home. There old Christy encounters him. Believing Borden to be the bandit he endeavors to shoot him. Borden flees to the shack, warns Morton to flee and surrenders. He faces death by lynching when it is revealed that his "double" is the outlaw. Nan Christy, who has secretly loved him, then accepts him as her finance.

Josie Sedgwick is the leading woman. Harry Yammamoto, the well-known Japanese actor, who has recently been added to the Triangle forces, appears as Ching, the cook. The cast also includes Walter Perkins, five-year-old Dixie Doll, William Ellingford, William Dyer and Arthur Millett.

"Mr. Miller's Economies," a new Keystone comedy, is the concluding release of the week. Although directors and actors are so accustomed to comedy "stunts" that it is almost impossible to pry a laugh out of them, they were forced to capitulate when Director William Beaudine staged "a darktown ball" as a feature of his piece.

Few of the brunette performers had ever appeared in a picture, but none was camera shy. A jazz band was turned loose and they were instructed to act natural. The result was a screen rioa.

Roy Stewart Completes New Triangle

"Wolves of the Border" Presents Star in Familiar Western Role—"Loyalty of Taro Sam" Also Finished

A NEW "western" with Roy Stewart in the title role has been finished during the past week at the Triangle Culver City studios under the direction of Cliff Smith. This drama, "Wolves of the Border," was adapted from the story by Alvin J. Neitz and deals with life on the Mexican-U. S. frontier. Josie Sedgwick has the leading feminine role. Jack Curtis, who was last seen in "The Hard Rock Breed," has a prominent part. The cast also includes Frank McQuarrie, Louis Durham and Curley Baldwin.

"The Loyalty of Taro Sam," directed by Frank Borzage, also was finished last week. E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband," wrote this story, which combines the mysticism of old Japan with modern American life. The exteriors were done at the Triangle Ranch studio, where the oriental atmosphere was effectively reproduced. Jack Livingston heads the cast. Jack Abbe is Taro Sam. Maud Wayne has the chief feminine role.

"High Stakes," the new crook play in which J. Barney Sherry has the leading part, is well under way under the direction of Jack Conway. Andrew Soutar wrote this play, which relates with the experiences of a modern Raffles. An actress new to Triangle, Jane Miller, has the leading feminine role. Director Rosson, Harvey Clark, Ben Lewis, J. P. Wild, and Myrtle Rishell are in the cast.

William Desmond is working under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron in "Old Hartwell's Cub." This is the story of a young blacksmith who is roused to ambition by the influence of a beautiful girl much above him in station. A feature of the play is the narrow escape of the hero from a mob lynching. Mary Warren, who supported Desmond in "The Sea Panther" and "An Honest Man," has the leading feminine role. Walt Whitman, recently seen in "The Boss of the Lazy Y," has a character role as the aged pastor of a small western town. In the cast are Eugene Burr, Percy Challenger, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette and William Ellingford.

The film editing department has two pictures ready for shipment. One, "Her Decision," was directed by Jack Conway and offers Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry in leading roles. This is the second dramatic appearance of the former Keystone comedienne. She played opposite Desmond in "Society for Sale." Darrell Foss, who was featured in "Her American Husband," has a prominent role. Ann Kroman is cast as a wayward sister. This is the story of a girl who enters into a loveless marriage to keep the dark secret of a sister's disgrace. She loved a man without character and married a man with character, whom she learned to love after he had proved his affection for her. A massive set representing a dancing academy was built for this picture.

"The Mossback" has been put into production during the week. Pauline Starke and William V. Mong have the featured roles. This is the fourth appearance of Pauline Starke as leading woman. Her former vehicles have been "Until They Get Me," "The Shoes That Danced" and "Innocent's Progress."

Margery Wilson and Lee Hill are the featured players in another new production, the working title of which is "Old Loves for New." This is scheduled for May release.

M. P. World in Libel Suit

The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has filed suit in the Supreme Court for libel against the Chalmers Publishing Company in the sum of $250,000 damages. The action was started by Milton M. Goldsmith, general counsel, after a unanimous vote of the Board of Directors so authorizing. The alleged grounds of the libel are several articles in the Moving Picture World, which is published by the Chalmers Publishing Company.

Among the alleged libelous statements of the World is one that speaks of "the nonexistence of the trust fund alleged to have been established by the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc." The World also says regarding the fund: "It was not established and as far as we can discover no attempt was made to establish it." Both these statements are denied by United Picture Theatres, which has already advertised widely a statement from Quinn, Berran & Co., public accountants in the Woolworth building, to the effect that they had verified the existence of this fund and that the 90 per cent of the stock subscriptions of the membership is intact. Furthermore, the Commercial Trust Company of New York has agreed to act as depository of the fund.

Triangle Announces Its May Program

Bill Includes a Romance of the Adirondack Mountains and a Japanese-American Drama

THE Triangle Distributing Corporation announces that its May schedule of releases will include in addition to society dramas and westerns a romance of the Adirondacks and a Japanese-American drama. Margery Wilson, William Desmond, Roy Stewart, Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry are among the featured players.

William Desmond heads the May card in "An Honest Man," which is described as an interesting psychological drama with a keen sidelight on the power of suggestion to mould character. The theme has been embodied in an amusing and diverting play. A carefree, happy-go-lucky tramp with a lusty desire to roam and avoid work suddenly finds himself entrusted with a fortune to be delivered to an unknown girl.

The words, "You're an honest man," ring in his ears, and he measures up to the opinion of the man who utters them.

Mary Warren, who played with Desmond in "The Sea Panther," and with Joe King in "The Vortex," has the leading feminine part. Ann Kroman and Graham Pette have supporting roles. Henry P. Dowst wrote the story. Frank Borzage directed.

"Mlle. Paulette" is the second release of the first week. Frank Condon, Saturday Evening Post writer who has recently joined the Triangle forces, scenarioized the story by George Cowell. The Adirondack mountains provide the locale for the greater part of the play; the remaining scenes show society life in New York. Wallace MacDonald has the leading masculine role. Claire Anderson has the title role.

The week of May 12 opens with "Her Decision." Jack Conway directed this drama, which features Gloria Swanson in her second dramatic role. She played opposite William Desmond in the recent social satire, "Society For Sale." The play is based upon a girl's sacrifice to save her sister. The man she loves refuses to aid her. She deliberately offers herself in marriage to a man she admits she does not love for the purpose of obtaining a share of his money. With a genuine bond of sympathy established, she learns to care for the man who has proved his love for her. J. Barney Sherry has the leading masculine role.

Roy Stewart is featured in "Wolves of the Border," the second release of the week. This story, formerly called "A Man Worth While," was written by Alvin J. Neitz and deals with life on the Mexican-U. S. frontier, showing the struggles of the cattle kings with the Mexican bandits and cattle rustlers. Josie Sedgwick, leading woman, executes many daring feats of horsemanship.

A Japanese-American drama, "The Loyalty of Taro Sam," heads the May 19 program. This is a screen adaptation of the story by the same name by E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband," a recent Triangle release. The action opens in the Land of Cherry Blossoms, where Taro Sam, a rickshaw driver, attracts the attention of an American lawyer, who becomes so interested in the smiling little Japanese that he takes him to America. Here Taro Sam's loyalty is tested and he saves his employer and benefactor from a life of sorrow and bitter regret. Jack Abbe is Taro Sam. Maud Wayne is leading woman.

William Desmond has the title role in "Old Hartwell's Cub," which follows. This is in line with the part he played in "The Sudden Gentleman." Thomas N. Heffron, who directed Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman," and "The Sea Panther," handles the megaphone on this production. Mary Warren has the leading feminine role.

"Old Loves for New," with Margery Wilson and Lee Hill, and "Hundredth Night," are scheduled for release May 26. With these the month's program is concluded.

H. B. Walthall Busy

As an example of the tireless efforts of the actors and directors at the Paralta plant, Henry B. Walthall this week worked twenty-six hours without resting, with the exception of a few minutes intermission for meals. Mr. Walthall reported for work at nine o'clock Monday morning, hurried into his make-up and played all day in two interior sets on one of the stages. At six-thirty he paused for about fifteen minutes for supper in the Paralta cafeteria on the lot and then worked steadily until eleven o'clock Tuesday morning, taking night scenes and some daylight effects in an exterior location on the studio grounds. For twenty-six consecutive hours Mr. Walthall, together with his supporting cast and his director, did not leave the Paralta lot. Director Bertram Bracken, who is making his first Paralta play in this production, was the man responsible for this cruelty.

Miss Castleton Makes World Debut May 20

"Vengeance," the Play, Has a Setting of Mystery and Romance—Montagu Love Takes Leading Male Role

THE impending World picture released on May 20 is unusually interesting to exhibitors for it marks the initial appearance of Barbara Castleton as a World star. Miss Castleton is a familiar figure with picturegoers as a result of the many prominent parts she played in big state rights productions such as "On Trial," "Lone Wolf" and others.

"Vengeance," the title of the forthcoming World picture, is laid in India and England, and has as its central figure an Indian mystic who is played by Montagu Love. Travers Vale directed the picture and the supporting cast consists of George MacQuarrie, Madge Evans, Jack Drumier, Henry Warwick and others.

Mr. Love plays the part of John Cuddlestone, who, having been betrayed by his brother, leaves his paternal home for India. There he marries a native woman and a little son is born. Cuddlestone, however, is killed by a man-eating tiger. The son, John, later, orphaned by the death of his mother, is educated in a temple by the priests and one day while he is on his way from school he saves a girl from the slave market. They live with the old family servant until they are grown up.

John is confirmed in the priesthood and receives his father's papers, which reveal the treachery of the other Lord Cuddlestone. It happens that Lord Cuddlestone is staying at a nearby hotel. John and Nan follow him to England, obtaining the means of doing so by stealing the jeweled eye of Buddha. At the suggestion of a friend, John decides to assume the role of Swami. In England he attains huge success and the ward of Lord Cuddlestone, Lady Elsie, becomes one of his followers.

Lord Cuddlestone, having dissipated his own fortune, draws on that of his ward, and after generously aiding him, she visits the Swami for advice. Nan obtains money for the eye of Buddha and John by a trick fastens on the lord the guilt of cheating at cards at his own club. John then reveals his identity and the nobleman dies from chagrin and anger.

The priests follow John to England to regain the diamond. But the Swami returns the jewel and after making restitution to Lady Elsie of her losses, refuses the vacant title of Cuddlestone and returns to India with Nan.

Brady Asks Loan Report

President William A. Brady, chairman ex-officio of the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has sent a notice to the forty-eight state chairmen requesting them to ascertain, as nearly as possible, the amount of subscriptions which have been made to the loan by individuals and companies of the trade in their respective states and to secure the total amount of subscriptions which have been received through the use of the motion picture theatres and by personal solicitation. Reports from the state chairmen are to be telegraphed to the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, New York, at the close of the campaign, Saturday, May 4.

It is confidently expected that the total of all subscriptions in the United States from the motion picture interests and others received through the motion picture theatres will approximate seventy-five to one hundred million dollars.

Accountants O. K. United Theatres Fund

Find 90 Per Cent of Stock Subscriptions on Deposit Ready to Be Returned in Event of Non-Organization

QUINN, BERRAN & CO., public accountants with offices in the Woolworth Building, New York, have made an investigation of the fund raised by the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., from exhibitors to provide the working capital of that co-operative society, 90 per cent of which is to be returned to the exhibitors in the event of non-organization. Their report is as follows:

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.,
1600 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sirs:—We have completed an audit of your books to date and hereby certify that but ten (10) per cent of the total subscriptions to your capital stock has been used as a working fund for your company. The balance, ninety (90) per cent is on deposit in a special fund as per agreement with your subscribers.

Faithfully yours,
QUINN, BERRAN & COMPANY,
(Signed) Harold D. Greeley,
Certified Public Accountant.

Hart and Company Nearly Shipwrecked

Ince Players Caught in Sudden Squall While Working on "Shark Monroe," but Return Safely

STRUCK by a heavy squall while at sea in a small sailing vessel off the Northern California coast, William S. Hart and a party had a thrilling experience last week, and while no one was seriously injured the Ince star had a narrow escape.

The exigencies of the picture, "Shark Monroe," upon which Hart and his company were engaged, required that the star should jump overboard to save one of the characters. Hart has the part of a mariner.

The company waited for a rather heavy sea to make the picture more realistic, but did not bargain on the full strength of the squall. Hart went overboard and seized his man, but the waves knocked them against the side of the vessel and only by a miracle did the actors escape being crushed.

Finally they were drawn aboard with ropes and then the storm burst in all its fury. For two days they were prevented from doing any work worth mentioning, but this gave the star a chance to rest up.

Many of the company were seasick and the crew were kept busy preventing the little vessel from foundering. Some of the company who happened to be good sailors jumped in and aided the mariners with the sails.

Snow scenes were completed at Truckee and all returned to Hollywood the latter part of the week none the worse for their adventures. Hart immediately started on his Liberty Loan drive at San Diego.

"The Triple Cross" is the title selected for Dorothy Dalton's Paramount picture recently completed under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and directed by R. William Neill. This story is now running serially in All Story Weekly and is undoubtedly one of the most exciting pieces of fiction that has been published for some time. It is the work of Dr. J. U. Geisy and Octavius Roy Cohen, both well known to magazine readers. Dr. Geisy, a Salt Lake City physician who writes on the side, is a master of mystery tales, and Cohen is also a talented fictionist.

"The Triple Cross" is a thrilling mystery story, with all the familiar paraphernalia of such romances, and with a lot of brand new ideas that have been conceived by the authors and which should create a sensation when reproduced on the screen. It deals with a girl employed by the secret service to ferret out Hun plotters and the scene is laid on the mysterious reaches of Long Island. Miss Dalton has a part that taxes all her powers of endurance—she is involved in one tangle after another and escapes by means of most cleverly conceived methods. It is a picture with the war as a background and one, from all report, that will hold the audience till the very last foot of film.

Charles Ray is now well in advance of his Paramount schedule, having completed a Northwestern story as yet unnamed and also a war picture. He is about to begin work upon still another, written by his director, Victor Schertzinger. This will for the first time present the Ince star in the role of a "wise guy."

Enid Bennett is working at Edendale on a desert story under direction of Jerome Storm.

A sensational moment in the Selexart picture, "Blue Blood," which is being distributed through Goldwyn.

Serial Star Comes Near Death

Back from Truckee, the snow fields of California, the Vitagraph company headed by Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are filming interior scenes for "Baree, Son of Kazan" at the Hollywood studio under the direction of David Smith.

Miss Shipman is quite recovered from her recent strenuous scenes made in the icy streams of Truckee and in snow drifts, and has almost forgotten how near death she came in the accident that pinned her under a log in several feet of water in the rapids near Truckee.

Describing her adventure, Miss Shipman said, "The current in the rapids carried me away and imprisoned me under a log, entirely under water. I was to be caught by someone stationed for that purpose in a little cove, but instead of throwing me into the cove, the current took me past it and members of the company ran wildly down the bank after me. It was impossible for me to swim, because the current was so strong and the water was so cold. I absolutely could not help myself in the least.

"When I struck the log and my head was taken down under it and held there, I lost consciousness and was surprised to find myself, when coming to, upon the bank with every member of the company pounding me violently."

"Petrova Club" Formed

Madame Olga Petrova has recently been the recipient of a unique honor bestowed upon her by several society girls of Hagerstown, Maryland. Under the leadership of Julia Clagett, fifty of the southern city's social leaders have formed a "Petrova Club." It is planned to extend the activities of this new fraternity by establishing branches in all of the important cities of the United States.

For the past few months Madame Petrova has received innumerable requests from school and college social organizations to permit the use of her name in connection with the various societies identified with the different educational institutions. The young ladies of Hagerstown are the first to win this distinction for their club and the Polish actress herself may pay a flying visit to Maryland in the near future for the purpose of signing the new charter.

She has already contributed an exclusive personally autographed picture of herself for the reception-room of the "Petrova Club" and the members will have a reproduction of this photograph made upon membership buttons done in celluloid. The new organization will attend all showings of Madame Petrova special productions in a body.

Comedy Based on Blue Tights

Polly Moran, the Mack Sennett comedienne who has won fame by her "Sheriff Nell" impersonations, is a woman who can double in tights and six shooters. Polly handles a revolver as expertly as any western sheriff's deputy, but in "Saucy Madeline," the Paramount-Mack Sennett release of April 22, she donned blue tights with stunning effect.

Her husband, played by Charles Lynn, was stunned the most when he beheld the partner of his joys and sorrows—mostly sorrows—thus attired. He soon came into action, however, and his pursuit of Ben Turpin, on whom the jealous husband sought to wreak his vengeance, and of Polly makes an exciting finish.

All the trouble arises through the unconquerable jealousy of Charlie, who is the keeper of a bowling alley. Turpin, a small town roustabout, comes there to work, and just because he can't make his eyes behave when Polly is around the jealous husband several times is on the verge of apoplexy. The climax comes when Polly, in her charitable zeal, volunteers to take part in a benefit for the Old Bowlers' Home, and selects a costume more pleasing to the eyes of the audience than to a jealous husband.

It's "Fisher" Now

Margarita Fisher, of the American Film Company, held a little ceremony last week at the Santa Barbara studios, where she plucked the "C" bodily from her name and flung it in the face of Germany.

"Considering that my parents and grandparents were born in America and that I was born in Oregon, I consider that a Hunnish 'C' has no place in my name," said Miss Fisher, "so out it comes—just like that!"

Minter Play Retitled

The next production from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., starring Mary Miles Minter, will be released as "Social Briars." It was produced under the working title of "The Greater Call." It is set for release on Mutual schedule May 6.

Ray Wears "Chaps" in "Playing the Game"

Ince Star Has Role of Young Waster Who Is Redeemed by Life on a Ranch in the Rugged West

WHEN Charles Ray's latest Ince-Paramount picture, "Playing the Game," reaches the screen the public will find a new sort of character interpreted by the young star. Attired in "chaps" and a Stetson hat, Ray appears as a virile type developed from unpromising material of the east.

The story is by Julian Josephson and has to do with Larry Prentiss (Mr. Ray), a wealthy youth who is wasting his substance in riotous living. Prentiss discovers that a frame-up with a girl has been planned against him by a man named Trent and in his anger strikes the latter, who falls and is apparently killed. Advised to flee, Prentiss leaves for an uncle's ranch in Arizona. There he is informed by wire that Trent was only stunned, but instead of returning to the east he decides to live the western life in reality for a time.

He and his valet—an ex-prize fighter—get jobs as ranch hands, and are harrassed by the foreman, who finally takes a beating at the hands of Prentiss. The identity of Prentiss is discovered, but meantime he has fallen in love with Moya, daughter of the manager of the ranch, and they plan to remain in the southwest, framing their future lives in the open country and the free air.

Doris Lee supports Mr. Ray as Moya and a capable cast is employed under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, with the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Ray's work will be accentuated by the scenic and lighting effects. Mr. Ince, with G. Harold Percival, technical director, collaborated on one particular ocean shot which they believe will be one of the most beautiful examples of photography that has been seen in a long time. The foreground was built up expertly and the scene shot through a house and out of the rear window. Remarkable effects of light and shadow upon the rippling waves will present a view that is certain to cause a gasp of delight from every audience.

Snow Scenes in New Serial

In the next Vitagraph serial, the William Duncan feature which is to follow "The Woman in the Web," a large part of the action will take place in the snows. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the authors, located the greater part of the play in the western mountains during the winter months and it was up to Duncan to find locations to fit the story.

The director-star went on a scouting trip and located "the ideal place" in the Big Bear Valley of California, north of San Bernardino. Then he sent a force of builders up there and had a temporary studio erected. When the studio was finished, Duncan and ten members of his company, together with the technical staff, took several weeks provisions and went to the scene.

Look out now! It's a scene from the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Saucy Madeline."

Letters to the Editor

A FORUM OPEN TO ALL

"WHILE the motion picture manufacturers and exhibitors are worrying about the effect of the war, distribution costs, film rentals, etc., etc., on the motion picture industry, they are all asleep to a menace which is in the meantime eating like a filthy ulcer at the root, trunk and branch of the entire industry.

"The whole matter can be summed up in the few words contained in a remark made by one of our motion picture patrons: 'I will not permit my family to attend a motion picture theatre exploiting a star who is known to be immoral.'

"Every day the exhibitor is being confronted by his patrons in regard to the illicit conduct of a star he is exhibiting or is going to exhibit.

"Every self-respecting exhibitor is disgusted as his daily newspaper holds up another 'film' favorite covered with the foul sewage of scandal.

"No business exploiting people whose home life is known to be impure will long endure.

"A few weeks ago I sat in the private office of one of the big film men for an hour while he strenuously denied to the press that a certain film favorite was shot by the husband of another film favorite. This was in Chicago; today I received word from Baltimore, Md., that a father would not permit his children to patronize a theatre showing these stars because they were familiar with this same ugly rumor. This is only one example of how far-reaching is this greatest menace to the industry.

"It is the height of absurdity to expect decent people to watch a play depicting purity, cleanliness, wholesomeness, morality, enacted by a star of either sex who has violated the sanctity of their own homes by illicit relations and the fact known throughout the country. It is far better for all that the same play be produced with unknown performers.

"I trust the manufacturers and exhibitors will awaken to this greatest peril that assails the motion picture industry. The fact that it is known that a star is immoral should be a just cause for the manufacturer to terminate their contract, also for the exhibitor to be relieved of the disgrace of being obliged to present them to his patrons. Such stars should be at once pushed back where they belong. We wouldn't want to present such people in our homes; why foist them upon a respectable audience?

"It is up to the trade papers, manufacturers and exhibitors to purge the industry of these characters, no matter how popular they are now, before the public places motion pictures out of the class of entertainment for the entire family.

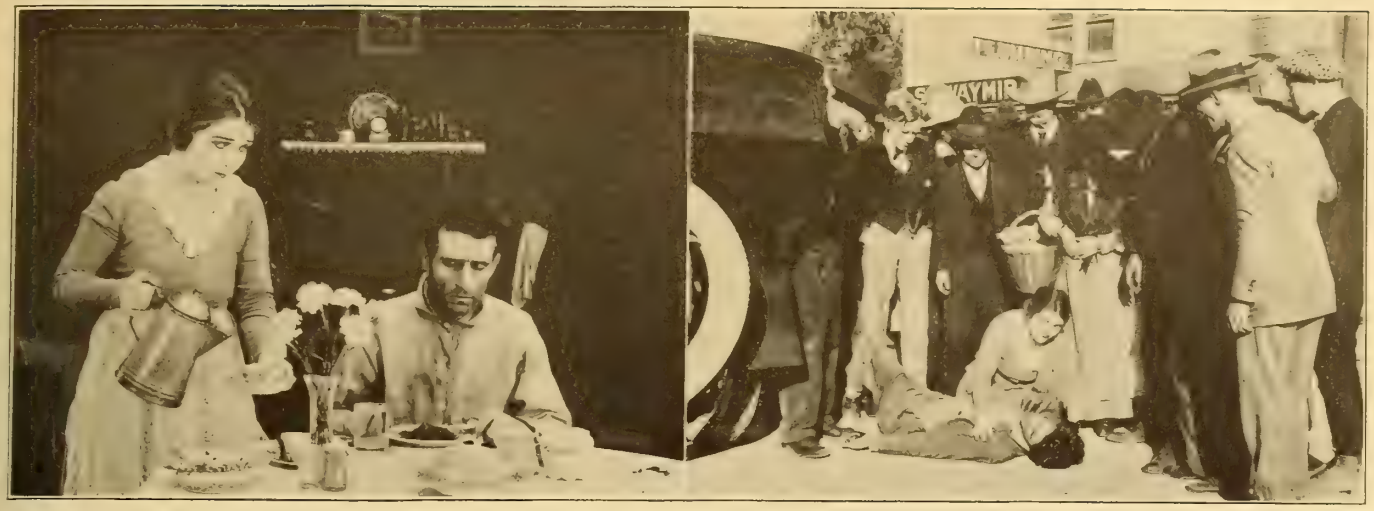
"I read Motography and find that you are doing everything in your power to help the exhibitor. You will be doing us the greatest favor of all if you will go after the exchanges to give the exhibitors better service. I think I can truthfully say that the large film corporations lose more business through the careless booking of the exchanges than in any other way. Here are a few examples of how they treat the exhibitor:

"They will book you for a certain feature, sending the advertising a week ahead, and your patrons look forward to seeing that picture on the night for which you have scheduled it. Then when the films arrive you find that they have sent some other picture and not the one which you had ordered and do not even include advertising sheets.

'It often happens that they repeat a picture time after time. When you receive your bill and you call their attention to this fact they ignore your letter and do it again if they please.

"You can outline your service and ask if they can furnish it at a certain price. Instead of answering your letter the first thing you hear is that the films are at the express office for you, when you did nothing but ask for information. Then a week or two later they send you a bill. They, of course, must pay the express both ways as we exhibitors refuse to do so. After an occurrence of this kind they trouble you for weeks, wanting you to pay for something you did not use.



"I have run a serial and have found one reel to be part two of the serial and the other to be some worn-out comedy. What can you do in a case like that, but close the house for the night?

"Often an exchange will make you a price on service. You accept it, but when the bill arrives you find that they have charged you much more. If you discontinue their service in order to straighten this out they will trouble you for weeks with their bills.

"If you write to an exchange for information they wait two weeks or more before they answer or do not answer at all.

"Some of them make you give a deposit for—so they say—the last two features. When you do this and then have to discontinue their service, your deposit is tied up for several months. Of course, they say the New York house must reimburse them before they can settle with you.

"They agree to send posters a week ahead of the film and often they do not send the posters until they send the films, which gives you only a few hours' lobby display. I have often gone to five or ten dollars extra expense advertising a certain feature and they send something else, but you must pay just as though you had received the picture you had advertised because you are only a small potato in their eyes and they can do you as they please. It does no good to discontinue their service, for the other man will be just like this one.

"I have sent in my order for one six-, two three- and two one-sheets. On checking up there would be only one sheet for one feature. I once wrote and called their attention to this and what did they do? Nothing! But you have to pay for what you order, whether you get it or not. They are always ready to charge, but never to give credit.

"I do not think any of these managers have ever been exhibitors, or they would surely try to give better service. From the way they do business they must have been picked up from the street. I have done business with most of them and have found almost all alike. Sometimes you will find a live exchange manager, but not often—they are as scarce as hens' teeth.

"I read a letter from an exhibitor in your last issue. He was complaining, but thought it was all because he was new in the business, but he should not get that idea. They treat every one alike. I have been in the business for years and get the same service.

"Now, if you want to help the exhibitors as much as possible, go after the film corporations to see that their exchanges give better service, or put someone in charge who will do so and they will find that their service will not be discontinued as often as formerly.

"There is no system to their business. They charge one exhibitor a certain price, and another must pay almost twice that amount, and there is no difference in the population of the towns.

"I would like to hear from more exhibitors as to the treatment they receive from the exchanges and I think they will all be on the same band wagon as I am. All exhibitors should take their foot off the soft pedal and go after better service. This would make the picture business a pleasure instead of a continual worry.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "E. R. BRALY."

Guterson's remarkable orchestra is the best musical organization of Seattle, and Guterson, who used to be at Rector's (now the Claridge), New York, is merely Guterson in Seattle, as you would speak of Caruso or Melba. To him Mr. Clemmer attributes much of the credit for the success of the Clemmer Theatre.

"Messrs. Jensen and Von Herberg, with houses in both Butte and Portland, have four excellent theatres in Seattle, all of them with big seating capacity, and are playing to enormous patronage.

"A remarkable example of newspaper co-operation is furnished by the Seattle Times, through its owners, Joseph and Clarence Blethen, and their able picture editor, George H. Bellman. I believe that the Seattle Times gives the exhibitor better co-operation than any other newspaper in the United States. Next to it I would rank the Los Angeles Evening Herald under the direction of Guy Price.

"Some day the rank and file of exhibitors will learn that inefficient local newspaper exploitation is the weakest spot in the amusement mechanism, and correcting this will enlarge their gross patronage anywhere from fifteen to thirty per cent.

"Beyond question at this moment the country from Omaha west is on the boom. In the latter city A. H. Blank is about to open his big new Sixteenth street theatre. Much to my surprise, war conditions are not holding up the construction of new theatres."

Thanhouser to Produce Again, Report

Plans Said to Have Been Made for Filming of Six Superfeatures a Year as Well as Program Pictures

THE THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION, it is reported, will shortly resume active production at its studios in New Rochelle. Plans have been perfected, it is said, for the filming of six big super-features a year, which will be released through the Arrow Film Corporation, as well as a number of propaganda and program pictures.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who is also treasurer and the active manager of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, was noncommittal when asked about Thanhouser's plans. He admitted it was probable that the company would soon resume making pictures, but said he could not announce any definite plans at the present time.

Thanhouser has been out of the production field for some time. For several years it was one of the best known producing organizations in the world and some of the most noteworthy pictures ever seen on the screen were filmed in its studios. In the old days Thanhouser set a pace for most of the other producers. It was perfectly capable of doing this, for on the Thanhouser payroll were some of the keenest and best equipped mentalities in the entire industry and many of the devices and inventions that have since facilitated and so greatly improved the making and showing of motion pictures were thought out and perfected in the New Rochelle studios.

Unlike many other picture organizations, Thanhouser temporarily discontinued producing with plenty of money in the bank and a high financial rating in Wall Street. The officials of the company determined to quit making pictures for a while; "let the wheel spin, and then enter the actual production game again with a lot of new, practical ideas."

When the company stopped filming in its own name it had, according to banking reports, a bank balance of more than $275,000. This has never been withdrawn and will probably remain intact until the company launches its new activities.

The Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle are among the best equipped of their kind in the country. They have been leased at various times to different producers and only recently the Clara Kimball Young company completed its Eastern work there and left for California. Many Eastern producers have tried to buy the studios, but the Thanhouser company has always retained them.

A few weeks ago the Thanhouser company held its annual meeting and elected Crawford Livingston president, Wilbert Shallenberger, vice president; A. E. Jones, secretary, and W. E. Shallenberger, vice president and treasurer. The following were elected directors: Felix Kahn, Crawford Livingston, Wilbert Shallenberger, A. E. Jones, Gerald Livingston, W. E. Shallenberger and Jessie Bishop.

Stoll Gets British Goldwyn Rights

Famous English Magnate Will Have Exclusive Distribution in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales

THE biggest foreign aliance made by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is announced to the effect that exclusive distribution of all Goldwyn productions for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales will be under the name and direction of Oswald Stoll, one of the greatest amusement magnates in the world.

Negotiations with Mr. Stoll have been conducted by R. S. Edmondson, the widely known London representative of Goldwyn, and the arrival in Great Britain of the first eight Goldwyn productions is hailed by the British trade press and by the principal amusement journals of the empire as being an event of great significance.

The association of such an important name with the Goldwyn productions in the United Kingdom is another example of the world-wide confidence that has been established by Goldwyn through the medium of its quality productions. The Kinematograph, in telling of the arrival of these productions, aptly says by way of editorial greeting: "These Goldwyn pictures are the most faultless and beautiful productions ever received in England."

In less than eight months from the date of its first American release, Goldwyn has completed a world-wide organization, with representation in every part of the habitable glove with the exception of the Teutonic powers and their allies.

The British distribution will be made under the name of the Oswald Stoll Film Company, with offices throughout the United Kingdom. Film-renters for months have shown a remarkable interest in Goldwyn and the manner of its English distribution and Mr. Edmondson reports that never during his long film experience abroad has he encountered so many inquiries about an American company.

Final negotiations are now in progress for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in France, Italy, the Dutch East Indies, Switzerland, India, Burmah and Ceylon, China and the Philippines, Cuba, Japan, Holland, Spain and Portugal, where the leading film interests of each country are to be drawn into immediate alliance with Goldwyn's American organization.

Big Scenes in World Film

A convention scene is a marked feature in "The Heart of a Girl" directed by John Adolfi, which required the service of 1500 persons, working all day and part of the early hours of the morning. Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings play the leads of the story which was written by Maravene Thompson and is scheduled for release by the World on July first.

William Harrison has resigned as manager of the Empire Theatre, London, Canada. The theatre has changed hands.

Gets "Crucible of Life" in Addition to "Men"

U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Will Distribute Features in America and Canada Through Foursquare

TWO new super-feature productions have been added to the list of big attractions acquired by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. Frank G. Hall, president of the concern, announces that he has purchased "The Crucible of Life," a patriotic masterpiece starring Grace Darmond, as well as "Men," the six part drama of modern New York life by Harry S. Sheldon, both of which will be distributed through the Foursquare exchanges throughout the United States and Canada. The Robertson-Cole company will handle the foreign distribution.

"The Crucible of Life," purchased from the Authors Film Company, Inc., is a melodrama of society and the great war and was adapted from the famous Broadway stage success of "Fairfax" by Bartley Campbell. The production was fashioned by Captain Harry Lambart and his supervision of the subjects rings true in every scene.

There is nothing quite so strongly in favor of a dramatic presentation, whether it be on the stage or screen, as sentimental interest. This, it may be said without exaggerating, "The Crucible of Life" possesses in abundance. There is the melodramatic, the straight dramatic, the social side and the merest touch of war.

Featured are Grace Darmond and Jack Sherrill. Others who have important roles are Frank O'Connor, Winifred Harris and Edwin Forsberg.

Embracing an all-star cast, headed by Charlotte Walker and Gertrude McCoy, "Men" has been conceded by critics to be one of the most absorbing dramatic productions of the year. It was produced by the Bacon-Backer interests, who spared neither time nor expense.

Written by Harry S. Sheldon, from whose pen have come many of the best productions ever seen on the stage or screen, "Men" unfolds a gripping story and intimate exposure of metropolitan society life, in which a series of powerful dramatic climaxes holds the interest of the spectator from the beginning to the end.

The direction of "Men" was under the supervision of Perry Vekroff, who has produced many productions for important concerns. Settings were designed by Leo Kathe and form not the least important feature of the production.

Goldwyns in Australian Debut

Correspondence just received from J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd., dated Sydney, March 13, tells of the gala Australian opening of Goldwyn Pictures in the Commonwealth at the Theatre Royal, Sydney's greatest amusement institution.

So enthusiastic are the executives of the big Williamson interests that Hugh J. Ward and F. W. Thring, the managing director of Williamson Films, delayed the inauguration of Goldwyn productions until the theatre had been entirely renovated and redecorated, and while this was in progress a special orchestra was organized and publicly announced as "the Goldwyn Symphony Orchestra." This marks the introduction in Sydney of the American method of picture presentation in conjunction with large orchestras.

"Never in my experience have I seen such tremendous attendance as marked our opening with your splendid Rex Beach production, 'The Auction Block,' on March 9," writes Mr. Ward. "From the moment the doors were opened long lines stood waiting outside and at no time on our opening day was the pavement cleared of this line."

Fay Tincher Returns to Coast

Fay Tincher, noted comedienne, who last week signed with World to release on its regular program, this week returned to Hollywood from New York, to begin work at once in the Willis-Inglis studio on her first World-made picture.

It is scheduled for release July 1, following the release on May 1 and June 1 respectively, of the first Fay Tincher-World features, "Some Job" and "Main 1-2-3-." These are said to set a new standard for comedy-drama.

En route west Miss Tincher stopped in Chicago, where she made a talk in the interests of the third Liberty loan drive. Continuing on her way, she wrote the script for her next production, as is her custom. As each episode was completed she wired it from the various stations to her director, Al Santell, so that he will have her company all ready for production immediately upon her arrival.

Found—an Ideal "Vamp!"

Victor L. Schertzinger's story in which Thomas H. Ince will present Charles Ray to Paramount patrons calls for a vampire who is a perfect thirty-six.

Of vampires the Los Angeles motion picture colony boasts an ample supply, but the Schertzinger requirements were so exacting that it was feared the part would have to be rewritten—he demanded that this particular "vamp" be young, clever, beautiful and a blonde!

Dozens of girls who have enviable reputations as vampires were paraded before the searching eye of Author-Director Schertzinger, but everyone seemed to have some ailment, either of a physical character or a too exalted idea of the financial value of her services.

Then, just as the author was beginning to think he had better alter the plans and specifications, along came Beverly Travers, who admitted that if it was a question of having acted before the screen, she had not had as much experience as some other actresses; but if it was a matter of youth, cleverness, a perfect thirty something or other and the possession of blonde pulchritude that had never been acquainted with a bottle of peroxide, she would take her chances with any in the entire country!

Which will explain why Charles Ray will have the assistance of Miss Travers in this picture and why all the young actors in and about the Ince studios are paying more and stricter attention to their haberdashery than ever before.

Oh, yes! Perhaps it is worth mentioning that Miss Travers has the role of a corset model.

Gets Second Toronto House

There is a strong tendency on the part of large film renting companies of Canada to acquire theatres in various large centers of the dominion in which to present their own first run releases.

It is now officially announced that Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, which already has the fine Regent theatre there, has taken over the Garden at College street and Spadina avenue, which is now being managed by Fred Stonge.

It is also announced that Ben, Jules and J. J. Allen, who constitute the Famous Players' Film Service, Limited, and the Temple Theatre Corporation, have acquired the Beaver theatre in West Toronto.

An orchestra of fifty pieces, under the direction of Arthur Dunham, accompanies the Edison feature, "The Unbeliever," now playing at the Auditorium Theatre. Ada Gardner and Hardy Williamson, well known concert artists, are soloists on the program.

Two performances a day are given at prices from twenty-five cents to one dollar. The picture is preceded by two elaborate stage sets, one of marines in camp and another showing them boarding ship for France, with a representation of New York harbor and the Statue of Liberty.

At the opening performance, given Sunday night, Lieutenant John Phillip Sousa lead the Jackie Band in one of his latest marches. Captain McLean Nichols gave a stirring patriotic speech. One hundred and fifty young society women acted as ushers and sold Liberty Bonds. Boxes were occupied by army and navy officials and added to the military aspect of the occasion.

Mr. Stern states that "The Unbeliever" is meeting with unusual success wherever run. It has been presented in the finest theatres. The Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, managed by S. Barrett McCormick, gave it an especially artistic and worthy setting.

The trend of affairs in picture theatres, Mr. Stern finds, is toward larger and fewer theatres and more elaborate presentations and longer runs.

Just at present Major Funkhouser has aroused the indignation of artists throughout the country by ordering the removal of the famous statue, "The Sower," made by Albin Polasek, which surmounts the steps of the Art institute on Michigan avenue.

Director Eggers of the institute protested against the order, stating that the statue had stood outside one of the buildings at the Pan-American exposition in San Francisco and also at Buffalo without being found objectionable. Philip I. Solomon of the George Kleine Company, merits the title, "live wire salesman." His interest in and knowledge of the theatres in his territory is noteworthy. If an exhibitor is doing good work along some line—in music or advertising, or setting forth a high-class program—Mr. Solomon likes to pass the word along to the press. Here is a salesman with his finger-tips on every phase of his business. He notes every change and improvement because he is interested with all the vigor he possesses.

Another distinguished campaigner here last week was Douglas Fairbanks. A program, including a parade, was arranged in his honor, the most interesting part of which was his visit to the shops at Pullman. He was enthusiastically welcomed there and his speech to the workers, the majority of whom are of foreign birth, was received with cheers.

Fairbanks also addressed a gathering at the Billy Sunday tabernacle.

The Chicago picture theatres as well as those all over the country are aiding to the best of their ability the promotion of the Third Liberty Loan. Not only are speakers for the cause heard from their stages and patriotic pictures shown, but slides are run at each performance and almost all of the theatres have increased their advertisements in the daily papers to include a plea for Liberty Bonds.

"The Spirit of '76," a historical picture ruled against in Chicago as pro-German, has caused the conviction in Los Angeles of Robert Goldstein, the producer, on charges of violation of the espionage act. A federal court jury found him guilty of exhibiting "scenes intended to incite hatred against the British."

W. D. Burford is planning to spend a week in Wisconsin looking after the affairs of his LaCrosse house. Mr. Burford has just finished overhauling the Star Theatre at Aurora. One of the improvements was the installation of an indirect lighting system.

S. E. Schaffer, a skilled operator, recently with Dwight Elmendorf, the lecturer, has taken over the Vitagraph projection room in the Chapin and Gore building, 207 South Wabash avenue, and will screen pictures for any company which needs this service.

The Woodlawn Theatre, Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue, a beautiful new South Side picture house, opened its doors to the public this week. The Essanay-Kleine feature, "A Pair of Sixes," starring Taylor Holmes, was the opening attraction.

F. O. Nielsen, who formerly managed the Parkway theatre, is now in charge of the Calo theatre for Ascher Brothers. J. B. Koppel, who has been managing both the Calo and the Adelphi theatres, is now free to give all his attention to the latter house.

Mary Pickford's Chicago Liberty Loan campaign was so successful on Saturday, April 20, that she returned the following Monday to allow those who had been kept away by bad weather to have a chance to meet her and buy more bonds.

The Irving Park Theatre, 4003 Irving Park Boulevard, under the management of R. M. Powers, gives special attention to its musical programs. This is a very beautiful new theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,000.

"My Four Years in Germany," the picture which sets forth former Ambassador James W. Gerard's message, begins its Chicago run at the Colonial Theatre April 29, playing to regular theatre prices.

C. W. Eckhardt set out last week on a tour of the Fox exchanges in the middle west. His trip will take him to Kansas City, Omaha, Denver and Minneapolis.

J. B. Rogers is acting as manager of the local Pathe exchange pending the appointment of a successor to R. O. Proctor, who was made division manager.

Friends of Charley Strombaugh, manager of the Standard Film Company at Minneapolis, hear that he has been made made manager of Pathe at Omaha.

Richard Fox, who has charge of the northern peninsula of Michigan for George Kleine, reports that business in that part of the country is lively.

Fred Young—young by name and nature, but not in film experience—has charge of the Milwaukee territory for the George Kleine System.

Gordon Francis, manager of the Hyde Park Theatre, is among those called to the colors in the May draft and will soon be serving Uncle Sam.

The Langley Theatre, Sixty-third street and Langley avenue, has been reopened after a fire which necessitated redecoration.

William Jenner, manager of the Chicago Fox exchange, leaves early next week for a trip through the Indiana territory.

M. Rosenstein of the Bijou Theatre at LaCrosse was in Chicago last week on business.

R. O. Proctor has left Chicago on his first business trip as division manager of Pathe.

O. P. McElroy has joined the sales force of Pathe. He was formerly with Fox.

Gladys Brockwell Fools Fox

The name of Gladys Brockwell has become associated with dual roles and double exposures because these features have been prominent in many of her productions for William Fox.

In "Her One Mistake," Miss Brockwell's newest drama, the Fox offices declare that she attains greater heights than ever because this time her impersonations are so widely different, not only in character, but in physical appearance.

It is said that Miss Brockwell has been so adept at her makeup that even exhibitors will find it extremely difficult to believe that Peggy Malone is none other than Miss Brockwell herself.

"I was myself astonished to see the remarkable differences between Harriet Gordon and Peggy Malone," Mr. Fox said, "and I am sure that a large number of patrons are going to question the fact that Miss Brockwell really appeared in both parts. Exhibitors are assured, however, that Miss Brockwell was only doubling for herself. That she succeeded so well is but another tribute to her art."

George Scarborough, the noted playwright, provided the story for "Her One Mistake," and the picture was staged by Edward J. Le Saint. It is one of the Fox Special Features.

Fox Star Gets New Leading Man

Work is progressing rapidly on "The Firebrand," Virginia Pearson's big dramatic production, the action of which is laid in Russia. Edmund Lawrence is in charge of Miss Pearson's new vehicle and is filming the play at a Brooklyn studio. Mr. Lawrence made his directorial debut for William Fox with "A Daughter of France."

Victor Sutherland was engaged last week to portray the leading male character of "The Firebrand." Like Miss Pearson, Mr. Sutherland, who is one of the best-known "opposites" in pictures, is a native of Kentucky. He was born in Paducah, while Miss Pearson comes from Louisville. When he was only nineteen, Mr. Sutherland played for twenty-five weeks as the man with the double personality in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Mr. Sutherland has been in photodramas for five years and will be recalled for his excellent work opposite Miss Pearson in "Daredevil Kate," one of her greatest successes.

Vancouver to Get New House

After being dark for a year, the Pantages Theatre of Vancouver, B. C., is receiving extensive repairs and improvements and will be renamed as the Regent and reopened as a moving picture and vaudeville house.

Alexander Clemes is the owner.

Crane Films Feature Scene

A skating scene at a county fair with one hundred children proves one of the most attractive features in the new Madge Evans production, "Clarissa," which signalizes the coming to World Pictures of Director Frank Crane.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

LOUIS WILLIAMS, manager of William Fox's Star Theatre, One Hundred and Seventh street and Lexington avenue, New York, enlisted last week in the United States army. He is now stationed with the 321st Signal Corps at Camp Upton as a telegrapher. Mr. Williams had become twenty-one since the passage of the draft bill and was probably one of the youngest theatrical managers in the metropolis, if not in the entire country. He was assistant manager of the Star for two years and had been in charge a little more than a year. The employes of the theatre presented him with a wrist watch before his departure.

The first intimation the offices of the World Film Corporation had that John Bowers had taken to himself a bride was when just prior to the leaving of June Elvidge and her supporting company, under the direction of Travers Vale, for North Carolina, to take exteriors for "The Echo Girl," he made application for a stateroom. Heretofore on out of town trips he had been content with a lower berth. Upon inquiry as to why he needed a stateroom he replied that in renewing his contract for two years he had celebrated by marrying Rita Heller. Mrs. Bowers is not an actress.

General Manager Arthur S. Kane of Select made a flying trip to Buffalo last week for a conference with Charles R. Rogers, Select's branch manager in that city. Mr. Rogers has been doing phenominal work with Select contracts in the Buffalo territory. His week ending April 6 broke all records for that territory and the following week, ending April 13, Mr. Rogers' rentals ran $1,500 higher than the week before.

It was felt that personal recognition should be made of such work and Mr. Kane took this occasion to extend the glad hand of congratulation to his efficient executive.

Myron T. Conhaim and Lee A. Horn have sold their interests in the Supreme Feature Film Company exchange at Minneapolis to Frank Thayer, former manager of the Calhoun Theatre, a suburban house. The Supreme is one of the leading independent exchanges of the northwest, having branches at Great Falls, Mont.; Milwaukee, Fargo, N. D., and Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Conhaim has been drafted. Mr. Horn has not announced his future plans.

General Film announces the appointment of a new manager for its Detroit sales office in the person of M. S. Bailey, who takes charge at once. Mr. Bailey is one of the best known and most popular film men of Michigan. For four years he was in charge of local sales for Universal. More recently he has been manager of the Metropolitan Film Company, distributor of the Detroit Free Press news weekly and manager of the Drury Lane Theatre.

Of great interest to New York exhibitors is the announced removal of General Film Company's city sales office from its downtown location to an uptown suite in the heart of the metropolitan film district. The new quarters will be in the Godfrey building, 729 Seventh avenue. The removal was begun April 20 and from now on business will be done at the new address. J. A. Hammell is the exchange manager.

Mother Mary Maurice, the "grand old lady" of Vitagraph, has gone to Port Carbon, Pa., for a long rest. She was critically ill in a Brooklyn hospital for three weeks and only a few days ago was permitted to leave. She is still in a weak condition and it will be weeks before she will be able to appear on the screen again. She will spend the period of convalescence with relatives at Port Carbon.

Harry Hollander, brother of W. K. Hollander, Chicago Daily News photoplay critic, has resigned from the sales force of the Fox exchange at Minneapolis to accept a position with the Select exchange there. Mr. Hollander, with Fox for almost three years, resigned following several weeks' illness and will take up his new duties after his health is improved.

The Famous Players Film Service, Limited, has made a number of changes in the management of its exchange branches in eastern Canada. Mitchell Bernstein has become manager of the Montreal branch in succession to Harry Price, who resigned. Joe Kauffman, formerly of Montreal and Toronto, has taken over the management of the St. John office of the company.

Announcement is made of the appointment of G. A. Smith as manager of distribution of the division of films of the committee on public information. For more than three years Mr. Smith has been connected with Pathe in executive positions. A short time ago he was appointed assistant director general of productions, from which position he resigned to accept the appointment to the division of films.

The Rialto Theatre, New York, will blossom out with a complete new stage setting next week by way of celebrating its second anniversary. William S. Hart in his new Artcraft photodrama, "The Tiger Man," will be the chief attraction and Mr. Rothapfel is arranging chorus numbers, film novelties and special musical features of a sort to make the occasion noteworthy.

Mary Pickford last week wound up her tour in New York City in connection with the third Liberty loan at the "big three" motion picture theatres on Broadway, the Strand, Rivoli and Rialto. Advance announcements stating that the famous little Artcraft star would appear in person drew record crowds and many thousands jammed the vicinity of the theatres clamoring for admission.

R. S. Davidson, a stock broker of Wall Street, Louis B. Jennings and Harry Brolaskie, all of New York City, have been indicted in connection with the sale of stock of the Standard Films Industries. More than $300,000 of this stock has been sold on representations that the company was in possession of a process which would revolutionize the moving picture industry, and that it was in position to turn out 2,000,000 feet of films a week.

A panic was narrowly averted recently, when the Rex Theatre at Louisville caught fire. A film in the projection room became ignited accidentally. It was the fourth fire the Rex has experienced within a year. The audience became excited when the theatre was filled with smoke, but left in an orderly manner when Manager Koch assured them there was no danger.

The employes of the Madison Theatre, Detroit, Michigan, had a thrilling battle with three bandits recently. The men forced their way into the theatre and were surprised at their work in the office of the house manager. They had rifled four safes in the building when they were caught and their booty of over five thousand dollars taken from them.

A fire recently damaged Wright's

Theatre at Waterloo, N. Y., to the extent of $1,400 loss. The film in the machine caught fire and instantly the steel booth was a mass of flames. The operator escaped without injury and closed the door, but the interior of the booth was destroyed, including the operating machine and several films.

Charlie Chaplin, now on tour of the United States in behalf of the third Liberty loan, has been drafted for the army and will probably enter the service in June, according to a report from the Los Angeles exemption board. Chaplin, who is an Englishman, has waived his exemption rights and will serve in the United States army.

C. F. Pope, secretary of the Trinity Trading Corporation, a motion picture film concern at 501 Fifth avenue, New York City, has been arrested, charged with larceny of $1,750. The charge was made by Chester Beecroft, president of the company, who claims the money should have been turned over to the Apollo Pictures, Inc.

Charlie Stombaugh, manager of the Minneapolis office of Standard Film, who resigned to accept the managership of the Pathe exchange at Omaha, has been succeeded by Henry Muir, former Bluebird manager in Minneapolis and more recently with the Paramount and General exchanges of the Flour City.

David B. Gally of New York has become the director and leading man of the Pan-American Film Company, Limited, which has taken over the studio of the Canadian General Features at Trenton, Ontario. The leading woman selected by the new company is Marie Lambert.

Select headquarters in New York had a welcome visitor last week in the person of Harry David, associate manager and publicity director of the California Theatre, San Francisco, the beautiful $2,000,000 house of which Eugene H. Roth is the managing director.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary Pickford, caused the arrest of a young man in a crowd before which the star was speaking in her recent New York campaign. The man had made derogatory remarks about Mary.

On account of the good showing made by the Philadelphia branch, Max Milder, in charge of the Select office there, has been chosen to visit other Select branches and help out by installing sales methods which he has found successful.

The seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest is to be held at the West Hotel, in the city of Minneapolis, May 7 and 8. This will be a business meeting only.

Carl Krusada, advertising manager for Paralta Plays, Inc., and one of the most popular men of the industry in New York, is the happy possessor of the first Liberty bond of the third series which was sold in the metropolis.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., exporters, has just received from his London associates a paper cutter made from various parts of a Hun Zeppelin captured in a raid made on London last December.

George J. Ekre, formerly General Film representative at Spokane Washington, is again with that company. He has just been appointed manager of General's branch at Portland, Oregon, and has already taken up his new duties.

That Charlie Chaplin has lost none of his popularity was forcibly demonstrated at the Strand Theatre, New York, last week. Sunday, the opening date of his new picture, broke all previous Strand records. Sixteen thousand persons paid admission. The receipts were $5,604.

James Crang is now the manager of the Oakwood Theatre, the fine suburban house of Toronto, Canada, recently built. He has succeeded Fred Stonge, who has taken charge of the New Garden Theatre.

John Bowers, who has just signed a long term contract with World.

A. L. Gorman has become manager of the Montreal office of the General Film Company in succession to James Clancy, who has entered the theatre business in Philadelphia.

J. O. Laughlin has been appointed Montreal representative for the distribution of Metro releases in succession to W. Hughes, who has gone to the United States.

Prominent theatrical interests of Canada owning several motion picture theatres have taken an option on the Crystal Palace, St. Lawrence boulevard, Montreal.

Carl Senning, recently appointed manager of the Fox interests in the United Kingdom, was in Louisville recently to attend the funeral of a brother.

Among the shipments to our soldiers overseas, according to a report by the Young Men's Christian Association, are two hundred motion picture machines.

Manny Brown, formerly of Toronto and Montreal, has become eastern sales manager of Regal Films, Limited, with headquarters at St. John.

Vitagraph Beauties in Exhibits

Two of Vitagraph's beauties were much admired subjects in two special art exhibits held last week in New York City. One of these was a life size oil portrait of Betty Blythe by Harry Roseland. It was shown first in the Pouch Galleries in Brooklyn and later in a gallery in Fifth Avenue. In an exhibit of the work of Lynn Jenkins, the widely known sculptor, was a head in marble of Florence Deshon. This exhibit was in the Reinhardt Galleries.

"Find the Woman" Speeded Up

Alice Joyce, under the direction of Tom Terriss, is making rapid progress in "Find the Woman," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature adapted from the widely-read O. Henry story, "Cherchez La Femme." With Miss Joyce in the company are Walter McGrail, Henry Houry, Arthur Donaldson, Jean Paige and Jessie Stevens.

Reopen Louisville House

Lee L. Goldberg, secretary-treasurer of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, and M. Switow, theatre magnate, have reopened the Shawnee, a neighborhood house at Louisville. The house will show second-run features.

District of Columbia

S. Z. Poli will make a marked innovation at the Avenue Play House week after next with the introduction of photo plays deluxe, embellished with a symphony orchestra, an organ with a human voice, soloists of note and scene settings that are declared to be without a parallel in the lexicon of the modern theatre.

Florida

The Star Theatre Company of Jacksonville has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. Officers and directors are Harley Watson, president; F. M. Durrance, vice-president, and L. P. Davis, secretary and treasurer.

Georgia

Marcus Loew of New York will expend $40,000 for improvements to the Grand Theatre at Atlanta instead of erecting a new structure as previously noted; plans include remodeling gallery, erection of mezzanine floor, stage, marquee, installation of $15,000 pipe organ, typhoon fan system, electrical equipment, scenery and hangings.

Illinois

After being closed for several months, the American Theatre of Quincy, formerly the Bijou, has been reopened.

A fire in Schindler's theatre, 1005 West Huron street, Chicago, caused $1,000 damage.

The Champaign Orpheum Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital of $2,500 by Benjamin B. Kahan, George A. Truce and Frank R. Cain.

Indiana

Damage estimated at $6,200 was caused by fire in the Grand Opera House at Bluffton.

The Grand Theatre at Fort Wayne was damaged recently by fire to the extent of over $10.000.

Iowa

Wilbur D. Ingledue, who a few months ago purchased an interest in the Casino Theatre at Marshalltown, has acquired entire control of the property by the purchase of the Leo Muelhaupt interest.

The Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation of Scranton has been incorporated with a capital of $10,000 by M. S. Williams of New York City.

The Select Amusement Company of Pittsburgh has been incorporated with a capital of $75,000 by William Barker, Joseph Spero and Nick Jameson.

The Bell Film Corporation of Pittsburgh has been incorporated with a capital of $75,000 by William Barker, Joseph Spero and Nick Jameson.

South Carolina

Lawrence T. Lester will erect a moving picture theatre at Columbia, with a seating capacity of 1,000.

Wears Dazzling Costumes

In marked contrast to the severe settings and plain clothes of her recent Select picture, "The House of Glass," Clara Kimball Young, in her latest production, "The Reason Why," released the last week in April, appears on the screen attired in one gorgeous costume after another.

The settings, too, of "The Reason Why," are in keeping with its sartorial splendor; for after the first stage of the story has been passed, they are laid almost entirely in the fashionable haunts of the exclusive society of London's Mayfair.

Full scope, therefore, is given Miss Young for the display of beautiful gowns and the celebrated star does not fail to make the most of her opportunities.

The fact that "Lucille"—Lady Duff Gordon—designed the costumes and that the play is from the pen of Lucile's sister, Elinor Glyn, the author of "Three Weeks," adds further interest, especially in the eyes of the women who see this picture, to the beautiful raiment displayed on the screen.

Milton Sills, Miss Young's leading man, and Frank Losee, both seasoned actors from the speaking stage, are chief in the Select star's support.

"The Reason Why" is the struggle of a young wife to establish her position in the aristocratic family into which she has married shortly after her arrival in England from the continent, where she has led a somewhat eventful existence.

Northwest Exhibitors to Meet

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest will hold their annual convention at the West hotel in Minneapolis May 7 and 8. Secretary Clyde H. Hitchcock has sent out postal cards to exhibitors all over the territory urging them to attend and as a result a record number of theatremen are expected to be present.

This year's convention will differ greatly from previous sessions in that it will not be interrupted by the public cabaret and public ball and reception of photoplay stars, heretofore big events in one way and detrimental events in another.

It is the hope of officers of the Northwest branch to get a record number of exhibitors in Minneapolis for the convention to take up and settle important business matters and allow the theatremen to get back to their business promptly.

The only entertainment to be provided this year will be a beef steak dinner to be given exhibitors by exchangemen and for which there will be no charge. Heretofore all dinners, cabarets and dances were "charge" affairs and not given exclusively for film men.

No stars or "near stars" will attend this year's sessions. Lee A. Ochs, president of the national league, W. N. Selig and other prominent film men will likely be present. President James G. Gilosky of the Northwest body has just returned from a ten weeks' vacation trip to California and he has not announced whether he will be a candidate for office again.

Montreal House Reopened

The Comet Theatre, Cote St. Paul, Montreal, has been reopened under the management of Mr. Picard.

The Story of the Picture

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Bluebird

A MOTHER'S SECRET—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring Ella Hall. Emory Johnson plays opposite. Story by Lois Zellner, directed by Douglas Gerrard.

Though she cherished the memory of her little girl in Virginia, Lady Eldone's marriage with the aristocratic British captain had taken her to England, and the little gossipy community where she had been born and brought up gave her the credit for a mother extremely forgetful, if not worse. Then came the war, and Lady Eldone gave her services to the Red Cross. Angela, the daughter, was then seventeen years old, and just beginning to wonder why her mother failed to show any interest in her. On the battlefield an orderly heard Captain Eldone tell his wife that the plans for a new siege gun, if sold to the government, would make her a rich woman and provide for her handsomely in case of his death. She was scarcely out of headquarters when an aerial torpedo demolished the building. But the orderly had not forgotten the siege gun plans, and two governments watched the lady in mourning to see what she would do with them. Lady Eldone decided that America was the most fertile field for a dashing widow to contract a rich marriage, and forthwith came to Newport with considerable blare of trumpet and social announcement. Angela saw the notice in the paper, and straightway betook her to her mother's new home, slipped in during a reception at which the mother intended to impress Howard Grey, and very nearly upset all of her mother's plans. She recovered quickly, however, bought a very juvenile dress for Angela, and coyly suggested that she didn't think she looked old enough to be the mother of a girl thirteen years old. Unknown to Lady Eldone, the two people who were seeking the plans were this same Howard Grey and Rose Marie, her maid. Angela, however, discovered the maid robbing her mother's safe. Howard Grey scarcely knew her in her grown-up clothes, but he hastened to aid her and put the maid under arrest. Just at this moment Captain Eldone, who had been so severely wounded all these months as to prevent communication, stepped into the house, and Lady Eldone's troubles dropped from her like a winter cloak. Of course, she was willing then to hand over her daughter to Grey, and the plans—they had been destroyed in the dynamited headquarters.

Fox

Western Blood—(Five Reels)—Fox Special—April 14.—Featuring Tom Mix. Victoria Forde, Pat Christmann and others in the caste. Written and directed by Lynn Reynolds.

Tex Wilson, a young American ranch owner, has contracted to gather horses for the Government. When the picture starts he is seen aboard a freight train on his way to Los Angeles from New Mexico, with a shipment of horses and, when on the outskirts of the city, he mounts his horse and leaps from the moving train. He then encounters a horse running away with a young girl. He goes to her rescue, and she soon calms down and shows an interest in Tex.

The girl proves to be Roberta Stevens, whose father, Colonel Stevens, is in charge of the United States remount station in Los Angeles. Roberta invites Tex to a party and when he arrives he is embarrassed at being the only man not in full dress. Several sneering remarks from Wallace Payton cause Tex to get him outside and compel him to swap clothes. Later on, Tex gives a party on the ranch. He arrays all the cowboys in dress clothes, despite their protests. Agents of the enemy plan a raid on the ranch, capture Roberta and carry her across the border. Tex follows and rescues her.

American Buds—(Five Reels)—Fox Special—April 21.—Featuring Jane and Katherine Lee.

Their mother dead, Jane and Katherine are being taken to the foundlings' poor farm. Here Jane makes things interesting for the matron. At the asylum she meets a little piccaninny whose life becomes strenuous indeed, under Jane's direction. Poverty and distress do not affect Jane's patriotism, and when an army officer's sister lectures to the foundlings on patriotism, Jane is right in her glory—until she practices with a putty-blower on the lecturer. She saves herself from discipline by bombarding the overseer with vegetables.

Colonel Harding, commander of the army post, near the poor farm, has two daughters. The elder ran away while he was stationed in the Philippines. The younger daughter, Cecile, has two suitors: Captain Robert Dutton, a well-to-do officer and a favorite with all except the Colonel's spinster sister, Emily. She favors his rival, Rupert Duncan (formerly Lieutenant Rupert Duncan of Austria), now holding a commission in the American army, but still faithful to his former country.

Dutton proposes to Cecile and is accepted. Miss Emily addresses the children at the poor farm. Jane follows some soldiers to the post, where she is fast winning the Colonel's affection, when Miss Emily enters, recognizes, and despite her brother's objections, insists on returning her to the asylum. Arriving there, she finds a letter in Katherine's possession leading her to believe Jane and Katherine are Dutton's children. She brings them back to Harding and reveals her discovery. The officer tells Dutton he must either acknowledge the foundlings or face court martial. Dutton is engaged on an important secret experiment for the government. Rather than lose the chance of completing it, he takes the children without attempting to clear himself. His engagement to Cecile is broken. Jane and Katherine soon win the hearts of Dutton and all the troopers.

Meantime, Austria instructs Duncan to obtain a copy of Dutton's report on his work. At a Halloween party given by Dutton in honor of his little charges, Duncan steals the document, but meets Jane as he is fleeing. He is about to throw her over the balustrade, when Sam, an old sergeant, shoots him. Mortally wounded, he confesses to the Colonel the children are not Dutton's, but his. Dutton and Cecile are reconciled and it is learned that Jane's and Katherine's mother was the Colonel's runaway daughter and that they are his grandchildren.

The Soul of Buddha—(Five Reels)—Fox Standard—April 21.—Featuring Theda Bara. Story written by Miss Bara. Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Bava (Theda Bara), an East Indian girl, is a natural dancer, and as such her fame had spread among the people. Her widowed mother, a devout worshipper of Buddha, fearful of her daughter's morals, decides to give Bava to the Temple as a sacred dancer. She turns her over to Ysora, the high priest.

Attracted by the handsome priest, Bava willingly consecrates herself as a religious dancer.

During a religious festival dance Sir John Dare, a major in the English army, is attracted by the beauty of Bava. While dancing, Bava falls in front of him and he catches her. The priests, headed by Ysora, rush towards the Englishman and are about to kill him when Bava interferes. Ysora commands Bava to pray before Buddha the entire night for punishment. She leaves the temple at midnight and meets Sir John.

Ysora sees Bava's elopement and follows the couple to the barracks. Sir John calls in the army chaplain, who makes them man and wife. Ysora vows vengeance.

Sir John is cashiered from the army for his escapade. A year later a child is born. Ysora, waiting his opportunity, kills the baby, leaving the Buddhist death sign on its forehead. Heartbroken, Bava leaves with her husband for Paris.

Her life hardened by the death of the child, Bava determines to dance on the stage. She has told her husband she no longer loves him.

When she makes her premier appearance on the stage, Ysora, disguised as a Buddha, comes to life and kills her in front of the audience, carrying out his oath of vengeance.

General

Slippery Slim and His Tombstone—(One Reel)—Essanay—Cast includes Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin.

Slippery Slim takes out some life insurance. Shortly after, he decides to see something of the world, and sallies forth. Mustang Pete, his rival for the hand of Sophie, immediately begins to press suit, and when Slim returns he finds Sophie and Mustang mourning at his tombstone which they bought with his insurance money. Thinking Slim a ghost, they flee, with Slippery in hot pursuit. Slim never hesitates until he proves that he is really alive, thus defeating the wily Mustang Pete and his evident intentions of taking over the comely widow, Sophie Clutts.

Slippery Slim and the Impersonator—(One Reel)—Essanay.—Cast includes Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt.

Mustang Pete slips away with Slippery Slim's diamond ring and goes to Sophie's home, where he asks her to become his wife. She accepts him and he gives her Slim's ring, which he had bought for the purpose of presenting to her himself. Slim is in great despair when he discovers his ring is missing, and his sorrow is complete when he goes to Sophie's home and finds Mustang holding her on his lap. That night he goes to the theatre to forget his troubles. There is a female impersonator in the cast, and after the show Slim becomes acquainted with him. He persuades him to pose as a beautiful blonde and make eyes at Mustang. Mustang falls for it, and is having the time of his life when Slim brings Sophie upon the scene. She throws the ring at Mustang's feet, and turns to Slim, whom she accepts as her future husband.

Blue Blood—(Six Reels)—Selexart—April 20.—Goldwyn Special—Howard Hickman, George Fisher, Mary Mersch, Nona Thomas and Ida Lewis are in the cast.

Afflicted with incipient paresis, Spencer Wellington is advised by his family physician, Dr. John Rand, never to marry. Wellington is in love with Grace Valiant, a girl of fortune, whose mother urges her to marry the young aristocrat. Against the doctor's admonitions, Wellington marries Grace, and when a child is born to them it is a hopeless defective and dies shortly after its birth. Grace is continually under the surveillance of a nurse, and Wellington neglects her, spending most of his time in drunken orgies in the dance hall he has erected. Grace eludes her nurse and goes to the hall, where she is rescued by Dr. Rand from the frenzied attacks of her husband, his mind completely gone. Wellington dies, and Dr. Rand, who has always loved Grace, tenderly leads her home.

Treasure of the Sea—(Five Reels)—April 22.—Featuring Edith Story.

Miss Storey appears as Ruth Elkins, only daughter of Thomas Elkins, who loses his fortune in Wall Street through the unscrupulous manipulations of Henry Ames, a broker, operating in the name and with the funds of his client, Jim Hardwick. Ruth takes her father to a bungalow on the Pacific Coast. There she meets Hardwick, who is camping nearby, and though attracted to him personally, determines to get revenge for her father's misfortune.

After a terrific gale, Jim discovers the wreck of a treasure ship that had been sunk years before. Later, Ruth makes the same discovery. Both go to the village for men and tools. Finding herself handicapped by Jim, Ruth employs a gang of fighters and employs hold-up methods. Meantime Ames, whom Ruth and her father believe to be their friend, arrives from the East. Ruth admits her love for Jim, but not until many incidents have grown out of the treasure discovery and given rise to complications not solved till the end of the last reel.

Riders of the Night—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring Viola Dana.

Sally Castleton lives in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky with her aged grandfather and her selfish aunt. Simon Derr, domineering owner of the valley toll gates, insists that Sally marry him. Her aunt sides with him for mercenary reasons, but her grandfather supports Sally in her refusal. The girl is in love with Simon's cousin, Milt Derr, whom Simon has defrauded of his inheritance. After her grandfather's death, Sally fights her aunt and Simon alone. Finally, Milt joins the night riders, organized to attack the toll gates and break down Simon's unjust monopoly.

Jed, an unscrupulous youth known as the Killer, betrays the plans of the night riders to Simon for a bribe. A fight follows and Milt's hat is found as evidence against him, while he hides in the mountains. Sally agrees to marry Simon to save Milt, who then threatens to kill Simon. Jed, enraged by Simon's failure to pay the bribe, sets out to kill him. Sally finds Simon dead, Jed's shot having taken effect. Believing Milt had killed him, she declares herself guilty, and is sentenced to be hanged, but after a number of thrilling events, the real criminal is discovered and the story ends happily.

Mutual

Hearts or Diamonds—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring William Russell. Charlotte Burton, Howard Davies, Carl Stockdale, John Gough and Robert Klein are in the cast.

When Larry Hanrahan, wealthy young connoisseur of diamonds, sees a beautiful girl in a cafe and notes the superb necklace of diamonds she wears, he is attracted both by her loveliness and the rare gems. She is accompanied by an elderly man of distinguished appearance. On his way home from the cafe, Larry chances on an attempted hold-up of an auto party. He succeeds in routing the robbers, and discovers that the intended victims are the girl of the cafe and her escort, who introduces himself as Col. Paul Gascoyne, and the girl his daughter, Adrienne.

Larry is invited to call on them. Col. Gascoyne is ostensibly a chemist of extraordinary attainments, with a laboratory, equipped for producing diamonds, and Adrienne believes the necklace she wears is of his own manufacture. Larry is convinced of Gascoyne's ability when he purchases a stone, which he has tested and for which he is offered double the amount he paid. He entertains Gascoyne and Adrienne in his rooms and shows them his priceless collection of gems.

A few nights later Larry awoke from a nap in a chair in his library and looked into the business end of a revolver in the hands of a heavily veiled woman. A burglar was taking the jewels from the safe. Suddenly knocking aside the revolver, he grabbed the woman, but she escaped, leaving behind a scarf, which he recognized as belonging to Adrienne. Believing that Adrienne and Gascoyne are crooks, he confronts Gascoyne and Adrienne and demands the return of his gems. A terrific fight ensues, in which Larry is overcome and left bound and gagged in the laboratory. Adrienne, in the act of telephoning the police, is pulled away from the 'phone by a strange woman who suddenly appears on the scene. While Gascoyne and his accomplices are making their escape, Adrienne comes upon Larry in the laboratory, who accuses her of being an accomplice.

Adrienne, pleading her innocence, unbinds him. Larry intercepts the crooks, and is engaged in a rough and tumble fight when the police arrive. Gascoyne is shot by the police and seriously wounded. From his confession Larry learns that Adrienne is ignorant of her father's criminal operations. Her scarf had been worn by the woman accomplice, and the laboratory and the auto hold-up a part of the frame-up to get him in their clutches. Gascoyne asks Larry to see that Adrienne is taken care of, and Larry responds by taking Adrienne in his arms.

Spotted—(One Reel)—Strand—April 30.—Featuring Billie Rhodes.

Mary Bountiful, heiress to millions, is pursued by fortune-hunting swaints galore, and her one ungratified wish in life is to be "loved for herself alone." She evades her coterie of admirers and calls on a couple of newly married friends, finding them in wild consternation over the prospective visit of a rich young relative. Mary offers her house for the entertainment of the guest, insisting that she be permitted to be their chauffeur. She attires herself in livery, and with a little black mustache, makes a most fetching chauffeur. The visitor is a handsome youth, so Mary decides to double as maid as well as chauffeur. The visitor is attracted to the pretty maid, who explains that the chauffeur is her twin brother. He takes a spin with "brother" to get in strong with the family and confesses his infatuation for "sister." Prowling around the house in search of the maid that he may offer her his heart, the young gallant comes upon a strange young beauty, in elaborate evening gown and finds her to be Mary, the maid. Explanations follow and Mary is convinced that she is "loved for herself alone."

Scene from the week's Strand comedy.

Paralta

An Alien Enemy—(Six Reels)—April 1.—Featuring Louise Glaum. Story by Monte M. Katterjohn, directed by Wallace Worsley.

Lewis Meyer and his wife, owners of a cafe in Germany, are Americans by birth. Both are murdered by Emil Koenig, a drunken nobleman, and their little daughter, Bertha, is educated as a German. Koenig is sent to America to serve his country.

Years later Bertha, grown to womanhood, as Neysa von Igel, is a part of Germany's spy machinery in America. The girl instinctively loathes her position, yet continues to play her part for the Fatherland, in fear of Koenig and Schmidt, an American-made millionaire, who are her superiors. Having fallen in love with David Hale, an attorney, she revolts at the moment that American officials raid the German headquarters, and goes to Hale, to whom she is married.

They depart for France, where Hale is a member of the Allied Council. Here she again comes under the influence of Koenig. In fear of his threat against her husband's life, she apparently supplies him with information from Hale's papers. In reality her reports are false. However, Hale's suspicions are confirmed by a confession made by Schmidt, who is fatally wounded in attempting to escape from an American internment camp. Hale leaves this confession for Neysa, who at last knowing her origin, kills Koenig. Her husband finally recognizes her as a true American.

Paramount

Playing the Game—(Five Reels)—Ince—April 22.—Featuring Charles Ray in a story of the Southwest. Doris Lee and Robert McKim are in the cast.

After a prolonged period along the Great White Way in New York, Larry Prentiss, a dissipated son of a millionaire, who had inherited a vast fortune, one night at a dinner party given to some friends, knocks down and apparently kills Hickey Trent, an adventurer. In the belief that he is a murderer, Larry goes to Arizona to begin life anew. While there, Larry has many adventures, including hold-ups and other thrilling events, but he finally lands as a cowboy upon his own ranch, his identity being unknown to his associates. Here he meets and courts Moya Schannon, the daughter of the manager, and after a series of highly dramatic occurrences, including an exciting fist fight with his rival, wins Moya's love. Mr. Ray is capably supported by fine players, chief among whom are Doris Lee and Robert McKim.

Let's Get a Divorce—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring Billie Burke. Story adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Sardou's play, "Divorcons." Directed by Charles Giblyn.

In this photoplay, Miss Burke appears as a young convent girl who, to relieve her humdrum existence, indulges in secret flirtations, of which the Mother Superior disapproves, but who is unable to curb the spirit of romance that possesses the young woman. She weds a writer after a romantic elopement that had been planned especially for her benefit, and for a time is happy in the love of her husband, until he settles down and devotes more serious attention to his writing than to his bride. She then strikes up a flirtation with an officer of the Forestry Service, and believing herself to be madly in love with him, she begs her husband to grant her a divorce, in order that she may marry the other man. He apparently consents to this, and it is this ready compliance with her request which ultimately produces a change of sentiment in the girl's heart, and brings her to the realization of her duties to her husband and of the unquenchable love for him that exists in her heart.

Tyrant Fear—(Five Reels)—April 29—Ince.—Features Dorothy Dalton. Directed by R. William Neill.

Miss Dalton portrays the role of a French-Canadian girl who has lived in terror of her brutal father from childhood. He sells her to a ruffianly trapper who in turn gambles her away to the keeper of a notorious dive in the gold settlements of the Far North, where she meets a besotted pianist who once had seen better days. She shoots the dive keeper to save herself from his loathsome embraces; her innate fear vanished with the commission of this act, and she regains complete mastery over herself. She escapes to her husband's cabin with the pianist and in a snow drift they find the trapper's body. The pianist, who has learned to love the girl, and who is now a man once again, takes her to his heart. The snow and dance hall scenes of "Tyrant Fear" are remarkable.

Select

Up the Road with Sallie—(Five Reels).—Featuring Constance Talmadge. Sallie is cared for by an aunt whose life has been very sad. When the girl inherits a small fortune, she plans to do something to make up for her aunt some of the hardships she has suffered.

They set off together on a motor trip, and set up housekeeping in a deserted house. Here they are joined by two gentlemen, one of them elderly, the other young. Neither pair cares to reveal to the other their identity, with the result that each comes to the conclusion that the others are thieves. This leads to many laughable complications.

Triangle

Society for Sale—(Five Reels)—April 21.—With William Desmond, Gloria Swanson, Herbert Pryor, Charles Dorian, Lillian West and Lillian Langdon. Directed by Frank Borzage.

Phyllis Clyne employs penniless Honorable Billy to introduce her to society as his fiancee. Of course, complications follow, particularly when she insists on knowing Lord Sheldon, a gentleman with a past. Finally, goaded by Billy's objections and Dame Rumor, she goes away with Sheldon. Their automobile is wrecked and Sheldon killed. Phyllis is uninjured, however, and returning to Billy, tells him that her interest in Sheldon was due to the fact that he was her father, his people having refused to recognize his marriage to her mother years before. Phyllis convinces Billy that he loves her and that she loves him, and their engagement stands.

The Hand at the Window—(Five Reels)—April 21.—With Margery Wilson, Francis Wilson, Irene Hunt, and others. Directed by Raymond Wells.

The story concerns the experiences of politicians, detectives and police headquarters men who operate on the lower East Side of New York. The hero is Roderick Moran, a happy-go-lucky plain clothes man, who interrupts the wedding of Tony Brachieri to arrest him for counterfeiting. Tony's bride swears vengeance, and the criminal himself threatens Moran with "When you getta married, Mesta, luk out."

Five years later Moran has become a captain, while Cupid has interested him in Laura Bowers, a girl of mystery living at his boarding house. They become engaged. Then Moran receives another warning note, following the news that Tony has escaped, but is believed to have been fatally wounded. Later Tony's body is identified. On the night of the wedding of Moran and Laura, a hand appears at the window and Moran is shot. After his recovery he is celebrating his promotion to the job of inspector when Laura discloses her identity as a Secret Service operative and brings in the real criminal and would-be murderess, Tony's wife, known as the Calabrian Kid, also wanted for counterfeiting.

Vitagraph

A Bachelor's Children—(Five Reels)—Blue Ribbon—April 22.—Features Harry Morey. Paul Scardon directed. Cast includes Florence Deshon, Alice Terry, Denton Vane, William Shea, Jessie Stevens and little Aida Horton.

Hugh Jordon, a mining prospector, inherits a fortune from an uncle. He comes East to live and is spending his inheritance rapidly.

In another part of the city live Penelope Winthrop and her sisters, one time in affluence, but now in dire poverty. They are served with dispossess papers, and in preparing to move Penelope comes across an old letter in her father's handwriting saying he had transferred his mining claims to Hugh Jordan, and that he would see they got their due. Penelope and her sisters go at once to Jordan's home, interrupting a great house party, and present the letter to Jordan.

Hugh gives the girls over to the housekeeper and starts an investigation. The sisters receive every courtesy from Hugh, but Penelope, who is very beautiful, arouses the jealousy of Hugh's friend, Mrs. Beaumont, who plans to win him and his money. Mrs. Beaumont tells Penelope that she and Hugh are engaged and that the presence of Penelope is blackening his name. The young girl, horrified, prepares to leave, but Hugh arrives in time to undo the harm. He offers to turn the fortune over to the sisters, but Penelope becomes Mrs. Hugh and they share the wealth.

World

The Purple Lady—(Five Reels)—April 22.—Featuring Kitty Gordon. Cast includes Muriel Ostriche, Charles Wesley, Howard Kyle, and others. Directed by George Kelson.

Kitty Gordon plays the role of Marie Farnsworth, a young woman who had lived with her father in the North woods beyond Montreal. She had eloped with Frank Farnsworth, while he was in the region on a hunting trip. He is a professional gambler and ne'er-do-well, but she is indifferent to his livelihood so long as he furnishes the money for her gay life.

When he has lost all, the two are ready tools for the unscrupulous scheme of Sir Philip Bradley, who bribes Marie to follow James Caldwell, a young engineer, into the snow country and there get hold of the surveys of mining lands Caldwell is making for a New York corporation. Bradley wants the surveys for an independent concern. Marie succeeds and her husband delivers the surveys to Bradley. However, she returns to find that both her husband and Bradley have double-crossed her, the latter having given Farnsworth a worthless check as well. In the end, Caldwell is exonerated and returns to his wife and baby. Bradley and Farnsworth are arrested for this and other crooked deals, and Marie returns to her father.

A Leap to Fame—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley. Story by Raymond Schreck. Directed by Carlyle Blackwell.

The story deals with a young man, Charles, who at the completion of his college career tells his father that he is preeminently suited for a journalist and is therefore wished on a newspaper office. His services are accepted by mistake. The editor is shortsighted. Just how he makes good is finally shown after a series of "hair raising" incidents, with the result that he ferrets out some plotters and at the same time gets a "scoop."

Lloyd to Direct Zane Grey Stories

With the statement from William Fox that his organization is to film two Zane Grey stories, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," comes the announcement of Mr. Fox's decision to entrust Frank Lloyd with the productions.

Mr. Lloyd unquestionably ranks high among the foremost screen directors of the country. Although he has been a member of the Fox forces for only a year and a half, he has produced within that period many photoplays which have attracted the widest attention. Chief on the list, of course, is his master-work, "Les Miserables," hailed everywhere for the success he had in holding every bit of the dramatic sweep in Victor Hugo's greatest novel.

"A Tale of Two Cities," one of the finest and most striking pictures of 1917, "When a Man Sees Red," the intense drama laid in the South Seas, and "The Blindness of Divorce," the propaganda play released a short time since, are other examples of Mr. Lloyd's handicraft. "True Blue," in which William Farnum is starred, is his latest production. The greater part of Mr. Lloyd's work has been done with Mr. Farnum.

Frank Lloyd was born in Glasgow, but his parents moved to London while he was still a lad. He attended Westborne School in the metropolis and then hired out as an apprentice to a turner and fitter in the Woolwich arsenal. He commenced his career as a professional player at Hammersmith Palace, near London, with impersonations as his specialty. After an extended vaudeville tour throughout the British Isles and Canada he came to the United States and entered pictures.

In the fall of 1916 he became affiliated with William Fox. His first feature was "Sins of Her Parent," starring Gladys Brockwell. Then he was placed in charge of the destinies of William Farnum. In addition to the films named, Mr. Lloyd has been responsible for "The Price of Silence," "American Methods," "The Heart of a Lion," and "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes."

Ince to Make Five Petrova Pictures

Madame Olga Petrova having signed Ralph Ince as her director for three more Petrova pictures, and Mr. Ince being engaged in directing "Patience Sparhawk," the Gertrude Atherton story which the Polish actress purchased for her fifth picture, this means that five out of the eight Petrova pictures to be made under the present agreement entered into between Madame Petrova and Frederick L. Collins, will bear Ince's name.

In order to continue with Madame, Mr. Ince has obtained a release from the Advance Film Corporation, since like the other three directors who have been associated with the Petrova Picture Company—George Irving, who directed "Daughter of Destiny," Larry Trimble, who acted in like capacity for "The Light Within," and Frank Crane, who was engaged for "The Life Mask"—he originally came to Madame for only one picture, being under contract to another concern.

Mr. Ince believes in many of the same screen ideals that Madame Petrova has always stood for, such as pictures that not only tell a story, but consistently develop a character, giving much of the same light and shade that the speaking stage affords; pictures which bring a message of feminism, since they have strong-charactered, virile-minded, big-souled women for their heroines, and pictures wherein every emotion expressed is clearly defined by the art of facial expression, not wild wind-milling of arms and beating of chests.

Therefore, the agreement which Madame Petrova has drawn up with Ince ought to be productive of unusually satisfactory results to all concerned in the Petrova Picture Company as well as to the public, whose understanding of the art of repression and the school of mental rather than purely physical acting on the film is decidedly on the increase.

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Wherein King Solomon Setteth An Exhibitor Right

NAY, my Zuleika, I have high hopes for the Movies. Yea, the Movies be here to stay and bring happy days.

Knockers there be who exclaim, "What careth Solomon for the Little Guy? He hath a thousand wives who fill his picture show every day."

Yea, my wives do attend the Solomon Theatre with great regularity. But woe is me for the bill at the end of the moon; 'tis a sorrow to the King.

But yesternoon did come to my palace the Son of Beelzebub, who is the Son of Hardluck, the Son of Folly, who is the Son of Highprices.

And lo, he did prostrate himself and cry aloud, "Woe is me, O King, I am afflicted with a great sorrow and do seek thy counsel. The people no longer come to my Movie Show. I show good pictures and have a goodly theatre. Yet is mine business sorely depressed, and the cashier doth put sack-cloth and ashes on his head and his groans do keep the wife awake nights cussing a blue streak."

"Now, O thou Son of Folly, hast thou looked into thine business? Dost thou pay the reel tax?"

"Yea," moaned the afflicted one.

"And, O Son of Balaam's Ass, dost thou pay high prices for pictures because they have stars?"

"Yea," moaned the asinine one.

"And dost thou bid against thine neighbor for the open booking picture which the wise promoter doth boost in price?"

"Yea," moaned the witless one.

"And dost thou deal with those who know not the fair and square, open and above-board policy?"

"Yea," moaned the fallacious one.

"Now, wherefore, O Son of Folly, dost thou not mend thy ways and look to thy vine and fig-tree? Why dost thou not turn to TRIANGLE and thus enable thy harem to blossom out in styles that will knock the dames of thy competitor's harem dead?"

Whereupon the enlightened one did make a glad cry of exaltation and did sing the praises of the King and did seek him out a TRIANGLE Exchange.

Yea, Wisdom is the source of all happiness, and TRIANGLE the source of many an exhibitor's success.

Big Chicago Theatre Bombed

WAR WITH OPERATORS ON IN EARNEST

VIOLENCE, long expected since the fight between the exhibitors and operators in Chicago developed several weeks ago, took place this week when the new Woodlawn theatre at 853 East Sixty-third street, which has just been completed at a cost of $300,000, was made the target of bombs.

Almost the entire front and lobby were torn away. The ticket cage was destroyed and the ornate glass work in the lobby broken. A large hole was torn in the side walk and windows were broken in other buildings nearby. The explosion was heard for several blocks, awakening many from their sleep. The outrage occurred shortly before midnight, half an hour after the audience had left the theatre.

Union Sought Bribe, Charge

The theatre is owned by Andrew Karzas. Mr. Karzas told the police he had been having much labor trouble. He opened last Friday after several months of difficulty with several unions, he said. Previously a demand was made upon him for $1,000 as a bribe before a union operator would be allowed to work in the theatre, according to the police.

"I refused the demand and opened the house with a non-union operator," Karzas said. "I ran Friday and Saturday, then a union official came around, withdrew their demand and put a union operator to work."

Follows New York Conference

The bombing of the Woodlawn, marking the first depredation in the Chicago fight, follows immediately after the return of a committee of exhibitors from New York where they conferred over the proposition with officials of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

By many it is regarded as a challenge of the union. While there is no evidence that will fasten the guilt of the Woodlawn bombing upon any union man, it is said, exhibitors are a unit in blaming it on the Chicago labor war.

Stiffens Exhibitors' Ranks

But if the operators hope to intimidate the exhibitors, according to leaders of the Allied Amusement Association, the organization formed to combat the operators, they are mistaken, for it will stiffen their ranks all the more.

"We are not a bit surprised at what has taken place," said a leader in the Allied Amusement Association, "and while we regret the damage to Mr. Karzas' property, in a way we welcome the aggression, if the union is responsible, for we are primed for a battle royal, and that now seems to be what the operators want."

Arbitration Still Pending

The trouble is based on recent demands of the operators for pay in connection with the running of advertising slides and that all slides bear the union label, together with lesser demands. The operators presented a belligerent front at first, but when the Allied Amusement Association was organized they showed signs of backing down; in fact, asked for arbitration. Arbitration was granted by the exhibitors, and committees were appointed, but no agreement has yet been reached.

The exhibitors' committee back from New York will not divulge any details of their conferences on the labor war. Joseph Hopp, chairman of the committee, would not even admit that MOTOGRAPHY had the right information when it said last week that the meeting was held at the request of the National Association in the hope of improving the labor situation for the entire country as a result of the success achieved by the Allied Amusement Association.

The committee consists of Joseph Hopp, William E. Heaney and Sam Atkinson, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Louis Frank and Harry Corbett, representing the American Exhibitors' Association.

M. P. E. L. and A. E. A. May Merge

Mr. Hopp did disclose, however, that the committee had held conferences on another matter—that of having both the National League and the Association hold their annual conventions at the same time this summer in Boston. The league is scheduled to meet there July 16, 17 and 18, but the association has not yet selected the place or the time.

When the conventions meet at Boston, if such an arrangement can be effected, a strong effort will be made to bring about amalgamation, according to Mr. Hopp. Meanwhile affairs are left in the hands of what is known as the Allied Amalgamation committee, consisting of A. H. Mosher of Buffalo, Louis H. Blumenthal of Jersey City, Alfred Black of Portland, Maine, Frank Rembusch of Indianapolis and Joseph Hopp and Louis Frank of Chicago.

Star Kisses $12,500 Into U. S. Treasury

Mabel Normand Nearly Causes Riot in the Harlem Grand Theatre, New York, with 4,000 Persons in House

THE appearance of screen stars in the interest of the Liberty Loan are becoming more frequent as the need for patriotic response grows greater, but rarely has an idol of the cinema faced an audience under more exciting circumstances than marked the visit of Mabel Normand, Goldwyn star, to the big Harlem Grand Theatre, in East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, New York, last Sunday night.

The house was packed to the doors, Manager Arthur Hirsch estimating the attendance to be fully 4,000. John Case, representing the Forty-third district of the Liberty Loan Committee, announced that Miss Normand had consented to appear, although hoarseness would prevent her from repeating the speech she had been making in other theatres.

Miss Normand had only to step onto the flag-draped platform to hear—and feel—a great wave of applause booming toward her.

Then Mr. Case delivered a stirring appeal and Miss Normand was the first to answer, subscribing for a $5,000 bond. Her reward was a volley of cheers, after which a few subscriptions for much smaller amounts came in. Eight-year-old Clarice Boehm sang a patriotic song and a few more hundred dollars came from the audience. But it was not until Miss Normand, with quick inspiration, seized upon a better method of coaxing money from the audience that expectations were realized.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she cried, "if it means anything at all to you, I will give anyone who subscribes for a bond of any amount—a kiss!"

There was an immediate uproar. Men, women and children swept down the aisles and people arose all over the house. Manager Hirsch and his assistants found difficulty in averting a panic.

Finally, some semblance of order was restored and the resourceful Miss Normand was held to her bargain. Never mind how many osculations were the price she paid, nor how many cheers, cries and whistles punctuated each kiss. The result is more important; $12,500 was the total, all the more notable when it is remembered that the amount, except for the star's initial $5,000, represented the savings of people of modest means. Then came another thrill.

Hardly had Miss Normand kissed her last man than the audience made a dash for the exits, eager to see her enter her motor. Several policemen, aided by Manager Hirsch and his workers, preceded the star and fairly hewed out a narrow lane for her to pass through. But the jam surrounding her machine, with faces pressed against the windows, gave the chauffeur his problem. Of course Miss Normand got away at last, but the memory of her Liberty Loan reception at the Harlem Grand will not get away from her for a long time.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons in "Bill's Baby," Capitol Comedy released through Goldwyn.

Do You?

DO you wish to put a tariff on intelligence?

Do you want to levy a tax on education?

Congress does. At the last session Congress passed a law which establishes a postal zone system for magazines and periodicals. It passed a law increasing the postage on periodicals to you, the readers of this publication, from 50 to 900 per cent. And it did it by re-establishing a postage zone system that was abolished by President Lincoln in 1863.

Instead of a flat rate, made as cheap as possible in order that there could be a chance for the intelligent consideration of public questions to reach the farthest limits of the country and the most remote habitation on an equal basis, the magazines containing all this discussion and all the best fiction and all the best art must hereafter pay an excess rate like so much fish or canned lobster or fabricated steel.

You are going to buy your education by the pound-mile now. It isn't a free flowing stream from which all may drink. It has been dammed and its flow checked. Congress did it. If it would bring any increase to the revenues of the country that would amount to anything it would never be opposed. But it won't. It will drive magazines out of business.

We wouldn't say that the discussion of public questions in the magazines, which sometimes calls attention to the delinquencies of Congress and public officials, resulted in the enactment of this law. We would not say that it is a form of censorship that is really prohibited in spirit by the Constitution, although the law has been so cleverly drawn that it probably cannot be called unconstitutional.

We will not say that about it, although we could. We simply call your attention to it because we don't believe you appreciate it. And further than that, we don't believe you'll stand for it.

Write to your congressman about it and demand the law's repeal.

New Style of Ad Copy Packs House

SEATTLE THEATRE "SELLS" PUBLIC ON PLOTS

AN interesting example of an exhibitor's skill in "selling" the public is to be found in the newspaper advertising campaign of James Clemmer, proprietor of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, according to a Goldwyn executive just back from a tour of the West.

The Clemmer Theatre possesses two great assets which the Seattle public is ready to buy—its multi-reel feature films and a remarkable orchestra. And there is a third asset in Bart Burtleson, advertising man of the theatre and right hand assistant to Mr. Clemmer.

Keen for Newspaper Ads

Both Mr. Clemmer and Mr. Burtleson believe in the power of "big copy" advertising in daily newspapers. The Clemmer advertisements of Goldwyn Pictures occupy four full columns in the Seattle Sunday Times, or a total of eighty-eight inches. The cost of a single insertion of one of these advertisements, inclusive of the cost of making the engraving or "plate," is around $175, which also gives indication of the rate co-operation offered to exhibitors by the newspaper. These advertisements are designed by Mr. Burtleson and so strong are they in selling power that Goldwyn has arranged for the preparation of the "Seattle style" of copy for its future exhibitor advertising electrotypes.

Clemmer Analyzes Success

"I have been an exhibitor for a great many years," says Mr. Clemmer in explanation of his newspaper advertising copy. "During that time, like other exhibitors, I long ago exhausted superlatives in exploiting pictures. I began to find that superlatives no longer 'pulled.' The public did not not believe them—and justly so.

"Nor was it sufficient for us to announce that this or that producer 'presented' this or that star in this or that story. Certain producers, Goldwyn close to the top, have established both production and star value. But I wanted something else to sell to the public; some odd angle to challenge attention. And I found it.

Sell the Plot

"In the Clemmer Theatre advertising we now sell the plot of our productions to the public, in addition to producer name and star name. We pull the public in past the box office and into the orchestra seats by building our advertising so that it reveals what the story is. We do not tease or pique them in with a single phrase or catch-line. We let them know in advance in bold display print the detailed theme—written and illustrated as cleverly as we possibly can.

"We noted, soon after Goldwyn began releasing, that its advertising announcements in the trade papers made a point of telling exhibitors the actual plot of the various Goldwyn productions—weeks before their dates of release. We tear these pages out of the trade papers and file them till we need them. Then when the time comes to advertise an attraction locally we look over these advertisements and lay-outs. Sometimes we use them flat, just as they stand. Often we add to them.

Often Use Own Copy

"On other occasions we feel that we have a brighter and better idea than Goldwyn has about its own productions, and on such occasions we use our own copy. In our advertisements of Mae Marsh in 'The Face in the Dark' we used the lines, "A bit of gray thread, a bit of ash from a cigar, etc.," exactly as it was used in Goldwyn's trade paper advertising announcement. That kind of advertising aids an exhibitor in his showmanship, in putting over an attraction, in getting its spirit to the public.

"Personally, I think that the Seattle type of advertising is the most effective amusement copy created in the United States. I have studied the advertising of all other large cities and I have found none that I consider equal to it for challenge—and that is the first element to be considered."

Extra! Madge Kennedy a Widow

Having been three times a bride in Goldwyn pictures during as many months, Madge Kennedy leaps to the other extreme in her newest production, "The Fair Pretender," in which she is a full-fledged widow.

The adventures following her self-styled widowhood are no less exciting and complicated than those in her plays when her adventures began after the marriage ceremony.

Miss Kennedy declares that she feels she must next be a divorcee in order to complete the cycle of mimic love affairs.

Blackwell Buys New Home

The star drew a little better than our average business on a first run date."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—"The best picture we have had from Fox. All theatres should book this picture."—Martin and Robertson, Gem Theatre, Grant City, Mo.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—"A great picture of its kind. Drew well and more than satisfied everyone. They are talking about it yet."—George Kennell, Majestic Theatre, Maricopa, Cal.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—"Truly a wonderful picture. Pleased everyone here."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

When a Man Sees Red, with William Farnum (Fox)—"A fine picture, well liked. Rental a little too high."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

The Moral Law, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—"A good picture of its type which will please a certain type of patrons."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Trouble Makers, with Jane and Katherine Lee (Fox)—"Excellent. These two little stars are very popular here. Business very good."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

A Roman Cowboy, with Tom Mix (Fox comedy)—"Picture just fair."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"Very good. The people said it was great. Drew a good crowd."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Six Shooter Andy, with Tom Mix (Fox)—"A poor one, too much overdone western hero stuff. There seems to be a tendency on the part of Fox to burlesque pictures."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

All for a Husband, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"Worst Fox picture we ever ran."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

This Is the Life, with George Walsh (Fox)—"Fine. Walsh goes big here."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

Goldwyn

The Danger Game, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"A very good picture to pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Fighting Odds, with Maxime Elliott (Goldwyn)—"A fair picture to fair business. Not up to the standard of Goldwyn's first two pictures."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Jewel

The Man Without a Country, with Florence La Badie (Jewel)—"A money-getter any place and pleasing at advanced prices."—B. E. Sharron, Lyric Theatre, Ripley, Okla.

The Man Without a Country, with Florence La Badie (Jewel)—"Very good, but the rental is high."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

Pay Me, with Dorothy Phillips (Jewel)—"Did not please my audience."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—"This is a very good picture and will satisfy any audience. Its drawing power is unlimited. Both of my theatres played it to S. R. O. By all means, get the schools to turn out for a morning show. Rupert Julian is great as the kaiser and the whole cast is good."—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Kleine

Black Beauty (Edison-Conquest)—"A three-reeler worthy a place on any program."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Uneasy Money, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay)—"A very good picture which pleased a good audience."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Metro

Her Boy, with Effie Shannon (Metro)—"A good patriotic picture. We have been getting too many war pictures. Patrons complain they have enough war without seeing it all the time at theatres."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Lest We Forget, with Rita Jolivet (Metro)—"A good patriotic picture which every exhibitor should book. Drew well at advanced prices. Everyone satisfied. Advertise it to the limit."—George Kennell, Majestic Theatre, Maricopa, Calif.

Breakers Ahead, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"Went over well. Star draws in our neighborhood. A story of the sea and a fishing village."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Beautiful Adventure, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—"Large crowds were very well satisfied for the picture is good and the star very popular. Mutual pictures are breaking all house records for me."—Harry Perlewitz, Climax Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Who Loved Him Best? with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—"This picture is exceptionally good, one of the best I have run."—Coffey Brothers, Cozy Theatre, Marinette, Wis.

Who Loved Him Best? with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—"Very poor. We can't see how Edna Goodrich can be called a star."—G. W. Johnson, Mystic Theatre, Marmath, N. D.

The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up, with Margarita Fisher (Mutual)—"Very good. Played to capacity houses. We should have more like this."—Coffey Brothers, Cozy Theatre, Marinette, Wis.

Charity? with Creighton Hale (Mutual)—"A fine picture in good condition. Drew well, as the star is very popular here."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

Periwinkle, with Mary Miles Minter (Mutual)—"It gave the star a good chance to show her ability. Miss Minter is always a drawing card here."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

The Serpent's Tooth, with Gail Kane (Mutual)—"This is a good picture and like all Mutual films we have received, in good condition. Good business."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

New York Luck, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Good. Ought to please anywhere."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Paramount

The Eternal Temptress, with Lina Cavalieri (Paramount)—"The star's beauty caused much comment but the style of picture did not please so very well."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

At Coney Island, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"This made them laugh. It is the first one of the series I have run that wasn't really two one-reel comedies booked as a two-reeler."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

Tom Sawyer, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A knockout on a two-day run."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

A Pullman Bride, with Mack Swain (Sennett-Paramount)—"Another good comedy."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

Roping Her Romeo, with Ben Turpin (Sennett-Paramount)—"Subtitles are half the comedy in this picture. An all-around good comedy."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

An International Sneak, with Chester Conklin (Sennett-Paramount)—"Very pleasing and amusing comedy. All of them are good."—Cowan Oldham, Dixie Theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.

Huck and Tom, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A good picture but it did not draw as well as we expected."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Huck and Tom, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"Let all the schools know about this and you will show to more children than you ever had in your theatre for one picture. And children bring grown-ups. This is a good picture."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Fortunes of Fifi, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Drew well but was not so well liked because it is a costume play."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Sleeping Fires, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"A splendid play and all Frederick fans liked it. Excellent business."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Big Timber, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"Splendid. One of the star's very best. Kathlyn Williams adds a lot to it. Business good."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Unconquered, with Fannie Ward (Paramount)—"On account of the voodooism in this play, it is not good for the children, although dear little Billy Jacobs is at his very best. For grown-ups this play is above the average."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Wild Youth (Blackton-Paramount) — "These Blackton productions positively do not draw here. I have not played one of them yet to film rental. They have it too high."—T. L. Little, Majestic Theatre, Camden, S. C.

Flare-Up Sal, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Very good, as good as Flame of the Yukon. Good business. Book it."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Keys of the Righteous, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—"An excellent picture, one of Enid Bennett's best. Everyone pleased."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Seven Swans, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"This star has lost her drawing power here."—T. L. Little, Majestic Theatre, Camden, S. C.

The Honor of His House, with Sessue Hayakawa

Naughty Naughty, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—"Excellent. The best comedy drama we've had for a long time. The title did not draw."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Sunshine Nan, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—"A good picture."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.

Hidden Pearls, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"Good. Hayakawa is popular here. Drew a very good crowd."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

That Night, with Charles Murray (Sennett-Paramount)—"About the best Sennett comedy yet."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

One More American, with George Beban (Paramount)—"A good picture but it did not draw."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Pathe

The Little Patriot, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"Big business every time the star plays."—William Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

Daddy's Girl, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"Marie is a wonder, both as a drawing card and a player."—William Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

Miss Captain Kiddo, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"A delightful story and Baby Marie is a favorite here. I find that the grown-ups enjoy this star even more than the children do. One old bachelor came out with a big broad smile on his face and said, 'I'll tell you that's a cute kid. When are you going to have her again?'"—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Other Woman, with Peggy Hyland (Pathe)—"A very pleasing picture."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Mrs. Slacker, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"Very good picture. Went big here. Well liked."—Coffey Brothers, Cozy Theatre, Marinette, Wis.

Mrs. Slacker, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"A fairly good picture. The title has little drawing power as people are tired of pictures about slackers."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Under False Colors, with Frederick (Pathe)—"A great subject. Played to full houses. Title misleading."—Coffey Brothers, Cozy Theatre, Marinette, Wis.

Blind Man's Luck, with Mollie King (Pathe)—"A very good story but the film was in terrible condition. When this occurs, it spoils everything."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

When Baby Forgot, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"A pleasing kid picture but liked by grown-ups too. Baby Osborne keeps them smiling."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Twenty-one, with Bryant Washburn (Pathe)—"Good."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Hillcrest Mystery, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—"Very well liked. A good picture."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.

An Amateur Orphan, with Gladys Leslie (Pathe)—"A good comedy-drama. Star very pleasing in this role."—B. C. Sharun, Lyric Theatre, Ripley, Okla.

A Romantic Journey, with William Courtney (Pathe)—"Poor."—B. E. Sharum, Lyric Theatre, Ripley, Okla.

Petrova Pictures

The Life Mask, with Mme. Petrova (Petrova)—"Fair."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Select

By Right of Purchase, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"A very good picture which drew very good business and satisfied all."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Triangle

Flames of Chance, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—"A very good picture, with just enough war plot to please. I think Triangle could improve most of its titles."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Flames of Chance, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—"A fair picture. Business fair."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

His Picture in the Papers, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Excellent. Second run."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Re-issue. Business fair. Print very dark. These re-issues are hurting the newer pictures."—George Kennell, Majestic Theatre, Maricopa, Cal.

The Aryan, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Very good. Hart is our best drawing card. He pulls them in any kind of a picture."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Reggie Mixes In, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This is good and the star is drawing better."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Sudden Jim, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A cracker. Get Triangle pictures for drawing cards generally."—William Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

The Paws of the Bear, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A good picture, well acted. Holds interest till the very last."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

An Even Break, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"This star is certainly a comer. Here is a picture that appeals to old and young. Business fair."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Little Reformer, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"Fairly well liked, but not nearly so good as The Sawdust Trail."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

From Two to Six, with Winifred Allen (Triangle)—"Fair only. Would be good if there was more action and less posing in the first three reels."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Universal

Painted Lips, with Louise Lovely (Universal Special)—"A good production. Fair drawing power. Catchy title."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

The Circus of Life, with Zoe Rae (Universal Special)—"Little Zoe Rae is a wonderful child actress. Drew a good crowd in spite of bad weather."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

The Cricket, with Zoe Rae (Universal Special)—"This is the best work the little star has done in our program."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

John Ermine of Yellowstone (Universal Special)—"Nothing to brag about except the photography, which is exceptionally good."—B. E. Sharum, Lyric Theatre, Ripley, Okla.

Balloonatics, with Alice Howell (Century)—"A good slapstick comedy. The first Century comedy produced, but the film is in fine condition."—B. E. Sharum, Lyric Theatre, Ripley, Okla.

Oh Baby, with Alice Howell (Universal)—"Two-reel comedy that contains quite a few laughs but it could be done in one reel just as well."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Vitagraph

The More Excellent Way, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"Star going better. Picture good, but it is not the stuff that goes in a small Nebraska town. Business fair."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Babette, with Marc McDermott (Vitagraph)—"Like all McDermott plays, the action is entirely too slow. Pictures of this class do not suit our audiences."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Apartment 29, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"Went over well as a repeat, to good business."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Hawk, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"This star draws well but the picture did not take."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers, with Nell Shipman (Vitagraph)—"A good picture which pleased the audience."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

The Wooing of Princess Pat, with Gladys Leslie (Vitagraph)—"A fairly good picture to fairly good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

World

Her Hour, with Kitty Gordon (World)—"A pink permit and it really should be as it is rather suggestive. It is a good drawing card. Liked by all."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Wanted a Mother, with Madge Evans (World)—"Little Madge is liked by the great majority. Story not as good as The Little Volunteer but O. K. Capacity house."—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

The Trap, with Alice Brady (World)—"Pleased some and others said it contained no story. Star draws fairly well. Title attracted the children but it fooled them."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Cross Bearer, with Montagu Love (World)—"A very good picture which drew a fairly good audience on a rainy night."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

The Witch Woman, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"A very good picture which pleased the patrons and drew very good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

State Rights and Specials

The Lone Wolf, with Bert Lytell (State Rights)—"A good production but the price charged is excessive and unreasonable."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Fall of the Romanoffs, with Iliador (State Rights)—"Very good. Drew well for two days."—J. B. Koppe, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.—High classs neighborhood.

Redemption, with Evelyn Nesbit (State Rights)—"Fine. Great business at advanced prices."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

On Trial, with Sidney Ainsworth (Essanay)—"Fair business. Good picture."—John B. Ashton, Columbia, Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Whip (State Rights)—"Played two days. All said one of the best pictures ever seen."—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

The Whip (State Rights)—"Worth the money every time. Everybody liked it. In spite of rain we had a good attendance."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Public Defender, with Frank Keenan (State Rights)—"A splendid picture which more than satisfied everyone. One of the best of the week. This can be booked confidently by any exhibitor."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

A Dog's Life, with Charlie Chaplin (First National Exhibitors' Circuit)—"A corking good picture, one of Chaplin's best. However, I do not think that the extra charge made on this picture is giving the exhibitors a fair deal."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

A Dog's Life, with Charlie Chaplin (First National Exhibitors' Circuit)—"Played to the largest box-office receipts in the history of the house, in this 'high-brow' town. It proves that so far as pictures are concerned, there are no 'high-brow' and 'low-brow' classes."—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.

Serials and Series

The Son of Democracy, with Benjamin Chapin (Paramount)—"This is a very good series."—J. B. Koppel, Adelphi Theatre, Chicago.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Chapter 15. This surely is the greatest serial put out to my notion. It has been drawing crowds, no matter how bad the weather. Prints are always good."—C. F. Nolte, Wonderland Theatre, Buckeye, Ia.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Best serial on our screen. Draws well. I don't think our theatre can hold them on the last night."—George Kennell, Majestic Theatre, Maricopa, Calif.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"The later chapters of this are poor. Story impossible."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

House of Hate, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"No. 4. Greatest serial we have played since The Fighting Trail."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Son of Democracy, with Benjamin Chapin (Paramount)—"We have played our second number of the series and had the second largest house we ever had on Tuesday. These really do bring people into the theatre who are not in the habit of coming and they please the regulars, too."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Price of Folly, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—"Not going well with us. We have just shown the fourth picture of the series and it is weak."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Correction

In the issue of Motography dated May 3, the photoplay, "At the Mercy of Men," starring Alice Brady and offered by Select, was mistakenly attributed to the World Film Corporation in a report to "What the Picture Did for Me."

Making the Children Happy

MANAGER FINDS SPECIAL MATINEES PAY

SHOW an intelligent interest in the youngsters in your community and the adults will quickly show an interest in you.

This is the belief of J. B. Koppel, manager of the Adelphi Theatre, one of the finest of the Ascher Brothers' string of Chicago houses.

Mr. Koppel is a young man with ideas and initiative. For four years he has been managing theatres for Ascher Brothers and when—last November—he was selected to guide the destiny of the newest Ascher house, he had one special ambition for it. He wanted to make it distinctive.

J. B. Koppel, manager of the Adelphi Theater, Chicago, the subject of the accompanying article.

Some of His Ideas

Given a beautiful theatre, an opportunity to obtain the finest and newest of pictures and the best of music, Mr. Koppel might have been content to have a high-class house of no especial character. But this young manager was not content. He had some ideas to work out. Here are a few of them.

He first thought about the children. His theatre is located in a high class neighborhood, in the extreme northern part of the city, only seven blocks from Evanston. His young patrons are children from homes of culture and refinement. Their parents watch over their amusements.

The announcement that the new theatre would give Saturday afternoon matinees planned for the children interested and pleased them. Manager Koppel then set out to make these weekly affairs just as enjoyable and different as possible.

Shows Juvenile News Reel

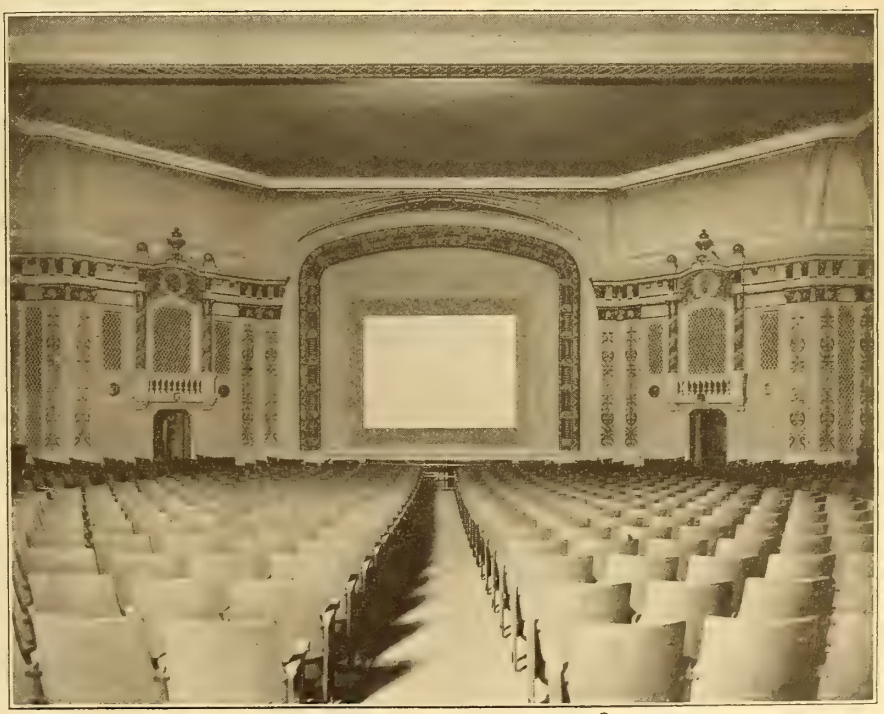
Among the unusual features of his programs is a juvenile news weekly. The theatre runs all the various news films and the scenes in these which will especially interest the children are combined, sometimes with scenic views, into the Adelphi Juvenile Weekly.

Another feature is the use of music arranged with the youngsters in mind. Both the overture and the accompaniment to the picture consist of selections pleasing and easily understood. Familiar child-songs and dances add to the spirit of the occasion.

Forms Dramatic Club

Perhaps the most ambitious project by which Mr. Koppel has endeared the theatre to his young friends is the forming of the Adelphi Dramatic Club. He reasoned that children who watch other children act on the screen of his theatre might like a chance to try acting themselves. So he hired a dramatic teacher, Miss Julia Bauer, and ran an announcement that anyone between the ages of five and fourteen years was eligible for membership.

Miss Bauer trains these children, without cost to them, once a week in the theatre. About once a month, a playlet is presented on the stage of the Adelphi to their parents and friends as the event of the evening.



Strives for Variety

For his Saturday afternoon matinees, Mr. Koppel strives for variety, so that the children will not know what to expect, except that it will be something worth seeing. He does not want them to grow tired of pictures. So occasionally there is a vaudeville stunt—sometimes instead of a picture, sometimes in addition.

Another way of giving variety to the show is to give "parties." There are balloon parties, for instance, from which every child takes away a souvenir balloon. Holidays and other special occasions suggest stunts.

For instance, on the Saturday before Easter each guest was given a toy duck or chicken. An amusing incident occurred in this connection when some youngsters with a vivid imagination spread the report that live chicks were being given away. At once the humane society was notified, but Mr. Koppel had

"Heart of the Sunset" Wins Los Angeles

Daily Papers Give New Rex Beach Production High Praise When It Is Shown a Week at Quinn's Rialto

THE verdict of Los Angeles, one of the nation's greatest "picture towns," on Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset" is unanimously favorable to this special production released through Goldwyn.

Quinn's Rialto, the first theatre in the country to present this production to the public, did capacity business all week, greatly stimulated by praise of the Los Angeles daily newspapers.

"'Heart of the Sunset' is thrilling," said the Los Angeles Times, "and it is filled with the spirit and action that have made all of the past Rex Beach productions stand out conspicuously as screen money-makers. Rex Beach always writes of real people and not of puppets. His figures are all human beings taken from life and most of them are recognizable, although he changes their names. 'Heart of the Sunset' has been the talk of the town throughout the week."

"Alaska has been for years the recognized home of the dramatic punch," says Florence Lawrence in the Los Angeles Examiner, "but now comes the Texas cow country and the Mexican border claiming equal right to the greatest American novelist's consideration. In 'Heart of the Sunset' at Quinn's Rialto, Rex Beach scales the gamut from hot blood to cold steel and gives us one of the biggest productions of the year in motion pictures.'

"The Swedish beauty, Anna Q. Nilsson, is his unfeatured heroine, and I truly hope that no one will alter any of the scenes with this beautiful leading woman in her riding togs. Here is a production chock full of thrills."

"The smell of the sagebrush and the alkali of the great American desert add to the gripping strength of 'Heart of the Sunset,'" says the Los Angeles Tribune-Express. "This production has all of the power that the public expects in a Rex Beach story."

"The one author in America who can always be counted on to deliver a real story on the screen is Rex Beach," says the Los Angeles Record. "He never fails. His stories are tight, tense, dramatic, powerful and they galvanize the interest of audiences. 'Heart of the Sunset' is Rex Beach's latest contribution to the big literature of the screen. It is therefore not surprising to see that this newest picture is crowding Quinn's Rialto. It is merely performing the function that all previous Rex Beach pictures have performed."

As a result of its success at the Rialto, Goldwyn's Los Angeles office reports heavy bookings throughout that territory.

The next big opening for "Heart of the Sunset" will be at Sheehan & Lourie's Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, where these showmen will put a big publicity drive behind the production to get the fullest value out of Rex Beach's popularity and prestige. The story is now running as a serial in one of the big San Francisco dailies, linking up with the presentation of the picture.

A. G. Talbot, manager of the America Theatre, Denver, has booked "Heart of the Sunset" for immediate showing, and he too finds that one of his local Denver newspapers is running the story, thereby greatly increasing the immediate pulling power of the production.

Philip Levy, manager of the Ansonia Theatre, Butte, Mont., is putting on the picture to link up with the circulation that the story is obtaining through serial publication in various cities in his section of the country also.

Star Remembers Pickaninnies

Mae Marsh, her work in "The Glorious Adventure" completed, finds time to keep various promises made to friends she acquired when in Georgia with Director Hobart Henley and Goldwyn players.

She is sending to each of the negro children who live on the old Hermitage estate outside of Savannah a box holding exactly what the pickaninnies asked for. Harmonicas, tops, marbles, shoes and stick candy are some of the things.

But to Mammy Lou, an ancient dame of 114 years, who thought Miss Marsh was her old-time "little missy" come to life, the winsome star is sending more—lots of clothing and snuff.

Setting "Hearts of the World" to Music

AN INTERVIEW WITH CARLI D. ELINORE

By Genevieve Harris

TO arrange music for so exquisite a story as Griffith's newest offering, "Hearts of the World," is a task calling for an artist mind of highest rank. Mr. Griffith found it in Carli D. Elinore, the man also responsible for the musical score which accompanied "The Birth of a Nation."

"I had eight months in which to arrange the music for 'The Birth of a Nation,' and I had less than that number of weeks to arrange it for 'Hearts of the World,' but I am better pleased with the score to the latter," says Mr. Elinore. "The picture inspired me more."

Theme Idea Is Basis

The theme idea, one distinctive little melody being selected for each of the leading characters, forms the basis of Mr. Elinore's method, but this now familiar device permits infinite variations. Both in the selection of these melodies and in their use there is room to show real artistry or the lack of it. Mr. Elinore strives to find themes that are, first, beautiful and appealing in themselves, and second, peculiarly fitting to the character.

Among the melodies used with "Hearts of the World" is a dainty spring-song sort of melody called "Sweetest Bunch of Lilacs," which accompanies the love story of the Girl and Boy, played by Lillian Gish and Robert Harron. In contrast to this, the pathetic little air from "Mignon," "Do You Know the Land?" is heard in the later scenes of parting and loneliness.

Kindergarten Melody Pleases

Wherever the rollicking Little Disturber (Dorothy Gish) comes into the story, a gay, saucy theme accompanies her, "It's Delightful to Be Married," from a light opera. "Ciribiriben" accompanies one of the soldiers even to the battle line. But perhaps the most appealing touch of all is a simple kindergarten melody chosen for the Littlest Brother, Ben Alexander.

"Having the theme is not enough," says Mr. Elinore. "The music must be used really to accompany their actions and moods. I believe music can be blended with the pictures so closely that every action, quick or slow, is followed by the music."

Keys with Shrug of Shoulders

This idea is worked out especially well in the music for The Little Disturber. Dorothy Gish, as the strolling singer, has a swinging, jaunty way of conducting herself, and so cleverly is the accompaniment arranged that in many of the scenes it follows every quick turn and shrug of her shoulders until it seems as if she were really acting to the music.

The same melody, differently orchestrated each time, and played in different tempo and in different mood, proves just the opposite of monotonous. In fact, it is more appealing each time it appears.

For instance the child-song melody already mentioned is merry and catchy as it is first heard in the happy home scenes. Then it is repeated again and again under various circumstances, until in the scene of the child's grief at the death of his mother when after the sombre "Dead March," a violin softly plays the little air, it becomes truly heart-breaking. It is doubtful if any in the audience will ever hear again that familiar melody without recalling the pictured scene.

Elinore's Experience Extensive

Mr. Elinore has been arranging music for photoplays for the past eight years, beginning his career with the Auditorium Theatre in Los Angeles. Besides the score used in the west for "The Birth of a Nation," he arranged the music for the two Clune pictures, "Ramona" and "The Eyes of the World." His advice to mu-

Howard Hickman to Become a Director

First Picture Will Be "The Rainbow," Starring Bessie Barriscale, Which Will Follow the Release of "Patriotism"

HOWARD HICKMAN, who has been prominent for several years as an actor on both the stage and the screen, is about to enter into a new career, that of a director of motion pictures. Mr. Hickman has been appearing for some time past as a player in Paralta productions and arrangements have just been consummated at the Paralta studios for him to make his advent into the field of direction.

His first picture will be "The Rainbow," in which Bessie Barriscale, who in private life is Mr. Hickman's wife, will be the star. Miss Barriscale is now in New York, where she went upon the completion of "Patriotism," her next Paralta play, to visit her sister, who is critically ill.

During her absence Mr. Hickman is making arrangements for his production and is dividing his time between the scenario department, Robert Brunton, manager of productions, and the staff of scenic artists and directors. He is preparing things so that work upon "The Rainbow" can be commenced immediately upon Miss Barriscale's return.

A great deal of interest is being manifested both by the Paralta company and by the players in Mr. Hickman's initial attempt in the directorial capacity, as his work as an actor has shown a wide knowledge of the drama. Doubtless his first picture will establish him in the new field. He does not intend, however, to allow success as a director to interfere with his already certain career as an actor and will continue as a delineator of screen characters, although it is improbable that he will be included in the cast of "The Rainbow," as it is his desire to concentrate upon the staging of the production.

Mr. Hickman has not yet decided upon the cast to support Miss Barriscale, but will probably do so within another week.

"The Rainbow" is the screen version of a story by William Parker. The scenario was written by Julian Louis Lamothe. This will be Miss Barriscale's seventh production since the formation of her own company to make Paralta plays. It will follow in release on the Paralta program, so far as the Barriscale films are concerned, the drama "Patriotism."

"The Rainbow" is a tense drama of social life and will show Miss Barriscale in the characterization which is so well liked by her admirers all over the country.

Raymond B. West, who has been directing Miss Barriscale in most of her Paralta plays, has been chosen to stage the picture in which J. Warren Kerrigan will return to the screen after an absence of eight months.

Howard Hickman in a dramatic scene from the Selexart production, "Blue Blood," which is being released through Goldwyn.

Katterjohn Writes Masterpiece

Monte M. Katterjohn, Paralta scribe and author of many big screen productions, is now engaged in writing a story which he has spent three years in gathering material for.

"In this story I will not be hampered by any sort of restrictions," he said. "The story will be the thing and the cast will be adapted to it. There will be no stars or featured players. I expect it to be about eight or nine reels in length

"It is a big dramatic story which will receive the best handling possible under the best of conditions—which means that the restrictions of warping the story to suit a star or cutting or padding it to make a certain set length of footage will be removed. I have worked on it for three years and have at last arranged for the proper production. It will be by far the best that I have ever written."

It is probable that the play will be produced at the Paralta studios under Paralta Plays, Inc., where Mr. Katterjohn's Selexart feature, "Carmen of the Klondike," was filmed. Under the Paralta banner, Mr. Katterjohn has also written "An Alien Enemy" and "Within the Cup," starring Louise Glaum and Bessie Barriscale, respectively.

Builds $50,000 House

A new theatre, the cost of which has been placed at $50,000, has been started at Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, by B. Cuzner. The latter made a tour of prominent cities to examine modern theatres to get the best ideas for his house.

Kerrigan Ready for Return to Screen

Paralta Star Will Begin Work on "Toby" at Once and Finish Picture as Quickly as Possible

IN accordance with the announcement made two weeks ago by the Paralta company that J. Warren Kerrigan would soon resume screen production after an absence of eight months, due to a fractured leg sustained in an accident in his last production, this popular star is now ready to commence work.

Thomas J. Geraghty's screen version of "Toby," the novel by Credo Harris, has been completed and is now being read for final approval by Mr. Kerrigan and Raymond B. West, who will direct the picture. The production has been planned for five reels and the cast will be made up from the Paralta stock company, with Lois Wilson, who has appeared with Mr. Kerrigan in his last two pictures, probably appearing in the leading feminine role.

Miss Wilson has not been seen in any Paralta plays since "The Turn of a Card," the picture in which Mr. Kerrigan broke his leg. She has been at the studio several times recently in conference with Mr. West and officials of the company regarding "Toby," however. Miss Roberta Wilson, her sister, is now playing one of the principal roles in "Shackled," Louise Glaum's forthcoming play.

Production of "Toby" will be rushed as much as possible without reducing the Paralta standard of quality, due to the fact that Mr. Kerrigan's absence from the screen after the success of his first two Paralta Plays, "A Man's Man" and "The Turn of a Card," has brought a great demand from the public for more of this star's pictures.

W. W. Hodkinson of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation meeting Louise Glaum during a visit to the new Paralta studios.

Fake Film Man Dupes Hotel

A Louisville, Kentucky, hotel manager is out $75 because he believed F. C. Nevin to be an employe of the American Film Company, Inc., of Chicago.

R. R. Nehls, manager, when wired for information to supplant that furnished by Nevin, said that no one by that name is or ever has been employed by the American Film Company.

"Patriotism" Ready for Release Soon

New Paralta-Barriscale Feature Now Being Cut and Assembled by the Director, Raymond B. West

THE next Paralta-Barriscale play, "Patriotism," which was completed at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles last week, will soon be ready for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Director Raymond B. West, who staged the production, is now busily engaged in cutting and assembling the scenes. His first rough cut gave promise of one of the most striking and thrilling dramas which has yet been made with the great war as an atmospheric background, without the actual dependency of the plot upon the conflict and without a single scene picturing a battlefield.

"Patriotism" was written by Jane Holly and R. B. Kidd of the Paralta staff of authors and the scenario was prepared by Julian Louis Lamothe, who has since been called to the colors.

Mr. West expresses himself as believing that it will be one of Miss Barriscale's best pictures and says that it will be completely cut and ready within a few days. However, it will not be shown to the public for a little time, inasmuch as prints will have to be sent to New York and arrangements made for release according to schedule.

Miss Barriscale's third Paralta play, "Blindfolded," has just been released and is meeting with remarkable success in all parts of the country.

Following "Patriotism," Paralta's next presentation will be "Shackled," featuring Louise Glaum, which is now in the course of production.

Lobby Display Causes Scene

Manager Archie Laurie of the Midway Theatre, Montreal, was threatened with arrest and a large, special lobby display was threatened with destruction by a squad of police because the front included two mermaids to advertise "A Daughter of the Gods."

Laurie did not go to jail and the lobby display remained where it was, because he had taken the precaution of submitting the front to the chief of police for his stamp of approval, which was given.

Mr. Laurie pointed to the impression of this stamp when the police made their "raid," but the blue coats decided to destroy the set anyway until Laurie announced that he would protest.

The Midway is on a prominent corner and with the police around it was not long before thousands of people had collected. After the withdrawal of the police Laurie had difficulty in preventing the people from fighting to see the show.

A few weeks before the police did compel Laurie to remove a lobby display which was used to advertise "On Trial." They did not like his depiction of a courtroom scene.

Power of Suggestion, Theme of Picture

William Desmond in Role of Tramp in "An Honest Man" Is Regenerated by Influence of Another's Mind

THE power of suggestion is the theme in "An Honest Man," which heads the Triangle May 5 schedule. with William Desmond in the title role. A romance of the Adirondacks, "Mlle. Paulette," follows, offering Wallace MacDonald and Claire Anderson in the featured parts.

"An Honest Man" is "an idyll of the road" and withal a psychological drama. It has the elements of comedy, yet embodies a serious theme. Desmond has the role of a man who has been made a tramp through environment. Through the power of suggestion he becomes an honest man and wins regeneration.

The story tells how Benny Boggs, a young and good natured tramp, is rejected at a recruiting office. He is employed by an aged farmer, Cushing, who is stricken while at work, and entrusts Benny with the mission of delivering a valuable package to his runaway daughter, Ruby, somewhere in the big city. Benny leaves for the city. He tears open the package, discovering $50,000. Despite hunger and poverty he vows he will live up to old Cushing's appraisal of him, "He is an honest man." He fulfills his trust after many adventures and becomes involved in a romance. His acceptance for enlistment comes as the step to redemption and proves the statement of the old farmer psychologist.

In this play Desmond has a role distinctly different from recent characterizations in "The Sea Panther" and "Society for Sale." Mary Warren, his copartner in the former play, is Ruby Cushing. Graham Pette and Ann Kroman are in supporting roles. Frank Borzage, the director of "The Shoes That Danced" and "Innocent's Progress," supervised the production.

"Mlle. Paulette," the second release of the week, is described as a dashing story of the gay white way with a touch of the Adirondacks. It was written by George Cowell and scenarioized by Frank Condon, Saturday Evening Post writer who has recently joined the Triangle staff.

Wallace MacDonald is leading man. He is pictured as a rather speedy scion of a New York millionaire, sent by his over-worried parent to a summer resort in the Adirondacks with a view to removing him from the temptations of the great white way. However, Jack Wayne was born under one of those unlucky stars that bring the innocent into love's entanglements.

So when "Mlle. Paulette," who in reality is charming Paula Grey, an actress, takes a vacation at the same summer resort, trouble starts brewing for Jack. Madamoiselle falls into a stream and sprains her ankle. Jack carries her to his cabin, only to find his father, who had motored down to pay his son a paternal visit. The father concludes that Jack is having another "affair" and orders him back to New York, despite Jack's frantic protestations that the woman is only his maid.

Complications ensue when the entire party returns to New York. The elder Wayne meets the actress under different circumstances. Jack is seen with "Mlle. Paulette." The case of mistaken identity is finally disclosed and after a series of lively adventures the story is unfolded to a happy conclusion.

Claire Anderson has the title role. George Pearce, Walter Perry, Dot Hagar, Anna Dodge and John Lince are in the cast. George Hernandez is Wayne, Sr. Raymond Wells directed.

"I Love Charles Albert," a two-reel Keystone comedy featuring Edward Brady and Ann Kroman, is the concluding release of the week.

Soldiers to the Rescue

Jane Miller, who plays the leading feminine role in the Triangle picture, "High Stakes," had her introduction to film thrillers one night last week, when she was called upon to jump from a high pier at Wilmington, Cal. She boldly made the leap into the cold, black water but her cries for help were so lusty that they were heard by two soldiers on their way to the camp at San Pedro. The brave lads in khaki responded to the call. They had hurled Director Hoyt aside and were about to make the rescue plunge, when Dick Donaldson, assistant director, calmly told them that Miss Miller was only playing her part in a motion picture.

MacDonald Hurt in Quake

The earthquake which struck Southern California recently nearly cut short the career of Wallace MacDonald, Triangle juvenile. He was alone in his room and before he had a chance to realize that he was enjoying the novelty of being caught in an earthquake a big folding bed crashed down upon him. The left side of his body was bruised, but he forgot the injury in the excitement that followed.

Triangle Roll of Honor

A new roll of honor has been posted at the Triangle Culver City studio and it contains the name of nearly every employe at the big plant. It comprises the list of studio subscribers to the Third Liberty loan. The names of all the employes have been printed on a huge sign that hangs on the side of the fireproof film vault near the studio entrance and beside each name that is listed among Liberty bond purchasers there has been placed a red star.

Triangle Starts Exceptional Pictures

One Is Quaker Story Featuring Olive Thomas and Others Is Paris Mystery with Alma Rubens

TWO exceptional pictures have been started at Triangle's Culver City studio this week. One is a Quaker story in which beautiful Olive Thomas has the featured role. The other is a mystery drama dealing with life in Paris' famous Latin quarter and showing the ways of the Apache, or master crook, so feared by the good citizens of France before the war made them a thing of the past. This is a vehicle for Alma Rubens. Both features are H. O. Davis productions.

"Prudence Pays the Piper" is the working title for the new Thomas subject, which shows the experiences of a modest Quaker maid who invades a fashionable girls' finishing school in quest of knowledge and worldly polish. Miss Thomas is declared to be remarkably well cast in this picture, which is being directed by Frank Borzage, and those who saw the former Follies favorite in "Madcap Madge" know what a winsome school girl she makes.

"Prudence Pays the Piper" is declared by Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis to furnish an excellent vehicle for the display of Miss Thomas' charms. It is a clever comedy drama, with its humorous situations, pathos and dramatic moments well balanced.

Although Alma Rubens' new story is temporarily called "Mme. Sphinx," Thomas N. Heffron, who is directing, declares it could be called "Mme. Jinx." And Heffron declares he has good ground for his contention.

On the first day "Mme. Sphinx" was put in production nearly three hours were lost waiting for a scarf pin of unusual design which was most necessary to the plot. After shooting a few scenes in the Latin quarter studio of Wallace MacDonald, the modern Raffles who is the juvenile lead, the director found some radical changes necessary for the desired lighting effects. This cost another three hours and the company was at work at 10 o'clock that night on a set which they expected to finish early in the afternoon.

Then came the real fireworks. The decorations of the artists' studio caught fire from a lamp and for a time the entire glass stage was threatened. Led by Director Heffron, the entire company, men and women, battled the flames to save the set and stage and succeeded, but valuable time was lost before the decorations could be restored. It was past two in the morning when the first day's work on "Mme. Sphinx" was completed.

With William Beaudine directing, another Kate Corbaley comedy temporarily titled "Miller Muddles Through," has just been started with Edwin J. Brady, Claire Anderson and Diana Carrillo the principal members of the cast.

"Newspaper Clippings" is the title of a two reel Triangle-Keystone comedy just sent to the editing department by Director Harry Edwards. Mr. Edwards will now get his business affairs in shape and join Uncle Sam's boys in o. d.

"High Stakes," the master crook story directed by H. O. Davis himself and Arthur Hoyt, former casting director, which features J. Barney Sherry, has been sent to the film editors and is now getting the finishing touches. Critics who have seen the "rushes" on this drama declare the co-directors have handled it in masterful style and things are predicted for this feature picture when it is released. It will serve as a vehicle to introduce Harvey Clarke as a "heavy"—the Scotland Yards inspector who leaves no stone unturned to tempt the reformed master crook back into a life of crime so that he may make good his boast of "never having lost his man."

"The Red Haired Cupid," featuring the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart, which is now well under production, will serve to introduce a novelty to filmdom. It is an addition to Stewart's wardrobe, a handsome vest of reindeer hide with bears' claws serving as buttons. This, according to Cliff Smith, Stewart's director, is the only one of its kind in captivity so far as the motion picture world is concerned. The vest was made by one of the Triangle cowboys from a reindeer hide sent to Stewart by an admirer whose home is in the frozen North.

Working with a flock of pickaninnies, colored "mammies" and "bucks," Director J. W. McLaughlin is at Norwalk shooting scenes on the Southern romance written by William V. Mong, character actor, who has an important part in the story.

Owing to the illness of Margery Wilson, the featured player, Raymond Wells and company are held up on the finishing of "Old Loves for New."

With Belle Bennett as his featured player, Director Gilbert P. Hamilton is making record progress on "Iron and Lavender."

S. R. O. on Return Engagement

"Ghosts of Yesterday," Norma Talmadge's recently released Select Picture, played to S. R. O. at the America Theatre in Denver. Such news is by no means unusual enough to warrant comment, except for the fact that this was a return engagement.

Introducing Our New President and Some of His Plans

OUR friends in the motion picture trade will be interested to know that Mr. Fred W. Schwamb has been elected president and treasurer of MOTOGRAPHY. Mr. Schwamb is a capitalist whose successful handling of his affairs enabled him to retire from active participation in business some years ago. He has taken hold of MOTOGRAPHY'S steering wheel with the keen relish of a man whose energetic temperament will not permit him to enjoy prosperity in idleness; and the indications are that he is about to step on the accelerator.

President Schwamb is now in New York studying the picture situation in general, and getting acquainted with those of the trade not already known to him, in so far as a necessarily brief stay will permit. Those who talk with him will doubtless gain a more comprehensive idea of his plans than we could hope to relate here.

It may be set down, however, that Mr. Schwamb will leave no stone unturned in the effort to make MOTOGRAPHY bigger, better and more active than ever before. In this he will have the backing of Mr. John Crocker, another capitalist who was one of the founders of MOTOGRAPHY nearly ten years ago, and of some of their friends who are at present associated with the motion picture industry.

Some developments interesting to those who keep at least one eye on the trade paper situation may confidently be expected to come out of this reorganization.

New York State Illustrates the Need of a Strong Association

NEW YORK State's Sunday show bill lost out on a political technicality, engineered by a handful of enemies. Organized hostilities evidently started with the objections of two senators, which threw the bill to "general orders." From this position it was impossible to extricate it, in spite of the favor of twenty-nine senators; because four of the five members of the committee on rules were influenced against it. In its report, the Allied Motion Picture Committee directly accuses the governor's office of obstructing the measure.

The only amendment suggested that might have been assured of passage was obviously out of the question. It was worded in such a way that every city and village would have had to pass a special ordinance to permit any Sunday showing whatever—thus presenting the strong possibility of making matters even worse, and playing directly into political hands.

As the committee report well says, "The time spent and the efforts employed during the campaign were not in vain—there are no regrets." The committee can show as assets gained the positive endorsement of a large number of important civic and commercial organizations; a million and a half signatures on its petition; and a vast amount of supporting newspaper comment. There should be enough weight in that influence to carry the Sunday show to ultimate victory by its own momentum.

Motion picture exhibitors generally seem to be of a temperament which makes consistent and progressive organization difficult. New York, however, has had more success in organizing than some states, and its twelve hundred exhibitors are united in thought and desire if not in fact. It is the announced purpose of the Allied Motion Picture Committee to call a meeting of these interests and, if possible, co-ordinate their influence so as to be ready for action before the primaries and elections in the fall, when a complete state ticket is to be voted. A captain is to be designated for each senatorial district, with an assistant in each assembly district, comprising together a state committee competent to complete the work so well started by the allied committee.

It is obvious that the combined force of all the exhibitors in the state can accomplish whatever reasonable project it sets out upon. Every exhibitor, therefore, will do well to decide now that he, at least, will not be found indifferent when the time comes for the test of exhibitor power in New York.

You Put It Over the Top, Exhibitors

THE Third Liberty Loan campaign is drawing to a close. Most of the returns are enthusiastically encouraging, because many districts subscribed more than their quota before the campaign was half over. There are a few points that still lag behind, however—notably Chicago.

All exhibitors, being patriotic American citizens, know how their own districts stand. The newspapers will tell them, if they have failed to establish closer touch with the local Liberty Loan committees.

The effort to carry every district in the land to the top of its quota, and to make the grand total surpass Secretary McAdoo's wildest dreams, demands the co-operation of everyone willing to work for the United States.

The picture theatre in every neighborhood provides a ready meeting place for most of the people of its district. The managers of these theatres have already done their bit in helping the cause, and perhaps more than a bit.

But the big game is growing more serious every day, and a bit is no longer enough. We are beginning to realize that every one of us must do all he possibly can, and not rest a minute from doing it until our commander-in-chief says it is enough.

For the last few days of the drive, the local Liberty Loan committee should be able to place a bond salesman at the exit doors of every theatre. Call up the Loan headquarters and see if it cannot arrange to have a man at your door tonight. Run the Liberty Loan film if you have it. Get some slides or make some, and run them. Help the man at the door after you have invited him there. Do a little selling yourself whenever you have a moment.

Don't allow yourself to think of this work as a possible annoyance to your patrons. If they are annoyed they are in the wrong, and know it; and you are in the right—and they know that, too, and respect you for it.

This Third Loan has just got to go over big. Just imagine—don't talk about its not going over, but just imagine the shadow it would throw on every self-satisfied American citizen, if he had slacked on his share of the lightest duty any country has yet asked of its people. The Liberty Loan is a privilege. Four and one-fourth per cent on United States Government Bonds always will be a privilege—an extraordinary opportunity.

Because the exhibitor is so situated that he can influence a large number of people at once, it becomes peculiarly his duty, his right and his pleasure to do more for his country than the ordinary civilian can hope to accomplish. There are still a few days left in which to take full advantage of that great opportunity.

Cast for "DeLuxe Annie" Is Completed

Norma Talmadge, the Star, Has Eugene O'Brien for Leading Man—Frank Mills Gets Important Part

"DE LUXE ANNIE," on which Norma Talmadge is busily at work for the May release in her Select Star Series, is progressing rapidly with the cast completed.

This screen version of Edward Clark's successful play of the same name has been prepared by Paul West. The filming is under the direction of Roland West. The star is presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

Miss Talmadge's leading man again will be Eugene O'Brien, who occupied a similar position in the star's earlier releases, "Ghosts of Yesterday" and "By Right of Purchase," both of which have gone with a smash.

In "De Luxe Annie," O'Brien plays the role of Jimmy Fitzpatrick, the confederate of the crook heroine in the "de luxe game."

Another male role of major importance has been entrusted to Frank Mills, well remembered for his superb work on the stage with Mrs. Pat Campbell, Olga Nethersole, Forbes Robertson and Sir Herbert Tree, and also on the screen where he has supported many other luminaries.

Dr. Fernand Niblo, an alienist-physician, is portrayed by Edwards Davis, who is especially fitted for this role by his own collegiate training as well as extensive screen experience. Detective Cronin and Cyrus Monroe, the miserly country storekeeper with a weakness for pretty women, are drawn by Fred R. Stanton and Joseph Burke respectively, both talented performers.

Joe, the fat grocery boy who provides much of the comedy relief, is played by David Burns, while Mrs. Archer is portrayed by Edna Hunter, and little Janet Kendal by Harriet Jenkins, the winning child actress.

Work on "De Luxe Annie" is going ahead under full speed at Miss Talmadge's New York studio. The play is being filmed with the fidelity to detail and characterization that marks every Select picture.

Miss Talmadge's myriad admirers, whose ranks have been largely augmented by her sympathetic performances in "Ghosts of Yesterday" and "By Right of Purchase," will take keen delight in the convincing portrayal given by this sterling star of a finely bred woman whom an accident converts into a confidence worker.

Next Fisher Film Announced

The next picture to be done by Margarita Fisher for the American Film Company will be "Impossible Susan." The story was written by Joseph Franklin Poland and has been adapted for the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. It is a typical Fisher vehicle and holds much promise of a sparkling picture.

Very Clever, Mr. Knappen

H. L. Knappen, Select's Denver branch manager, recently bloomed forth in a pink effusion boosting the Select Star Series in which Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady are featured.

Illustrated with stills of the four stars was the following message:

"The Reason Why" you should book Select Star Series is because "Magda" and "Shirley Kaye," with Clara Kimball Young, are not "The Marionettes"—they're real characters "By Right of Purchase" from high royalty plays.

After learning "The Secret of the Storm Country," "The Moth," alias Norma Talmadge, who lived in "The House of Glass," quit throwing stones and began to sympathize with "De Luxe Annie," who saw "Ghosts of Yesterday" in "Her Silent Sacrifice," wherein her friend, Alice Brady, as "Woman and Wife," went under "The Knife" and was "At the Mercy of Men" in "The Ordeal of Rosetta." This created such a "Scandal" concerning Constance Talmadge that "The Studio Girl" said "Good Night, Paul!" and beat it "Up the Road with Sallie," that being the end of "The Honeymoon."

Select in N. A. M. P. I.

Select Pictures Corporation has just joined The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as a distributor member. This classification gives Select a double membership in the N. A. M. P. I., since the producer-membership originally taken out by Lewis J. Selznick, now president of Select Pictures, has been transferred to the corporation. This puts Select on a par with the other big companies in the moving picture field which are represented in both the producer and distributor divisions of the national group. Morris Kohn, treasurer of Select Pictures, has been designated to represent the corporation in the two branches of the N. A. M. P. I.

World Erects Big Tank

Because Carlyle Blackwell has just recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia and because scenes in "The Golden Wall," in which he and Miss Greeley are starred, require him to engage in a terrific fight under water, a huge tank has been constructed at the World studio in Fort Lee, N. J., where the scenes are being filmed.

It was originally intended to take these scenes outdoors, but rather than subject Mr. Blackwell to a possible recurrence of pneumonia the tank was especially built for these particular scenes at great expense.

United Theatres Well Organized Now

Branch Managers Installed in Offices and Field Forces At Work in Practically Every Big City

WITH one or two exceptions the branch managers of United Picture Theatres of America are installed in their own offices with the field forces fully organized and booking days are being rapidly contracted for throughout the most populous sections from Boston and New York as far as Denver and Salt Lake City and from Minneapolis and Chicago down to New Orleans. The names and addresses of the local managers are as follows:

A. S. Abeles (Eastern representative) and Aaron Corn, 1600 Broadway, New York; C. W. Bunn, 220 South State street, Chicago; Floyd Lewis, 3301 Olive street, St. Louis; Ernest H. Horstmann, 248 Boylston street, Boston; E. E. Erickson, 503 Renshaw Building, Pittsburgh; A. J. Gillingham, Empire Theatre Building, Detroit; D. F. O'Donnell, Chatham Courts, Washington, D. C.; N. I. Filkins, 324 Pearl street, Buffalo; C. C. Hite, Strand Theatre Building, Cincinnati; J. E. Schwartzbine, 447 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis; C. E. Holah, First National Bank Building, Omaha; C. S. Edwards, Sr. (district manager), and C. S. Edwards, Jr., 1003 Commerce Building, Kansas City; K. A. Bugbee, 714 Poydras street, New Orleans; W. G. Underwood, 107 South St. Paul street, Dallas; C. R. Gilmour, Albany Hotel, Denver; I. P. Arnold, 30 Woodruff Apartments, Salt Lake City.

This is believed to be one of the strongest organizations in the country. The members of it enjoy exhibitor confidence and they have been getting results. Eastern Representative Abeles, District Manager Edwards of Kansas City, and Manager Bunn of the Chicago office have been touring their territory and report that the movement is growing by leaps and bounds.

For example, many of the strongest theatres of northern and western Indiana have joined the movement as the result of a week of personal visits from Manager Bunn and his assistant, Milton Simon.

An important accession to the big cooperative society is that of Frank Eager, general manager of the Acme Amusement Company at Lincoln, Neb., and one of the leading exhibitors in the United States. In signing the contract for the booking service Mr. Eager insisted on making his check payable to United Picture Theatres of America instead of to the trust company depository. Mr. Eager did this to show his complete confidence in the officers and directorate, who have been attacked.

The Eager contract and several others were signed soon after a meeting of Omaha film interests April 22 in the First National Bank Building there with C. E. Holah, the U. P. T. representative, presiding. More than thirty exhibitors, exchange men and others interested were in attendance. Mr. Holah explained the plan and fully disproved to the satisfaction of those present the allegations against the society by a hostile trade publication. He also showed by figures on a blackboard the savings that could be effected in the purchase of films by the United's collective buying power.

After the U. P. T. meeting another meeting was called to order in the same room by Manager Thomas of the Strand Theatre, to discuss the issues of the municipal campaign insofar as they affected exhibitor interests. This second meeting was addressed by Mayor James C. Dahlman, who is a warm friend of the exhibitors. All present expressed their thanks to United Picture Theatres for the use of the room and other courtesies.

The exhibitors in attendance included Managers Pramer of the Alhambra, Freeman of the Palm, Ribble of the Rex, Shirley of the Muse, Jensen of the Lathrop and Hamilton Kirke of the Grand, Henry Rehlff of the Rehlff, Scofield of the Dundee, Freeman of the Park, E. Monahan of the Apollo, Hallgren of the Suburban, Thomas of the Strand, Sam Harding of the Nicholas, Council Bluffs, and Morris Schulling of the Hippodrome, Sioux City.

Alice Brady Goes South

A few days after her return from Boston, whither she went on one hour's notice and made a rousing Liberty Loan speech, Alice Brady resumed her favorite sport of catching trains.

This time, however, the trip is on business—although Miss Brady always manages to have a good time even on these occasions. The star, her director, camera man and several members of the company employed on a forthcoming production, left the once-in-a-while-spring-y environs of New York and Fort Lee for the all-the-time-balmy atmosphere of Asheville, North Carolina. There Miss Brady will remain for several days filming the outdoor episodes.

When the star and her party return Miss Brady will attend the first public New York showing of her latest Select picture, "At the Mercy of Men," in which the Russian heroine is the central figure in a series of dramatic events staged in Petrograd just before the revolution.

Title New Russell Picture

The next William Russell picture will be "Up Romance Road," written especially for the star by Stephen Fox. The story is an original comedy drama of high order, full of humor and novel ideas so cleverly worked out that the interest and suspense never lag.

Anita Stewart Ready to Start Work

Vitagraph Star Will Make Series of Features, First of Which Is "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl"

ANITA STEWART will start work this week at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn on the first of a special series of features, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. The production will be under the direction of Wilfred North, who directed "Over the Top" with Sergeant Empey. President Smith will personally supervise all her pictures.

Anita Stewart, Vitagraph star, who has begun on a special series, the first of which will be an adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's celebrated drama, "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl."

Miss Stewart's first vehicle will be "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," Sir Arthur W. Pinero's delightful drama in which Billie Burke scored the greatest artistic and financial stage success of her career.

Mr. Smith announces that several other plays have been purchased for Miss Stewart, the titles of which will be given out later. He also declares that the Anita Stewart series will be among the finest screen offerings ever made, the dainty star being surrounded by casts of exceptional strength.

Miss Stewart returns to Vitagraph more beautiful than at any time in her career. She has entirely recovered from the illness which struck her down last summer and her long rest has been of the greatest benefit.

"The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl" should prove a happy selection for Miss Stewart, because the role of Lily Parradell is one well adapted to a girl of her beauty and vivacity. Lily is a musical comedy favorite, a beautiful butterfly risen from the environment of a small grocer's daughter, who wins the love of a young British lord and is married to him. It is a keen satire on the marriages of lordlings and stage beauties, with strong melodramatic situations and fine humorous sidelights.

The play, the thirty-seventh from the facile pen of Pinero, was first presented in London and was brought to this country by the late Charles Frohman, with a cast made up of many of the original English players. It was first put on in Atlantic City September 2, 1912, and September 19 it opened in the Lyceum Theatre, New York. It played to big business there for more than four months and then Miss Burke went on tour, finishing the season on the road. Since that time it has been one of the most popular modern plays, being presented by most of the leading stock organizations of the country.

Big Demand for Empey Play

"Over the Top," Vitagraph's reproduction of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's famous book, with Empey himself in the star role, ended a smashing run of four weeks at the Lyric Theatre, New York, Saturday night, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, announces that bookings for the United States and Canada are now under full headway.

As announced last week, the Vitagraph distributing organization chief has refused to listen to any proposals for state rights or territorial offers and the individual exhibitors are to have first call on "Over the Top," the same as on other Vitagraph specials and regular features.

From the Vitagraph offices at 1600 Broadway comes the information that the bookings in less than a week exceed those of any other special ever released by the company and in that brief period its record is greater than the others made in a period of months.

Figures compiled by the Vitagraph distributing organization with the assistance of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate and the Western Newspaper Union, which have distributed Empey's special articles and "Over the Top" to daily and weekly papers, show that more than 1,500 newspapers in forty-seven states and the District of Columbia have published his writings.

Miss Minter Scores Hit in New Picture

Story Is That of Country Girl Who Goes to Big City and Wins Fame Before the Footlights

MARY MILES MINTER, in her latest American-Mutual picture, "Social Briars," has achieved another triumph. It is a story of a little country girl who "hated the miserable little village and everybody in it."

She goes to a big city and her voice wins for her a position in a city church. She isn't satisfied yet and night after night she attends the theatre to watch the triumph of one of her new friends, a light comedy opera star.

And then—one day comes the wonderful chance that every young artist dreams of—the chance that brings that wonderful night when an understudy sings the role of the star and the audience goes wild.

The picture audience goes wild over Miss Minter, too, when she trips out in a quaint little shepherdess costume and a tiny flowered pancake hat and staff, carrying a baby lamb that grew so fond of her at rehearsals that she bought it and surprised her mother by bringing home a lamb to add to the family.

Alan Forrest, of course, plays the leading male role and the cast is further adorned by George Periolat and Emma Kluge.

Edmund Cobb is in it and so is Frank Whitson, Claire Du Brey, Ann Schaefer, Jacob Abrams and Milla Davenport.

It is a good show and you'll be glad you went to see it. "Social Briars" is set for release in May.

Mary Miles Minter, charming little American-Mutual star, as she appears in her latest picture, "Social Briars."

New Serial Named "A Fight for Millons

Vitagraph Feature Now Being Made by William Duncan Will Be Released July 15, Says President Smith

"A FIGHT FOR MILLIONS" is announced as the title for the next Vitagraph serial, in which William Duncan, star of "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," is to be featured.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, in making public the name of the forthcoming chapter play, also stated that it would be released on July 15.

As in his other two big successes, Duncan is filling the dual role of star and director, and advance reports from the Vitagraph western studio are to the effect that the serial already gives promise of being the best work of Duncan's career.

The story was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, authors also of "Vengeance—and the Woman" and "The Woman in the Web."

"A Fight for Millions" will be in fifteen episodes, as were its predecessors, and as a great deal of its action is laid in the snowfields of Northwest Canada, it should make an ideal summer serial.

Duncan has been provided with an exceptionally strong cast, headed by Edith Johnston, who will be seen as his leading woman in place of Carol Holloway, who appeared with him in his other two serials. Miss Holloway suffered a very serious injury in the last serial, one of her heels being fractured, and she has been unable to play for several months.

The male members of the cast include Joe Ryan, acknowledged champion among the cowboy riders and one of the leading "heavies" of "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman." He has been a regular member of Duncan's company for more than a year, and in addition to his work in the serials also appeared in support of Duncan in "The Tenderfoot" and "Dead Shot Baker," the two Blue Ribbon features made from the Wolfville tales of Alfred Henry Lewis.

Walter Rodgers, another regular of the Duncan company, who played Von Bleck in "The Fighting Trail," and Vincent Howard, who gave an excellent portrayal of the Indian outlaw, "Commanche Pete" in "Vengeance—and the Woman," also appear in "A Fight for Millions."

President Smith declares that Duncan is moving along rapidly in the production of the story and expects him to complete it long before the release date.

Margarita Fisher taking the "C" out of her name and giving it back to Germany. Miss Fisher is starred in American-Mutual productions.

Many Mutual Chaplins Shown

Demand for the two reel Chaplin comedies produced by Lone Star for release through Mutual exchanges has been consistently heavy under Mutual's new booking plan. Chaplin-Mutual specials played last week in 1,692 houses in all parts of the United States.

Virtually every booking of the 1,692 was at least a second run. In some instances the pictures had been run as many as twenty times and in one instance, the booking of "The Vagabond," the twenty-fifth.

Shortly after the release of "The Adventurer," twelfth of the series of Chaplin-Mutuals, a new arrangement was put into effect under which the productions were made available to exhibitors who had not made an original contract at the beginning of the series.

Exhibitors who played the Chaplin-Mutuals on first run were quick to take advantage of the terms of the new plan and appreciating the money-making possibilities of second run, played them over.

Star Abandons German Name

Margarita Fisher kicked the "C" bodily out of her name at Santa Barbara last week by means of a little ceremony that indicated how much in earnest she was.

She picked the offending Teutonic letter from the center of her name and tossed it lightly onto a clay map of Germany that had been fashioned on a table for her ceremony.

"From Germany thou came, seventy-five years ago," she said, watching the letter fall ker-plunk into Germany, "back to Germany thou may go—and welcome. I was born in the good old United States and every fibre of my body is boosting for America—the best country in the world."

Zukor Day Breaks Records in Loan Drive

Stage Women's War Relief in New York Gets Subscriptions from Hundreds Through Effective Outdoor Appeals

ADOLPH ZUKOR MOTION PICTURE DAY at the Liberty Theatre in front of the Public Library on Fifth Avenue, New York, proved to be the greatest day in the Liberty Loan drive of the Stage Women's War Relief. More than $300,000 in subscriptions was realized, which is practically double the amount obtained on any previous day.

Soon after the opening ceremonies Jesse L. Lasky, Arthur S. Friend and Emil Shauer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, appeared and subscribed $100,000 in behalf of their company, another $25,000 having been subscribed earlier in the day by members of the office, exchange and studio staffs. Because of a very important engagement out of town, Mr. Zukor was unable to appear.

One of the most notable events in the day's activities at the Liberty was the appearance of Governor Whitman, who was introduced by Elsie Ferguson. The governor gave a stirring address which resulted in a run on the clerks making out the subscription blanks. Traffic was completely blocked during the governor's address as well as at other times throughout the day, particularly when the film stars appeared.

The drive commenced at 11 with the appearance of Nahan Franko, the famous music conductor, at the head of his orchestra. The Evening Globe Singers, under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson, sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Elsie Ferguson was the first to make her appeal. Her activities helped considerably toward making this a record day.

Billie Burke also made an appeal and worked hard with excellent results for two hours. The largest individual subscriptions obtained from the crowd was the purchase of a $5,000 bond by Robert H. Mainzer.

Others who appeared were Alice Brady, Mildred Manning, Thomas Meighan, Gertrude McCoy, Crauford Kent, Rita Jolivet, Madame Clayborg, the Metropolitan opera singer; Lois Ewell, Edith Jeanne, Henri La Bonte, Percy Richards, "the man in white;" Siegfried Phillip, Francesca Marni and many other stars of screen, stage and opera. In addition a number of vaudeville acts and singers appeared through courtesy of Joe Schenck and Ted Snyder.

William A. Brady, discovered in the audience by Ray Cox, was brought to the stage by four policemen. Mr. Brady received an ovation and immediately warmed up to a stirring address.

The committee on arrangements for Zukor day consisted of Pete Schmid, chairman; Charles E. Moyer and A. M. Botsford.

A high spot of merriment in the new Strand comedy, "Over the Garden Wall," released through Mutual.

Vitagraph Annual Report

Walter W. Irwin, treasurer and general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, reported to the stockholders at the third annual meeting held last week. The report shows that the business of the company for the past year, the third year of the existence of Vitagraph's own distributing organization, increased 22 per cent plus over the business of the second year. This increase was recorded notwithstanding the fact that the business of the company for the second year increased 47 per cent over that for the first year, this increase of 47 per cent being in itself phenomenal in view of the large business which the company did during the first year. Another remarkable fact is that during the three years' existence of the distributing company, its losses in bad debts amount to only 3/20 of 1 per cent.

An interesting sidelight on the business, as revealed by Mr. Irwin's report to his company's stockholders, relates to the Canadian market, which for the Vitagraph organization has produced a large volume of profitable business.

The annual election of officers for the Vitagraph distributing organization resulted in only one change, Frank J. Frost of New York being elected vice-president of the company in place of Clendennin J. Ryan, who is now an officer in the Aviation Corps in France. Albert E. Smith was re-elected president and Mr. Irwin was re-elected treasurer, secretary and general manager.

Vitagraph Gets "Love Watches"

The Vitagraph Company has negotiated with Charles Frohman for the screen rights to "Love Watches," the stage play in which Billie Burke had the stellar role, and will shortly convert it into a vehicle for Corinne Griffith, who will be ably supported by a brilliant cast.

The play will be produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle, who is known for his production of "Womanhood" and "Within the Law" and who has directed more than twenty successful features for the Vitagraph Company during the past three years.

New Minter Play Titled

The Minter picture now in course of production at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor." It is taken from a story written for the Saturday Evening Post by Josephine Dodge Bacon and deals with a mythical person who is never seen by the woman who employs her, but who keeps the home and the silver in a state of immaculate cleanliness.

"Little Runaway" Heads Vitagraph Bill

Picture Stars Gladys Leslie in Role of Irish Lassie Who Runs Away to Avenge Wrong, Wins Out and Gets Husband, Too

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH of Vitagraph announces that "The Little Runaway" will be the Blue Ribbon feature on the Vitagraph schedule for the week of May 6. This is a charming Irish romance by Paul West, and gives Gladys Leslie another opportunity to display her piquant beauty and her ability to make mischief a mask for womanly emotions.

Miss Leslie, who has progressed swiftly in popular favor since her acquisition by Vitagraph, is said to register even more effectively in "The Little Runaway" than she did in "The Wooing of Princess Pat," "His Own People," or "Little Miss No-Account."

She is the Irish lassie who runs away all alone to America to catch the fellow who stole her grandmother's rents and who comes back the bride of a lord.

Edward Earle returns from his triumphs in Vitagraph comedies to play opposite Miss Leslie, and in the supporting cast are Jessie Stevens, Mother Mary Maurice, William Dunn, Betty Blythe and William Calhoun. Director William P. S. Earle has been especially fortunate in his locations and settings, notably Irish villages and the homes and the home life have been most faithfully pictured.

Ann lives with her aunt and her blind grandmother, helping support them by making lace when not at mischief or romping with the young folk, in a small Irish village owned entirely by Lord Killowen. The real master, however, is Harvey Dowd, collector of rents, a mean, grasping man, whose pleasure is further oppression of the people.

Killowen plans to visit America to pay court to Eileen Murtagh and visits his village. He rescues Ann from the unwelcome attentions of Dowd's son, Peter, but she does not know his identity. Peter collects the rents, giving receipts to all but Ann's folks and decamps for America with the money. Ann and her people are promptly evicted and the little lassie runs away determined to find and punish Peter.

Befriended by a bagpiper and later by a kind-hearted Irish skipper, she makes her way to New York and is at once taken under the wing of the mother of a policeman who picks her up. The policeman knows of Lord Killowen's presence in the city, and Ann goes to him with her story. Although courting Eileen, he does not love her, and induces her to care for Ann until he can arrange for her future.

Peter Dowd meanwhile has hunted up Killowen and meets Ann. Fearing Ann will tell Killowen of the thefts, he poisons his mind against the girl. Eileen becomes jealous and has her bundled off to a boarding house.

Lord Killowen now has to choose between the two women, and he realizes he loves the lassie. He unmasks Dowd, presents himself to Ann in his true light, that of Lord Killowen, and confesses that whereas he came to America seeking wealth, he had succeeded beyond his wildest dreams in his love for her. And Ann naively answers that he needn't have come so far, for she had loved him from the day he rescued her back in the little village.

Government Films Active

Since Charles S. Hart assumed his duties as director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, he has perfected an organization that has already demonstrated great efficiency.

The first result of the work undertaken by the division is the completion of a seven-reel feature film entitled "Pershing's Crusaders." This is the first of a series of official American war films and it will be shown for the first time at the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, during the week of April 29. Arrangements have also been completed for engagements in the principal theatres of New York, Chicago and sixteen of the largest cities in the United States.

Herbert C. Hoagland, who was for years editor of the Pathe Weekly, is head of the production department and will also handle the Weekly War Review.

George Bowles, manager of the feature film department, managed D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" during its phenomenal year's run in Chicago and afterwards handled the same picture for a year and a half in Australia, New Zealand, Polynesia and Hawaii.

Pictures Oust Vaudeville

The New Grand Theatre at Moberly, Missouri, has always been a combination house, presenting a program of vaudeville and a picture. Upon signing up for the Select Star Series, however, the managers found they were so successful that they were able to dispense with vaudeville attractions and are now running pictures alone to bigger houses than attended the combination showings.

World to Release "The Oldest Law" May 27

Picture Is Based on Self Preservation and Deals with the Struggle of an Orphaned Girl in New York

JUNE ELVIDGE makes her appearance on the World program in "The Oldest Law" May 27. John Bowers is featured as her leading man and the remainder of the cast is composed of well-known World actors. Harley Knoles handled the direction.

The oldest law is, of course, that of self-preservation and Miss Elvidge in her portrayal of a girl struggling for existence in the whirling city has a role of convincing power.

The story begins in the Maine woods, where Jennie Fox with her father and nature as sole companions, lives a life marked with simplicity and freedom. The placid days were interrupted by the visit of Professor Rolfe, an ardent botanist. While pursuing a rare specimen, he slipped and sprained his ankle, and Jennie assisted him to her father's home and cared for his injury.

The father and Jennie found the companionship of the professor much to their liking and a firm bond of friendship sprang up. One day in the absence of Jennie, old man Fox confided to Rolfe that the future of Jennie after his death was causing him many hours of anxiety, but the professor eased his fears by assuring him that in such a case he would care for her. Not long after the departure of the professor an accident occurred to the elder Fox which caused his death. While this was taking place, Jennie had become acquainted with Billy West, who was visiting the mountains on a fishing trip.

After the affairs of her father were settled, Jennie decided to go to the city to earn her living and proceeded to see Professor Rolfe. Her stay at his house was one of enjoyment, blasted, however, by the professor's unexpected death. Jennie having progressed little toward the solution of the bread and butter problem found a home in a cheap boarding house and obtained a job as a typist. But she incurred the displeasure of one of the employes who, by means of a subterfuge, had her discharged.

After days of fruitless endeavors to find another position, Jennie decided to enjoy herself thoroughly once more and then trust to Providence. She spent the evening at a famous cafe where she was accosted by Billy West, who was just in the profess of settling his divorce suit. He offered to her the position of housekeeper at his home which Jennie, being at her wits end, was compelled to accept.

Billy found Jennie of great assistance. One evening he gave a dinner party to some of his friends and lost heavily at poker. His friend Walker was the big winner. Billy's former wife, however, compelled Walker to give up his gains and returned them to Billy in person with the injunction not to gamble any more. Billy agreed and then won another victory in the hand of Jennie.

World Gets Big Picture for Its Program

Acquires "Inside the Lines," a Super-Feature Intended to Be an Outstanding Success of the State Rights Field

STAGING a memorable battle against the fiercest sort of competition, World-Pictures has won out in another fight for the benefit of its customers.

At a record-breaking price, World has obtained for the program a great super-picture originally produced for distribution on the state rights basis. This picture is "Inside the Lines," filmed from the famous novel and stage success written by Earl Derr Biggers. All exhibitors will be interested in this announcement and will await with even greater interest the announcement of the release date.

When "Inside the Lines" was produced on the stage in New York some time ago and achieved such an outstanding hit, there was an immediate rush for the screen rights. The screen rights were finally sold for $10,000 advance royalties and the work of filming the production was started at once.

Featured in the cast is Lewis Stone, the famous stage actor, who starred in the original production on Broadway and who has a long record of successes in the spoken drama to his success. He was featured in "The Misleading Lady," "Bunny" and other big hits. Mr. Stone in the picture gives a most convincing performance in an extremely difficult role.

Money has been simply lavished on the screen production. Expense was no object, as the producers filmed the play with the intention of making it the outstanding state rights success of the year.

Then it became noised about that there was a chance of buying "Inside the Lines" from the producers, and glittering offers were made by state rights operators and others, but World-Pictures won out and World exhibitors benefit as the result.

Playing opposite Mr. Stone is Marguerite Clayton.

Kitty Gordon and Irving Cummings in an interesting scene from "The Interloper," a coming World picture.

Frank Beamish in World Picture

Appearing in the forthcoming World Picture "Clarissa," starring Madge Evans and Johnny Hines, and written for them by Maravene Thompson, is Frank Beamish. Those familiar with the activities of Sothern and Marlowe will recognize him as the stage manager of E. H. Sothern for many years.

Elliott Stories Well Suited to Lockwood

Writer's Style Meets Demands of Star's Talents Exactly—Four Such Pictures on the Metro Schedule

EVIDENTLY Francis Perry Elliott is a writer of fiction whose works suit Harold Lockwood as starring vehicles to the proverbial "T." To date, the Yorke-Metro company, which produces the Lockwood features for Metro, has acquired four of Mr. Elliott's stories—"The Haunted Pajamas," "Love Me for Myself Alone," "Lend Me Your Name" and "Pals First."

Two of these have already been produced and released. "The Haunted Pajamas" was marketed under the same title as the book. "Love Me for Myself Alone" was retitled "The Square Deceiver." The third story, "Lend Me Your Name," is now in course of production at Hollywood, under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, and with its completion Mr. Lockwood will begin work on "Pals First."

Mr. Elliott is a writer of stories in which comedy is the keynote. His "Lend Me Your Name" is a farce. It is a story of an earl who finds a means of escaping his fiery-tempered wife, Sophronia, and an eccentric brain specialist, Dr. Dingor, who are coming from abroad to join him, by trading identities with his double, a second-story man, whom he discovers in his home. In their reversed positions the two men become the center of a series of complications which give the picture rare laugh-producing qualities.

Mr. Lockwood is seen in the dual role of the earl and the second-story man and is supported by a cast of well-known players, including Pauline Curley, who played the leading feminine role in "The Square Deceiver" and "The Landloper"; Bessie Eyton, formerly a featured player with Selig; Bert Starkey and Stanton Heck, who were seen in support of Mr. Lockwood in "Broadway Bill" and "The Landloper"; and Harry de Roy and Peggy Prevost.

Minter Play Set Back a Week

The Mutual program for the week of May 6 will be comprised of a Strand comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes, called "Over the Garden Wall," and Screen Telegrams Nos. 20 and 21. Mary Miles Minter's play, "Social Briars," having been set back to May 13. "Over the Garden Wall is set for release May 7, Screen Telegram No. 20, May 8, and Screen Telegram No. 21, May 12.

Goldwyn Coins New Word

The Goldwyn Studios now and then give birth to a new word. And it is not forgotten in the stress of work. Mary Garden called her screen friends the "cinemese." The word is used now by many outside the studio. And there is still another, this time an adjective. It is "mabelescent" and describes anything peculiarly like Mabel Normand, which means merry and madcappish and warm-hearted and tender.

Empey to Write Songs

Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, the human dynamo and star of the Vitagraph production of "Over the Top," has broken out in a new place. The man who fought the Hun for eighteen months and suffered seven wounds has turned song writer and in the near future will turn out lyrics for six songs for Jos. W. Stern & Co. The first of these will carry the title, "Your Lips Are 'No Man's Land' but Mine." The royalties that accrue to Empey will be donated to the American Red Cross and other war relief organizations.

Essanay Announces May Program

Essanay's releases for May will be comprised of ten pictures, including the Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "A Night Out" in two parts. This was one of the most successful and popular of the Essanay-Chaplins.

Other releases for the month will include "Broncho Billy's Last Deed," "Broncho Billy's Squareness," "Broncho Billy's Secret," "Broncho Billy and the Greaser," "Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke," "Slippery Slim and the Impersonator," "When Slippery Slim Met the Champion," "Snakeville's New Waitress" and "Slippery Slim's Dilemma."

The second set of ten pictures of Broncho Billy's western photoplays will start May 24 with "Broncho Billy and the Greaser." These plays proved so popular that it was decided to issue another block of ten, making twenty pictures so far scheduled for release.

Another block of ten of the Snakeville comedies also will be issued beginning June 1, one week after the last issue of the first set of ten.

Get Fine Homes for Background of "Young America"

Essanay has made arrangements with several of the wealthiest residents of Highland Park, one of the beautiful suburbs of Chicago, to have scenes taken in the forthcoming George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," in their grounds and in the homes. It is expected that this will lend an unusually realistic atmosphere to the play.

Work practically has been completed on the interior settings in the studios and the beginning of the picture is waiting only for more clement weather to do outside scenes. Several of the cast have been picked in Chicago from the various shows here.

First "Cinema-Symphony" Is "Lost Chord"

Hopp Hadley Declares Feature Is Powerful Drama Even Without Special Musical Score

ANNOUNCING Arthur Sullivan's famous song, "The Lost Chord," as the subject of his first "Cinema-Symphony," Hopp Hadley speaks of his work as "a new-idea-illustrated-symphony made possible by the art of motion pictures." The feature is in five reels and he claims that even without the symphony it is a powerful drama with a beautiful heart interest story destined to be popular as a regulation photodrama with an ordinary "cue-sheet" accompaniment.

Hopp Hadley.

"The only difference that I can see when the picture is run without the symphony," said Mr. Hadley, "judging it from the standpoint of a new picture viewed in a studio projecting room, is that the titles are in verse and are written in the same metre as the song. This was necessary to keep the audience fully in the atmosphere of the music while also living in the atmosphere of the drama.

"Of course the poem alone would not tell a complete story as there are only eighty titles in the picture—each, by the way, exactly two lines in length, which gives you some idea of the necessary literary effort. But I intend later to make the poem complete in itself, writing in verse the parts of the story now told in pictures, to take the place of a synopsis. There are also no letters, cards, etc., in the picture; verse taking their place in each instance.

"These facts allow the drama to move along smoothly without interruption and give the music every opportunity to tell the story at the same time as it is being told by the actors. Thus the eyes and ears of the audience are both made use of by the producer as direct roads to the mind and heart.

"The Lost Chord" was especially well adapted to the idea as I realized that symphony in its true musical sense is not exactly cornbeef and cabbage to the tired business man, while its application in the beautiful story written around Arthur Sullivan's popular song is so simple that a child readily grasps the idea and is almost as much affected by the music as by the story.

"It is only a question of time when music will receive full recognition as the real business partner of pictures. Early in the history of screen entertainment, music and pictures were found to be even more closely allied in the successful interpretation of the elements that play upon the emotions than are music and the spoken drama. But the tendency is still to consider music merely the same support to the picture as to the stage play.

"However, the possibilities offered by the silent drama—because it is silent—for the supreme enjoyment of beautiful music are fast gaining recognition and I believe that the time is near, if indeed it has not arrived, when soul-inspiring music and tense heart interest drama will be so combined that music will bear its full share in the telling of the story."

The symphony for "The Lost Chord" is the work of Sol Levy and M. Winkler, who have been collaborating in its completion for several weeks. Both Mr. Levy and Mr. Winkler have had several years' experience preparing musical scores for stage dramas and pictures and are therefore well equipped to handle the special phases of a composition of this character.

Besides the symphony for a full orchestra, special compositions are being arranged for both the organ and the piano to meet the requirements of all theatres.

Aids with Petrova Pictures

As a result of a trip recently made by Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis, representatives of Petrova Picture Company, for the purpose of ascertaining the exact needs of exhibitors in the matter of proper exploitation material, several entirely original aids have been added to the service department. The most important of these is a new and beautiful lobby display. It consists of a photograph on glass of Madame Petrova encased in an attractive frame. This new feature may be used with equal success in theatre lobbies or in store windows, electric light or daylight being equally applicable to its use. As patrons of the theatre or pedestrians pass by the novelty frame, the single pose of Madame Petrova changes into various positions, each change being enhanced by a series of beautiful color effects. The attention-compelling powers of this latest Petrova novelty were proved by placing the frame in a New York store window, where it attracted the notice of 3,500 passers-by during the course of an hour.

Arrangements have also been completed whereby it will be possible for the exhibitor to secure electrotypes of any of the series of beautiful Petrova advertisements which have been appearing in the trade publications during the past year. These will also be furnished in mat form.

A magnificent stock twenty-four-sheet stand has also been prepared for the special use of Petrova exhibitors. A certain quantity of these will be distributed free to each showman to aid him in properly exploiting these productions in the territory surrounding his city.

Together with these helps, it is contemplated issuing an entire new press-book, which will contain the result of all of the valuable suggestions gathered by Messrs. Lubin and Ennis during their conferences on the road.

E. J. Myrick, managing director of the Liberty theatre at Portland, Oregon. Mr. Myrick is a consistent contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me."

Bolo Pasha "Executed" at Fort Lee Also

Fox Players Duplicate Scene for "The Caillaux Case" As Americans Read of the Original in Morning Papers

AS further proof of the timeliness of "The Caillaux Case," which William Fox has just completed for the screen, the Fox forces announce that on the very day when dispatches from France reported the execution of Bolo Pasha, the traitor, by a firing squad at Vincennes, the Bolo Pasha of the film drama was executed in the studio at Fort Lee.

Every scene of the picture had been completed but the execution of Bolo. The history of the case had been followed to the smallest detail and the sensational episodes in the careers of Joseph Caillaux, "evil genius of France;" Mme. Caillaux, his beautiful wife, and Bolo Pasha, the kaiser's agent in France and America, had been recorded up to the minute. Nothing was lacking but the definite announcement of the arch-traitor's end.

Even the set of the prison yard at Vincennes had been made and the actors in the scene had been notified to be ready at any moment. Director Richard Stanton, anticipating the execution, awaited only the flash from the wire to go ahead with the shooting of the final act.

Then came the announcement. Bolo Pasha had been shot. Immediately the Fort Lee studio was a scene of the liveliest activity. Every morning press report available was rushed to Director Stanton and his assistants. At the very hour when thousands were reading for the first time the details of Bolo's execution, those very details were being portrayed on the film of "The Caillaux Case."

The action follows each step in the final tragedy of the brilliant and wealthy Paul Bolo, who as Bolo Pasha juggled millions and made the destiny of his country a pawn in his traitorous game with Berlin. Every authenticated detail is faithfully duplicated, from the time the prison guards awoke the condemned man on his last morning on earth to the moment when he crumples on the ground at Vincennes with thirteen bullets in his body.

The story of this last act in the film play is the story of the press dispatches. Bolo, the once jaunty dandy, has suddenly become an old man. His hair has turned almost white. His face is drawn and pale. Yet with trembling fingers he dresses as carefully for his entrance into another world as he was accustomed to dress for a fete of society.

After mass is said in the prison he is taken to a waiting automobile and accompanied by his judges is driven to Vincennes and handed over to the military authorities.

Only when he is taken from the car and asked to sign the register does he show any interest in the proceedings. Then momentarily the old spirit of daring flames in his eyes. But his protest is overruled by the officials, and his last spark of defiance gone he removes the white glove from his right hand and signs his own death warrant.

When he is led to the execution post he is shaking and on the verge of collapse. Asked if he wants his eyes bandaged, he weakly answers "Yes," and while this is being done he adds, "But it is useless to tie the bandage so tight."

These are his last words. A few seconds later there is a flash from the rifles of the firing squad and Bolo Pasha sinks to the earth. Thirteen shots have taken effect in the right side of his head. Yet even then the lieutenant commanding the squad advances to the dead man and fires pointblank into his ear. The firing squad is marched off and a few friends lingering near the yard are admitted to bear the body away.

Speaking of the filming of this great scene, William Fox said the next day:

"I doubt if there has ever been anything quite like it. Although this picture is a film drama which covers years of time and required many weeks to portray on the screen, its final scenes are alive with current interest. It is history and it is news."

Canadian Theater Reopened

The Empire Theatre, London, Canada, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened under the management of J. Spurgeon.

Next Petrova Picture Out Early in May

"Tempered Steel" Now in Hands of Experts Who Are Providing Photographic Effects That Will Mark Advance in Art

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week from the offices of the Petrova Picture Company that "Tempered Steel," the fourth special production starring Madame Petrova, will be released early in May.

To assure absolute perfection in cutting, editing and subtitling, the picture has been in the hands of a corps of experts for the past two weeks. Several novel effects in animated titles and decorative backgrounds have been introduced. An effect said to be entirely new has been gained whereby the usual abrupt jump from subtitle to scene has been eliminated, the mind of the spectator being carried smoothly from wording to action without in any way breaking the continuity of the story.

An original maintitle has been devised for the purpose of eliminating the usual subtitles necessary to characterize the introduction of the principal actors.

"Tempered Steel" was prepared as a special screen vehicle for Madame Olga Petrova by George Middleton from his original story, "The Great Star." He is the author of the current Broadway success, "Polly with a Past," written with Guy Bolton. "Tempered Steel" is the first of a series of Petrova pictures to be directed by Ralph Ince, responsible for many of the biggest successes of the past few years.

The many admirers of the Polish actress will be surprised to find her in a totally different role. Depicting the part of a high spirited Southern girl thrown into the vortex of theatrical life in Manhattan, Madame Petrova does some of the best emotional work of her screen career.

The following players enact the principal characters in support of the star: J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, E. J. Ratcliffe, Matilda Brundage, E. T. Carlton and Mrs. H. Walton.

the last laugh when he showed them the souvenirs.

He mentioned this as just another example of the close watch which is kept on even the most reputable motion picture house and it emphasizes the fact that constant care must be taken not to offend patrons or do anything which may injure the hard won high reputation of the theatre.

The personal appearance of child stars is always an exciting event to the little patrons. Little Mary McAlister and other children from the Essanay studios, the young players who appeared in the Fort Dearborn productions, a local company, Zoe Rae from Universal City, and other little favorites who chance to visit the city, have appeared in person at the Adelphi.

Local musical talent is also used as an attraction, the young people's musical clubs sometimes contributing numbers for special occasions. For instance, the Graham Stewart School Fife and Drum Boys played the music for the Marie Osborne feature, "The Little Patriot."

Among the pictures which have been particularly successful at these Saturday matinees are "The Mate of the Sally Ann," a Mutual-Mary Miles Minter feature, especially delightful to the children because of the work of a trained dog; "Charity Castle," another Mary Miles Minter feature; "Rumpelstiltskin," which, though not new, is always a favorite and of which good prints can be obtained through Mutual; "Seven Swans," and other Marguerite Clark fairy stories; "Little Red Ridinghood," a juvenile picture made with Chicago children, which was played twice to capacity audiences; the Judge Brown series, the Boy Scout Universal series, and the Henderson National Educational series, showing interesting school work, especially in schools of Chicago and its suburbs.

These matinees are proving very profitable, without counting their advertising value.

The programs for adults of course are not neglected. An interesting innovation is the showing of a daily edition of Adelphi Screen Topics, which began April 29. This pleases the patrons, eager for the latest pictures from "over there."

The Adelphi contains 1,500 seats, all on one floor. The photograph does not show a beautiful curtain of midnight blue which the theatre has since acquired.

The lobby displays are dignified and in keeping with the tone of the house. Special film is used instead of slides for the program announcements.

These are just a few of the ways in which this energetic, enthusiastic manager keeps his theatre a live center of the community. Perhaps they will suggest to other managers innovations which will increase the "pleasing power" of their shows.

Scores of extras awaiting their cue to take part in a big street scene in "Salome," the forthcoming Theda Bara super-production for Fox.

New Effects in "Salome"

The motion picture realm is to see many innovations in lighting in "Salome," Theda Bara's forthcoming superproduction, according to the William Fox offices.

Although the Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., where the picture was screened, are among the best equipped in the world, more than $1,500 was spent in installing the necessary apparatus for the scenes. Most of the new work appears in the action that takes place in the chamber of Herod.

Lasky Returns to West Coast Studios

Announces Engagement of Shirley Mason and Says Other New Stars Will Be Revealed Later

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, left New York last Sunday for the West Coast studios where he will immediately begin preparations for the handling of pictures presenting new stars in Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Prior to his departure Mr. Lasky made public the fact that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just signed Shirley Mason to appear in John Emerson and Anita Loos productions for Paramount release. Miss Mason at 17 is one of the youngest stars in the business. She has appeared before the public the greater part of her life, having played in the "legitimate" since early childhood prior to becoming associated with the films.

The John Emerson and Anita Loos productions starring Miss Mason will be produced in the East commencing the early part of June. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos are already engaged on the initial story following their work on a number of scripts for other stars, some of which have already been shown to the trade.

"Among the new stars who will begin work at the West Coast studios," said Mr. Lasky, "are Fred Stone and Ethel Clayton. By popular request from exhibitors, Vivian Martin has been re-engaged. Other stars whose names cannot be announced at this time will also begin work in California for us early in June, their combined activities plus those of our present producing units comprising a gigantic summer drive which will considerably enlarge our star series plan.

"Our contract with Lina Cavalieri has also just been renewed. Madam Cavalieri's new Paramount vehicle now being completed at Fort Lee, "Gismonda," is the biggest production yet staged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the East and will mark another notable achievement for Paramount.

"Activities in our Eastern studios are running along at record pace and despite the unfavorable weather we have had recently the New York and New Jersey companies are well ahead of their release schedule.

"Elsie Ferguson has just left for Montana, where she will appear in a new Artcraft picture under the direction of Marshall Neilan, who has just finished the George M. Cohan picture for Artcraft release, 'Hit the Trail Holliday.'

sical directors, based on his own years of experiences, contains statements which may aid many who wish to arrange their own scores.

"First, keep your music simple," he says. "By that I mean, choose beautiful well known melodies, rather than elaborate, difficult music which requires several hearings to be understood. Remember that the music must follow and help the picture, not detract from it. Your patrons are intent on the picture. Follow and intensify their interest, rather than distract it.

"The older and the better known the melodies you use the better, for more people will know them and there will be more associations called up. Besides, they are very beautiful and the more beautiful and haunting the themes you select the more they will unconsciously blend with the picture in the feeling of the audience. No rules can be laid down. The director who has the best sense of what the public will like will, as in other lines, be the successful one.

"Try to give your audience some little catchy theme which they can hum as they go out. It will come back to them and recall the picture and the theatre and make them want to come again. Indeed, if your theatre has long-run pictures, you will find some patrons coming back again just to hear some part of the music over again.

"A sense of what his people will like and a willingness to get it for them is one of the leading qualities of a good musical director for pictures. Another thing, he must not be so much of a musician that he refuses to change the written music to suit the picture. Some directors refuse to play a passage written allegro in any but allegro style. But the picture frequently demands that this gay passage change to a mood of sadness. The picture must be put before the music and the change made if the result is to be effective.

"An unlimited library is of course a necessity. There is really no end to the variety demanded in music to meet a program of pictures, even suitably to set one picture to music. But more than the mechanical aids, the gift of sensing the real dramatic and emotional feeling of the photoplay is a necessity with the successful director. It is a special field in itself. One must like pictures and also have a desire to interpret them through the music in a fashion the average audience can appreciate."

Tourneur's New Effort Recalls Career

Noted Director Now Producing for Himself Has Twenty-seven Big American-Made Pictures to His Credit

THE launching of Maurice Tourneur's own independent producing corporation recalls his remarkable directorial record during his four years in America.

Mr. Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," based on Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks' famous Drury Lane melodrama, will be his twenty-eighth American production.

Mr. Tourneur came to this country May 1, 1914, after a distinguished career as a screen director in France with Eclair and other big Parisian organizations. He began producing late in May for the World Film Company and has been steadily occupied with World Film and Paramount-Artcraft ever since.

In his forty-six months in America, Mr. Tourneur has made an average of one production every six weeks. No other director in America, it is said, can approach this record. At the same time Mr. Tourneur's offerings have in no sense been unimportant program offerings or minor photoplays.

During his four years in America, Mr. Tourneur has been the creator of several noteworthy photodramas. He produced "The Whip," which has become one of the most important box office attractions of the year, and he is also responsible for Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" for Artcraft. He also made Laurence Housman and Granville Barker's "Prunella," in which Marguerite Clark appears. "Prunella" is shortly to be released by Paramount. Mr. Tourneur directed Elsie Ferguson, too, in her sensational debut on the screen in "Barbary Sheep," and he likewise produced "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," "Rose of the World" and "A Doll's House" with that star.

He directed Mary Pickford in several of her biggest successes, including "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and made Clara Kimball Young's famous adaptation of "Trilby." With World he discovered Vivian Martin and he also brought Doris Kenyon to the screen.

Mr. Tourneur's twenty-seven productions, together with the stars, in the order of their release, follow: World—"Mother," Emma Dunn; "The Man of the Hour," Robert Warwick; "The Wishing Ring," Vivian Martin; "The Pit," Wilton Lackaye; "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Robert Warwick; "Trilby," Clara Kimball Young; "The Cub," Martha Hedman; "The Ivory Snuff Box," House Peters; "The Butterfly on the Wheel," Vivian Martin and Holbrook Blinn; "Pawns of Fate," Doris Kenyon and George Beban; "The Hand of Peril," House Peters; "The Closed Road," House Peters; "The Velvet Paw," House Peters and Gail Kane; "The Rail Rider," House Peters; "A Movie Romance," Doris Kenyon and Robert Warwick; "The Whip," Alma Hanlon, June Elvidge and Paul McAllister. Paramount—"The Pride of the Clan," Mary Pickford; "The Poor Little Rich Girl," Mary Pickford; "The Undying Flame," Olga Petrova; "Barbary Sheep," Elsie Ferguson; "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," Elsie Ferguson; "Rose of the World," Elsie Ferguson; "The Blue Bird," superfeature; "Prunella," Marguerite Clark; "A Doll's House," Elsie Ferguson.

Work is now well under way on "Sporting Life." The principal roles will be played by the Binney sisters, Constance and Freddy, Ralph Graves and Warren Richmond. Constance Binney is now appearing in "Oh, Lady, Lady." Mr. Tourneur has had his company at Lakewood, N. J., for several days shooting a cross-country hunt.

Card Game Makes Great Scene

"Life is a gamble," says Monte M. Katterjohn, the noted screen author, and he has injected a bit of his philosophy into "Carmen of the Klondike," his latest production, which is being distributed by the State Right Distributers.

In the unfolding of this story a poker game in an Alaskan dance hall furnished some of the most tensely dramatic moments. The force of these scenes may be judged from the fact that the game itself occupies nearly one thousand feet of film and that the interest of the spectators is held at fever heat until the climax.

"Many have contended," says Mr. Katterjohn, "that violent action is the only thing which can figuratively 'lift the spectators out of their seats,' but while 'Carmen of the Klondike' abounds in stirring action, there are no scenes in the picture which have greater effect upon the audience than these scenes of repressed emotion where so much depends on the outcome.

"The psychological effect of any scene upon the minds of the spectators is in direct ratio to the consequences involved and once the interest of the audience is deeply centered, a tense scene which gives rise to mingled hopes and fears and gives the audience an opportunity to think with the characters, cannot fail of success."

Foursquare to Distribute Ivan Films

Gets Rights to New Brand of Pictures for Entire Country Excepting in Few Territories Already Sold

ARRANGEMENTS in which exhibitors will be interested have just been concluded between Foursquare Pictures and the Ivan Film Corporation, whereby the best features of the latter organization are to be distributed by Foursquare.

Excepting the New England territory and one or two others in which Ivan subjects have already been sold, Foursquare exchanges will offer approximately every two weeks—beginning May 1—an Ivan photoplay.

"Both Mr. Backer and Mr. Wildberg realize that some of the best box-office pictures which have been made are Ivan," said P. V. R. Key of Foursquare. "Seeking to give Foursquare exhibitors the benefit of a reasonably large variety of subjects, they closed with the Ivan company to give these exhibitors merchandise for which there is an unquestioned demand.

"'One Law for Both,' 'Sins of Ambition,' 'Married in Name Only,' 'Babbling Tongues,' 'Two Women and One Man' and 'Human Clay' are some of these features which strike the human note and fill a want which hundreds of thousands of patrons insist on having.

"Pictures that grip the spectator, and such pictures are the ones enumerated above, are the sort that enable the exhibitor to make money. Exceptional service is to be furnished by the Foursquare exchanges with every booking of an Ivan photoplay, which will give each subject nation-wide distribution."

"Hearts of the World" to Be "State Righted"

Speedy Disposition of Territory Anticipated in View of Record Business Where Film Is Showing Now

SPECULATION as to the method of distribution of D. W. Griffith's big war spectacle, "Hearts of the World," is set at rest with an announcement from the William Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest Enterprises that the production will be released by the state rights plan immediately.

"Hearts of the World" is doing a smashing business in the four big cities where it is already appearing—New York, Los Angeles, Boston and Chicago—and a speedy disposal of the different territories is anticipated. At Clune's Theatre in Los Angeles the production did $6,894 more than the "Birth of a Nation" during the first six weeks of the presentation of each picture. In New York, Boston and Chicago it is a difficult matter to get seats, unless ordered well in advance.

"No human organization is big enough to handle the simultaneous presentation of this gigantic triumph of the screen," says a statement from the Elliott, Comstock & Gest offices. "The psychological time for the exhibition of this wonderful cinema to the public is at hand. It is a screen message that should be seen by every person in the country and its handling in different territories by individual organizations is felt to be the most effective method.

"In view of its particular timeliness and its great merit in point of cinema technique and general production, it is readily expected that 'Hearts of the World' will far exceed the wonderful success of Mr. Griffith's first big spectacle or any of his succeeding efforts to date.

"We are now prepared to consider offers for territorial rights. All communications and wires should be addressed to Elliott, Comstock & Gest at the Century Theatre, New York."

Gerard Picture Succeeds

"My Four Years in Germany," which is now being shown in the larger cities throughout the country, is living up to every prediction that has been made of its unusual box-office appeal by those who have witnessed its prosperous run at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York.

The first city after New York to get a glimpse of Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations was Indianapolis. The film was put on at the Circle Theatre on April 7 and played to such unprecedented business that S. Barret McCormick, managing director, held it over for the second week.

In Boston, "My Four Years in Germany" opened at the Tremont Temple for an indefinite run on April 14, and has been filling the house to capacity every day since then. The conservative Boston Transcript devoted one of its leading editorials to an endorsement of the film.

At Fabian's Regent Theatre in Paterson the picture was shown under the auspices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for six days, and during that time rolled up the unprecedented box-office total of $8,106.

John Kunsky presented the Gerard film at the Madison Theatre in Detroit with a first night audience that overtopped all figures on his books.

Symphony Books Mutt and Jeffs

New York's newest motion picture theatre, the Symphony, a modern palace of amusement now being constructed at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, is to show Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons daily. These Bud Fisher products have been contracted for through William Fox, by whom the cartoons are released.

The Symphony is being constructed by the Kennedy Theatres, Inc., of which Aubrey M. Kennedy is president and Charles L. Cole, general manager. It is to be a first-class house and will have the Metropolitan Opera House orchestra of fifty pieces.

The booking of Mutt and Jeff cartoons is in line with the policy to provide the best entertainment, a contract covering one subject a week for one year having been signed.

A large number of other contracts are reported to have been signed in consequence of the one-week drive conducted by salesmen attached to the home office and exchanges of Fox.

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," David Wark Griffith's latest offering, has begun its Chicago engagement and is being shown to enthusiastic audiences at the Olympic Theatre, under the management of Elliott, Comstock and Gest.

The opening performance, on the evening of April 24, was distinctly a patriotic affair and the picture played to a distinguished audience, including a large number of army officers. The theatre was patriotically decorated and the ushers clad in red, white and blue costumes. The viewers had come with high expectations. Most of the dramatic critics of the newspapers, as well as photoplay editors, were keen to see for themselves whether the master director had surpassed himself or fallen below his own high standard. It was not an excitable or easily moved gathering which witnessed that first Chicago run of "Hearts of the World." But no one, coming into the theatre in the midst of the play, would have guessed this for by that time the audience was swayed by the varied emotions of the picture as any audience in the country must be. They laughed and cried, applauded, cheered and hissed, and several times were swept to their feet by a burst of patriotic feeling.

The story of "Hearts of the World" is the story of a French village before and during war time. Through these leading characters in the village story, the audience is made to feel the intimate touch of war. It is through the Boy's experiences that the authentic pictures of battle scenes which Mr. Griffith photographed "over there" are shown. The blending of real and staged scenes is so skillfully done that the most experienced picture viewer can usually not detect which is which.

The picture has what war pictures too often lack, delightful touches of humor. The well-known "Griffith touch" is evidenced a number of times when the tenseness of the picture is happily broken by some small scene of humor or quiet pathos.

The excellent acting of the entire cast is a noticeable feature of the play. The audience paid tribute to the work of the leads by applauding as such audiences seldom applaud pictures. Robert Harron as the Boy does the best work of his career, and Lillian Gish likewise surpasses herself as the heroine. Dorothy Gish as the strolling singer and little Ben Alexander, a wonderful child actor, lead in the affections of the viewers. George Fawcett, Josephine Crowell and many other well known players are in the cast.

The daily newspaper critics gave unlimited praise to the picture and felt the need of new adjectives to do it justice. In fact the only unpleasant feature in connection with the Chicago opening was the attitude of the local censorship board which insisted on cutting any scenes they felt might show too great ferocity on the part of the Germans.

Sidney Goldman, manager of the Goldwyn office, has resigned to become manager of the Chicago office of Jewel. The appointment was announced by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, during a stop-over en route to the coast. The appointment was a surprise to film men and was heard with much interest, as Mr. Goldman is well known and popular. He has had wide experience, getting several years of it with Jones, Linick and Schaefer. Mr. Goldman will bring with him practically the entire staff of Goldwyn salesmen.

A coincidence in the appointment of Mr. Goldman was recalled by Irving Mack, publicity manager of Jewel and Universal. Mr. Goldman and Mr. Mack worked together at the office of the Central Film Company. Mr. Goldman was assistant manager and Mr. Mack was assistant publicity manager. Now they both work in the same office and Mr. Goldman is manager instead of assistant manager, and Mr. Mack is publicity manager instead of assistant publicity manager.

The appointment of Mr. Goldman was necessitated by the resignation of C. R. Plough, manager of Universal, and the promotion of I. L. Leserman to his place from the office of manager of Jewel and sales manager of Universal and Jewel.

C. R. Plough, manager of the Universal office, has resigned to devote his entire time to his own interests. He is succeeded by I. L. Leserman, who was manager of the Jewel office and sales manager of both Universal and Jewel. Mr. Leserman will combine his new job with the job of sales manager; while Sidney Goldman succeeds him as manager of Jewel.

Mr. Plough is one of Chicago's pioneer film men. He was owner of the Anti-Trust Film Company, which controlled the Universal franchise, selling out to Universal and taking the position as manager of the Universal office. Meanwhile he acquired many business interests, including a string of theatres. Pressure of his individual interests compelled him to quit.

Mr. Plough's popularity was responsible for regret on the part of many in seeing him leave Universal, but all wished him the best of success in business alone for himself.

Fred W. Hartman, owner of the Aristo theatre, 2650 Lincoln avenue, turned his theatre over to the pupils of the Agassiz school one afternoon last week and the gross profits were given to the children to boost their Liberty Loan total. About $75 were taken in.

Mrs. Hartman was responsible for the arrangements. Through the kindness of Mr. Brockell of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation she was enabled to present "Tom Sawyer." Through the courtesy of the Universal Film Exchange she showed "On to Victory." Baby Sylvia sang "What Are You Going to Do to Help the Boys" and "Over There."

All of the house staff co-operated ordially. The staff consists of E. C. Wright, operator; Clarence June Oswald, assistant operator; Mary McKinney, pianist, and Edward Heney, drummer. Miss Trondel, principal of the Agassiz school, was teacher there when Mr. Hartman graduated.

"My Four Years in Germany," the photoplay based on the book of the same name by former Ambassador James W. Gerard, opened at the Colonial theatre Monday night to a full house. The picture will continue indefinitely. Judging from favorable comments of the first nighters, the picture will have a long run. Praise was voluminous on all sides. The picture was regarded as comprehensive and filmed in a highly effective manner.

A large symphony orchestra accompanied the picture under the direction of H. A. Erlinger. Soloists appear who have come direct from the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, where the picture has been playing to enormous crowds.

Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, franchise holders in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which recently acquired the picture, reported that the photoplay in its sixth week at the Knickerbocker at New York exceeded the first week's receipts. He predicts a smashing record.

Tom Norman, owner of the Rex theatre at Racine, Wisconsin, is reported to have made $2,500 in three days showing "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." He booked the picture for a week and spent $500 in advertising it. He charged twenty-five and fifty cents, which was above his usual scale. The Rex contains more than 1,000 seats.

Mr. Norman's success was made in face of a rental that is said to be higher than anything since the "Birth of a Nation" or "Intolerance." Many other exhibitors are making big sums with this picture too, it is reported. So successful has the picture been that exhibitors are fighting for open dates.

Prints of "The Reason Why," Clara Kimball Young's latest Select production, reached the Select office here last week. Ben Beadell, assistant manager, the first man to see the picture, was loud in its praise. He declared it was the best thing the star has done in her entire career. The picture will get a pre-release showing at the Bijou theatre on State street for a week, as is customary with all Select productions, but unlike the majority it probably will be held over for a two weeks' run because of its unusual merit.

Strand Active in Loan Drive

Evidencing the desire of the industry in general to be of the utmost aid to the government, the Strand Theatre of New York is setting a pace this week that will be hard to match.

This week is Liberty Loan week at the Strand. All of the gross receipts, according to Harold Edel, managing director, will be used in the purchase of Liberty bonds.

In keeping with the occasion, Mr. Edel is presenting "My Four Years in Germany," the photoplay based on the book of the same name by former Ambassador James W. Gerard. There was no advance in the regular standard prices. This is said to be the first time the picture has been shown at less than feature prices.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

"THE UNBELIEVER," the patriotic war picture presented by George Kleine, is being shown at the Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, under unusual circumstances.

The U. S. Marines are conducting a recruiting campaign at the same time and will endeavor to recruit 2600 men from the district during the month.

Manager I. Libson of the Walnut assured the Marines that they had his hearty cooperation and he gave them permission to make whatever arrangements they wanted at the Walnut.

The Marines took advantage of this offer. Invitations were extended to 250 of the most prominent citizens asking them to be present on the first night. The invitations were sent out under the Marine frank. The mothers of ten Cincinnati boys who were recently killed or wounded in action were given box seats. The Mayor and other city officials also were asked to be present.

An armored car is going through the streets of Cincinnati with a sign urging youths to join the Marines and also advertising the picture. The lobby of the theatre is decorated with Marine emblems and Lieut. Quinn of the Canadian Recruiting Commission is working with the Walnut scenic artist to reproduce a front line trench on the stage. Six or eight Marines in trench uniforms will be stationed on the stage and a recruiting office will be constructed in the lobby and it is expected that a good many youths will be influenced to enlist after seeing the picture.

A different feature for each night is being planned. On the opening night a memorial service for Cincinnati marines killed in action was scheduled. Tuesday was to be home-guard night; Wednesday, for the mothers and sisters of enlisted men; Thursday, for Liberty Loan workers; Friday, Marine Recruits' Day, and Saturday, "Over the Top" day. The United States Military Training Camp Band will furnish the music all week.

Plans have been completed by Jake Wells and C. R. Howell for the construction of a new Colonial theatre on the site of the old at Eighth and Broad streets, Richmond, Virginia. The new playhouse will be one of the most costly as well as one of the most attractive in the city. It will cost several hundred thousand dollars.

Work will be begun about June 1, when the patronage will be transferred to the Victor, nearby, and the razing of the old building will be begun. It is expected that the new theatre will be ready next fall.

The plans include the taking over of the annex to the present building and the soda store and the barber shop which flank the theatre on the west side. This will about double the present frontage. The new house will have 1600 seats.

Entering through an arched doorway and a marble and tile lobby, the patron of the new Colonial will find himself in one of the most beautiful theatres in the southern states.

Charles Scribner's Sons and the Franklin Trust Company, as executor and trustee for the estate of Richard Harding Davis, have filed suit in the Federal Court of New York against Douglas Fairbanks, the star; Anita Loos, the scenario writer; John Emerson, the director; the Triangle Distributing Company and the Majestic Picture Company for infringement of copyright in producing "The Americano."

According to the complainants, the defendants "reproduced valuable and material portions of The White Mice, a book written several years ago and copyrighted first in 1909. The story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, so the plaintiffs allege, and was later published in book form by Charles Scribner's Sons."

Summoned to the telephone during the first performance of the second anniversary bill at the Rialto Theatre, New York, S. L. Rothapfel was informed that his wife was being placed in an ambulance and taken to the Woman's Hospital, where she was to be operated on for appendicitis.

The operation proved successful and Mrs. Rothapfel is on the way to recovery, but Mr. Rothapfel, who was to have left for a tour of the Marine Corps camps on the Atlantic Coast, has been compelled to postpone the trip until later.

In his capacity as lieutenant of marines and head of the motion picture publicity bureau of that organization he will supervise the taking of some new pictures showing the activities of the soldiers of the sea.

Shows were given in New York state last week despite the fact that the legislature recently refused to pass a bill making such exhibitions legal. The shows in question were given in Watervliet. All four houses in that town were open Sunday evening.

The explanation lies in the fact that the theatres were operated by the United States Government. The shows were given for the benefit of the employes of a big gun plant. They depicted scenes which, it is hoped, will prevent accidents.

The action of the government has aroused much comment in view of the recent fight for public endorsement of Sunday shows by the motion picture industry.

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Mutual

Social Briars—(Five Reels)—American—May 6—Featuring Mary Miles Minter. Alan Forrest plays opposite.

Iris Lee (Miss Minter), lives in the small town of Dalton with Mrs. Kane, a relative of her dead mother's. Mrs.

Scene from "Social Briars."

Kane's son, Jim, is in love with Iris. He teaches in the Sunday school where Iris is organist and choir. Iris dreams of being a great singer, and her soul chafes at the restrictions of the village environment.

The only persons who seem to understand Iris are Mr. and Mrs. Brown, elderly neighbors, to whom Iris often goes for sympathy.

When she does not respond to Jim's attentions, Mrs. Kane makes life miserable for Iris, who finally packs up her belongings and goes to the station to take the train for the metropolis. The train has already left, and Iris accepts the invitation of Jack Andrews, a wealthy young man who is passing in his car, to take her to the city. Jack becomes too familiar in the car, and Iris jumps out and returns to the station to wait for a later train.

Arrived in the city, Iris finds difficulty in obtaining anything to do. Passing a church one night, she enters. During the singing her remarkable voice attracts the attention of Peter Andrews, Jack's father and a pillar of the church. On his recommendation Iris is given the position of soloist in the church.

Helen Manning, a light opera star and former soloist at the church, hears Iris sing and becomes interested in her. Amibitious and coached by Helen, Iris understudies the part, and when Helen is dismissed from the company for refusing to accede to the manager's demands, Iris is offered the position of prima donna.

Jack Andrews, who has become an ardent admirer of Iris, calls at her dressing room in an intoxicated condition, and Iris shows him the door. Jack goes to Helen's apartment to ask her to intercede for him, and when Iris finds him there she believes he has been unfaithful to her.

Heartsort and disgusted with the apparent shallowness of city life, Iris returns to her native village and to the sympathetic arms of Mrs. Brown.

Jack finds her there, convinces her of his constancy and persuades her to return to the city as mistress of his heart and fortune.

Over the Garden Wall—(One Reel)—Strand—May 7.—Starring Billie Rhodes.

Mary's father, the village minister, objects to her sweetheart, Jack Gordon. The lover's meeting place was over the garden wall.

Mary and Jack go auto riding, and Jack is arrested for speeding. Father pays the fine and bribes the jailer to keep Jack in durance vile until he can get Mary safely away to a boarding school.

That night burglars enter Mary's room, but Mary holds them up at the point of a six-shooter, takes them to the jail and compels them to liberate Jack. Father, looking for Mary, arrives at the jail. The burglars, on Mary's instructions, grab him and throw him into a cell. When father still remains obdurate, Mary lights a smudge-pot, pretends the place is on fire and keels over in an apparent faint. Jack tells father that as long as they cannot wed, death is preferable. Dad consents and marries them, and the newly-weds run away forgetting to let father out of jail.

Fox

Her One Mistake—(Five Reels)—April 28.—Featuring Gladys Brockwell. Story by George Scarborough; directed by Edward Le Saint. The star plays a dual role, Harriet Gordon and Peggy Malone. William Scott plays Charlie, a crook.

Harriet Gordon falls in love with Chicago Charlie, who is masquerading in a Summer hotel. He persuades her to elope with him to a roadhouse, where a clergyman is supposed to await them. After a few drinks the girl is content to dispense wtih the marriage ceremony. She is rescued by a detective, who has been trying to get Chicago Charlie for many a long day. He sends her home. Years pass and Charlie is seen in the company of a girl of his own stamp, who is really devoted to him, Peggy. Harriet in the meanwhile is bordering on the verge of an engagement with the district attorney, but has qualms because of the one blot on her past. At his office she meets Peggy who has come to beg for mercy for Charlie. Her heart is filled with pity for the girl and she takes her as maid into her own home. When Charlie comes out of prison he manages to get Harriet to come to his home by a ruse, strips her of her jewels and in the sturggle that follows, is killed. The girl is exonerated by the authorities and the picture ends happily.

When Slippery Slim Met the Champion—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 11.—With Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Ted Burns.

Snakeville is all excitement. The world's champion pugilist is to arrive the next day and anybody who can stay three rounds with him is to receive $100. Slim is selected by his friends to try out the champion first, then, if he loses, the rest will try for the prize. The night of the encounter poor Slim is paralyzed with fright and it is necessary to carry him into the ring. Then the fun starts. He is simply hammered into seven different shapes, but manages to gain his feet each time before the count. Sophie who is at the ringside nursing a toothache with a bottle of chloroform, suddenly has an idea. She slips Slim the bottle and he saturates his glove with it. In the next clinch, he holds the glove over the champion's mouth until he drops asleep. Slim is then declared the winner and he carries home the "bacon."

Goldwyn

Honor's Cross—(Six Reels)—Selexart.—Featuring Rhea Mitchell. Hershel Mayall, Edward Coxen, Joseph Dowling, Roy Laidlow and Adele Farrington are in the cast.

The heroine is Jane Cabot, who fortunately has not inherited the faults of her contemptible father or her morally weak mother. She is a dreamer whose comfort in life is her "Hope Book," wherein she has confided her dreams of future domestic happiness. While singing in a saloon cabaret, Jan resents the attentions of Thomas Dolan, political boss of the community. Determined to make her another inmate of the resorts that under the title of "Homes for Working Girls" are increasing his ill-gotten wealth. Dolan uses his influence to force her out of every position she gets subsequently.

Another of his victims is Lee Stevens, a young mountaineer, whom he has brought to the city presumbaly to work in his real estate office, but really to collect his graft. In the end, of course, Jane finds a realization of her hopes in Steven's love and arrest finishes Dolan's career.

Metro

The Trail to Yesterday—(Five Reels)—May 6.—Featuring Bert Lytell. Cast includes Anna Q. Nilsson, Henry S. Northrup, Ernest Maupain, John A. Smiley and Danny Hogan. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

David Langford has killed his business partner, William Keegles, and the blame is placed on the dead man's son, Ned. Realizing that all the evidence is against him, Ned escapes, goes West and becomes a cowpuncher. There he is known as "Dakota." Alone in his cabin one stormy night, "Dakota" hears a cry outside and goes to investigate. It proves to be Sheila Langford on her way to the Double R ranch, which her father owns. When "Dakota" discovers that the young woman is the daughter of his father's murderer he swears revenge. A minister on his way up the road to marry a couple seeks shelter from the storm in "Dakota's" cabin. On learning that the parson has a marriage license, "Dakota" forces Sheila to marry him. Next morning she resumes the trail to the Double R ranch, and on making inquiries as to the character of "Dakota," is told by some of his opponents that he is an undesirable citizen. A little later on, when he shoots a Mexican in self-defense, his reputation seems even blacker.

Langford, owner of the Double R Ranch, finds that Ben Doubler's land controls the drinking water for the cattle, and he tries to buy it. Finding that impossible, he decides to have the old man done away with and offers to pay "Dakota" $5,000 to do the job. Duncan, an enemy of "Dakota's," shoots Doubler, and times the deed so as to make it appear that "Dakota" is the murderer. Sheila rides in haste for a doctor to try to save Doubler in order to clear "Dakota" of guilt. The wounded man lives, and accuses Duncan, whom he recognized before he was struck down. Duncan is captured by the posse as he attempts to escape. Later Sheila and "Dakota" are reconciled.

Pathe

Ruler of the Road—(Five Reels)—April 21.—Featuring Frank Keenan. Directed by Ernest C. Warde. Story adapted from Jeanette Lee's novel, "Simon Tetlow's Shadow." Keenan plays Tetlow, a railroad president, a strong character who drives himself and his men to the utmost. When he scents discontent among the engineers and firemen, he goes out into the yard and offers to take out a train himself. This quells the discontent for a time, but one of the older engineers, Hugh Tomlinson, falls asleep on duty after working eighteen hours. This causes a rear-end collision and Tetlow dismisses Tomlinson at once. The latter curses Tetlow and wishes him all manner of disaster.

In the course of the story Tetlow suffers a nervous breakdown and his railroad stocks go tumbling, but he manfully rises from his sick bed and stems the tide of approaching calamity. Later Tetlow, who has been secretly aiding Tomlinson in a financial way, makes friendly overtures to his former engineer, through the influence of a child. The renewal of friendship occurs on Christmas eve. Thus a happy conclusion is reached.

Dolly Does Her Bit—(Five Reels)—April 28.—Featuring Baby Marie Osborne. Directed by William Bertram.

Dolly lives with her aunt, a poor seamstress. A wealthy society woman brings a mechanical doll to the seamstress to be dressed as a Red Cross nurse, the doll to be auctioned at the Red Cross bazaar. While it is left in Dolly's charge her playmates invade the house and carry it away, and in their carelessness and delight at seeing it perform, it is broken. Dolly conceives the idea of dressing herself in the Red Cross dress and taking the doll's place. She creates quite a sensation at the bazaar, and is finally bought by the wealthy society woman who has an invalid daughter. Dolly is taken to the wealthy home, and in the middle of the night surprises burglars breaking open the safe. They carry her to their den, but she escapes, notifies the police, and is the means of having the whole gang arrested. The invalid daughter insists that Dolly come and live with her as her sister.

Select

At the Mercy of Men—(Five Reels).—Featuring Alice Brady in a story of the Russian revolution. She plays Vera Souroff, a music teacher in the family of Countess Zaptine. One night in the streets of Petrograd she is kidnapped by three drunken officers and taken to their rooms where she is assaulted by one of them. Later when she tells the story to her fiance, he casts her aside. Through the intervention of the countess, the matter is brought before the czar, who orders the guilty man to marry Vera. The officers refuse to tell which is guilty but Count Nicho, the eldest, is married to the girl. Then the three officers are put in jail. Vera is determined to learn which of the men is the father of the child she is to bear. When the revolution breaks out she hears that the three men are to be killed by the mob, she goes to the prison. In defending themselves, two of the men are slain, but Count Nicho is only wounded. Vera takes him to her home and hides him from the revolutionists. Later he tells Vera that he is the guilty man, but she has learned to love him and forgives him.

Triangle

Paying His Debt—(Five Reels)—April 28.—Featuring Roy Stewart in a dual role. Josie Sedgwick plays opposite. Directed by Cliff Smith.

Frank Borden arrived in the little western town of Brazas. A victim of consumption, he had come to the west in an effort to recover his health. Ordered out of the little Casino which he had entered in the hope of getting something to eat, he sat on the steps a derelict in the eyes of the fortunate ones. He fell in the dust and when picked up by a young woman was unconscious. A piece of money was slipped into his hand. Later when he obtained work on a ranch he remembered the woman who had befriended him and returned her loan. He fainted by the roadside one day and was picked up by Pete Morton, "the vanishing bandit." Morton nursed the derelict back to life. The two men are astonished at their exact resemblance to one another. Morton persuades Frank Borden to act as his alibi. On the days that Morton picks to hold up the stage coach he sends Borden to the town to pose as his alibi. Anxious to repay Morton for saving his life, Borden agrees. During a stage robbery the father of Nan Christly is shot in the arm. He sees the bandit's face and declares he will shoot on sight. Returning from town where he played his alibi role, Borden finds a child lying unconscious in the road. He takes the child to the Christy home. Believing the man to be the bandit, Simon Christy endeavors to carry out his threat. Borden flees to the shack, warns Morton to flee and surrenders. He faces death when it is revealed that his double is the outlaw. Nan Christy, who has always loved him, accepts him as her fiance.

The Lonely Woman—(Five Reels)—April 28.—Featuring Belle Bennett. Directed by Thomas N. Heffron. Story by John A. Morosco.

Hudson Town is very much excited over the arrival of Miss Martha Sellers. The mayor is besieged by irate citizens, who want this mysterious woman removed from their midst, claiming that she is an undesirable person. Nothing against her personal character has been unearthed, but the fact that she receives letters regularly from Osinning and that she lives alone make the townfolk suspicious. The truth is that, while her husband is in Sing Sing the victim of another man's crime, Martha seeks the clue which will lead to the discovery of the guilty man. Her pity for the village drunkard, Jim Ransom, is merely camouflage for her suspicion. Finally the sullenness of the man turns to gratitude and gentleness as the result of her continued kindness. He is hurt in an accident, and before he dies confesses to having committed the crime which imprisoned Martha Seller's husband. The lonely woman then returns to the city and awaits the freedom of the man she loves.

Universal Special

The Two-Soul Woman—(Five Reels)—May 6.—Featuring Priscilla Dean in a dual role. Ashton Dearholt, Joseph Girard and Evelyn Selbie are in the cast. Story is taken from Gelett Burgess' novel, "The White Cat."

Scene from "The Two-Soul Woman."

Joy Fielding was in one of her charming moods when Chester Castle regained consciousness in her luxurious home following an automobile accident. Castle forgot his pains and aches and immediately fell in love with the woman whose hospitality he was forced to accept.

Twenty-four hours later Castle's feelings underwent a change. In the place of Joy Fielding he met another woman, the exact counterpart in looks to Joy, but wholly different in manners, tastes and traits of character. In place of a beautiful, modest, woman, the counterpart was a vulgar young woman of violent temper. Castle couldn't believe two persons could be so alike physically, and decided it must be some sort of a dual personality and starts an investigation to solve the Jeckyl and Hyde existence.

The investigation finally leads to Dr. Copin, the Dean family physician. Copin studies hypnotism and solves the problem. Copin, who seeks the Dean family fortune through marriage to Joy, at will places her under hypnotic influence, gives her suggestion that she must be unwomanly and repellant to all men and in this way seeks to drive all suitors from her until such a time as he is ready to marry her. Castle breaks this evil influence and finally marries Joy.

Vitagraph

The Seal of Silence—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring Earle Williams, Grace Darmond opposite. Directed by Tom Mills.

Hugh Loring is a wealthy young man of high standing in his profession of medicine and surgery. Mrs. Loring is attractive but cold and irreproachable in character. In the family lives Ruth Garden, a young woman, loyal friend of Mrs. Loring and laboratory companion of the Doctor. Loring's hobby is heredity, and his desire for a child is equaled only by his wife's aversion. Mrs. Loring has an admirer in Beverly Rivers, who ostensibly takes her to the opera, but in reality to a gambling house. Loring learns of the deception and admonishes his wife. Mrs. Loring confides in Ruth the fact that she is to become a mother, enjoining an oath of secrecy that she may in revenge rob her husband of the greatest joy that might come into his life.

Mrs. Loring goes to the home of an old nurse of her childhood, where the baby is born. Ruth is summoned and the mother dies, both events being concealed from Loring. Ruth returns to the Loring home and the baby is left in the care of the nurse. Three years pass and it becomes necessary for the nurse to discontinue the care of the child. Loring receives the child in the house without question, while Ruth suffers under his suspicion, but hoping that his heredity theory will prove its worth and that he will recognize his own child. The child falls desperately ill, and Loring, inspired by his love for its supposed mother, saves its life. As they stand by the crib the Doctor says, "I am glad for your sake, Ruth," to which she responds that the child is his and the wife's who had run away and died.

Paralta

Blind-folded—(Five Reels)—April 21.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale. Directed by Raymond B. West. Cast includes Joseph Dowling, Edward Coxen, Patrick Calhoun and others. The story, a crook play, is by E. Richard Schayer.

Pat Muldoon, a crook known as the Ear, has brought his daughter, Peggy, up to believe that stealing is perfcetly proper. Muldoon is taken sick and a doctor is summoned. The patient sees the stethoscope and gets an idea that it can be used in cracking safes. He and Peggy try the scheme, which works. In Muldoon's gang there is Sparks McDonnell, who is attentive to Peggy. Suddenly the young woman decides she would prefer to walk the straight and narrow path, but before doing so agrees to be in on one more "haul." This time, however, the robbers are caught and one of the crooks shoots a policeman. Another of the band changes guns with him and, when he is discovered wounded, he is holding a gun which has not been discharged.

Peggy is captured and sent to a reformatory. She is soon adopted by a rich Mrs. Benton, whose son has also just decided to reform, thus making a happy companion for Peggy, She takes Peggy with her to California to visit the son, Robert Benton. Soon the two are married. Several years pass and one day a tramp comes to the door. Peggy recognizes him as one of her old pals. He threatens to tell her husband the whole state of affairs unless she will agree to help him rob the bank. That night Benton discovers them both in the library and, when the tramp tells Peggy's story, Benton admits that he, too, was one of the ring leaders of the gang. The detectives, who had followed the tramp, shoot him as he tries to make his escape. They also decide to arrest Benton, but on second thought resolve to leave Peggy in peace with her husband and little child.

World

Masks and Faces—(Five Reels)—May 6.—Featuring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and a cast of distinguished English players, among them Dennis Neilson Terry, Gladys Cooper, Irene Vanbrugh, Lillian McCarthy and Ben Webster. Taken from a novel by Charles Read based on the life of Peg Woffington. Picture made for an English war fund. The introduction shows Sir James Barrie, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, Sir George Alexander and George Bernard Shaw among the notables seated around a large table consulting as to the production of this feature.

Ernest Vane, an English gentleman, is seen taking leave of his wife, Mabel, on his departure for London on urgent business. We are then introduced to James Triplet, a needy but kind-hearted poet and painter dwelling in a shabby little home with his wife and children. Triplet sends four of his plays to the manager of the Covent Garden Theatre, but they are rejected.

Peg Woffington, leading woman in the theatre, recognizes Triplet as one who had befriended her in less prosperous days and she comes to his rescue. She urges him to leave the plays with her and arranges to have him paint her portrait.

Vane, meantime, has completed his business in London and has fallen very much in love with Peg Woffington, which necessitates his being detained in London. This message he sends to his devoted little wife who decides to join him in London. Sir Charles Pomander, a courtly, intriguing man-about-town, is also in love with Peg and deeply resents Vane's attentions. The latter gives a banquet in honor of Peg and in the midst of the festivities Mrs. Vane appears on the scene much to the surprise of her husband as well as his guests. Mrs. Vane is broken-hearted when she learns of the state of affairs, and pleads with Peg to give her back her husband. Peg sets a little trap which arouses Vane's jealousy for his wife and eventually the two are reunited.

New Des Moines House Opens

The new Rialto Theatre, Des Moines, the largest motion picture house in Iowa, was formally opened to the public last week with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" as the feature.

A two-page advertisement in the Des Moines Register goes far in emphasizing the progressiveness of the Rialto management. It was arranged by John L. Shipley, publicity representative for the Rialto, and almost a column of it was devoted to Goldwyn Pictures.

The Rialto, an entirely fire-proof structure, seats 1,100 persons. The decorations on the front of the building, in the lobby and exterior are carried out in a color scheme which is a combination of art blue, rose, ivory and gold.

For the patrons' convenience a playroom for the children has been provided. This room is under supervision of a matron and is furnished with toys and games to amuse the youngsters.

Fine Story for World Play

Roy Somerville, famous for his vivid short stories and novels, has written for World Pictures a remarkable story, entitled "Hitting the Trail." The story is laid in the famed East Side of New York City and deals with the career and regeneration of one of the inhabitants of this region.

Mr. Somerville is a familiar name among the readers of Red Book, Saturday Evening Post, and other publications.

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

MOTOGRAPHY

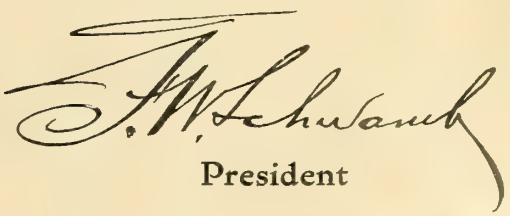
The MOTION PICTURE TRADE JOURNAL



Announcement—

MOTOGRAPHY comes, with this issue, under the general direction of Captain Merritt Crawford of New York, widely known in the motion picture industry as a publisher and publicist.

In assuming the presidency of Motography it was my first desire to give its readers and advertisers immediate, aggressive and progressive action. The association of Captain Crawford with Motography is the initial step toward the fulfillment of this pledge.

Captain Crawford's position is well known and fully established. He comes to Motography completely equipped by experience and ability to give to the industry a product of premier quality and value. He brings with h m primarily, a thorough conception of service, its relation to reader and advertiser, and he will make Motography in every sense not only a newspaper for the industry, but a trade paper with dollars and cents value to the exhibitor.

The appointment of Captain Crawford is but the first of a series of important announcements which are to be made to the readers of this paper. It is the initial move in the plan to make Motography a 100 per cent motion picture trade paper, a publication devoted to usefulness and dedicated to the best interests of all the industry.

Forever the "experts" are quibbling
as to what makes a good picture.
Whether heart interest, romance, intrigue, human appeal, slapstick, love, or what not.
And, as usual, no two "experts" agree.
You can't catalogue and label
what makes the majesty of a sunrise, the beauty of a soap bubble,
the heart-rending cry of a wounded bear cub.
Neither can they tell by pounds, inches, quarts why a simple little thing in a picture makes your heart surge, though it may be an old, old story told a thousand times before in a thousand different ways.
But that's just it.
It isn't what you do that makes a good picture;
it's the way you do it!

The "AFFILIATED" Platform

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking associatioin, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods, and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

Minding Their Own Business

EXHIBITORS possess the real values of the motion picture business. Their theatres are the fundamental assets of the industry. Their investments exceed all other investments.

Yet, until this moment, exhibitors have had little to say about the running of the business—scarcely, even, anything to say about the running of their own part of the business.

Their attempts to pool their interests, and thereby exercise the voice in affairs which their combined booking power would give them, has resulted either in the feathering of the nests of a chosen few of their number, or in the financing of the selfish purposes of outsiders.

The reason for this has been, that once having assembled their forces, exhibitors have given over the control of these forces to others.

THE AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORPORATION HAS BEEN FORMED BY EXHIBITORS, FOR EXHIBITORS, TO KEEP THE CONTROL OF THE EXHIBITORS' BOOKING POWER IN THE HANDS OF EXHIBITORS.

The purpose of the organization is to gain for the exhibitors' booking associations affiliated with it, a definite and consistent supply of meritorious pictures, at price concessions which such combined booking strength will earn—not to take advantage of that strength for selfish interests.

Exhibitors' booking associations, affiliated with this organization, retain ALL of their independence, ALL of their funds, and likewise are WHOLLY responsible for the management of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation.

This management is vested in a Board of Directors, made up of exhibitors, and elected by exhibitors. To make this board fully representative, of all exhibitors, one director is allotted to every hundred days of booking represented.

That a directorate of such representativeness may be relied upon to provide an efficient and trustworthy management, is best attested by the results which are now being obtained by such exhibitor booking units as

THE EXHIBITORS' BOOKING SYNDICATE, OF NEW YORK.
THE ASSOCIATED THEATRES, INC., OF MINNESOTA.
THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRES ASSOCIATION, OF ILLINOIS.
THE ASSOCIATED THEATRES, INC., OF ILLINOIS.
THE UNITED EXHIBITORS ASSOCIATION, OF PHILADELPHIA AND EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA.
THE EXHIBITORS BOOKING ASSOCIATION OF THE INTERMOUNTAIN STATES.
THE NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA EXHIBITORS BOOKING ASSOCIATION.
THE EXHIBITORS BOOKING ASSOCIATION, OF MICHIGAN.
THE TRI-STATE EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT, OF PITTSBURGH.

Retaining their present independence, but affiliated in a national organization that will assure the better producers an even more extensive market, these, and other booking associations, now in process of formation, will for the first time in the history of the industry, be in a position to realize the full power of their strength.

That such realization will bring added savings in rentals, and increased returns in the excess profits of each booking association, will be obvious to the most casual investigator.

If you would have a share in these benefits write today to the

A Seventy-Two Per Cent Tax

CANADA, still in the throes of economic adjustment, is aiming another blow at the motion picture industry as the most conspicuously shining mark. It is reported by our correspondent that the dominion government has proposed to increase the duty on films imported from the United States from two cents a foot to five cents a foot. It needs no arithmetician to demonstrate that five cents a foot—fifty dollars a reel—is an extraordinary tax; and the purpose is to apply it to every foot of positive print that comes across the boundary. Furthermore, the original war taxes amounting approximately to eight dollars a reel would be added to this, making a total of fifty-eight dollars a reel. Since for official purposes the Canadian government appraises all positive film at eighty dollars, the proposed war assessment would amount to seventy-two and one-half per cent of the value.

Of course the Canadian exchange men and exhibitors are up in arms in defense of their livelihood. The logical claim is made that the measure will defeat its own purpose by reducing the passage of films from the United States to Canada to a point where the total net tax revenue will actually be less than it is at present.

We cannot question that the dominion picture people are doing all they can to preserve the best interests of the industry in their country. There is little apparent way in which the exhibitors of this country can assist them. The question, however, is of direct interest to United States producers, practically all of whom do a Canadian business.

We have no definite information as to the specific assessment that might be made against Canadian printing plants operated by United States producers. That, of course, would be the most obvious method of providing Canadian customers with positive prints of negatives made south of the boundary. It would be a comparatively economical method, even with a rental rate sufficiently increased to cover interest on the additional investment, unless the tariff on negatives should be placed at a prohibitive figure.

We hope the parliament at Ottawa will realize the drastic quality of the proposed measure, and refuse to pass it. If it does pass, either the motion picture business of Canada is done for or our own Government, observing the success of its sister state's action, is likely to impose a similar tax upon the industry here. If the importing of films by Canada is greatly reduced, the result will be felt here through the diminished number of prints marketed by our producers, the consequent reduction of their revenues, and the necessary support of the increased burden by domestic exhibitors.

The Canadian situation is of vital importance to the exhibitors of the United States. They will do well to take a little time from the consideration of their own tax troubles to prepare against the possible effect of violent legislation up north.

Mutual's President

JAMES M. SHELDON, famous among the football fans of a decade ago for his brilliant work on the gridiron under the colors of Chicago University, and who has since gained equal renown in Chicago's field of finance, has assumed direction of the destinies of Mutual Film Corporation.

Mutual's new president has taken hold of the complicated task of conducting the big distributing organization with all his old time vigor and esprit of the football field. While, naturally, no details of his plans have yet become available, it may be said that developments of a nature most interesting to the whole motion picture field may be anticipated in the near future.

MOTOGRAPHY can only add its own good wishes to the deluge of felicitations already received by Mr. Sheldon.

Players and the Draft

SOME of the big legitimate producers, annoyed by the constant loss of male talent through the demands of the National Army, are considering a sort of embargo against players of draft age.

The sudden withdrawal of an important character is serious, of course. That it is any more serious than the same condition in the industrial field may be questioned. In every line of effort the removal of a responsible worker is a hardship; but it is one which most employers are bearing with a smile along with other natural conditions of patriotism.

It is good to know that in the motion picture field, at least, no player will be dismissed for the reason that he is eligible to draft. That is just one more illustration of the reason why players find studio employment better than the stage.

U. S. Issues Order On Admission Signs

Requires Price of Ticket and War Tax to Be Set Down Separately Instead of Together

THE Internal Revenue office in Chicago has given out the following statement:

"The War Revenue Act of October 3, 1917, tax on admissions, provides that a tax of 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid to any place, including admission by season ticket of subscription, be paid by the person paying for such admission.

"Pursuant to this section, regulations have been promulgated by the administrative department (see Regulations No. 43) requiring every person charging taxable admission to keep conspicuously displayed at their place of business a sign accurately stating the prices charged for admission, the tax due on each admission and the total of the admission and tax.

"Where entertainment enterprises, finding it impracticable to handle pennies, or for other reasons, have advanced their prices 5 or 10 cents, including the tax in the advance, conspicuous signs, in addition to the sign required by Article II, must announce. The charge for a (denomination) ticket includes the tax of 1 cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission.

"Frequent complaints have been received at this office that certain places where admission is charged are violating the law and regulations by displaying a sign, combining the admission and war tax, as for instance, 'Admission 15 cents including war tax.' This is in violation of the regulations and notice is hereby given to all displaying such signs to remove the same at once and display the required signs.

"Severe penalties are provided for failure to comply with the law and regulations and a noncompliance with this request will be reported to the proper authorities for the necessary action."

New Move to Unseat Maj. Funkhouser

Ald. Maypole Introduces Ordinance in Chicago Council That Would End One-Man Censorship

CREATION of a board of eleven censors and repeal of the present ordinance which gives Second Police Deputy M. L. C. Funkhouser his one-man power are provided in an ordinance introduced in the Chicago Council this week by Ald. George Maypole.

While the ordinance would shear Deputy Funkhouser of any voice in motion picture matters it makes no recommendation for removal of the censors now in the employ of the city.

Ald. Maypole describes the ordinance as making possible "sane censorship" of all films and he said that it provides just what pictures may or may not be projected.

"The ordinance provides that before any permit is issued for exhibition of a picture, the applicant must make his request in writing and the films in question shall be deposited with the board for inspection," he said.

"The board shall then determine whether the films or any section of them come within the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance. If a majority of the members decide that any part of a film is a violation of the definitely established rules they shall so state in writing, specifying the objections, and the chief of police shall refuse a permit.

"Taking the ordinance as a whole it makes it possible to supply sane censorship. One section of the ordinance provides specifically that no permit shall be granted for any film that is immoral or obscene, riotous, disorderly or contains unlawful scenes."

Provision is made for appeal by an exhibitor to a court of competent jurisdiction from the decision of the censorship board.

Moore Again Supports Star

Tom Moore will again be seen as leading man in Madge Kennedy's fifth Goldwyn production, "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles. Prominent in the support of the prepossessing Goldwyn star are several other screen players of repute.

Moore's performances since becoming a Goldwyn fixture have been a feature of several productions, particularly "The Danger Game," the previous Madge Kennedy picture.

Robert Walker, well-known for his juvenile characterizations, has an important role in "The Fair Pretender." Walker was prominently identified with a number of successful Broadway musical comedies before taking up motion picture work. Among the notable screen productions in which he has appeared are "The Gates of Eden," "A Wife by Proxy," "Mortal Sin," "God's Law and Man's," "The Girl Without a Soul," and "Blue Jeans."

Paul Doucet, who was capital in support of Miss Kennedy in "The Danger Game," is entrusted with another important role.

Ad Gets Many Pretty Girls, But Few Homely Men

WANTED—100 beautiful girls and 50 homely men as extras for motion picture. Selexart.

Four scenes in "Blue Blood," the Selexart drama distributed by Goldwyn, owe their splendor and thrills to that advertisement. In response to it four hundred beauties applied to Director Eliot Howe at the Hollywood studios. According to the director, no man has ever found himself in such a delicate position—that of informing 300 of the applicants that their beauty was eclipsed by the hundred he chose.

As may be presumed, there were not fifty men in or around Hollywood who thought themselves sufficiently homely to apply. As a result the director had to begin work with only twenty-seven.

The incidents requiring a bevy of beautiful girls as well as a horde of ugly men depict orgies in the career of Spencer Wellington, scion of an honored family, who, though afflicted with an incurable hereditary mental disease, lays his plans to marry a wealthy girl to rehabilitate his debt-ridden estate. The scenes reveal him in his true light—a depraved wretch among others of his ilk, making merry with pretty women in dens made for revelry of that kind.

The beautiful girls are seen supping wine, laughing and chatting merrily with drunken men to whom they would not have given a second thought on any other occasion. Several of the girls are shown in an exhibition of dancing while the men around them show their approval by throwing coins at their feet. The party breaks up in a fight. The girls are seen fleeing in terror with the drunken men close at their heels.

Beach Talks of New Picture

"Evening frocks and dinner jackets have their place on the plains of the great Southwest just as in every other section of the country," remarked Rex Beach, the author, in discussing an interesting scene in his newest picture, "Heart of the Sunset," distributed by Goldwyn.

The scene, which comes as a visual relief from some intensely thrilling incidents, is an elaborate dinner in a ranch house owned by a successful rancher. Seated about the table are men and women who would grace a similar event in the banquet halls of cities.

"This scene," continues Mr. Beach, "should go a long way in disillusioning thousands who hold to the opinion that ranch folk know nothing of the social side of life. The fact is, I've seen more sumptuously furnished homes on ranches than I have in many of the large cities."

Shakeup in Mutual—Freuler Out

COMMITTEE OF CREDITORS TO HELP SHAPE DESTINY

JOHN R. FREULER is out as president of the Mutual Film Corporation, James M. Sheldon of New York has been chosen as his successor, while a committee of three has been designated by the principal creditors to help shape Mutual's destiny.

Announcement of the upheaval came without warning and surprised the film world from New York to Los Angeles. The opinion was unanimous that the action contained great significance, chiefly because Mr. Freuler is expected to attempt bigger things, most likely with the American Film Company. It is regarded as likely that the American will not release through Mutual much longer. Meanwhile Mutual's new president says, "Business as Usual."

Official Announcement Made

The news of the shake-up was made public in the following announcement:

"John R. Freuler has resigned as president of the Mutual Film Corporation of Delaware and James M. Sheldon of New York was elected his successor at a meeting of the board of directors held at the concern's offices at 220 South State street.

"Warren Gorrell and Walter McLellan of the Federal Reserve Bank, Chicago, were elected to the board of directors. Samuel S. Hutchinson of Chicago resigned from the board.

"The officers of the corporation now include: G. W. Hall and John F. Cuneo, vice-presidents; Paul H. Davis, treasurer; I. C. Elston, Jr., assistant treasurer; Edward Stoddard, secretary, and H. G. Davis, assistant secretary."

Statement by Freuler

Mr. Freuler made the following statement:

"I have resigned from the Mutual Film Corporation for the reason that I have been opposed in the execution of the course which I have deemed to the best interests of the stockholders and creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation, including all of its subsidiaries.

"I regret that I have not been given either the moral or financial support from those interested which was necessary to the conservation of the interests mentioned.

Names of Committee

"The destiny of the concern is now in the hands of a committee of three men, I. C. Elston, Jr., Warren Gorrell and George W. Hall, directors and officers, and their associates.

"This committee represents the principal creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation. This group of men has purchased the assets of the Mutual Film Corporations of Delaware, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, New York, California and of Canada which previously were held by the Mutual Film Corporation of Virginia, the parent concern.

"The stock of these concerns is now held by the committee against claims from the principal creditors totaling about $700,000. The committee has given the stockholders one year in which to satisfy the claims and redeem the stock.

The above is James M. Sheldon, who succeeds John R. Freuler as president of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Sheldon is well known in picture circles. His first film connection was with the Syndicate Film Corporation. Later he was president of the Randolph Film Corporation. More recently he was head of the Empire All Star Corporation, which released its pictures through Mutual.

Mr. Sheldon was a lawyer before he entered the film world. He is a college man and by many people in Chicago he is remembered as "Jimmy" Sheldon, hero of the football field a decade ago, when he played on the University of Chicago team.

His many friends are congratulating him upon his appointment as president of Mutual and wishing him the best of luck.

Reveals Cause of Dispute

"It is to this operation and the steps by which it was performed that I have most strenuously objected.

"I have important motion picture plans in the process of consummation which will be announced probably in the early autumn."

The Mutual Film Corporation is among the oldest and largest of the motion picture concerns. It includes a system of thirty-six film exchanges covering the United States and Canada.

The Mutual is now distributing pictures starring Charles Chaplin, Edna Goodrich, the Charles Frohman stars, William Russell, Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The roster of stars which have been in its service includes many celebrities of the screen. Its gross output has ranged as high as one million feet a week.

Film Man Wounded at Front

Harry Murray, an employe of the Fox Film Corporation, has met the Boche and has given a good account of himself. He writes that he is now in a base hospital in France, having been gassed and hit in the leg by shrapnel in one of the battles in which the old Sixty-ninth of the Rainbow division introduced themselves to the foe. Murray, after recounting his wounds, says:

"Not bad for a beginner. But don't worry; I'll be back there in the line again soon for another whack at Heinie. Believe me we're going to knock those Germans over. The French say: 'They shall not pass'; and, take it from me, they won't. They may think they are winning now, but wait. You know what we used to say at the ball game: 'It only takes one to hit it.' Well, our one hit will win the game. The Germans are fighting like hell. They know it's their last drive."

Harry is 21 years old and had been in the contract department of the Fox Film Corporation for two years. He heard the call of the old Sixty-ninth last July and left for France in October. Harry is only one of the many boys who have left the Fox corporation for the trenches.

Brown of Harvard, with Tom Moore (Selig)—"A pleasing picture which satisfied the audience and drew pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.

Metro

Draft 258, with Mabel Taliaferro (Metro)—"It's great. Boost it big."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Lest We Forget, with Rita Jolivet (Metro)—"A big picture, commemorating the sinking of the Lusitania. Advertise it big and it will draw. You need not be afraid of it. Comments on it were 'Fine,' 'First Class,' 'I liked it immensely,' and 'Better than I thought it would be.' We were a little bit afraid of it as we thought the public was being fed too many war pictures but this one went over."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Blue Jeans, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"Seven reels. Tell your people this is more than an ordinary picture. Get behind it and boost it as is worthy of it and will get you money if advertised a little heavier than your usual show. Our patrons all had a good word for it and many a handkerchief was seen during its run."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Mirror, with Marjorie Rambeau (Mutual)—"Print too dark. Business fair. This star has no drawing power but this is the best of her pictures we have had."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Her Sister, with Olive Tell (Mutual)—"The star is very good. Story fair. Photography dark."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

A Bit of Kindling, with Jackie Saunders (Mutual)—"Star good. Light story. Good business."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

The Dazzling Miss Davison, with Marjorie Rambeau (Mutual)—"A mystery story that held the interest to the last. Film good. Story padded too much, as three reels would have told it."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

The Mountain Rat (Mutual)—"A fair picture. A mining town story in which the Rat (a girl) makes good."—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theatre, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Paralta

A Man's Man, with J. Warren Kerrigan (Paralta)—"Undoubtedly Kerrigan's best. This picture established Paralta in the minds of our patrons."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

Madame Who? with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—"A long picture but not tiresome. Drew well. Miss Barriscale is well liked here."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

Paramount

Love Me, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Pretty good, but not the star's best. Drew capacity business."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Love Me, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"From the comments I heard on this, it seemed to be liked by all much more than the western dance-hall pictures this star has worked in."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Love Me, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Some of my patrons said this was the best picture they ever saw. Drew well."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Eve's Daughter, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"The women liked it but it did not please the men or children. Not as good as the star's previous vehicles. The star wore some fine clothes. Average business, nothing extra for a Class B star."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

The Kitchen Lady, with Louise Fazenda (Bennett-Paramount)—"The best Mack Sennett comedy we have shown. You will find even the critical women patrons who do not care for comedies say they enjoyed this one. The bear, cat, goat and fish incidents draw many a big laugh. There are more laughs in this than in a Chaplin comedy."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre,

Big Timber, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"A good program picture that pleased a good crowd, especially the Reid fans. Excellent scenic effects."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

A Roadside Impresario, with George Beban (Paramount)—"An excellent picture that showed to only half as many as it should. Beban is great but only a few of my patrons think so."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Her Better Self, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"An excellent picture. Drew two capacity houses. Business on the whole is good."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Rough House, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"A good comedy that pleased a big crowd. I use a Keystone comedy with an Arbuckle comedy once a month for a full comedy night and always have a large and pleased crowd."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Rich Man, Poor Man, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A pretty good picture. Audience well pleased. Warm weather hurt the drawing power."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A great picture. The star is well liked."—J. E. Byers, Princess Theatre, Morganfield, Ky.

Wild Youth, with Louise Huff (Blackton-Paramount)—"It's good but not what we expected of Blackton and it did not take very well here."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Too bad there are only three Bab stories. They have good drawing power."—Giacoma Brothers, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

The Family Skeleton, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"Not Ray's kind of picture, although it pleased fairly well and drew likewise."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Honor of His House, with Sessue Hayakawa

The Family Skeleton, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"A very good picture. Pleased the audience very well. Pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Widow's Might, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—"A very good picture. This star is growing in popularity. Good business."—H. A. Bearse, Orpheum Theatre, Chatham, Mass.

Pathe

Loaded Dice, with Frank Keenan (Pathe)—"Keenan has done better but still this is an interesting picture and it commands attention from an interested audience."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.

Select

The Barrier (Select)—"Fine and draws good business, but the exchange gets all the money."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Triangle

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A good western to good patronage. Well satisfied."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Reggie Mixes In, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"The best Fairbanks yet and drew for three shows, very unusual for him here. A whirlwind comedy. The photography of these reprints is still too dark."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Until They Get Me, with Pauline Starke (Triangle)—"A good program picture that pleased a fair crowd on a very rainy night. Triangle pictures on the average are popular here."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Framing Framers, with Charles Gunn (Triangle)—"Just an ordinary program picture with a poor title. Fair crowd."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

A Birthday Blunder (Triangle Komedy)—"A vulgar comedy. I took it off immediately. Do not run this to a mixed audience."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

The Pinch Hitter, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"I consider this an excellent picture but quite a few of my patrons complained of it being too slow."—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Flame of the Yukon, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"This is much better than The Spoilers. There is a real fight in it, too."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Time Lock and Diamonds, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A fine picture."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Wolf Lowry, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"This is a good picture but not so good as other Hart releases."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Bad Boy, with Robert Harron (Triangle)—"A picture that every father, mother, son and daughter should see."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

American, That's All, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"Full of mirth and pep."—Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Clodhopper, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A good picture, full of comedy."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Madcap Madge, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"A good picture."—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Universal

The Man From Montana (Universal Special)—"Drew well in spite of strong opposition."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Field of Honor, with Alan Holubar (Butterfly)—"A good picture of civil war days. Took well with the audience."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

Vitagraph

The Sixteenth Wife, with Peggy Hyland (Vitagraph)—"Peggy is well liked here. Lots of comedy as well as real acting."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

Arsene Lupin, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"An extraordinary picture, especially interesting to those who have read the book."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

For France, with Edward Earle (Vitagraph)—"Drew well and pleased all. Better than lots of specials."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Soul Master, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"An ordinary picture. Drew well."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Maelstrom, with Earle Williams and Dorothy Kelly (Vitagraph)—"Full of action and holds the interest all the way. Both stars draw well. Business good. The film was in very poor condition."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

"Big V" Comedies (Vitagraph)—"For clean slapstick, they can't be beat."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Song of the Soul, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A very good picture. Pleased the audience and brought pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

A Woman Between Friends, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A very good picture. Star good."—G. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

In the Balance, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"Star and story very good."—G. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

Who Goes There, with Harry Morey (Vitagraph)—"A very good picture. Star at his best."—G. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

The Menace, with Corinne Griffith (Vitagraph)—"A good play but with no drawing power."—G. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

World

The Little Volunteer, with Madge Evans (World)—"Our patrons were well pleased with this picture."—B. H. Hunter, Dreamland Theatre, Uvalde, Texas.

Darkest Russia, with Alice Brady (World)—"Although this is an old picture, it was liked better than any late offering we have run for some time."—B. H. Hunter, Dreamland Theatre, Uvalde, Texas.

The Trap, with Alice Brady (World)—"A good picture which satisfied everybody and drew pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Little Duchess, with Madge Evans (World)—"Madge Evans is a wonderful child actress and pleases the public. Film good and photography fine."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

Serials and Series

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Eighth chapter and going well. Our Saturday patrons like this star."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter 4. Business great and they are all talking about it. We are receiving many compliments."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The House of Hate, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"Chapter 1. Started fine. Big crowd. Well liked."—J. E. Byers, Princess Theatre, Morganfield, Ky.

The House of Hate, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"A splendid serial and going strong. We are on the fifth chapter and it keeps getting better."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"We don't run many serials, but this one is great."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Any theatre that can use western pictures (and who can not?) is making a mistake if it does not get this serial."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Chapters seven and eight dropped in attendance, but the number of children patrons increased. This serial is running after The Fighting Trail and several patrons say there are too many thrills."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

The Woman in the Web, with Hedda Nova (Vitagraph)—"In the class with Vengeance and the Woman."—C. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

The Purple Mask, with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford (Universal)—"This serial, just closed, was a lemon. Grace Cunard is a good actress, but as a scenario writer she is a joke. Film very poor. Rental too high for such old stuff."—Riley Brothers, Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

State Rights and Specials

The Italian Battle Front (State Rights)—"The press tendered us a vote of thanks for showing such an extraordinary picture. Business fair."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Whip, with Alma Hanlon (State Rights)—"Will draw anywhere, any time, under any conditions."—C. E. Jackson, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Masque of Life, with Rita Jolivet (State Rights)—"Poor. Suggestive. Keep away from it."—B. H. Hunter, Dreamland Theatre, Uvalde, Texas.

The Mad Lover, with Robert Warwick (State Rights)—"Pretty fair picture, but not a wonderful business getter."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Public Defender, with Frank Keenan (State Rights)—"A good play and story. Should get good returns."—G. Honigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

The Cowpuncher (Supreme)—"N. G. Keep away from this junk."—G. Henigger, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

The Nature Man (Broadway)—"Four-reel educational. Has splendid scenery and various species of wild animals. It is a splendid production of its kind."—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theatre, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Canada Plans a Huge Import Tax

WOULD BOOST DUTY FROM TWO TO FIVE CENTS A FOOT

A TERRIFIC blow was dealt the moving picture business of Canada on May 1, when A. K. McLean, acting minister of finance, announced in the House of Commons that the government proposed to increase the duty on films imported from the United States from two cents to five cents per lineal foot. Mr. McLean announced that the increased tariff would apply to all imported "positives" of standard width, made for presentation in theatres.

The decision of the government came as a bolt from the blue sky, no intimation whatever having been given to the film interests anywhere that such a step was contemplated. It was also unexpected inasmuch as both exhibitors and exchange managers had been giving freely of their services and their theatres for the presentation of propaganda films and in addition had been shouldering a great burden of taxation from various sources, not to mention heavy provincial and civic licenses.

Film Men to Fight

As soon as the news came over the wires, the instant decision was reached to fight the measure with all possible means. Leading exchange men of Toronto immediately held an emergency meeting, after which telegrams were sent out to 1,000 exhibitors and branch exchange managers throughout the country. Every exhibitor was urged to get busy with prominent citizens so that influence would be brought to bear upon members of parliament. The telegram read as follows:

"Have your lawyer, banker and other influential citizens wire your member of parliament at Ottawa to oppose the imposition of the new duty of five cents per foot on films. This increase of 150 per cent over present duty is a burden that the moving picture business cannot stand. In view of the fact that the increase on other articles averages about ten per cent, this terrible tax imposed on films cannot be justified and if imposed means the ruination of the business. Final action is being taken at Ottawa now, so lose no time wiring your member."

Burden is Staggering

Canadian film companies will pay no less than $58 in duties and taxes on every reel of 1,000 feet, if the proposed tariff is imposed. For official purposes, every reel has an appraised value of $80 and a duty of twenty-five per cent has been assessed against this valuation. To this was added a Canadian war tax of 7½ per cent and on top of this was the American war tax of one quarter of one per cent. All this amounted to $28 per reel.

Now the Canadian government proposes an addition in the duty of three cents per foot, or $30 per reel more, which makes a total of $58 per reel for all taxes and duties. This is the assessment against an article that the government values at $80.

Exchange to Aid Exhibitors

Various exchange managers have declared that they desire most of all to kill the tax proposal rather than merely pass it along to the exhibitors. Increased taxation of this kind will undoubtedly affect the whole business to such an extent that it may become unprofitable. A number have declared importation of new films will be greatly reduced if the duty is increased and in this way the very purpose of the move, namely to obtain more revenue, will be more than offset.

The statement is freely made in Canadian film circles that the ten-cent theatre is now a thing of the past and that the minimum admission price will undoubtedly be 15 cents. This move is not desired, however, because it will have a tendency to restrict the attendance.

Longer Life for Films, Aid

The declaration is also made that the evolution of tax upon tax means that exchanges will demand that proper care be taken of films by exhibitors and operators. In other words, the life of a film must be extended as much as possible in order to meet the extra costs.

Various methods have been suggested by exchange managers and others for the assimilation of the new "national obligation."

One suggestion is that, if the increased duty is enforced, the exhibitor be called upon to pay an extra charge of fifty cents every time he makes a booking for any lease.

A great many film men in Canada have been busy with pencil and paper trying to figure out an entirely new schedule of rentals based on costs and taxes, including duties. These men state that the number of working days in a year for the usual feature is 200, while the life of a news weekly is only ninety days. It is also figured that there are generally about fifteen customers for a news reel. In the latter case, it is easy to see then that the extra cost for each customer to cover the added tariff will be $2.

On the other hand, comedies are said to be good for a year's work. This means 200 working days. In this instance, the new tariff would bring an added cost of fifteen cents per day per reel.

Here's the Story, Major Funkhouser

"Areopagitica?" Sure There Is Such a Thing and It's an Awful Wallop, Though a Highbrow One, at Censors

When Major Funkhouser, the Chicago censor, made one of his usual startling announcements recently, a reporter asked him if he had ever read John Milton's "Areopagitica," an essay on literary license quite famous among scholars. Thinking the reporter was "joshing" him, he refused to answer. For the benefit of the major, there really is such a thing as "areopagitica," and in the opinion of Motography the major and every other censor could afford to read it. Therefore it is reproduced below. Exhibitors also will find it valuable propaganda to use in intellectual circles.

I DENY not but that it is of greatest concernment in the church and commonwealth, to have a vigilant eye how books demean themselves as well as men; and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors; for books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a potency of life in them to be as active as that soul was whose progeny they are; nay, they do not preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively, and as vigorously productive, as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men.

And yet, on the other hand, unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book; who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself, kills the image of God as it were in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious lifeblood of a master spirit, imbalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. 'Tis true, no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse.

We should be wary therefore what persecution we raise against the living labors of public men, how we spill that seasoned life of man preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be thus committed, sometimes a martyrdom, and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fifth essence, the breath of reason itself, slays an immortality rather than a life. . . .

Good and evil we know in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil and in so many cunning resemblances hard to be discerned that those confused seeds which were imposed on Psyche as an incessant labor to cull out and sort asunder were not more intermixed. It was from out the rind of one apple tasted that the knowledge of good and evil as two twins cleaving together leaped forth into the world. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evil —that is to say, of knowing good by evil.

As therefore the state of man now is, what wisdom can there be to choose, what continence to forbear, without the knowledge of evil? He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true warfaring Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for not without dust and heat.

Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring impurity much rather: That which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental whiteness; which was the reason why our sage and serious poet Spenser, whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Apuinas, describing true temperance under the person of Guion, brings him in with his palmer through the cave of Mammon and the bower of earthly bliss, that he might see and know, and yet abstain.

Since, therefore, the knowledge and survey of vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely and with less danger scout into the regions of sin and falsity than by reading all manner of reason? And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read. . . .

If we think to regulate printing, thereby to rectify manners, we must regulate all recreations and pastimes, all that is delightful to man. No music must be heard, nor song be set or sung, but what is grave and doric. There must be licensing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment be taught our youth but what by their allowance shall be thought honest; for such Plato was provided of. It will ask more than the work of twenty licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars in every house; they must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say. And who shall silence all the airs and madrigals that whisper softness in chambers?

The windows, also, and the balconies must be thought on; there are shrewd

Slashes Three Patriotic Pictures

MAJOR FUNKHOUSER STARTLES CHICAGO

THREE big patriotic pictures presented in Chicago within two weeks have met with opposition from Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police and censor of motion pictures.

The cutting of incidents in Germany's invasion of Belgium and France were ordered in each picture, although the United States government had approved the films.

"Hearts of the World," "The Unbeliever," and Ex-Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" are the plays which suffered. They met the same reception accorded "The Spy," "The Little American" and other earlier productions designed to arouse the nation to the cruelty of the enemy, which Major Funkhouser feared would "injure the feelings of the German people in this country."

Motography Interviews Major

But with our soldiers now actually engaged in more than "injuring the feelings" of the Germans, surely the Major was not still worried for that reason. So MOTOGRAPHY sent a reporter to his office to ask for an explanation. Major Funkhouser at first stated that he cut the scenes only because he thought they came under the ruling which bars indecent and immoral pictures. That he had another reason he later stated himself.

"They have said dreadful things about me," said the major. "But read this copy of the city ordinance which prohibits the showing of indecent pictures. If I don't enforce it, I am not fulfilling my duty. But when I do the public and you newspaper and magazine writers all knock me. I'm opposed, either way I act. So I simply do my duty and disregard the consequences. And there are many people who do approve. Read this."

One for Him Anyway

He showed with pride a newspaper clipping from a "Voice of the People" department in which some woman lauded him for his stand in the question of the statue recently ordered removed from the Art Institute steps, sneering at the protest of what she called the "shockless artists."

"But it is the patriotic pictures we are interested in, not art generally," said the reporter. "Did you think the scenes dangerous to public morals?"

"I will show you the scenes we cut from 'Hearts of the World' if you wish." The reporter did not wish.

Kultur, That's Why

"Don't you think that the reason these scenes are used, the fact that they are the truth and the people should know about them justified them, Major Funkhouser?"

"No," said the man who controls Chicago's photoplays. "A thing is either right or wrong. A scene is either immoral or it is not. The reason for its use does not make any difference."

Major Funkhouser insisted that the reporter see the cut-outs and express an opinion on them.

"We cut only fifty feet from 'Hearts of the World,'" he said, "But Morris Gest came out here, got angry and cut some other scenes himself, then used the incident to gain newspaper publicity. We only cut twenty-two feet from the Gerard film."

Cut-outs Unnecessary

The cut-outs from both pictures were then screened. "What do you think of them?" the major asked.

MOTOGRAPHY's representative had seen the entire productions in the theatres and replied:

"The scenes were used for a purpose and I believe them justified. They will teach the people."

The Patriotic Major

"Well," said Chicago's censor czar, who had just previously stated that his only objection was to their morality. "We must think of the time after the war. Remember we will all have to live in this country."

"That depends on our winning the war first."

"Oh, that doesn't make any difference. We will still live here, that is unless the Germans take us to work in their factories."

This is the opinion of the man who has the power to prevent the citizens of Chicago from seeing pictures upon which the governments of the United States, France and England have put their official sanction.

A big laugh in the new Fox picture, "American Buds," featuring the Baby Grands, Jane and Katherine Lee.

Lockwood Film Ready May 27

Metro has set May 27 as the release date for Harold Lockwood's newest starring vehicle, "Lend Me Your Name." The picture is the first subject made by the Lockwood organization since the return to the West Coast after a long stay in the East.

"Lend Me Your Name" is a farce comedy based on Francis Perry Elliott's novel of that name and adapted for the screen by Fred J. Balshofer and John B. Clymer. The former also directed it. It is a story of traded identities.

Three Artcraft Pictures This Month

First Is "M'liss," Starring Mary Pickford; Second, "Old Wives for New," and Third, "Selfish Yates" with Hart

THREE big Artcraft offerings are on the May schedule of releases announced by Walter E. Greene, managing director of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, two presenting Mary Pickford and William S. Hart and the third being another of the series of super-pictures produced by Cecil B. DeMille.

"The first is Miss Pickford in 'M'Liss,'" says Mr. Greene, "in which she will be seen in a typical role as the heroine of the famous Bret Harte novel. From the box office standpoint this picture has everything in its favor, for in addition to the drawing power of the star, the title of the story is well known, as it was considered probably the most successful effort of the famous author. The unbounded popularity of the book led to its dramatization by Clay M. Greene and it was presented on the speaking stage with signal success for several years.

"The picture was adapted by Frances Marion, who has been responsible for most of the star's recent works, including 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm,' 'Stella Maris' and 'Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley.' That the direction was in the capable hands of Marshall Neilan should be sufficient assurance of the artistry of the production.

"The story of 'M'Liss' is a charming tale of California in the golden days of '49. A wild, untutored girl, the daughter of a dissipated father, M'Liss is a tender, courageous girl who knows how to take care of herself. A fine cast of players appears in support of the star. Chief among these are Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan, Charles Ogle, Tully Marshall, Helen Kelly and Winifred Greenwood. The date of release is May 13.

"Another adaptation from a famous novel is the Cecil B. DeMille production of 'Old Wives for New,' released on May 20. The author of this book is the late David Graham Phillips, one of the most widely read of contemporary writers in the United States. The story won instant popularity because of its fidelity to life and its pitiless exposition of the frailties of mankind as well as the follies of modern society. Its vital theme, sympathetic as well as cynical, made it an exceptional subject for picturization, and that it will be one of the most successful pictures of the year is a safe prediction.

"The excellent picturization of this subject is the work of Jeanie Macpherson, whose 'Joan the Woman,' 'The Woman God Forgot,' 'The Devil Stone,' 'The Whispering Chorus' and other deMille photoplays which rank as classics have placed her on the top rung of her profession. The announcement of a Cecil B. deMille production to the public is a guarantee of pleasing entertainment. 'Old Wives for New' has been produced by Mr. deMille in a particularly lavish manner, and this photoplay will no doubt add materially to his fame.

"A new character is created by William S. Hart in the Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft, released May 20, entitled 'Selfish Yates.' The role is that of an egotistical and brutal dive keeper in an Arizona mining camp. Debased by his sordid surroundings, he exhibits no manly qualities until the germ of love, planted in his soul by an innocent, brave and charming woman, blossoms forth in consuming flame. The regeneration of Yates is a subtle psychological study which carries the message that selfishness is a hideous trait. The story was written expressly for Hart by C. Gardner Sullivan.

"The picture was directed by Hart himself, as were his other recent photoplays, in which he has disclosed that he is as capable a director as he is a player. His leading woman is Jane Novak."

Fight Over Possession of House

Rival forces, representing the lessee and owner, respectively, of the Family Theatre, Montreal, engaged in a battle royal recently for possession of the theatre. Mr. Desmarteau, who had leased the theatre, objected to giving up the house to the owner, J. Ogulnik, and the matter was taken to the courts.

The final decision favored the owner, who promptly took steps to use the building. He engaged A. J. Aubrey, formerly of the General Film Company, as manager, and preparations were made for re-opening.

But Manager Aubrey, it is said, met with armed opposition and both he and the owner were prevented from entering. A fight ensued which resulted in the arrest of Desmarteau.

Ogulnik now has possession.

Changes to Open Booking

The Majestic Theatre, Detroit, starting May 19, will inaugurate a complete change of policy. Instead of giving three shows daily, it will give but two, one in the afternoon and one at night, with 15 and 25-cent prices for the matinees, and 25, 50 and 75 cents at night.

The Majestic will go to open booking and Manager M. W. McGee will be on the lookout for all of the biggest and best attractions in filmdom.

M. P. E. L. Convention July 13 to 20

OFFICIAL CALL SENT OUT BY PRESIDENT OCHS

AN official call by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, formally sets the time and place of the annual convention of that body and the exposition of the motion picture industry as July 13 to 20 in the Mechanics' building, Boston, Mass.

Others to Meet Same Time

The president of the United States has been asked to open the exposition, which will be held jointly by the exhibitors' league and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Invitations have been extended to all organizations connected with the industry to hold their conventions simultaneously with the exposition. Already the conventions of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers have been scheduled for that time.

President Ochs' call put great emphasis on the importance of the work to be accomplished by the exhibitors during the coming year, and because of this urged all state and local organizations to pay their per capita tax so that a full quota of delegates and alternates might be sent.

Wants Split Fully Healed

He was particularly anxious that the split that occurred in the ranks of the exhibitors at the last convention, and which was only partially healed at the convention in Washington last winter, be entirely healed so exhibitors can move as one in furthering any plans made by the league to give aid and support to the government in response to the appeal made by President Wilson a year ago.

Whole-Hearted Support Desired

That the aid already given has been great, the President has admitted in publicly commending the industry, but Mr. Ochs points out that the opportunity for still greater service makes it imperative that the exhibitors tender their unanimous and whole-hearted support to the program adopted, and that it is therefore of the utmost importance that the coming convention and exposition be made the biggest and largest in the history of the business.

Mastercraft Begins Actual Production

"The One Woman," From the Novel of Thomas Dixon, Is Initial Subject—Five Weeks to Complete Negative

THIS week the wheels of work began to grind on the manufacture of the product which marks the active entrance of a new and important organization into the motion picture industry.

At the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, one entire stage, divided into various settings, is now under the focus of a battery of cameras engaged in the production of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The One Woman," with which feature the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation will make its advent into the theatres of the world.

F. Eugene Farnsworth, president of the Mastercraft company, is actually and seriously supervising the production, which is being staged under the direction of Reginald Barker.

Adda Gleason and Clara Williams appear in leading roles, while the supporting cast is one of the strongest that could be obtained.

Mr. Barker worked for several days on scenes scattered throughout the scenario which did not demand the presence of the character of "Gordon," due to the fact that W. Lawson Butt, the famous English actor who has been selected to interpret that role, has been on location in southern California taking some of the final scenes in a forthcoming Paralta play featuring Louise Glaum.

Mr. Butt only recently joined the Paralta company and has been loaned to the Mastercraft for this production, upon the completion of which he will again appear in the Paralta output.

The screen version of "The One Woman" was written by Mr. Dixon himself in collaboration with Henry Chandlee. The scenario was prepared by Mr. Chandlee and E. Richard Schayer.

Mr. Farnsworth estimates that the negative will be completed in about five weeks. This, however, does not include the time allowed for laboratory work, which will be done under Mr. Farnsworth's direction, as he is an expert in this end of the industry.

Mastercraft plans the production of four big features a year.

Opens Employment Bureau

Albert H. Beaulne, secretary of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Montreal, has opened an employment bureau as one of the special features of the organization. A register of operators, ushers, pianists and others is kept and there is no charge for the service to the members.

A highly dramatic moment in the Bessie Barriscale-Paralta play, "Blindfolded."

"An Alien Enemy" Brings Joy to Sing Sing

Prison Journal Declares It Is a Vehicle for the Best Possible Propaganda Against "Kultur"

"AN ALIEN ENEMY" in which Louise Glaum makes her debut as a star in Paralta Plays, was shown last week to an enthusiastic audience at Sing Sing prison. The production was proclaimed by the wardens not only as one of the best screen offerings shown in that institution, but as the greatest propaganda picture they had ever seen.

The following review appeared in the current issue of "The Star Bulletin," which is published within the walls of the prison:

"There is no propaganda more detrimental to the Prussian Kultur existing in our land today than the uncovering of the German espionage system; and the motion pictures have been, and are, a great aid to the United States Government in bringing to the attention of the American people the seriousness of a spy system that has destroyed an enormous amount of property and slaughtered so many innocent lives, as well as corrupting the minds of thousands of our citizens.

"'An Alien Enemy,' a recent Paralta release, offers an excellent vehicle for this propaganda work, for it shows the blending of blood and iron in the breeding of little children who are one day to become the instruments of intrigue and deceit, that has for its purpose the enslaving of the entire world under the cruel and merciless yoke of Prussian militarism.

"Such a child is Neysa von Igel, born of American parents within the Kaiser's domain, who after her parents' death at the hands of a brutal military officer, becomes a ward of the German Empire, and is trained in all the 'Kultur' that now make life a hell.

"Louise Glaum as the little Neysa grown to womanhood, gives a strong portrayal of the woman whose nature conflicts with her unnatural training as a spy, and she gradually assumes her rightful heritage and proves her loyalty to the land of her parents, and to her American husband. She is supported by a cast of excellent players and the scenic effects and photography are splendid."

Africa Is Setting of Film

When Sessue Hayakawa appeared under the Paramount Banner in "The White Man's Law," by John Browne and Marion Fairfax, on May 6, the release date, it was to be noted that the important action transpires on the African littoral in that little known place called Sierre Leone.

James Young, who directed the picture, staged some effective jungle scenes as well as a thrilling fight in a dugout canoe on the San Gabriel river that ought to make the spectators sit up and take notice if advance reports are to be relied upon.

Hundreds of negroes were used in the jungle scenes, representing ivory hunters.

Scene from the first Louise Glaum-Paralta picture, "An Alien Enemy."

Glaum Company Goes to Del Mar

A company of twenty-five persons, including the star and other members of the cast of "Shackled," Miss Louise Glaum's latest production at the Paralta studios, was taken to the town of Del Mar, near San Diego, to film some scenes on a seaside location.

The scenic combination of high, rugged cliffs with the ocean was found to be ideal and practically the only suitable spot on the California coast line. Also, a hotel which will figure in the scenes came in handy, not only for setting but as the residence of the players and staff.

Wallace Worsley is directing Miss Glaum in this production, in which W. Lawson Butt, the noted English actor, also has an important part.

After finishing the Del Mar scenes, but little more of the picture remains to be taken. The printing, cutting and assembling will be rushed through and the picture will be sent east for an early release.

"Shackled" is Miss Glaum's second production as a Paralta star with her own company, following "An Alien Enemy." The story was written by Lawrence McCloskey and the screen version prepared by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, Paralta staff authors.

Weather Balks Select Players

Alice Brady, Select star, is not running true to form. Neither is the weather at Asheville, North Carolina. Miss Brady and a large number of her company, including Director Alan Croslin and H. E. Herbert, her leading man, are in Asheville to take scenes in the picture to follow her May release, "The Ordeal of Rosetta."

Asheville, reversing the dope on the form sheet, has handed out hailstorms and wintry blasts, sunless days and blankety mists, where all should be roseate and balmy. The result is that no filming has been done since the company reached there and they will have to remain another week before the desired scenes can be filmed.

In the meantime, Miss Brady has received news that the cutting and titling of "The Ordeal of Rosetta" has been finished and that the picture will be released, as originally planned, sometime in May.

Exhibitor Urges More Originality

SAYS PUBLIC IS CLAMORING FOR BETTER PICTURES

By Louis A. De Hoff

Manager New Theatre, Baltimore

THE old adage, "What is one man's meat is another man's poison," applies to pictures as to all else! To select any particular type of photoplay as likely to prove more generally popular than another, therefore, is almost an impossibility. Especially is this the case at the present time when such plays have apparently reached their zenith both in popularity and the perfection of production.

The nerve-tired business or professional man, the ennuied woman of the world, the unsophisticated girl, the college youth, the adventurous school boy, the romantic and the mere seekers after amusement of both sexes now belong equally to the great world class of movie fans! To gratify or fulfill the ideals of so many varying tastes in any one production requires nothing short of a miracle.

Masterpieces Being Turned Out

Yet such miracles are occasionally being performed, though it would seem as if the genius of the super-man in addition to all the resources of nature, science and talent backed by millions in money is required to bring them about.

Of such, speaking from the standpoint of the first-class picture theatre, is the "Romeo and Juliet" of Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Here, in one film superb acting, artistic beauty of environment, stirring adventure, romance and tragedy are portrayed in their highest form and in a manner to interest and enthrall a general audience of the average degree of culture.

In this respect it seems a pity that more of the Shakespearian plays have not been picturized. Take, for instance, "Mid-summer Night's Dream." Nothing could make a more beautiful and interesting film. In it, too, would be found the element of pleasant comedy absent from the majority of classics. Or for greater dramatic effect, both of scenery and movement, "The Tempest" is one of many other selections that might be used to advantage.

Goldwyn Pictures Please

The Goldwyn productions, as a rule, prove excellent drawing cards for the more exacting type of audience. Two of the most popular of these, "Thais" and "The Beloved Traitor," have been released this season. In marked contrast to the elaborate staging and strongly dramatic action of such offerings are the universally popular Mary Pickford plays which charm and hold by the very simplicity of the commingling of pathos and humor which the adorable little star most frequently uses as a background for her genius.

Some time ago MOTOGRAPHY wrote to representative exhibitors for their opinions on the type of photoplay in greatest demand by their patrons. The last opinion was received, it was thought, five or six weeks ago, but here comes one from a Baltimore manager that closes the series with a wonderful punch. It is a scholarly article, beautiful in language, forceful in nature and interesting. Read it by all means.

But naturally war dramas now hold the foremost place in general interest of every degree, especially when of the stirring nature and presented upon the munificent scale of "Intolerance," "Joan the Woman," "The Black Monk," "Civilization" and "The Cross Bearer."

More than in any other line the modern war drama opens up a wide and distinct new field for the production of picture plays of abounding interest—an interest to which there is no limit. For it is a field that embraces the whole world within its acreage and is overabundantly fertile in original plots pertaining not alone to battle and bloodshed, but also to deeds of the highest heroism, historical importance and romantic signification.

Louis A. DeHoff.

Historical Plays Please

Plays illustrative of our national growth from the individual standpoint are also generally well liked, the preference being for those portraying the virile out-of-doors life and masterful loves and hates of by-gone days, or among still existent primitive conditions. In this category of "best sellers" may be placed the dramatizations of "To Have and to Hold" and the "The Girl of the Golden West" and also Hart's most picturesquely thrilling play, "Cameo Kirby," which unfortunately has never been shown in Baltimore.

To sum up the whole situation, the plays the more desirable element of photo-theatre frequenters now demand must be equal to the supreme test. This is the day of big things and our amusements to offset the strain of existing conditions must be upon a corresponding scale of bigness.

Higher yTpe Picture Desired

The weak sentimentalities, the trivial episodes of society, the over-worked sex problem and the brutalities of the underworld no longer attract even a passing breath of interest as far as the cultured audience is concerned. From such the demand is for the great adventure, the romance that grips the heart strings, the humor that scintilates with sufficient brightness to shine through the grimness of the battle smoke.

In other words, the highly successful photoplay of the present day must be tagged with the bright red badge of courage, adorned with the deep red rose of passion, fragrant with the sweetness and purity of the lilies, rippling with the laughter of the brooks and beautified with all the glories of heaven and earth; not necessarily all combined in one film, but each quality to be given its highest expression whether used as the dominant note or as one of the minor chords in the pictured hymn of present-day life.

Above all it must have that atmosphere of originality which an unreasoning public still demands even though the greatest of philosophers and authors sighed, lo, these thousands of years ago, "There is nothing new under the sun!"

Select Announces Releases for May

"The Lesson," "De Luxe Annie" and "The Ordeal of Rosetta," Featuring Talmadge Sisters and Alice Brady, Comprise List

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces three productions by Select stars to be released during the month of May. These pictures are "The Lesson," with Constance Talmadge, "De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge, and "The Ordeal of Rosetta," with Alice Brady. These three pictures, together with Clara Kimball Young's latest Select, "The Reason Why," which was ready for distribution the last day of April, will furnish the new Select productions for thirty days.

"The Lesson," in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge, is from an original and powerful story by Virginia Terhune Van de Water, with deep-searching analysis of marital woes, and it shows on the screen in dramatic form the reason why many spirited women feel compelled to leave their husbands and carve a career for themselves.

Constance Talmadge as a truly married woman is the novelty which this picture presents—for never before on the screen has Select's vivacious star been seen in a wedding-ring role. In "Scandal," it will be remembered, the heroine pretends to be married but actually is single.

"The Lesson" presents Constance Talmadge with scenes of greater dramatic tenseness than those she has had in any release since "Scandal," which was her first Select picture. These scenes are interspersed among many incidents of a laugh-provoking nature, so that the film is another of those laughter-plus-drama photoplays for which the star has become noted.

Charles Giblyn directed "The Lesson" and did perhaps his best work in it. Miss Talmadge is supported by a cast of favorites, including Tom Moore, Walter Hiers, Herbert Heyes and Dorothy Green. "The Lesson" is the sixth of Constance Talmadge's Select Star Series and follows immediately after her whimsical comedy, "Up the Road with Sallie."

Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie" reaches the picture fans of the country during the same theatrical season that the celebrated stage play of the same name is being shown on tour in theatres of the prominent cities. Therefore, Miss Talmadge and Joseph M. Schenck, her manager, have provided a distinct treat for picture audiences and it may be imagined that this treat has been provided at unusual cost.

In the cast which supports Miss Talmadge are Eugene O'Brien, who is again seen as the star's leading man; Frank Mills, who, playing the role of the husband of an afflicted wife, has many tender scenes with the star; Edward Davis in the role of a detective and Edna Hunter as a villager.

Paul West prepared the scenario from Edward Clark's play, which in turn was based on a story by Scammon Lockwood which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Roland West directed.

"De Luxe Annie" is of that clever type of drama which, taking the audience partly into its confidence at the start, later thrills it with a dramatic surprise as the story takes an unusual and unlooked for turn. Far from being a crook play of the ordinary type, the drama nevertheless is concerned with the adventures of a "confidence man" and his clever and beautiful companion, whose refinements earn her the title of "De Luxe Annie." In reality this woman is not what she seems to be and a breathless suspense is built up as little by little the spectator begins to realize the truth concerning her.

There are many scenes of unusual dramatic tenseness. One of these is a visualization of a thrilling escape over the ice, which, in the stage drama, the audience is asked to imagine from a word description. Miss Talmadge and her company made a special trip to Saranac Lake while the ice still held in order to set these scenes.

In "The Ordeal of Rosetta" Alice Brady provides an unusually clever photodrama in which the star is seen in dual characterizations. Miss Brady plays the roles of sisters, also the dream counterpart of one and the avenging spirit of the other, so that in this picture the Select star may be said to play four parts.

"The Ordeal of Rosetta" is an original story from the pen of Edmund Goulding. It relates the fortunes of a girl of gentle breeding who, born in Italy, is brought to New York by her father after an earthquake has destroyed her Sicilian home and presumably killed her sister. As Rosetta, Miss Brady is seen first as a stout hearted stenographer determinedly fighting to support herself and her invalid father. Being employed in an agency where the manuscripts of dramatic works are prepared, she becomes acquainted with a prominent writer, a romance resulting.

Clever work on the part of Emile Chautard, who directed, coupled with some exquisite bits of photography by Jacques Bizuel, shows Miss Brady in some of the comeliest pictures she has ever presented on the screen. There are a number of unusually clever double and triple exposures, but these technical refinements are only incidental to a story, the suspense of which holds one's interest from first to last throughout five reels. "The Ordeal of Rosetta" will follow Miss Brady's current release, "At the Mercy of Men."

Denies Norma Talmadge Will Quit Select

Schenck Says Rumor That Star's Pictures Will Be Distributed by First National Is Without Foundation

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, who presents Norma Talmadge in all of her screen productions, has issued the following statement:

"I wish to deny emphatically rumors which have been spread to the effect that Norma Talmadge's pictures are to be released by the First National Exhibitors' Association.

"It is absolutely untrue that Miss Talmadge's pictures are to be released by this association or by any distributing organization other than the Select Pictures Corporation, who are, have been, and will be sole distributors of Norma Talmadge's picture productions.

"Some of the rumors to which I refer have crept into print and publications of this nature are not only embarrassing to the distributors of Select Pictures, but are also calculated to mislead exhibitors whose booking arrangements may be affected by the false information thus disseminated.

"The most cordial relationship exists between the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, which produces pictures in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and the Select Pictures Corporation, which markets these productions. Also, a cordial friendship is entertained for the Select officials by both Miss Talmadge and myself.

"Therefore, in the interest of truth and in justice to both parties concerned, I wish both the motion picture industry and Miss Talmadge's numberless friends among the picture fans to know that Norma Talmadge's pictures will be issued by Select and only by that company.

"(Signed) JOSEPH M. SCHENCK."

Constance Talmadge Before the Camera Again

With more than a month's holiday behind her—a period spent chiefly in motoring over Southern California's sunlit roads—Constance Talmadge, Select star, is once more facing the camera at Hollywood.

Heavier by a few pounds and with an added flush of sunburn on her fair complexion, "Connie," as the younger Talmadge star is known to her friends, has returned to her favorite occupation of breaking records for speed and efficiency.

Despite the halt in her work which her vacation entailed, Miss Talmadge is still well ahead of her schedule. Two productions have been finished entire following "Up the Road With Sallie," her picture now before the public. One of them is "The Lesson," which has just been announced for release during May. The order has not yet been titled.

For the new production which Miss Talmadge is making, Harrison Ford has been engaged as leading man and Walter Edwards as director.

Booking Plan Formally Launched

Last week saw the incorporation, under the laws of Delaware, of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, with an authorized capital of $100,000, for the furtherance of co-operative booking on a large scale.

The new organization is the outgrowth of the meeting of exhibitors and producers, called at the Hotel Astor, New York, the fore part of last month, by Frank Rembusch of Indianapolis.

Exhibitors' booking associations now operating in different states and groups of states, it is understood, are to form the nucleus of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. They will maintain their complete independence, financially and otherwise, the primary object of the national organization being that of a clearing house to facilitate the acquirement of pictures.

The members of the permanent committee appointed to develop a practical working plan for nationalized co-operative booking, consisting of Sydney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League; Byron Park, Salt Lake City; Joseph Hopp, president of the Illinois Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Louis Frank, treasurer of the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association; Frank Rembusch, secretary and treasurer of the American Exhibitors' Association; King Pery of Detroit, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association of Michigan, and John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan local of the National Exhibitors' League, have held several meetings since the convention.

"Over There" Packs Theatre

A two day showing of "Over There," Select's patriotic photodrama featuring the work of the Red Cross, was recently given at the Strand Theatre in Ithaca, New York, of which William A. Dillon is manager, for the benefit of the Junior Red Cross.

In a letter of appreciation to C. R. Rogers, Buffalo branch manager for Select, Mr. Dillon apprized him of this fact and said:

"The results were excellent. We played to capacity houses both days. The picture is truly wonderful and the trench scenes were the best we have ever shown.

"Give us more of this kind and we can do a lot of business. Kindly accept our thanks for putting us wise to the method for boosting this particular feature."

Many other exhibitors throughout the land are finding it to their great advantage to run "Over There" in conjunction with local Red Cross drives.

Berst Elected Head of United Theatres

Ochs Retains Place on Directorate, Serving Hereafter in the Office of Vice President

J. A. BERST, one of the leading film executives in the country, who until recently headed the Pathe organization, has been elected president of United Picture Theatres of America. Lee A. Ochs retains his place on the directorate, serving hereafter in the office of vice-president. Several important additions to the directoral body will shortly be announced.

Mr. Berst in his letter of acceptance said:

New York, April 27, 1918.
United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.,
1600 Broadway, New York.

Gentlemen:

I accept the presidency of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., because I am thoroughly convinced that the co-operative system proposed by you will remedy existing evils and still do justice as between the producer and the exhibitor.

During a career of more than twenty years in the industry my policy has been: "Fairness to the Exhibitor!" But even with the gratifying support of thousands of exhibitors during my two terms as president of the General Film Company and my vice-presidency and general management of Pathe, the realization has gradually come to me that the competitive method of handling films is unscientific, wasteful and injurious to the interests of all concerned.

Co-operative enterprise must come in motion pictures as in every department of industrial activity—in fact the showing you have already made proves that it has come to stay. With this conviction I have devoted the last two months to the study of all the co-operative plans that have been outlined. The plans of the United Picture Theatres are to my mind the best throughout and present the only perfect system of national co-operation ever offered.

I am deeply sensible of the mark of confidence you have shown me in electing me your president and shall do my utmost to justify the confidence you have reposed in me.

I shall address myself to the fulfilling of the promises of United Picture Theatres to its stockholders. The service idea of all branch offices will be developed to the farthest extent. The exhibitor, I hope, will find a new era of prosperity in this co-operative combination for the common good.

I decided to accept the office only after satisfying myself that the market can well afford sufficient product of high-class quality and through this plan at prices much lower than the exhibitor has heretofore enjoyed.

I have no other affiliations in the film industry, no divided interests that might prevent me from carrying out this program. Let us all get together and bring this about. The growth of United Picture Theatres in exhibitor membership and general confidence has already been astonishing. I herewith extend a cordial invitation to all motion picture theatre managers who have lined up with me in the past to come into the new organization and share its privileges and benefits.

Very truly yours,
J. A. BERST.

The announcement of Mr. Berst's election confirms many recent rumors that he had gone with the new organization. Friends of the former Pathe chief expect big things of United Pictures now.

Daughter of Congressman Wins Fame in Films

With all the witchery of the Sunny South in her eyes and in her smile, beautiful Tallulah Bankhead has made the jump from Jasper, Ala., to Broadway and landed so firmly on her feet that all indications point to a brilliant and rapid climb to a place in the theatrical sun.

Ivan Abramson discovered her in a small part in "The Squab Farm" and so impressed was he with her work that he offered her one of the best roles in "When Man Betrays," the new picture he is making for the Graphic Film Corporation, which she accepted.

While she does not come from a theatrical family, Miss Bankhead's inclination for a public life is an inherited one. Her grandfather, J. K. Bankhead, has been senator for Alabama for the past ten years, and her father, William B. Bankhead, has just been elected to Congress.

"It wasn't an easy matter to convince my family that I should be allowed the right to follow in their footsteps and choose a public career for myself," said Miss Bankhead. "Dad has seen me in several amateur theatrical performances and while he was kind enough to admit that acting was my forte, he couldn't get away from an old Southern prejudice that a girl should be kept at home and looked after and cared for like a hot-house flower.

"I've spent a large part of the sixteen years of my life importuning him to let me have my way and strong emotional scenes were an almost daily occurrence until I obtained his consent."

Marie Pagano in World Picture

Marie Pagano, known because of her famous stunts before the camera as being the female rival of Rodman Law, is a member of the cast of "The Judge," a World Picture featuring June Elvidge and John Bowers.

Miss Pagano was selected because the role requires the actress to do some remarkable athletic feats, besides creating a characterization of unusual difficulty.

Miss Pagano first attained prominence when she doubled for Alice Brady in several pictures, their identity of figure and face permitting this substitution. Long practice has given Miss Pagano unusual confidence and in consequence it is of little difference if her part requires her to climb a house front or make a fifty-foot dive.

Berst Names Some of Advisory Board

Alfred S. Black, L. W. Brophy, Herman J. Brown, Harry M. Crandall and David Cohen Among Number

BY degrees the advisory board of United Picture Theatres of America is being assembled, President J. A. Berst having just issued an announcement containing the names of several prominent exhibitors from all sections of the country who had already been appointed. Among those named are:

Alfred S. Black, president of Maine Theatres, Inc.; L. W. Brophy, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oklahoma; Herman J. Brown, president of the Exhibitors' League of Idaho; David Cohen, an exhibitor of Binghamton, N. Y.; Harry M. Crandall, proprietor of eleven theatres in Washington, D. C.; William Epstein, owner of the Royal in San Antonio, the Prince in Houston and the Strand in Laredo, Tex.; Thomas Furniss, member of the national executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the owner of the Strand and two other houses in Duluth; A. J. Gilligham, a prominent theatrical man of Michigan; Alfred Hamburger of the Twentieth Century, the Ziegfield and the Fine Arts in Chicago; S. S. Harris, owner of the Royal and the Crystal in Little Rock; Gilbert Heyfron, a Montana exhibitor; Ernest H. Horstman, president of the Princess Theatre, Inc., of Boston and national treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; William Isenberg, a Mississippi theatre-owner; George A. Mank, proprietor of nine theatres in Arizona; Charles A. McElravy of the Majestic Amusement Co., Memphis; Hector E. M. Pasmezoglu, owner of the Mozart Theatre, St. Louis, and R. D. Shirley of the Muse Theatre, Omaha.

The calibre of the men selected for this board gives indication of the healthy way in which exhibitors all over the country are responding to the idea on which United Theatres was founded.

No announcement has as yet been made of the numerical strength of those who have lined up behind the board in carrying out the programme outlined for the corporation, but it is authoritatively stated that progress far ahead of schedule and beyond all expectations has been made.

Vice-President Lee A. Ochs is preparing to embark on another trans-continental tour and it is confidently expected that the desired goal will soon be within immediate reach.

Big Settings in "Resurrection"

A play lending itself to exploitation on a grand scale is "Resurrection," the Paramount release of May 6 starring Pauline Frederick in the role of Katusha, the heroine of the Tolstoy story whose tempestuous life has been one of the most widely-read stories in the world of fiction. The combination of author, play and star is a formidable one, which added to the spectacular production should prove effective from a box office standpoint.

Count Leo Tolstoy is admittedly one of the most forceful writers the world has ever seen, his stories throbbing with heart interest. The incidents of pathos and sensationalism crowded into the life of Katusha make this role one of the most exacting and emotional ever interpreted by Miss Frederick. Blanche Walsh created this role on the American speaking stage, in which she added new laurels to her already brilliant career.

Charles E. Whittaker, who adapted "Resurrection" to the screen, has been the scenarioist for numerous screen successes, including several of Miss Frederick's photoplays. His familiarity with Russia was of great assistance in visualizing this play.

Miss Frederick's qualifications to portray the role of Katusha have been amply demonstrated in the past as she has appeared to advantage in many emotional characters, the more recent of which were "Madame Jealousy" and "La Tosca." The popularity of Miss Frederick, in conjunction with the drawing power of the play and the fame of the author should make this one of the most successful pictures the star has appeared in.

As the play in a large measure deals with the nobility of Russia, massive settings were required. One of the largest interiors is the big court room, where the unfortunate victims of autocracy are sentenced to Siberia, and a big ensemble is a seemingly endless line of prisoners on the snow-covered road to the far-off exile. Chief among the supporting cast are Robert Elliott, John Sainpolis and Jere Austin.

Quaint Set for Minter Play

For "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," now being filmed at the American studios in Santa Barbara, with the winsome Mary Miles Minter, a section of a French town has been built that is an exact duplicate of part of the Latin Quarter in Paris.

A walk through its cobbled streets, thronged with a crowd of peasants and artists in picturesque costumes, with the inevitable "tourist" taking in the sights, the quaint old-fashioned, queer little street stores and restaurants on its narrow sidewalks, is so realistic as to make one believe himself to be in another land.

"A Fight for Millions" Taking Shape Fast

Duncan Bids Fair to Outdo Record on "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman"

REPORTS received from the Vitagraph western studio last week by President Albert E. Smith lead him to believe that William Duncan, star and director of "A Fight for Millions," the next Vitagraph serial, will establish a new record for rapid production. Although Duncan only started working about eight weeks ago, he is already turning out the ninth episode of this fifteen-chapter play, which was written by Mr. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Duncan seems to be one of those rare individuals who can work fast without sacrificing any of the detail or artistic value necessary to a perfect production, as was shown in the splendid photography and lightings in "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," "Dead Shot Baker," and "The Tenderfoot."

All of those productions, exhibitors testify, were notable for their swiftness of action and tensity of climax, and it may be that Duncan's very speed in production is responsible for the fast tempo of his pictures.

From Mr. Smith's office some illuminating statistics on Duncan's methods were obtained, the figures showing a remarkable record of accomplishment for the Vitagraph strong man.

"The Fighting Trail," which established a new standard in serials, was finished in twenty-five weeks, despite the fact that production was held up for some time during the rainy season. It was released in 32 reels, although considerable extra footage was filmed.

"Vengeance—and the Woman," its successor, was made in thirty reels and was produced in twenty-seven weeks.

In between the two serials, during a period of forty days, Duncan produced "Dead Shot Baker," and "The Tenderfoot," each of which was released in five reels.

Thus, in a period of sixty-seven weeks, Duncan produced eighty-eight reels of pictures, an accomplishment which probably is a record for the industry, especially when it is considered that Duncan fills the dual role of star and director in all of his pictures.

In addition to being "a bear for work," Duncan also is methodical to a degree. Upon being assigned to do a picture, whether it be in five reels or thirty, he lays his work out with the same exactness as an engineer or architect in planning a big enterprise.

He thoroughly digests his story, groups his situations, selects every location he will need, and then sets a schedule for himself and his company. If weather conditions favor him he is able to exceed his schedule. If the weather is unfavorable he works under forced draught and catches up.

This was instanced during the making of his present serial, "A Fight for Millions." He totaled the number of scenes he would require in the snowfields of Big Bear valley, in the mountains north of San Bernardino, Cal., and found that to take them would require many weeks. He had a special studio built on the location and stayed there until he got everything he wanted.

Having the studio enabled him to make interiors as well as exteriors, and when he returned to Hollywood he had before him only the finishing work on each episode. As most of the action was set outdoors, the major portion of his work was complete and he is now on the way to setting a new mark in the matter of rapid production.

Like "Up the Road with Sallie"

Constance Talmadge has been hailed as irresistibly captivating in "Up the Road With Sallie," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. Without a dissenting voice, both reviewers and exhibitors who have seen this latest production by the Select comedienne have pronounced it "Constance Talmadge's best."

"Up the Road With Sallie" is what is known on the stage as high comedy, and the story is about as ideally suited to set off the many charms of the star as any story could be.

It is an impulsive excursion into romantic adventure which will keep spectators chuckling all the while. A young girl, with five thousand dollars just inherited starts out to find for her aunt a "pink geranium," the symbol of romance, which the aunt, old in years but young at heart, has somehow missed in her life. A double-barrelled love story is the result.

Constance Talmadge is supported by Kate Toncray and Norman Kerry. The picture was directed by William Desmond Taylor. It follows "The Shuttle" and is the fifth of Constance Talmadge's Select Star Series.

Directors Buy Many Bonds

Photoplay directors, it is estimated, subscribed fully $500,000 to the Third Liberty Loan. At a meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association in New York last week it was found that the thirty odd directors present had subscribed for $161,150. James Kirkwood, George Archambauld, John A. Robertson, George H. Seitz and Oscar Lund were received into membership at this meeting.

New Edith Ellis Stage Play for Screen

Vitagraph to Present "My Man" as "The Triumph of the Weak," with Alice Joyce in Leading Role

ANOTHER stage play by Edith Ellis, author of "Mary Jane's Pa," will be presented on the screen by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, with Alice Joyce as the star and a cast of unusual excellence supporting her.

The play, presented in New York several years ago as "My Man," comes to the screen under the title of "The Triumph of the Weak" and is scheduled for release May 13. It was produced under the direction of Tom Terriss and among those who appear with Miss Joyce are Walter McGrail, Adele De Garde and Bernard Seigel, who appeared with her in "Within the Law"; Eulalie Jensen and Templar Saxe, who played important roles in "Mary Jane's Pa," when it was produced by Vitagraph.

In some respects the play recalls "Within the Law." The action is just as thrilling, but the underlying theme is totally different. Miss Joyce, however, has a role which gives her many opportunities like those she had in "Within the Law," and she is said to have made the most of them. Her role is described as one certain to win the sympathy of the public and one which is filled with pathos.

The story opens with the trial of Edith Miller (Miss Joyce), a young widow unable to support herself and baby in a large city, who in desperation had stolen a ring from a jeweler to raise money to buy milk for her child. She is convicted and sent to prison for five years, while her infant is sent to a foundlings' home.

Three years of torture follow and Edith is paroled, when "Diamond Mable" (Miss Jensen), another offender against society, threatens to expose a doctor whose brutality had sent Edith to the prison hospital. Freed, she begins a long search for her child. She finds and steals it and in another city is given employment by Jim Roberts (Walter McGrail), superintendent in a department store, who loves her.

Then the shadows of her past arise. Mabel, also freed, demands that she join in crime with her and a pal, Mickey Bill, under threat of exposing her past to Jim. The latter calls at the moment, pleads his love and is accepted. Months of happiness pass when Jordan (Templar Saxe), a friend of Jim, visits them. He is a detective and recognizes Edith as a former thief. Further to involve her, Mabel, hiding from the police, forces Edith to give her refuge in her home, where she steals money from Jim.

Jordan tells Jim he is harboring a thief and he tells Edith that Mabel must leave, but Edith, still fearing Mable, confesses to the theft of the money and Mabel is allowed to stay. The two men then plan to trap Mabel by placing $500 in a desk.

Mabel tries to steal this and there is a terrific fight between the women. The men return to find Edith alone in the room, the desk broken open. Again they leave to watch her, and Edith, helpless under Mabel's threat to expose her, promises to get the money for her.

As Edith takes the money from the desk, lights are flashed on and she stands before the two men as the thief. The distracted girl now tells her husband of her first theft to save her baby and of her present attempt to keep her past from him. Jim's heart softens, but Jordan is there to take her back to prison.

There is a fierce battle between the men which ends when Edith pleads to be taken back to serve out her term, if only Jim will care for the baby and take her back when her time is up. He promises and she leaves with Jordan.

At the expiration of her term she returns to her husband and baby triumphant over the weakness which had prompted her to steal, because she had shown the courage to expiate her crime even at the cost of her temporary happiness.

Fight to See "Woman in the Web"

Vitagraph appears to have put over another record-breaking serial feature in "The Woman in the Web," the fourth episode of which starts in hundreds of theatres this week.

A statement from the home office of the Vitagraph distributing organization shows that Walter W. Irwin, general manager, has received scores of letters and telegrams from exhibitors in many sections of the country praising the serial and its stars, Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, in extravagant terms.

The story, which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is lauded as one of the finest serial dramas ever produced and the exhibitors are unanimous in the forecast that it will take rank with Vitagraph's other recent successes in this field, "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman."

One exhibitor in New York said a riot was caused in front of his theatre on the night he showed the first episode.

"The Dagger Woman" Heads Pathe Program

Bill Also Includes First of a Descriptive War Series, Episode of Serial and Harold Lloyd Comedy

"THE DAGGER WOMAN" an intensely dramatic Russian Art film, the tenth episode of "The House of Hate," Part One of the gripping "Britain's Bulwarks" series of war pictures, another Harold Lloyd comedy and an animal educational feature lead Pathe's program for the week of May 12.

"The Dagger Woman" is an exciting drama in which Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska of the famous Moscow theatre are screened in the principal roles.

"Double-Crossed" is the title of the tenth "House of Hate" episode, featuring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno. The cast in this episode includes Helene Chadwick, the most photographed young woman in America, who has appeared in several successful Pathe features.

Miss Chadwick plays the part of "Queenie Kate," a new and interesting character, who aids the Hooded Terror in his efforts to kill Pearl Waldon (played by Pearl White), and her protector Harvey Gresham (played by Antonio Moreno).

The episode opens with a thrilling acrobatic feat by Miss White on a swinging cable. It includes a dangerous leap from the top of a high building by the Hooded Terror, a leap upon and off a moving freight train, together with several other melodramatic incidents.

The excellent workmanship of the women munitioners of England, and British cavalry at the front are shown in Part One of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series. All of the scenes were made by official photographers of the British government, who were accorded privileges for obtaining subjects which are forbidden to everyone else.

"The Non-Stop Kid" is the title of Harold Lloyd's comedy in which a score of convulsing laughs are woven about the comedian, Bebe Daniels, his leading lady, and the supporting funmakers.

The educational offering is "Strange Animals from Many Climes." Strange birds, rare animals and prize ponies are among the specimens shown.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 40 and 41 also are released on this program.

You Bet, Uncle Sam's on the Job

Martin Justice, directing Gladys Leslie in "The Soap Girl," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature written by Lewis Allen Browne, is here to tell you that anybody who thinks Uncle Sam is not handling himself all right has another guess coming.

Mr. Justice had to get a scene showing the departure of an ocean liner, otherwise "The Soap Girl" would have been lacking. But when he started out to get it he found himself blocked by the combined land and sea forces of the United States, plus Congress and a bunch of determined pier guards.

It looked as if he stood about as much chance of getting his scene as the Kaiser has of getting past St. Peter. So he ran the gamut of officialdom, satisfied everybody that he was only an innocent director engaged on a peaceful mission and was given a pass to photograph a liner as it departed for South America.

For his protection and the protection of Uncle Sam, two inspectors were detailed with him, one of them being a promising young film actor who left the screen to do his bit—Jack Pickford. The director, with about fifty extras, his star and the two inspectors, went to a pier and started blithely down to the water's edge to get the "shot." But they reckoned without the pier guards, who knew nothing about happy and gay picture makers and their ways. Mr. Guard said they couldn't take any pictures on that pier and as things turned out they couldn't because the guard wouldn't let them—pass or no pass.

However, Mr. Guard did relent to the extent of letting the party go down to the water's edge and charter a tug. Justice didn't need the extras he had with him and wanted to leave them on shore. But the guard made him take them all aboard his tug. They were there on Justice's pass and Justice must keep them with him because the guard was authorized to shoot loiterers appearing on the pier without passes. So Justice piled the crowd on the tug so that the cameraman had to mount his machine on a sternshoot or something.

While these negotiations had been in progress the liner had pulled out and when Justice got on board the tug the big ship was far down the river. Then Justice had to race after it. He got the "shot" all right and returned to the pier, thankful for the end of an imperfect day.

Farnum Again at Work

William Farnum has begun work on "Riders of the Purple Sage," the first of the two Zane Grey stories he is to do, according to an announcement from the Fox offices.

Frank Lloyd, who is directing the photoplay, has assembled most of the principals. Katherine Adams, Mr. Farnum's opposite in "True Blue," his most recent production, will again appear in a similar capacity. Other important members of the company are Marc Robbins, William Burress, Murdock McQuarrie, William Scott, J. Holmes and Nancy Caswell.

The entire company will leave the Hollywood plant in the near future for extended "location" work in Arizona, as the major part of the action is laid in the out-of-doors. Zane Grey will accompany the party.

Two striking scenes from Petrova Picture No. 4, "Tempered Steel."

Petrova to Tour U. S. in War Stamp Drive

Will Appear at Theatres Controlled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Connection with Her Own Pictures

MADAME OLGA PETROVA, who ever since the formation of the Petrova Picture Company eight months ago has only once taken a vacation, and that merely a ten days' rest in Florida, upon the completion of "Patience Sparhawk," the fifth Petrova picture, temporarily will cease her producing activities because of considerable trouble with her eyes.

Madame Petrova's physician has advised an absolute rest, but the indefatigable Petrova doesn't see things that way and will start out some time in May on an extensive tour of all the principal cities of the United States in the interest of the war savings stamps.

Negotiations are now under way whereby the star will make a personal appearance at all of the important theatres controlled by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which organization distributes the Petrova Pictures, and in addition to delivering a little war talk will give a brief program of her own original songs, poems, monologues and stories. Simultaneously with these personal appearances Petrova Pictures will be the offerings. The tour will be handled in exactly the same way as any large theatrical enterprise, with an exhaustive advertising campaign.

A novel suggestion made by Madame Petrova, which has met with the approval of all the First National men and theatre managers thus far approached, is that instead of raising the prices of these houses where she appears, each purchaser of an orchestra seat be required to buy one twenty-five cent war stamp and the same rule will apply to every pair of balcony seats. In this way many books will be started by those who had not hitherto been interested.

It is expected that the Gertrude Atherton story, "Patience Sparhawk," will be finished by Friday of this week, after which time Madame will make her arrangements with Washington for the tour. Her services will be entirely voluntary and without remuneration.

Petrova to Appear on Stage Again

Madame Olga Petrova, who is now at work on "Patience Sparhawk," a photodramatization of Gertrude Atherton's well known novel and the fifth of the eight pictures which the star has contracted to make this season, is desirous of returning to the speaking stage next winter and appearing simultaneously with the release of the latter Petrova screen productions.

In between reading scenarios the former Shubert star has been looking over several manuscripts. Not having found anything which exactly meets her requirements, Madame Petrova has decided to offer $500 for the first acceptable play submitted by an American playwright before October 1. The contest opens May 15 and both amateur and professional writers are eligible. The $500 is apart from any arrangement to be entered into by her management and from the usual royalty basis.

All manuscripts should be sent in care of Beulah Livingstone, personal representative for Madame Petrova, Petrova Picture Company, Studios, 230 West Thirty-eighth street, New York City.

Madame Petrova prefers a modern society drama with clever dialogue and opportunities for strong emotional acting and consistent character building or a satirical comedy.

Big V Players Get Entire Studio

Satisfied usually with a studio or a specially built building or street in which to tear things up, Vitagraph's two Big V comedy companies are having the times of their lives just now, for they have the entire Hollywood plant all to themselves.

Night has been turned into day, runways and breakaway buildings have sprung up, mountain lakes appeared as if by magic and a general commotion stirred up that bespeaks a new and even higher standard for at least two Big V's.

The Earle Williams Company is housed in one of Los Angeles most elaborate residences filming interiors for "The Girl in His House," William Duncan and his players are in Burbank making scenes for the new serial, "A Fight for Millions," Paul Hurst with Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon and others in the cast of "The Woman in the Web" are at San Fernando, and not far distant, but in the seclusion of their own western street, the Wolfville Series company is busy filming scenes for the fifth picture.

Morey Works on "Tangled Lives"

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, started work last Monday in "Tangled Lives," a story by James Oliver Curwood to be made into a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature under direction of Paul Scardon.

This is said to be one of Mr. Curwood's strongest stories and gives the author the distinction of having two of his stories under production by Vitagraph practically at the same time.

Petrova Opens Post Graduate School

Players Attend Every Afternoon, See Work on Screen, Then Hear It Criticized by Star

MADAME PETROVA, who is now established in her own studio, having recently rented the Bacon and Backer Building on West Thirty-eighth street, New York, has had one of the office rooms enlarged and turned into a projection room for the purpose of inaugurating a daily school of screen acting for the members of the Petrova Company.

One of the new DeVry portable commercial projection machines has been installed and each day when the afternoon's work is over Madame assembles the players and has the scenes taken the previous day run off. Each individual's acting is then frankly discussed and criticized, but always with a view of constructive rather than destructive criticism.

As an actor's gestures or expressions are being singled out to illustrate some particular point, the machine is immediately stopped—the advantage of installing this small hand machine being that a picture can be stopped at any minute—and turned back until the desired flash is repeated as often as necessary.

In this way the players analyze their own work and consult with Madame Petrova, taking a genuine interest in their daily progress and improvement. If the star feels that the scene does not measure up to the high standard set by Petrova Pictures she does not simply announce that such and such a scene will be taken over tomorrow, as is usually the case. She convinces each member of the cast by actually showing them with the screen.

"If two or three out of ten or twelve players get a deeper understanding or are spurred on to more ambitious endeavor through this little school of expression," says Madame Petrova, "then I will feel amply repaid for any extra time I may have devoted to my already long day's work."

Madame is quite as severe a taskmaster where her own work is concerned. She has installed a machine identical to the one at the studio in her home, with a view to the further study of herself and her stories. She has done this in order to give the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which distributes the Petrova pictures, and the ever increasing motion-picture public, not only what they want but even a little more than they demand—in other words, the very best that is in her to give.

Goldwyn Writer Succeeds

The rapid rise of picture stars from obscurity to fame is sometimes paralelled in the careers of the people who write plays for them. Florence C. Bolles, author of Madge Kennedy's latest story, "The Fair Pretender," illustrates this.

Only a few years ago she was among the unknowns, but today she is on her way to the top of the ladder up which many photoplay writers are climbing. By reason of her persistence and the presence of genuine ability to write stories for the screen, Miss Bolles proves again that determination must always bring a definite reward.

When she began to create vehicles for stars she met with many setbacks. Rejections came thick and fast and finally, as if it were a smile of encouragement from the lips of Dame Fortune, Miss Bolles sold a story to the late Arthur Johnson. More attempts followed and within a short time her name appeared on the films of several of the leading companies.

Then followed a series of unaccountable rejections—or so they seemed to the young author—before she "landed" a scenario for Ethel Clayton. Meanwhile editors had come to know her work, and when H. R. Durant, of Goldwyn, suggested that she write a story with Madge Kennedy in mind, it did not surprise him at all when Miss Bolles submitted so excellent a play as "The Fair Pretender."

Actor to Paint Petrova

Shortly after the engagement of Frederick Truesdale for a prominent part in Madame Olga Petrova's fifth production, "Patience Sparhawk," it was learned that the actor is a portrait painter of considerable ability, though he has obscured his talent by avoiding publicity.

Discovered, Mr. Truesdale discussed his art with the star, who is deeply interested in paintings, and finally, aroused by her interest, invited her to sit for a full length pastel drawing.

Madame Petrova consented and has requested that the painting be made the basis for a new lobby display sheet which will be furnished to exhibitors commencing with "Patience Sparhawk."

Truesdale, who comes from Michigan, has for many years been a successful actor on the legitimate stage both in America and England. He holds the record of having appeared 1,734 times in the leading role of the famous old stage production, "Suwanee River." He has also been on Broadway in Hoyt's "Black Sheep," "Police Patrol" and other comedy dramas.

Thousands of picture fans will remember him by reason of his numerous appearances in Eclair film productions and his work as a leading man in World features.

New Normand Picture Goes Down Deep

"Joan of Plattsburg" Teaches Big Lesson in War Service as Well as Affording Much Entertainment

GOLDWYN'S "Joan of Plattsburg," starring Mabel Normand, although neither a war nor a battle picture, will put the brakes on insidious German propaganda.

It is a faith and courage builder, an answer to those sly and secret tongues that are striking at the morale of the American people. For four years poisonous agents have been trying to tear down and undermine the faith of the American people and now in "Joan of Plattsburg," through the medium of a popular star, a motion picture producing organization has found the way to reach directly into the hearts of the public and offset the blows being struck at the national courage.

"Joan of Plattsburg," with a general appeal to both sexes, is directed nevertheless to the women. Men may react to false rumors, have their efficiency reduced through propaganda, but the faith of women is endurable and constitutes an impregnable fortress in times of national trial.

Knowing this, Goldwyn, when it accepted "Joan of Plattsburg" in its story form, asked Porter Emerson Browne, the author, to intensify the woman's appeal in his scenario. And Mr. Browne has succeeded wonderfully.

He has taken a little charter orphan (Joan) living near the great Plattsburg encampment where Uncle Sam began training officers. He has had this little Joan learn for the first time of the historic and inspiring Joan who led France into battle and conquered the enemy. He has made his little orphan character respond to the magic of the Joan of history, to create within herself the desire to parallel the career of France's heroine.

He has shown this little Joan revealing her disappointment when told that no one again could duplicate the career of Joan of Arc. And then comes that tense moment when the little heroine cries out:

"What CAN I do to help my country?"

The answer, weaving its way through the plot of the story, is that the girls and women of America can uphold the faith and courage of their men, that their country love and belief in the invincibility of the nation will foil all the enemies from within who are striking at the nation's heart.

Briefly told, the plot involves the machinations of a band of spies who operate an orphan asylum close to the Plattsburg training camp to hide their nefarious work.

In this asylum the charter orphan is Joan. She hears the spies decoding wireless messages in the room above her as they plan the theft of a secret wireless invention of a man who is stopping at the camp under protection of Captain Lane, whom Joan worships.

She warns Lane of the danger and his investigation results in the discovery of the culprits. Events lead to a series of thrilling scenes involving Joan, the captain and government officials.

Madge Kennedy Denies Rumor

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn star, is the victim of a rumor which she brands as baseless—that she will quit the screen next fall to become once more a dramatic stage star, probably under the management of David Belasco. Denial of the rumor comes from both Miss Kennedy and Goldwyn.

In less than six months Madge Kennedy has become a highly popular screen favorite, not only in all parts of North America, but throughout the world, and has achieved the remarkable success with only four pictures.

"Baby Mine," "Nearly Married," "Our Little Wife," three remarkably successful plays by Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn and Avery Hopwood, provided Miss Kennedy with assured material. These were followed by "The Danger Game," an unusual and new type of screen story by Roy Somerville, introducing Miss Kennedy for the first time to melodramatic comedy.

She is now at the point where every new production further accentuates her popularity and discerning exhibitors in all parts of the country are counting her as being one of the first six stars of the screen in box-office drawing power.

Petrova Back From Location

Accompanied by Ralph Ince, her director, and a staff of studio employes, Madame Olga Petrova returned to New York last week from Asheville, North Carolina. The distinguished screen player had been busy in the South for several days making scenes for the fifth special Petrova production, "Patience Sparhawk."

This story, adapted from the novel by the famous author, Gertrude Atherton, was especially chosen because of the opportunities offered for beautiful exteriors and out of the ordinary photographic effects.

To be assured of the best possible results, Madame Petrova and Mr. Ince decided to shoot many of the scenes in and around Asheville, a section of the South rich in natural beauty and excellent locations. The scenes obtained have fully justified their expectations.

"Patience Sparhawk" follows "Tempered Steel" on the star's release calendar and will be issued through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit some time during the coming month.

Frame New Interest-on-Deposit Checks

Exhibitors So Surprised by Goldwyn Innovation, Company Reports, That They Hang Them on Their Walls

SURPRISED at the receipt of monthly checks as interest on their deposits, many new Goldwyn contract customers have failed to cash some of them and instead are using them as framed mementoes on the walls of their offices.

Goldwyn pictures and service have on hundreds of occasions prompted praise from exhibitors and now it is Goldwyn's policy of paying interest on exhibitor deposits that is making every Goldwyn exhibitor a Goldwyn friend.

The fact that hundreds of Goldwyn exhibitors were using interest checks for office decoration was brought to light when the home office comptroller discovered that scores had not passed through the bank. He notified the managers of the various Goldwyn branches and upon investigation they found that many exhibitors preferred to frame the checks as curios and as a fitting mark of respect to one of the few large distributing companies that pays interest on deposits.

J. S. Roman of the Rex Theatre, Virginia, Minn., returned the first interest check sent him last month.

"There must be some mistake," he wrote. "I can't understand it. It's the first check of its kind I have ever received and I've been in the motion picture business nine years. If it is really intended for me, return it and I will hang it in my office."

"What's the idea?" the manager of the Crystal Theatre, Daytona, Fla., wrote. "Here I've been doing a clean-up business with your productions and then I get some money from you in the bargain."

The first interest check sent to the Monroe Theatre, Key West, Fla., was another which never went through the bank.

Though these checks represent small amounts, Goldwyn prides itself on the fact that its exhibitor clients are pleased with its productions, its service, and its thoroughly business-like methods.

Theda Bara in Vivid Play

William Fox announces that Theda Bara is making another big picture in California, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The story, which is by the playwright and author, George Scarborough, is a dramatic account of an episode in the Philippines after the American occupation.

Filming of the "script," written by Adrian Johnson, was begun after Miss Bara had had a brief rest from the camera, following her long and tireless weeks in the recently completed "Salome."

Maria Valverde, the heroine, is the daughter of an American civil engineer stationed at La Trinidad on the island of Luzon. The young woman is wilful, romantic and capricious. She has become saturated with the exotic views of life of the children of the Pacific and she creates a romance for herself that has some extremely dramatic complications, in which the American forces are gravely concerned.

Miss Bara's newest film is her fifth at the Fox west coast studios. Last year, she made her first trip to the California plant to produce "Cleopatra." After this photo-spectacle was finished, she starred in "Du Barry" and "The Rose of Blood" and then returned to the east. Miss Bara left again for the Pacific in the middle of the winter to do "Salome."

An interesting scene from "The Cabaret," a World picture showing four stars, John Bowers, George McQuarry, June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell.

Report "Cleopatra" Success

According to figures now at hand in the William Fox offices, what is said to be the largest number of exhibitors that have ever played any production on a percentage system have shown the Theda Bara super-production, "Cleopatra," on that basis. Twenty companies are still touring the United States and Canada with prints of the big photo-spectacle.

Although a score or more of these companies have been out on the road continuously since October, 1917, when the picture was first presented, there still remain many large cities throughout the country that have not seen the film. Mr. Fox explains this on the ground that it has not been found possible to accommodate them at an earlier date, on account of the press of bookings, and the length of time for which they have been made.

The big cities that are just seeing "Cleopatra" include New Orleans, Des Moines, Youngstown, Akron, Canton, South Bend, Evansville, Fargo, Joplin, Galveston and Waco. Hamilton, Canada, is also on this list.

Farnum Picture Timely

Especially timely and calculated to give fresh impetus to patriotism is William Farnum's latest Fox Standard release, entitled "True Blue." While quite modern in period and free from any war coloring, nevertheless William Farnum pictures the typical "true blue" American under circumstances which apply the acid test to one of the weak spots in our armor—the adulation of titles and inherited estates.

There is a sinister suspicion that some snobbish Americans have been using the present entente cordiale with the allies to advance fanciful claims to European nobility. To such persons "True Blue" will serve as a lesson and an example, while their neighbors will certainly enjoy the subtle satire in the picture as produced by Frank Lloyd.

First Apfel World Picture a Sensation

"The Interloper," Starring Kitty Gordon, Declared to Be One of the Best Producers Ever Turned Out

OSCAR C. APFEL, one of the best-known men in pictures, for two years Fox director and maker of William Farnum's finest features, who recently came east, signed with World and began work directing Kitty Gordon, has just completed his first World picture. It is said to be one of the finest pictures ever put out by the World organization. It is called "The Interloper."

Oscar Apfel.

Mr. Apfel is known as a man's director because of his long association with William and Dustin Farnum and because of his excellent work with Paralta and Mr. Kerrigan. "A Man's Man" and "The Turn of a Card," Kerrigan pictures that he directed, are listed among the top-notchers of the last year.

He directed Myrtle Stedman very successfully and put Lenore Ulric on the map as a picture performer. However, it is with the work of important men's stars that Mr. Apfel has been connected largely in the public mind. Therefore, it was with some surprise that the trade heard of his connection with Kitty Gordon as her director in a series of emotional dramas.

"The Interloper," run off in World's projection rooms at New York last Friday, created a sensation. World officials declare they see Miss Gordon in an entirely new light under the skillful handling of Mr. Apfel.

The story, to which he has brought original ideas of lighting and of effects, for which he has become famous, is that of a second wife who longs for the love of her husband and who is goaded to madness by his supposed infatuation for his dead wife, to whom he attributes every virtue.

A man who could wreck the home of the woman oddly puts her in possession of facts that would shatter the ideal of her predecessor held by her husband. How she keeps his love and still her self-respect by withholding her knowledge, after she placed herself in a tight position, forms a story of intense appeal.

Mr. Apfel's cast consists of Miss Gordon, Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, Bradley Barker, Ralph Graves, George De Carlton, Tony Merlo and Marie Nau. He has already begun work on his second Gordon feature—"Tinsel"—for which he constructed, it is said, some of the most effective floral decorations ever filmed.

Peace Looms in Labor War

The question of dissolving the injunction against the Chicago operators' union will be taken up at a special meeting of the Allied Amusement Company, to be held Friday, May 10. Dissolution of the injunction, it is said, probably will depend largely on the attitude taken by the operators in the meanwhile. It is hoped that a friendly agreement can be reached and the matter settled in a way pleasing to both sides.

Webb with Vitagraph

Kenneth Webb, until last week assistant to Tom Terriss, director of Alice Joyce, has been promoted to the ranks of Vitagraph directors. Mr. Webb formerly was on the legitimate stage and recently was offered an opportunity to return in an important part in a Broadway production, but turned it down. He's glad he did so now.

World Opens New Philadelphia Building

High Officials, Carlyle Blackwell, Exhibitors and Fans Attend Celebration of Event

WORLD PICTURES has opened another of its branch office buildings. Following the opening several weeks ago of its own building in Boston, World opened to exhibitors and the public its new two-story building in Philadelphia on May 2. This structure was especially designed and erected to house the Philadelphia branch and it is one of the most up-to-date and completely furnished exchanges in the country.

The opening was a notable event for the film industry of Philadelphia and the surrounding territory. Attending were high officials of World, Carlyle Blackwell, the star, leading exhibitors of Philadelphia and neighboring cities and thousands of fans.

The opening was a veritable ovation for Blackwell and the World officials. The Philadelphia manager, William R. Priest, was nearly snowed under by the generous donations of flowers from exhibitors and friends and he was the recipient of hundreds of congratulations upon having such a commodious, comfortable and completely equipped office.

Each of the two floors is thirty-two by eighty-one feet. On the first floor are the offices, the projection room where trade showings will be given and in the rear the shipping department. On the second floor are vaults, the inspection department and the supplies of paper and advertising material.

The building is located at 1315 Vine street, a particularly good location for the handling of the big film business which the Philadelphia branch does.

The erection of two branch office buildings by World Pictures marks one of the most comprehensive and permanent forward steps ever taken by a film concern.

It emphasizes the fact that World Pictures considers the film industry as built upon a firm rock of permanency and that it realizes that the business is one of mutual confidence—that as the World exhibitors prosper so will World Pictures prosper and that for this reason anything like the construction of a new branch office building which will enable World Pictures to give even better service than before is a benefit to the entire industry.

Mayo Signs New Contract

Frank Mayo, who has appeared in many World-Pictures as leading man for Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon and other World stars, has just signed a long-time contract with the World Film Corporation. He will be featured in several important forthcoming productions.

Mr. Mayo is now working in a new World picture bearing the title of "Tinsel," in which Kitty Gordon is starred.

Marie Dressler at Work

Marie Dressler, the comedian, is back in New York following her Liberty Loan drive, and after a short vacation will begin the making of comedies for World.

Three Star Features on Mutual's May Bill

"The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," "A Square Deal" and "Up Romance Road" Are the Titles

FEATURE productions now in course of preparation at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., will supply pictures starring Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell for Mutual's May schedule.

Miss Minter's next picture is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," the picturization of a brilliant little story by Josephine Dodge Bacon which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It chronicles the amusing and interesting adventures of an American girl, who, returning after living abroad, cannot find her wealthy relatives and to be self-supporting takes charge of the residence of a fashionable American woman who is never at home in the daytime and who never sees her thoroughly competent charwoman.

But the rich woman's brother runs across Rosy and falls in love with her. There is scandal galore until Rosy's identity is discovered and she turns out to have better social standing and more money than her suitor.

Miss Fisher, the "Flapper" ingenue, has finished her latest picture "A Square Deal" at the Santa Barbara studios and is resting up for a few weeks before beginning her next, which will be titled "Impossible Susan."

The latter story was written by Josephine Franklin Poland and was adapted for the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. The plot involves Miss Fisher in tomboy adventures that give her special talent full sway. It is full of pajama adventures and nearly everybody will admit that Margarita appears to better advantage in silk "trousies" than ninety-nine out of a hundred women.

The next offering of that popular young fighting star William Russell will be "Up Romance Road," which was written especially for Mr. Russell by Stephen Fox. The story is an original comedy-drama of high merit and the plot is a corker. It keeps Russell on the jump from beginning to end.

Mr. Fox also wrote "The Frameup," "High Play" and "Shackles of Truth," all well known Russell successes; "Souls in Pawn," a Gail Kane triumph; "The Japanese Nightingale," with Fanny Ward, and "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan.

Gets Many Edison Films

By the terms of the deal whereby the Lincoln and Parker Film Company of Worcester, Massachusetts, acquired the Edison studios in New York and the equipment of the Edison Positive Film plant formerly located at Orange, New Jersey, the Bay State concern also comes into possession of more than a million feet of Edison films released before the beginning of the arrangement by which Edison pictures were to be distributed through the George Kleine system.

The Lincoln and Parker Film Company also acquired the right to reproduce Edison feature subjects and Edison Conquest pictures on their narrow-width and non-standard film, but all other rights in such subjects are retained for a period of years by the Edison company and the George Kleine system, through which they will be available as before. All rights in the James Montgomery Flagg series, "Girls You Know," are so retained.

Included in the Lincoln and Parker deal are the educational and scientific subjects upon which Mr. Edison was working a few years ago. It is announced that Mr. Edison will act in the capacity of a consulting editor to the new company, and that his son, Charles Edison, is to become a member of its board of directors.

The Edison company promises a further announcement shortly as to its future activities in the motion picture field, but it is known that a number of new productions, including "The Wall Invisible," with Shirley Mason, and several stories by O. Henry, Richard Harding Davis, Ralph Henry Barbour and other authors of prominence, are being made ready for early release.

"Social Briars" Ready May 13

"Social Briars," Mary Miles Minter's latest American production, originally scheduled for release May 6, will be released May 13.

The role which Miss Minter has in this romantic drama, that of an unsophisticated beauty who seeks fame as a singer in the big city and after many heart-breaking experiences returns to find love and contentment in her native village, is one of the most fascinating characterizations the dainty little ingenue has ever created.

The play was written and directed by Edward Sloman, who is responsible for many of Miss Minter's screen successes. Alan Forrest, who has supported Miss Minter in "A Bit of Jade," "Powers That Prey" and "Beauty and the Rogue," George Periolat, Anne Schaefer, Edmund Cobb and Frank Whitson complete the cast.

The next Minter production, now in course of production at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor."

Moore Praises "The Planter"

Tom Moore, the Washington, D. C., exhibitor, who has some very definite ideas about publicity, and also expresses himself positively on pictures and the merits or demerits thereof, took occasion to tell Mutual what he thinks of "The Planter," the seven-reel production starring Tyrone Power.

"'The Planter' went over great with me," said Mr. Moore, "even though this is the third time that it has been played on Ninth street. We are so satisfied with the box office possibilities of this subject that we are going to play it again in the near future."

More return bookings have been requested on "The Planter" than any feature released by Mutual within the past year and reports from more than three hundred theatres indicate that it has invariably done good business.

Big Mob Scenes in "The Caillaux Case

Several Players Injured During Filming of Scenes —Leading Woman Requires Care of Doctor

ONE of the most striking features of "The Caillaux Case," the William Fox expose of the pro-German activities of Bolo Pasha and Joseph and Mme. Caillaux in France and America, is the thrilling realism of the mob scenes. It is declared by the Fox management that never in the history of the organization has a mob become so violent in its action and gone so completely beyond control as in the scenes where Mme. Caillaux is acquitted of the murder of Gaston Calmette and later dragged through the streets of Paris.

As a result of this mob violence it is said that several persons were seriously injured. Two, a man and woman, were knocked unconscious, another man's head was badly cut by a flying missile, and Madlaine Traverse, who played the leading feminine role, was so roughly handled by the rioters that she has been under the care of a physician. In addition, the mob wrecked part of the sets. Order was restored only when Director Richard Stanton and his assistants plunged into the fray and by sheer force compelled the extras to subside from their demonstration.

True to the history of the famous trial of Mme. Caillaux, Mr. Stanton had arranged for a demonstration of the populace immediately following her acquittal. He urged the crowd to be realistic. But this was before the final scene of the trial had been enacted and before the spectators had been roused to a high pitch of excitement by the closing action. Besides, many of the extras were French and had pronounced opinions on the Caillaux affair. They hardly awaited the signal to begin a wild demonstration.

This demonstration, increasing with its own momentum, soon became a riot. The court-room became a bedlam of wild, shouting, maddened figures, completely oblivious of the fact that they were acting before a camera, and intent only on inflicting damage on the other side in a free-for-all fight. Chairs and books were hurled through the air. These missiles failing, even the court benches were used. Meanwhile, the camera man recorded on the film every detail of the conflict.

The same realism was evident in the street scene, where the mob finally gets its clutches on Mme. Caillaux. Remembering what had taken place in the court room, Director Stanton this time had warned the mob to control itself. Miss Traverse, fearing the consequences, had tied on her clothing and had provided herself with a special body guard, which was to protect her if the attacks became too violent. But it was all in vain. So vividly had she portrayed the heartless villainy of the ambitious adventuress, so overpowering was the indignation of the French populace against the woman who had betrayed France, that the court-room violence was repeated in all its intensity.

Peggy Hyland in Pirate Play

In the current William Fox release, "Peg of the Pirates," Miss Peggy Hyland, in spite of her diminutive size, proves that "Brittania Rules the Waves" and some very "high rollers" and "rough breakers" of the piratical persuasion to boot.

Penzance in its palmiest days never turned out a rougher, tougher crew than the bold buccaneers who kidnap the daughter of Sir Wyndham Martyn and carry her off in their "long, low, black, rakish craft" to hold for ransom in their island lair. But the pirates find that they have caught a Tartar, for pretty Peggy plays them a lot of feminine tricks not known to pirate lore, and finally "makes up" ghastly white and "plays dead."

Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield Theatre, Chicago. A "reviewer" for "What the Picture Did for Me."

The superstitious Captain Bones decides that such a pestiferous prisoner should supply an especially watchful ghost to guard the pirate treasure, so according to custom they are preparing to inter Peggy in their secret cavern. But Peggy comes to life quickly, and escapes with a choice selection of jewels.

Show Films in Catholic Church

A distinct innovation in the annals of the moving picture realm was the adoption of the film form of entertainment for presentation in a Roman Catholic church of Winnipeg, Manitoba. The unusual point of the event was that the pictures were shown in the church proper, the canvas screen being stretched across the chancel and in front of the altar. The projection machine was placed in a temporary booth in the choir loft at the front of the church.

The scene of the extraordinary show was at St. Edward's Church, Arlington and Notre Dame avenue. "Performances" were given on three evenings, with a children's matinee on Saturday afternoon. The admissions were twenty-five cents for adults and ten cents for children. Seven reels of pictures were shown, the feature being "From the Manger to the Cross." The two other subjects were travel pictures. Appropriate music for the films was played on the large organ by Henri Bourgeault, the church organist.

The unusual event was "billed" on the amusement pages of Winnipeg newspapers and the church received its advance notices and reports like any theatre. The church used fairly large space in the papers and large and appreciative crowds were present on each occasion. Widespread interest was aroused.

British Theatres Prosper

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has just received an especially encouraging report from Ernest Reed, managing director of the Fox exchanges in England, indicating that in spite of the stress and excitement of the great Flanders drive, the picture theatres are prospering, and Fox films are particularly popular.

This is not merely due to careful selection of suitable subjects, since the British public and especially the soldiers home on furlough go to the cinema to forget the war, but also to prompt distribution and attractive advertising.

The whole scheme of marketing Fox films in Great Britain was devised by Mr. Sheehan personally during the course of several visits and that it is withstanding both the test of time and the strain of extraordinary conditions in the trade is a strong endorsement.

"Her Decision" Heads Triangle Program

Picture Is Marriage Drama Starring Gloria Swanson—Roy Stewart Feature and Comedy Complete Bill

A MARRIAGE DRAMA, "Her Decision," heads the Triangle program for the week of May 12, offering J. Barney Sherry and Gloria Swanson in the leading roles. Roy Stewart has the featured part in "Wolves of the Border," a tale of Mexican bandits and cattle rustlers, which is scheduled for release the latter part of the week.

"Her Decision" is a story of sisterly sacrifice. The heroine enters into a loveless marriage to keep the secret of a sister's disgrace. She loves a man without character and marries a man with character who loves her. As a wife she falls in love with her husband.

Phyllis Dunbar (Gloria Swanson), the secretary of Martin Rankin (J. Barney Sherry), is in love with Bobbie Warner (Darrell Foss). Rankin loves her, proposes marriage and is regretfully refused.

Phyllis' younger sister, Inah, becomes involved with rich Billie Dexter and attempts suicide. Phyllis persuades her to give up the attempt and promises to obtain money to send her away.

Warner refuses Phyllis a loan and she offers to marry Rankin if he will let her have the money to send Inah away. Rankin offers to help her without marriage, but Phyllis refuses. Rankin agrees to the marriage. The two live like pals rather than a married couple. Phyllis retains a strong love for Warner. Finally she asks her husband's permission to seek out Warner with the purpose of finding out whether she cares for him as deeply as ever. Rankin gives his consent. Phyllis finds Warner intoxicated and repulsive. Her love is killed. She returns to Rankin and declares: "Now I have found my real love."

Alvin J. Neitz, who has scenarioized several recent Stewart productions, including "Faith Endurin'" and "Paying His Debt," wrote "Wolves of the Border," the second release of the week. The Mexican-United States frontier is the scene of the story, which depicts conditions as they exist today. With the march of progress over the prairies come new methods in cattle raising. A feud between the primitive cattlemen and the progressive newcomers is the result. The high point is reached when a three-cornered battle is fought between the feudists and Mexican bandits.

The story tells how the modern farm improvements and irrigation methods of George Merritt arouse the antagonism of Joe Warner, an old-time ranchman. A love affair exists between Merritt and Warner's daughter, Ruth. Warner's foreman, Pete, is also in love with Ruth and jealous of Merritt. Pete plays on the slumbering hate of Warner for his neighbor, Merritt, and persuades him to believe that his cattle are being rustled by Merritt. Under orders from the misled Warner, Pete runs a number of Merritt's cattle off his ranch on the Warner properties.

Interesting scene from the Triangle play, "Her Decision," featuring Gloria Swanson.

This provokes bitter hate between the two neighbors. Ruth has warned Merritt of his danger. Merritt has a quarrel with Warner which results in his narrowly escaping being shot by Pete.

General Mardones, a bandit, invades the country with his blood-thirsty pack and Merritt brings home a load of ammunition and rifles to repulse his possible attacks. Fighting takes place on the Warner ranch and Warner is shot. Warner imagines Merritt has made a treacherous attack on him. A battle is fought until his ammunition is all gone. He learns, however, that Merritt has been fighting the bandits, and that the affair has been a three-cornered battle. In the meantime Pete abducts Ruth and joins the bandits. Ruth plays on the jealousy of Mardones, the two men fall out and Ruth escapes to Merritt.

Roy Stewart is Merritt. Jack Curtis, recently seen in "Little Red Decides" and "The Hard Rock Breed," has a heavy role as the foreman of the Merritt ranch. Josie Sedgwick is Ruth.

The concluding release of the week is a two-reel Keystone comedy, "Newspaper Clippings." Francis McDonald and Claire Anderson have the leading roles.

Triangle Releases Changed

Triangle announces the following changes in the release dates of Keystone Comedies.

"Mr. Miller's Bundles," scheduled for release May 19, will be released May 12, under the title of "Mr. Miller Muddles Through." "Newspaper Clippings," scheduled for May 12, will be released May 19.

Ed. Brady and Myrtle Rishell will be featured in "Mr. Miller Muddles Through," while "Newspaper Clippings" features Francis McDonald and Claire Anderson.

The title of "The Honor of Taro San," the feature announced for May 19, has been changed to "Who Is to Blame?"

American Star Working Hard

"Impossible Susan," the feature that was written for the American star, Margarita Fisher, by Joseph Franklin Poland, is being filmed rapidly under the directorship of Lloyd Ingraham. Miss Fisher's supporting company is unusually strong and includes such artists as Jack Mower, Lloyd Hughes, Beverly Travers, Hayward Mack and L. M. Wells.

"Bill" Hart to Wed

William S. Hart, Artcraft star, announces his engagement to Miss Margaret Evans, daughter of a wealthy rancher. The romance began through correspondence.

Paramount Produces "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

Marguerite Clark Has the Leading Role—Picture Will Follow "Rich Man, Poor Man" in Release

A SURPRISE was sprung upon the trade this week by the announcement that Marguerite Clark's next Paramount picture would be "Uncle Tom's Cabin," from the book by Harriet Beecher Stowe, and that the production is practically completed and will be scheduled for early release. This story is one of the greatest epoch-making pieces of literature and is declared by some historians to have precipitated the Civil War.

On the speaking stage this play has probably been the most successful attraction in the history of the American drama. Innumerable companies have toured the country for more than forty years, reaping a golden harvest from its presentation. There is hardly an individual in the United States who is not familiar with the story and the various characters are household words from coast to coast.

According to Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of productions, the motion picture version has been produced on a stupendous scale, with great ensembles of people and a cast of capable players in the principal roles. No expense has been spared on locations. In this connection the company travelled thousands of miles.

"For the first time this subject has been visualized in a manner befitting its great dramatic value and the magnitude of the theme," says Mr. Lasky, "for the biggest scenes and the most exciting incidents suggested by the book could not be shown upon the stage and have proved difficult and costly to place upon the screen.

"The photoplay follows the ideas of the author rather than the various stage adaptations. It will unquestionably prove of historical and educational worth, aside from its dramatic possibilities, for when Mrs. Stowe wrote her famous book she had passed eighteen years in Cincinnati under conditions which constantly thrust the problem of human slavery upon her attention. A river only separated Ohio from a slave-holding community, and slaves were continually escaping from their masters and were harbored on their way to Canada by the circle in which Mrs. Stowe lived."

J. Searle Dawley, who has directed many of Miss Clark's most successful pictures, is in charge of the production. The depiction of "the underground railway," and its attendant thrilling scenes in spiriting away slaves, covers many states, reaching from Louisiana to Canada.

Immediately upon the completion of "Rich Man, Poor Man," Miss Clark's last Paramount picture, Mr. Dawley took the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company on its travels. In the meantime the scenic department was building the interior settings and the jump from the Canadian border to the extreme South was broken by a stop in New York, where interiors were filmed. Miss Clark had been scheduled by the government to take part in the Liberty Loan Drive, which she did, keeping all engagements, and rejoined Mr. Dawley and the company in Louisiana.

Praise Dorothy Dalton

Once again, say those who have seen "Tyrant Fear" at a preview, Dorothy Dalton has achieved a triumph in the depiction of Allaine Grandet, the girl of the Canadian Northwest, who is literally sold to a man as his wife—or rather as his slave—and who, until she shakes off the incubus of fear remains under complete subjection.

This new Paramount picture, from the studio of Thomas H. Ince and directed under Mr. Ince's supervision by R. William Neill, affords a tragically emotional role for the star, but in the end her womanhood, decency, fineness and courage triumph and it is thus the story comes by its name.

Fear is a tyrant till once seen for what it really is—nothing. Then the shackles are loosed. R. Cecil Smith, author of the photoplay, has demonstrated this effectively and his plot has been developed with consummate skill under Mr. Ince's keen and experienced eye.

books with dangerous frontispieces set to sale; who shall prohibit them?—shall twenty licensers? The villages also must have their visitors to inquire what lectures the bagpipe and the rebec reads, even to the ballatry and the gamut of every municipal fiddler, for these are the countryman's Arcadias and his Montemayors.§ Next, what more national corruption, for which England hears ill abroad, than household gluttony; who shall be the rectors of our daily rioting, and what shall be done to inhibit the multitudes that frequent those houses where drunkenness is sold and harbored?

Our garments also should be referred to the licensing of some more sober workmasters to see them cut into a less wanton garb. Who shall regulate all the mixed conversation of our youth, male and female, together, as is the fashion of this country? Who shall still appoint what shall be discoursed, what presumed, and no further? Lastly, who shall forbid and separate all idle resort, all evil company?

These things will be, and must be; but how they shall be least hurtful, how least enticing, herein consists the grave and governing wisdom of a state. To sequester out of the world into Atlantic and Utopian policies, which never can be drawn into use, will not mend our condition; but to ordain wisely as in this world of evil, in the midst whereof God hath placed us unavoidably.

Nor is it Plato's licensing of books will do this, which necessarily pulls along with it so many other kinds of licensing, as will make us all both ridiculous and weary, and yet frustrate; but those unwritten, or at least unconstraining laws of virtuous education, religious and civil nurture, which Plato there mentions as the bonds and ligaments of the commonwealth, the pillars and the sustainers of every written statute; these they be which will bear chief sway in such matters as these, when all licensing will be easily eluded.

Impunity and remissness, for certain, are the bane of a commonwealth; but here the great art lies to discern in what the law is to bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasion only is to work. If every action which is good, or evil to a man at ripe years, were to be under pittance and prescription and compulsion, what were virtue but a name, what praise could be then due to well-doing, what gramercy‖ to be sober, just, or continent?

Slave Market in Metro Production of "The House of Mirth" Presents Scene of Oriental Splendor

A STRIKING example of co-operation and general studio efficiency was given in connection with the staging of the ancient Arabian slave market in Metro's forthcoming master-production, "The House of Mirth." This picturization of Edith Wharton's novel is being directed by Albert Capellani and played by an all-star cast.

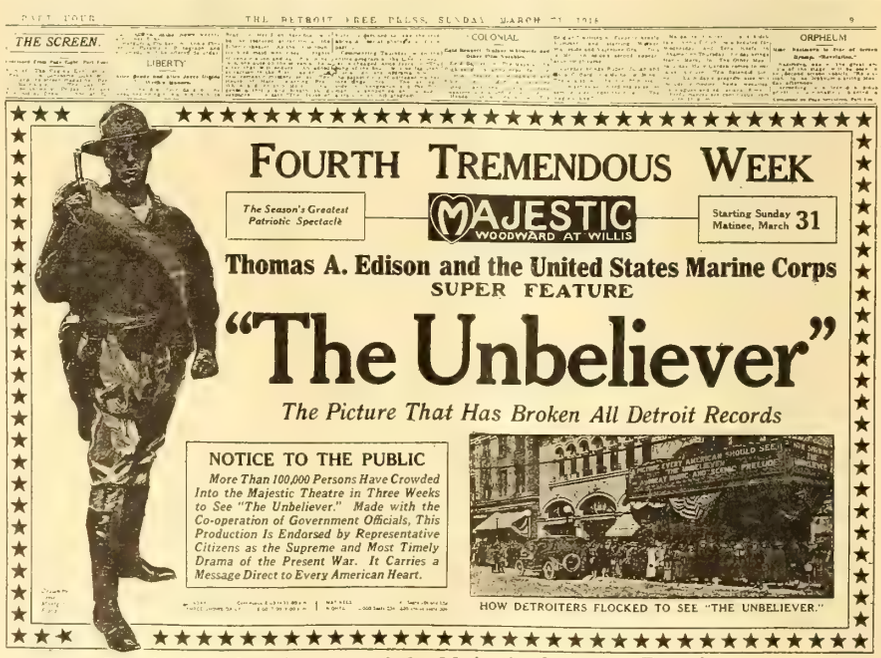
All settings for the slave-market scenes were made in sections in Metro's big carpenter shop under the supervision of Technical Director E. J. Shulter and set up by a night shift of workmen. The scenes "struck" in favor of the Capellani production were those of "The Heart of a Butterfly," featuring Bushman and Bayne; "The Winning of Beatrice," with May Allison, and a new all-star production under George Irving's direction.

By morning the studio was transformed into a scene similar to one from the Arabian Nights.

Later—after breakfast time in fact—the courtyard was thronged with people, veiled beauties, slaves and prospective buyers.

Drapers unrolled their lengths of rich cloth. Fruit and flower vendors strolled about with their wares. A forlorn dog wandered past and pigeons flew about. A donkey quenched his thirst at a water trough. The appearance of this rich and vari-colored scene, completely filling the vast studio space occupied only the night before by several settings, made the players rub their eyes and wonder what modern substitute had been found for Aladdin's lamp. But the magical elements were simply forethought and co-operation with a dash—as Mr. Shulter commented—of "horse sense."

Further evidence of the use of "gray matter" was supplied by Maxwell Karger, production manager, in arranging so that the various companies temporarily displaced would not be idle. It was planned that the other companies should utilize the time by taking exteriors.



Goldwyn Gets New Players

Determined always to include players of the first rank in the casts supporting its stars, Goldwyn constantly introduces newcomers to the screen or succeeds in obtaining established favorites to become "guest" artists at the studios in Fort Lee.

Two new leading men are making their first appearance in Goldwyn productions for the simple reason that Tom Moore, premier supporting actor, cannot appear with all the stars simultaneously.

Clarence Oliver has the role opposite the star in Madge Kennedy's newest photo-drama—the most serious, by the way, yet chosen for her. Mr. Oliver is identified with such successes as "Officer 666." and "Too Many Cooks."

Another new leading man is Rodrique LaRoque, who is Mabel Normand's screen partner in her newest production. The irrepressible star and her tall support—he stands six feet two— are guided by Clarence G. Badger, who directed "The Floor Below." Mr. LaRoque, though long known in photoplays, makes his first appearance in the East with the Goldwyn organization.

Solution of Projection Problems

HOW TO GET THE BEST RESULTS TOLD IN DETAIL

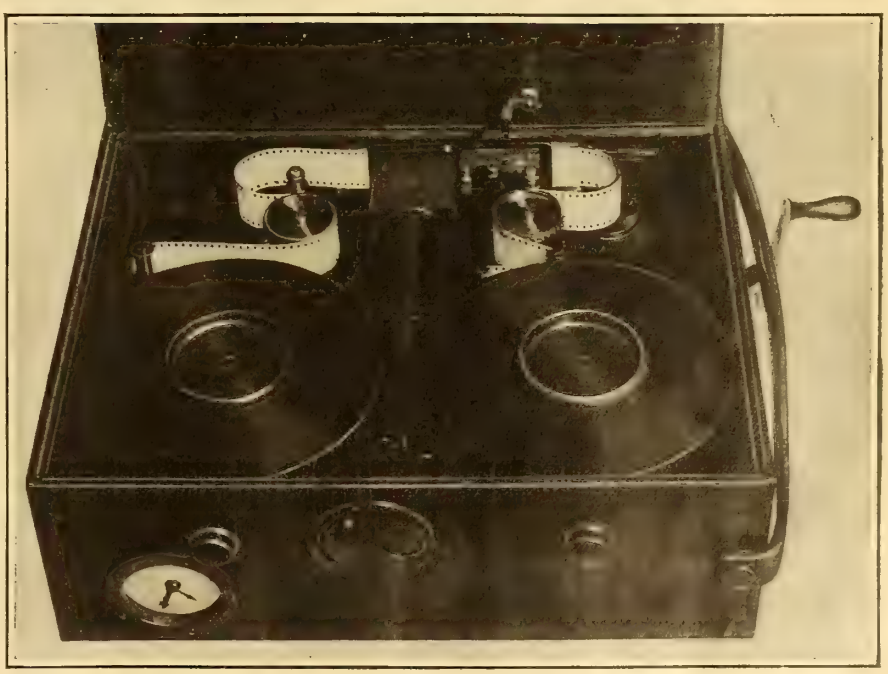
New Size Image, Larger Stage and Screen

"Cut-Backs" Eliminated Through Ability to Film Twice as Much Action Without Reducing Size of Players

THE following is an illustrated story reproduced from The Scientific American with that paper's consent:

"History is about to repeat itself in the motion picture industry. From an image measuring 2 by 2½ inches the industry went to a standard image measuring ¾ by 1 inch. For ten years the standard image persisted. Presently, however, the size of the image is about to be enlarged in the case of certain productions; but this time the standard sized film stock with its perforations is being retained, so that the original reasons for adopting it continue to be respected.

"The new form of film moves horizontally instead of vertically, and its images are twice as large as the existing standard, or 1 by 1½ inches. In other words, using present-day film two separate 'frames' or images are merged into one picture which is accordingly as high as the ordinary image is wide, and twice as wide as the ordinary image is high.



"The new image gives a picture on the screen of a different proportion than that now shown; it is in the proportion of four to six instead of the three to four of present films. The perforations of the new film are identical to those now in universal use and all the advantages of standard films, such as tensile strength and the value of standardization in laboratory work, shipping and handling are retained.

"Mechanically the new process is most interesting. The camera, as will be noted in one of the accompanying illustrations, operates in the horizontal plane in contradistinction to the upright position of the conventional type. Standard lenses are employed with all their inherent advantages, such as high speed and great depth of focus.

"For projecting the new film an improved type of projector is employed. Obviously, as in the case of the camera this projector handles the film in the horizontal plane. It is said that a flickerless picture has been attained through simplification of parts on the projector and through the introduction of new members. The mechanism for handling the film not only moves the film twice as fast as the present one-foot-per-second movement, but is claimed to damage the film less than present projectors. As a result the film, although twice as long as the usual film, is less expensive in the final auditing because the positive prints last more than twice as long as the latter. There are a number of other interesting features concerning the mechanical side of the new pictures, but at present these cannot be divulged.

"From a director's standpoint the new film is a tremendous step forward in the art. Not only is the new image of more attractive proportions for scenic effects, but, while still keeping the actors the same size as formerly, it is possible to include more of the stage. Thus a scene can be shown in which the actors enter from 'off stage,' and two sides of a wall or a turn of a corner can be shown in the same picture without sacrificing detail.

"To appreciate fully the advantages of the larger screen picture it is necessary to refer for a moment to the present limited image. Because of the small size of the scene it is generally necessary to make use of what is known as the 'cut-back,' which is the device for representing simultaneous action at different places or when it cannot be included in one scene because of the limitations of the camera.

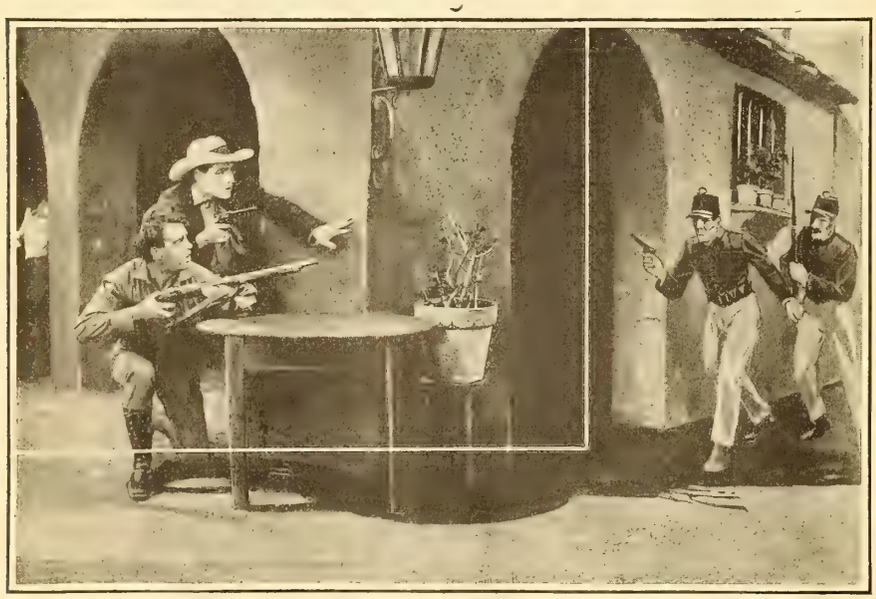
"Thus, in the case of a scene such as that shown in one of the accompanying illustrations, under the existing system the 'cut-back' is necessary in order to show first the two men waiting for the soldiers, and then the two soldiers coming up the side street—flashing from one scene to the other and back again. True, the entire scene can be included in one picture even with the present film, but this means reducing the size of the figures in order to take in the full action, which, obviously, would make a poor picture.



"With the new system, however, the 'cut-back' is eliminated because the entire scene can be taken in at one time while maintaining photographic standards. Incidentally, this makes for better technique in the photoplay, for at best the 'cut-back' is a rather crude device.

"The average photoplay is burdened with necessary 'cut-backs' which often serve either to confuse the audience or draw out the story until it begins to lose interest. It interferes seriously with the continuity of the theme in many cases; but owing to camera limitations it is forced on motion picture directors. In the new film the 'cut-back' is absolutely unnecessary, and only in instances where its use makes for added suspense or greater force in the photoplay, need it be employed. Indeed, the very fact that this device with its consequent footage is eliminated in the new film, makes for a considerable reduction in the total length.

"In large mob scenes where hundreds or even thousands of actors appear the new film has marked advantages. With an area twice that of the ordinary image it is capable of covering more scenery without reducing the size of each character; and as already brought out, because of its greater width it is better suited to outdoor views.

"All in all, the new film gives the director a larger stage to work on and a freer hand with his actors, who no longer are limited to a ten or fifteen-foot stage. On the screen the new pictures instead of appearing as a window through which a production is being viewed will have the appearance of a stage production as seen from a theatre seat.

"To produce simultaneously standard and new films of various photoplays is the plan of W. W. Hodkinson, a film man of New York."

New Type of Pathescope on the Market

Machine Designed for Commercial, Educational and Home Use—Has Motor Drive That Operates on Both Currents

A NEW type of moving picture machine for commercial, educational and home use has just been brought out by the Pathescope Company of America, with headquarters at New York.

This machine is the latest model of this company's well-known line of Pathescopes and is known as the New Premier Pathescope. Its special features are motor drive by a motor that can be used on both direct and alternating currents, high illumination and a feed mechanism that gives practically perfect results.

Motor drive was used on the older types of Pathescopes, but it was necessary to have separate motors for the different kinds of current and this naturally limited the use of the motor-driven machines. The New Premier Pathescope is, however, driven by a Westinghouse sew-motor, which operates at practically the same speed with either kind of current. Hence, this machine can be used wherever there is electric light.

New machine brought out by the Pathescope Company of America.

The illumination is provided by a 14-volt, 2-ampere, argon filled, high efficiency light that is sufficiently brilliant for throws as long as 100 feet and for pictures up to 12 feet wide. The 110-volt current received from the lighting circuit is reduced to low voltage for the use of the lamp by means of a rheostat. This is adjustable so that the degree of illumination can be varied to suit conditions.

The film-moving mechanism is of the intermittent type and is of a novel design. The manufacturers claim that the New Premier Pathescope projects an absolutely flickerless picture.

The machine is absolutely safe, since it can take only slow-burning films, the standard celluloid film being unusable in it. Many hundreds of these special films have already been made up by the Pathescope Company. Special subjects can be made up as desired and standard films can be copied onto the special stock.

The weight of the machine is 23 pounds and it is arranged for packing in a carrying case similar to a small suit case.

Motiograph De Luxe All Its Name Implies

Has 3,000-Foot Magazines, Necessitating Only One "Fade-in" for an Entire Showing of Multiple-Reel Feature

By J. Wesley Smith

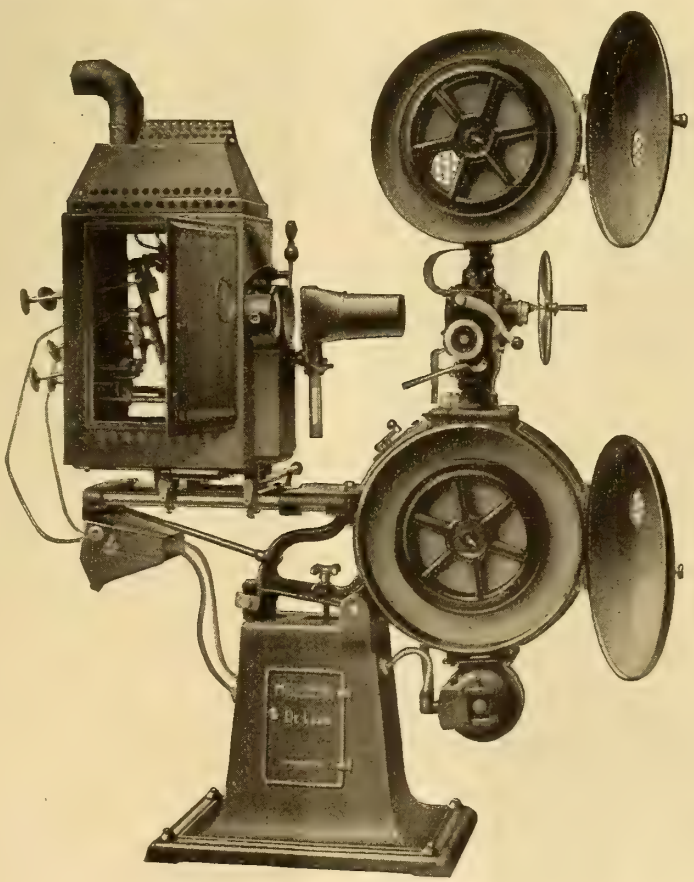
THE proper projection of a picture is becoming more of an art every day and as it is impossible to make fine steel engravings or, in fact, any other works of art without the proper tools or equipment, so is it impossible to project a picture properly without a good projector.

This is the day of multi-reel picture and to show a feature properly there should be as few breaks as possible. Such an opportunity is presented in the Motiograph De Luxe. This machine is equipped with 3,000-foot magazines, a fact which will be readily appreciated by an operator, as the majority of features today are six reels in length, this therefore necessitating only one "fade-in" for an entire showing.

The upper magazine has a wired glass window in either side, allowing the operator to see from either side of the machine at all times how much film remains on the reel. There is also a retarding device on the shaft—which, by the way, is mounted on ball bearings—which overcomes the jerky racing of the reel.

The lamp house and lamp are mammoth in size, the lamp accommodating a 12-inch trim of both upper and lower carbons. The housing has a double thickness door on both sides, each with a peep opening, allowing the operator to see the arc from either side. The arc lamp switch is located directly under the rear of the stand, a position that can be easily reached from almost any point around the projector.

Accessibility to the working parts of any piece of modern machinery is of vital importance and this item has been carefully thought out and taken care of. The entire framing device is removable with two operations and there are no gears or any other mechanism to dissemble; neither is it necessary to reset the shutter after a change of frames has been made.



All working parts are totally enclosed, but can be brought into view simply by opening the hinged gear cover. Gears, shafts and sprockets are of solid steel and all bushings are of high grade journal bronze and interchangeable.

Due to the design of the mechanism the act of framing a picture does not alter the set relation of the intermittent sprocket and shutter. A shutter setting device is therefore unnecessary.

Condensor trouble is not a necessary evil, as the majority of people think. This can be overcome to a large extent by a properly designed mount. In the De Luxe the entire casing is made of one heavy iron casting, which means a more even distribution of heat to the condensors. Further, each lens is set in its own carrier or cradle, and is held in place by a light spring tension, which gives readily to the expansion of the glass, thereby greatly reducing the possibility of breakage of the condensors through cramping.

The rear condensor is adjustable by turning a thumb screw, located on the outside of the casing. The condensor mount cover is hinged, and on it is a fiber indicating knob by means of which either lens may be ejected from the mount without touching with the hands. This is a great convenience and a point that will be appreciated by all operators.

As the base of the projector is hollow, all the wiring is brought up through it, resulting in a finished installation that is very neat. All connections can be easily made through the small door in the base.

Likes Part in "Moral Suicide"

"The very best the profession affords" is the motto of Ivan Abramson, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation. For this reason Claire Whitney was chosen to create the role of Lucy Daniels in "Moral Suicide," the successful photo-drama that is packing theatres everywhere.

Miss Whitney has been on the stage for five years. Her greatest success was achieved with Joe Kaufman and Louis Galloway in "Little Mother," by Edgar Allan Wolf.

On the screen she has starred in "The Dream Woman," "Beneath the Czar," "Shadows of the Moulin Rouge," "The Ruling Passion," "Life's Shop Window," and co-starred in "The Burglar and the Lady" with James Corbett, "The Walls of Jericho" with Edmund Breese, "The Idler" with Charles Richman, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" with Robert Edeson and "The Nigger" and "The Plunderer" with William Farnum.

Miss Whitney says Lucy Daniels in "Moral Suicide" is one of the best parts she has ever essayed.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Theda Bara Reaches Out to the Orient

New Philippine Picture and "The Soul of Buddha" Counted Upon to Win New Friends for Fox Films

THE world-wide and unceasing demand for Theda Bara pictures has stimulated William Fox's "Queen of the Screen" to almost superhuman efforts to meet the extraordinary situation, especially in foreign countries where the trade has been thrown into chaos by the almost total cessation of French and Italian productions.

In focusing the demand for an American film star who can fill the public eye in South America, the Antipodes and even in Asia, foreign exhibitors seem to have concentrated on Theda Bara as the one best qualified by name, fame and previous achievements.

As an example there comes to the Fox Film Corporation a letter from Kintaro Usukura of Tokyo, Japan, manager of the Teikoku-kwan theatre, with an insistent request for all the latest photographs of Miss Bara for a photoplay exhibition.

To meet these Asiatic audiences Miss Bara is reaching out across the Pacific in her next picture, the scenes of which are laid in the Philippines, and the title of which is "Under the Yoke." The story is by George Scarborough, the scenario by Adrian Johnson, and it is staged under the personal direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

With this "triumvirate" assisting the "Queen of the Screen" there is small doubt that it will be another Theda Bara super-production worthy to be added to the list of wonder-pictures she has filmed in California.

During her first trip to the Coast about a year ago Miss Bara produced the record-breaking screen classic, "Cleopatra," the vivid tragedy of royalty in the French Revolution, "Du Barry," and the dramatic "Rose of Blood." During her present sojourn she has completed "Salome," which advance advises indicate is even greater than "Cleopatra," and is starting "Under the Yoke."

This is a picturization of the post-Spanish regime in the Philippines, with Miss Bara in the role of a beautiful mestiza, and the hero an American army officer engaged in suppressing the Aguinaldo uprising.

Miss Bara's own original oriental screen story, "The Soul of Buddha," has a tremendous home appeal to all who understand the Buddhistic culture of the East, and with her latest Philippine picture she will stretch "hands across the sea" into the homes of millions of new friends.

Urges Honor to Inventor of Pictures

Maurice Tourneur Tells of Experiments by Eadweard Muybridge Which Led to Photoplay of Present

MAURICE TOURNEUR, the director who has just launched his own producing corporation, has started a movement to honor the man whose experiments led to the first motion pictures.

"In May, 1872, Eadweard Muybridge began his experiments in instantaneous photography," says Mr. Tourneur, "and yet, exactly forty-six years later, we have done nothing to honor this pioneer who made the photoplay possible. In the interim Muybridge's experiments have developed into the fifth industry of America.

R. J. Edenfield, president of the Dreamland Theatre Company, Augusta, Ga. Reports for "What the Picture Did for Me" are frequently received from the Edenfield enterprises.

"The popular idea credits Thomas Edison with being the creator of the motion picture. While Edison contributed a vital part to the development of the film, animated photography really dates back to Muybridge. Out in California in 1872 this man began his experiments, which were later carried on at the University of Pennsylvania. That university provided him with grants amounting to more than $40,000, the first instance of a scientific investigation financed by a college which developed a business of practical and commercial importance.

"Muybridge did not have the photo-drama in mind when he started experimenting. He wanted to study animal movement for the use of art and science. In fact his first experiments are said to have been backed by a California governor who wanted pictures of his race horses in action.

"Muybridge built a shed which was painted black and was 120 feet long. Opposite the shed he constructed a camera house with 24 cameras, each having a lens three inches in diameter. In front of these cameras a horse galloped. The black shed was the background. The cameras, operated first by strings which were broken by the horse's progress, caught successive exposures. Later a motor operated the cameras.

"Thus a series of successive movement pictures was obtained. Later the work was taken up by M. Marey of Paris, who utilized a sensitized film and was able to use a single camera.

"But Muybridge not only took the first photographs of moving objects, but he also projected them on a screen, leading directly to the exhibition of motion pictures. He lectured and presented these pictures beginning in 1880, and at the Chicago Exposition of 1893 in a specially constructed buildings he showed pictures of birds flying, athletes wrestling, etc."

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

A DEBATE between George Middleton, the dramatist and scenario writer, and Fred B. Warren, vice-president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, arose over the relations of dramatists and producers at the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures held at the Hotel McAlpin, New York, on May 3. Mr. Middleton said the producers did not show emphatically their desire to have the assistance of the dramatists in the writing of stories for production. Mr. Warren responded that one of the reasons that dramatists and producers did not get on very well was that the dramatists belittled the motion picture and thought of it only as an opportunity to make use of material that was not of the best—their by-product, in other words.

Mr. Middleton agreed with Mr. Warren that dramatists did not offer the best material and were not as sympathetically inclined to the motion picture as they might be, but said the reason was to be laid at the door of the producers.

He argued that the producers gave no opportunity for the scenario writer to cooperate in the actual making of the picture, with the result that oftentimes the product of the writer was incoherent in the completed picture, contained anachronisms and was otherwise unfaithful in the reproduction of his ideas.

This has tended to moderate the interest of the dramatists in the writing of stories for the screen, he said. If the producer and director would cooperate with the writer in the same manner as on the stage, the writers would take a deeper interest in their work for the screen, he declared in conclusion.

Others who spoke were Marguerite Clark, the star, J. F. Flinn of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Dan C. Beard, National Scout Commissioner of the Boy Scouts of America.

The Kleine system is not going out of existence, however, and retains its identity. Incidentally the entire Kleine staff remains at work under the direction of General Film.

In Montreal the exchange will be located, most likely, in the quarters of the Kleine system, while in Toronto the General offices will be made the home of both organizations. The plan is calculated to reduce the distribution overhead of both concerns while maintaining the complete service of each.

Felix Malitz and Gustave Engler, officials of the American Correspondents' Film Company, are on trial in New York charged with conspiring to ship contraband goods to Germany and spread German propaganda. The case is being heard by Judge Manton in the United States District Court. Alfred K. Dawson, a former captain in the United States army, was the principal witness one day.

Dawson testified he worked in Germany when the war broke out, taking many pictures which were sent to this country for propaganda purposes. These films, he said, were sent through the German foreign office and arrangements were made by Malitz with stewards of several Norwegian ships to bring them to the United States.

Letters concerning the affairs of the company were sent in triplicate, one by the steward of the vessel, one by way of Scandinavia, and the third by way of Holland.

Constance Gindrath, an attache of the French consul's office at Washington, testified that at one time she had worked for Malitz and that on various occasions she saw the stewards of the Norwegian vessels call on him.

Accompanied by Mrs. Block and their friends, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mann of Albany, N. Mr. Block found Samuel Goldfish waiting for him at the studio and was then shown through the entire plant by A. Lehr, the general manager of the company's Fort Lee plant.

Lawrence C. Windom, the well-known director, has placed his signature to a long term contract with World Pictures and has commenced the production of a picture starring June Elvidge.

Mr. Windom had a wide and varied theatrical experience previous to his entrance into the motion picture business. He was associated with Charles Frohman, Henry B. Harris, Richard Mansfield, William Faversham, Elsie Ferguson and several other prominent theatrical folk.

His motion picture activities have been with Pathe and Essanay, for which companies he directed such pictures as "Blind Justice," "The Chimney Sweep," and "The Way of Patience." Productions of marked individuality directed by Mr. Windom recently are the Taylor Holmes comedies, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Fools for Luck," and "Ruggles of Red Gap."

The first World Picture of Mr. Windom is "The Power and the Glory," from the novel of Grace MacGowan Cooke.

William P. S. Earle, the director, has affiliated himself with the staff of World Pictures. He has been assigned to direct Miss Barbara Castleton. Mr. Earle's first World production will be "The Blood of the Trevors," written by the prominent playwright and author, Maravene Thompson.

Mr. Earle has had a career in motion pictures of marked variety. After his graduation from Columbia University, he devoted himself to writing stories and plays. He became a camera-man with the Vitagraph company and then commenced to direct feature pictures. Here his versatility became evident and he was assigned such pictures as "Womanhood," "Within the Law," "For the Glory of the Crew," "His Own People," "Who Goes There" and others.

D. Lee Dennison has become manager of the Pittsburgh office of General Film Company. This change marks an important acquisition by General, Mr. Dennison being one of the best known exchange men in the Pittsburgh territory. He was for the past two years personal representative of James Steele of the Paramount interests, his attention being devoted to Cleveland, Indianapolis, Detroit and Pittsburgh, with headquarters at Pittsburgh. Formerly he was exchange manager for George Kleine in Pittsburgh. Mr. Dennison resigned from Paramount to enter the army, but physical reasons caused his return to civil life.

General Film Company has made a change at St. Louis, having just installed F. J. Fegan as branch manager. Mr. Fegan has been for several years in charge of the Standard Film Company at Kansas City and is one of the most widely acquainted exchange men in Missouri. He succeeds H. E. Elder, one of General's veteran employes, who is to be transferred to another important point, announcement of which is expected soon.

The Royal Theatre, a popular moving picture theatre at La Toque, Quebec, was burned to the ground recently. It was owned and operated by Bartlett Brothers. There was no one in the theatre at the time and the cause is unknown.

Mr. D. Pelletier of Black Lake, Quebec, opened a new moving picture theatre at Black Lake on April 21. He was the builder of the house, which is his second theatre in the district.

Praise Petrova's Clothes

The appellation of "The Best Dressed Woman in America" belongs to Madame Olga Petrova, according to the officials of the Women's Institute of Domestic Arts and Science of Scranton, Pa. After a long and careful study of all of the leading figures of the theatrical and screen world, Madame Petrova has been selected as the best groomed woman in America.

More Vitagraph Drew Comedies

The Vitagraph Drew Comedies, which have become an important part of the Vitagraph service since their release on March 11, will be continued indefinitely, according to a statement by Albert E. Smith, president of the company.

Mr. Smith makes this announcement in connection with a list of three months' releases covering June, July and August.

The releases follow:

June 3—"Romantic Reggie."

June 10—"A Case of Eugenics."

June 17—"When Two Play a Game."

June 24—"When Greek Meets Greek."

July 1—"Cupid's Column."

July 8—"Boobley's Baby."

July 15—"The Honeymoon Baby."

July 22—"The Cub and the Daisy Chain."

July 29—"Their Agreement."

August 5—"Miss Sticky-Moufie-Kiss."

August 12—"Diplomatic Henry."

August 19—"By Right of His Might."

August 26—"The Professional Patient."

This makes a total of twenty-five re-edited Drew subjects put out by Vitagraph in this series. Mr. Smith says there still are numerous others available in the Vitagraph library. But only those subjects in keeping with present-day standards of photography and lighting will be sent out, he adds, and all of them are being carefully edited and re-titled. All the prints are new, too.

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

PHIL H. SOLOMON of the George Kleine Exchange is in receipt of an interesting letter from his cousin, Aubrey M. Simmons, who has been in Belgium since the early part of the war with the "Anzac" troops, the first division of Australian troops to go to the aid of the mother country. Mr. Simmons is in charge of a string of motion picture theatres just back of the lines. A professional entertainer before he joined the army, Mr. Simmons was among those chosen for Simmons was among those chosen for the work found so important in this war, of aiding in the amusement of the soldiers, and for the past three years has been a picture exhibitor under these unusual conditions. In his letter to his cousin, he states that as the censor will not permit any news of the army itself, he will confine his letter to "shop talk."

Among the pictures he has shown recently and which the soldiers found very good were the Selig productions, "The Country God Forgot," and "The Lad and the Lion," the Triangle-Douglas Fairbanks pictures, "The Good Bad Man" and "The Lamb," and other American and foreign plays. He states that the American productions are by far the most popular and the best made that he can obtain.

"The war has evidently not injured the quality of the American productions," he writes, "whatever its effect may be on business conditions."

Mr. Simmons also outlines plans for the improvement of the camp theatres and the addition of tea-gardens, but judging from the location, the recent German advance has interfered with these plans. He had just returned from a trip to Paris when the letter was written and reported unusual popularity for the picture theatres in that city, in spite of the general tenseness of feeling. He also laid great stress on the good which pictures are doing in keeping the soldiers cheerful and at their best.

Herman Hexter, manager of the Columbia Theatre at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., owned by Hexter and Eppstein, was a visitor to the various exchanges last week in search of good comedies. The Columbia Theatre is located near the main entrance to Camp Grant and plays to soldiers only.

Mr. Hexter said the boys prefer comedies above all things. They do not care about the age of the films so long as they contain many laughs. War pictures are not liked for the soldiers come to the theatre to forget the war. Even scenes of drilling in a news weekly are disliked.

Mr. Hexter speaks highly of the behavior of the soldiers and says he has yet to find one among them who is not a gentleman. He finds that running a theatre for them is a pleasant task. That the soldiers appreciate the value of good entertainment is proved by letters Mr. Hexter has received from officers and men, stating that the theatre is a power for good. It makes discipline easier and keeps up the morale.

"My Four Years in Germany," the picturization of former Ambassador Gerard's book, is receiving a hearty reception in Chicago. It is being shown at the Colonial theatre, the big legitimate house in the loop, to full houses daily.

Elizabeth Sears of the American Film Company, who is going abroad to write a series of articles for a woman's magazine.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Central Film Company, which is handling the film in this section, reports that he has closed with Nate Erber, owner of the Lincoln Square theatre at Decatur, for a seven days' run, starting May 12, and for a six days' run starting May 13 with the managment of the Fisher theatre at Danville. In the knowledge of Mr. Weiss these will be the longest runs ever attempted in Decatur and Danville.

The picture played to a full house for a week in April in the Oliver Opera House at South Bend, Indiana, and was held over three days of the following week. It ran two weeks at the Circle theatre in Indianapolis, being held over one week. The picture smashed the Circle's house records, which previously had been held by "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

The Story of the Picture

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Artcraft

M'LISS—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Mary Pickford. From Bret Harte's story. Scenario by Frances Marion. Directed by Marshall Neilan. "M'liss" is a wild harum-scarum child of the mines in the days of the gold rush in California, the daughter of an inebriate father known as Scene from Mary Pickford's latest picture M'liss.

"Bummer" Smith. Charles Gray, a handsome school teacher, comes to Red Gulch, and M'liss becomes his pupil. Smith's brother in the East, at his death, leaves his estate to M'liss's father, and Jim Peterson, accompanied by Clara Parker, both trusted servants in the employ of the decedent, come to Red Gulch in search of the heir. Peterson plots to secure the inheritance for himself, with the Parker woman as his accomplice. Peterson causes Smith to be murdered by Mexican Joe, and when the body is found, suspicion rests upon Gray, who had been seen to leave Smith's cabin a few minutes previously by Parson Beam.

When M'liss is informed by Yuba Bill, the stage driver, of her father's death and the well-defined suspicion that Gray is the murderer, she hastens to Red Gulch, with the design of saving Gray, in whose innocence she has absolute confidence, from harm. Meanwhile, Gray is placed on trial, with Peterson as foreman of the jury. Clara Parker testifies that she is "Bummer" Smith's wife, and she is publicly repudiated by M'liss. The jury, dominated by Peterson, renders a verdict of "guilty," and Judge McSnagley sentences him to twenty years' imprisonment. Peterson is dissatisfied with this verdict and plots to have Gray lynched. Yuba Bill, on discovering the conspiracy, informs M'liss and the two succeed in effecting escape. Peterson, who fears that his complicity in the murder will be revealed, makes his escape and is pursued by the sheriff's posse in the belief that he is the escaped prisoner. In a gun battle which ensues, he is mortally wounded, and he then reveals the secret of the murder, his confession being supported by the admission of guilt by Mexican Joe. M'liss and Gray are thereupon united and all ends happily.

Fox

Brave and Bold—(Five Reels)—May 5.—George Walsh is featured.

Robert Booth is working for the Wilson Company, whose rival is the firm of Firkins & Firkins, of which the unscrupulous Chester Firkins is the head. A prince arrives here to give a billion-dollar war order. Booth is to meet the foreign potentate, who is to award the contract at four-forty o'clock on Friday in Pittsburgh at the Fort Penn hotel. As Booth has arranged to marry Ruth Hunneywell on the same day, he wires her to meet him at the hotel in Pittsburgh. On the train he sees Chester Firkins.

Arriving in Pittsburgh, he is approached by a young woman who asks him to escort her to her car, and while doing so Booth proves to be the victim of a frame-up planned by Firkins, for he is captured by three men and taken to prison. In his cell he changes clothes with his fellow convict and escapes. He goes to the hotel only to discover that his fiancee has been intercepted by Firkins' agents, who have taken her away in a motor car. After a chase Booth finally rescues her and, returning to the hotel, finds that the foreign clerk is about to close the business deal with the rival firm. On learning of an attempt that has been made to end the foreigner's life, Booth leads him to safety, secures the contract and is made a member of the firm of Wilson & Co., after marrying Miss Hunneywell.

Peg of the Pirates—(Five Reels)—May 12.—Featuring Peggy Hyland.

Margaret Martyn is about to be married to Mr. Elliott, a wealthy merchant she does not like. Captain Bones and his pirate crew come into the house and carry off Margaret to their ship, and sail away. Terry, a youth without fame, is in love with Margaret, and Margaret loves him. Terry fits out a ship, and goes after the pirates, and rescues Margaret, who has many thrilling adventures before her gallant sweetheart arrives. In the meantime Peg had discovered where the pirate treasures were located, and she and Terry lived in luxury ever after.

General

Snakeville's New Waitress—(One Reel)—May 18—Essanay.—With Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Buff Jerome.

Sophie Clutts secures a position at the Snakeville hotel as waitress. The men forget their food for Sophie's soothing talk and winning manner, until she finally puts the hotel on the blink. The way the men try to win her is delightfully comical.

Goldwyn

Joan of Plattsburg—(Six Reels)—May 5.—Featuring Mabel Normand, directed by George Loane Tucker.

An orphan asylum situated near the military camp at Plattsburgh is conducted by a band of enemy spies to shield their nefarious operations. Joan, one of the inmates of the home, learns that the spies are plotting to secure the invention of Ingleton, who is stopping at the camp under the guardianship of Captain Lane, a young officer with whom Joan is in love. Joan apprises the young officer of what she has heard, but he is inclined to disregard her observation. Subsequent activities of the gang change his views, however, and an investigation results in the capture of the spies.

Paralta

With Hoops of Steel—(Five Reels)—April 29.—Featuring H. B. Walthall. Mary Charleson plays opposite.

Emerson Mead, a cattle man, is in love with Marguerite Delarue. The son of Col. Whittaker, head of the Fillmore

Gloria Swanson in the Triangle play, "Her Decision."

Cattle Company, which is trying to annex the ranch owned by Mead, is reported to have been killed, and Mead is accused of the crime, because it is known that he had had a quarrel with the young man. Mead flees from town after agreeing to give himself up if the death of young Whittaker is established. Marguerite is also loved by Albert Wellesley, the financial agent of the Fillmore Company, and when their engagement is announced, Mead comes back to town, and is arrested immediately. But Tommy and Nick, two of Mead's pals, who are bound to him with hoops of steel, secure his release by offering themselves as hostages until Mead, who has offered to go in search of Marguerite's lost baby brother, returns. Mead and Marguerite find the child, and then it is discovered that young Whittaker is not dead, but that the report of his death was circulated by the fact that he had changed clothes with his wife's cousin, whom he killed in an argument. Mead is vindicated, and marries Marguerite.

Paramount

The White Man's Law—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Starring Sessue Hayakawa. Directed by James Young.

Sierre Leone on the West Coast of Africa, is the scene of this photoplay. Hayakawa is seen as an ivory trader and the story affords him numerous opportunities for the display of his versatile talents. This land is called "the white man's grave" and to it comes Sir Harry Falkland, a rascally Englishman, to redeem himself, leaving a suffering wife behind him. He becomes enamored of Maida Verne, a pretty little French Sudanese girl, and makes advances towards her. She is loved by Ghengis, an ivory trader, who had been educated in Oxford University, but irresistibly attracted towards Falkland, she coquettes with Ghengis, who leaves her bitterly disappointed. Ghengis and Falkland go to the bush together to trade in ivory and Ghengis learns that the Englishman not only has a wife in England, but that she is on her way to rejoin her husband in Africa. They have a terrible battle, and Ghengis who has been stabbed, is left for dead by Falkland who returns to the settlements. He again forces himself upon Maida, but his purpose is frustrated by Ghengis, who returns unexpectedly from the dead, as it were. Falkland commits suicide and Ghengis generously informs Lady Falkland that her husband had been accidentally slain and that he had "made good." Maida avows her love for Ghengis. He takes her to his breast, happy and contented.

Mile-a-Minute-Kendall—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Jack Pickford.

The theme of the picture deals with a dissipated and spendthrift son of a rich man who falls in love with an adventuress of whom his father naturally disapproves. The young man motors to a roadside inn kept by a grasping landlord, whose niece was the childhood companion and sweetheart of young Kendall. He is pursued to this place by the angry father who frustrates his son's design to wed the adventuress by buying her off. Kendall reviles his father and falls desperately ill as a result of his disappointment. He is nursed back to health by the niece of the innkeeper and when he is convalescent he realizes that he loves his devoted nurse. He spends his convalescence in perfecting a motor engine and when it is completed, he forms a company for its exploitation. His father hears of the invention, although he is unaware that his son is the inventor, and he sends an agent to purchase the patent rights. Young Kendall drives a hard bargain and sells for half a million a part interest in his invention to his father who takes the boy to his arms when he learns the truth, which is that his son has reclaimed himself. The elder Kendall is obliged to pay his son's wedding fee although the latter has his check for $500,000 in his pocket.

Triangle

An Honest Man—(Five Reels)—May 12.—Featuring William Desmond, with Mary Warren and Ann Kroman in the cast.

The hero is Benny, a carefree victim of the wanderlust who lives by his wits and his sleight-of-hand skill. His first awakening is to the knowledge that he is a slacker. Before trying to enlist he exchanges his last ill-gotten dollar for beers, and accordingly is rejected as a drunkard. He then finds himself on the farm of old man Cushing who, being alone and lonely, persuades him to stay. The old man suffers a sunstroke and, fearing death, entrusts Benny to find his runaway daughter Ruth, and deliver to her his savings of $50,000. After stressing his faith in Benny's honesty, Cushing falls back unconscious. Benny, stunned, 'phones the doctor and disappears.

In the city he meets Beatrice Burnett and, after various adventures inspiring regenerating influences, Benny learns that the missing Ruth is a would-be actress, Nanine La Rose, whom Beatrice is befriending during an illness. The three go to the farm, where they find Cushing still alive. Benny again applies at the recruiting office, is accepted, and, of course, all ends happily with the former tramp bound for "over there" after Beatrice says "yes."

Vitagraph

The Little Runaway—(Five Reels)—Blue Ribbon—May 6.—Featuring Gladys Leslie. Edward Earle plays opposite.

Peter Dowd, the son of Harvey Dowd, who is employed by Lord Killowen to collect the rents of all living in the latter's little Irish village, in aiding his father in the collections neglects to give a receipt for the money he received from Ann, living with her aunt and blind grandmother, and absconds to America with the cash. When her people are ejected, Ann decides to go after Peter and demand that he make restitution. In America, through a policeman who knows of Killowen's presence, Ann learns of the lord's whereabouts, and relates her story to him. Killowen is smitten by her beauty much to the chagrin of Eileen Murtagh, whom the lord had come to America to court. Eileen resorts to evil methods to get Ann out of the way, but her plans fail, and Lord Killowen takes the Irish lassie back to the little village as his bride.

Broncho Billy's First Arrest—(One Reel)—Essanay—April 19—Broncho Billy is elected sheriff. Marguerite, the daughter of the village hotel keeper, loves the new sheriff, and is very much delighted with his new appointment. A stranger comes to town, and like most country girls, Marguerite becomes greatly interested in him. The man has a fiendish influence over her and would have taken her away from her home and friends forever had it not been for Broncho Billy, who saves her from destruction, and also captures the stranger who happens to be a fugitive from justice. The thrilling ride on horseback and the sensational leap from the back of the animal to the passing limited train is a unique feature of the story.

Broncho Billy and the Rustler's Child—(One Reel)—Essanay—April 26—David Morgan is informed by Doctor Harding, that the former's wife is in a serious condition and must be taken from the high altitude. An Indian horse-thief shows David a way to make some easy money. That night, the Indian and the cow-puncher steal two horses. The Indian is captured by Broncho Billy, the sheriff, and squeals on Morgan. Dorothy, the cow-puncher's child, informs her father that a posse is coming up the road. Morgan instructs the child to say nothing to the men concerning his whereabouts. The cow-puncher crawls into the loft and pulls the ladder up after him. Broncho Billy enters, sees Morgan's wife in a critical condition and asks the child where her father is. She tells him she does not know. The sheriff, hearing a sound above him, is about to fire. The child, fearing for her father's safety, tells the truth. Morgan comes down from his hiding place, explains to Broncho Billy that he stole the horses, so that he might take his wife to a better climate. Dorothy pleads with the sheriff to save her father. Broncho Billy makes Morgan get up into the loft, as the posse returns to the house. One of the men suggests looking into the loft above. They lift Broncho Billy up. He informs his men that there is nobody there. Later Broncho Billy mails the cattle owner a check for the two horses. Morgan, his wife and child leave for a better country.

Broncho Billy's Last Deed—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 3—Broncho Billy is seen smoking a cigar in a general store in the far West. An Indian enters, and tries to force his attentions on a young girl. The Indian is ejected by Broncho. The Indian swears revenge. That same day, old Cy Jenners and his wife, receive a letter from the bank, stating that their note must be paid at once. Further, it states that Jenners' son is a rich man and to get the money from him. Jenners and his wife call on their son, Clarence, and are told by the latter that he will give no assistance whatsoever. They leave their son's home, and find Broncho Billy lying in the road, suffering from a bullet wound in his chest, inflicted by the Indian. They carry Broncho to their humble home and dress his wound. The following day Clarence Jenners calls on his old and feeble parents, and tells them he has made arrangements for them to go to the poor house. Broncho Billy, in the next room, overhears the conversation. He gets up from the big chair he has been placed in, and walks to young Jenners' home. He pleads with Jenners to come to the assistance of his aged father. Young Jenners orders Broncho Billy from the house. Broncho returns to Cy Jenners' home. He is about to enter the house, when he is presented with a note. He opens it and reads that should he carry out his threat to shoot young Jenners, the latter will pay a big reward for his capture. Broncho Billy goes to the doctor and is informed that he will not be able to live more than two days. Broncho shoots young Jenners. That afternoon Broncho sees a reward notice of $5,000 for his capture. He goes to old Cy Jenners and tells the former that he must take him to the sheriff's office. This he does. The old man receives the gold and Broncho is thrown into jail.

Journey's End—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Ethel Clayton.

The story deals with the career of Aline and her husband Phil Marsden who are drifting apart and enter into the novel arrangement that they are to separate for a period during which interval they were not to interfere with the actions of one another. Aline and her sister Jessica, together with their guardian, leave for a vacation at Palm Beach. Through a most interesting incident Aline and Jessica become acquainted with a young society pet and are enjoying themselves when Phil Marsden, having decided to follow his wife, meets the happy party on the beach. Incidentally Bernice, the woman who caused the rupture between Phil and his wife, also follows him to the resort. Annis, the young society favorite, is a friend of Phil and does not realize that Aline, with whom he has become exceedingly friendly, is his wife. Bernice notices that Phil is very assiduous in his courtship of Aline and assumes the duty of informing Aline that Marsden is married and that she hopes some day to win his hand. Aline relents somewhat toward Phil in consequence of the explanation of Bernice and the latter decides to resort to more stringent measures for her protection. She meets Annis and explains her plan to destroy Aline's faith in Phil and also enable him to win Aline for himself. Annis apparently agrees to her scheme, which is to be transacted at his bungalow. But the trick works in the opposite fashion and incriminates Bernice rather than Aline, for Annis had decided to turn the tables on the revengeful girl. Consequently Phil, having found out that all his suspicions were groundless, begs forgiveness of Aline and the mutual interests of Jessica in Annis then transpires and the two couples are happily reconciled.

An interesting moment in the new Triangle picture, "Wolves of the Border," featuring Roy Stewart.

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

THE SEAL OF APPROVAL

"Joan of Plattsburg" by Porter Emerson Browne—and starring Mabel Normand—is a motion picture production that will stir my loyal millions to their very depths. A picture of wonderful patriotism; a story of the human heart. A theme that answers the question on the lips of every American: "What can I do to help my country?"

by Porter Emerson Browne

The famous author of this story—watching his screen production—says: "I feel like the hen that laid an egg and saw it hatch out a Bird of Paradise."

And Lesley Mason, writing in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, replies: "No, it has not hatched out a bird of Paradise"—

"It Has Hatched Out an American Eagle."

An exhibitor must use his imagination and enthusiasm in presenting this production. He should rally around him every patriotic agency in his town.

Centralized Booking in Prospect

DESPITE much secrecy on the part of the big producing and distributing interests, the centralized booking plan discussed early in the spring is now said to be an accomplished fact. Under this plan all the several distributors will release through the same exchange, along the line of the United Booking offices in vaudeville.

It is quite likely that the system may be in actual operation by September. Naturally no official announcement will be made until all details are completed, which is a task of no small magnitude.

The idea of a single chain of exchanges for several of the biggest manufacturers and distributors has long interested far-sighted film men. The plan not only has obvious advantages from the exhibitors' viewpoint, in its elimination of friction and confusion, but is an economical step of tremendous importance. It is a fairly accurate estimate that the saving in distribution costs by such a system would amount to some $200,000 weekly, or about ten millions a year. Added to this saving would be the producing economy resulting from the balancing of aggregate output, crystalized into fewer and better pictures. A total saving of twenty million dollars a year is declared to be a reasonable expectation. Needless to say, such a profitable arrangement would prove the solution of the present problem.

That such a plan is inevitably the next step in the operation of the industry many of the biggest film men are agreed—notably such figures as R. A. Rowland of Metro and Percy Waters of Triangle. Others, again, deny emphatically that they have taken part—recently—in any conferences looking toward any merger of the kind and assert that they intend to play it alone—for instance, Goldwyn and Pathe. And all are non-committal as far as the actual completion of the booking combination is concerned.

At the same time, where there is so much smoke there must be some fire—only those directly interested are not yet quite ready to declare themselves.

It will readily be appreciated that such an organization will be the dominating factor in the industry—made so by its economical and logical soundness rather than by any concentration of power. Unquestionably the centralization of distribution would solve ninety per cent of the problems which now vex the industry and remove the bugaboo of such enormous overhead charges as now must be borne.

The chief problem is to find the big man, the big personality, competent to direct the affairs of so complex an alliance of interests. Presumably he would be a man from outside, one whose ability none can doubt and whom all can trust.

When the right man appears we are confident that the centralized booking plan will be ready for operation.

Circusing

THIS motion picture business is sometimes referred to, by those who know it best, as a circus business. There is nothing irreverent in the phrase. Those who use it recognize the human race as a circus race.

The word used as an adjective, and its verb, "to circus," means much more than the mere noun ever meant. It means bright and loud and stirring and full of joy—qualities that are found desirable by nearly all of the world's population. It is correct to classify Billy Sunday, for example, as an expert circuser, and the term reflects no disrespect to him.

The term "educational" is almost the exact antithesis of that. Innocently, and no doubt incorrectly, it carries an atmosphere that is dull and silent and slow and full of sour.

The youth whose time is largely devoted to absorbing education cannot be expected to enthuse when an attempt is made to carry an extension of his daily grind into his off moments' entertainment. "To him," says Herbert Sherwood, of the National Committee for Better Films, "it is like unadulterated quinine."

No doubt. The only point we question is whether the adult has anything on the youth in that respect. We are impressed with the idea that a program advertised as "all educational" and run in the most intellectual of high-brow communities, would be attended only by the faculty of the nearest college; and they would go from a sense of duty.

The most educational of educational pictures can be circused, and thereby made into a successful entertainment. The earliest example we recall was that "Fly Pest" picture, which became very popular and was in great demand. It certainly was not pleasing; it was simply circused into fame, and served an extremely worthy purpose.

So don't be ashamed of circusing your business, unless you are ashamed of human nature. Run all the good educational pictures you can get, provided they are entertaining; but CIRCUS 'em!

Fight on Funkhouser Gains Headway

Chicago Tribune Says Editorially That Ordinance Proposed by Alderman Maypole May Solve Whole Problem

THE movement to take from Major Funkhouser his absolute power over pictures in Chicago, described last week, has met with popular approval, judging by the attitude of the newspapers.

The Chicago Tribune had an especially strong editorial, upholding Alderman Maypole's proposed ordinance. Under the caption, "Eliminating Major Funkhouser," the Tribune says, in part:

"The important change advocated by Ald. Maypole is the elimination of Maj. Funkhouser, in the sense that he would be deprived of final jurisdiction in the censorship of films. This authority was granted to Maj. Funkhouser by the city council, and, of course, the city council has full power to take it away. There is, is may be trusted, nothing sacred in the name of Funkhouser which might prevent that action.

"The proposal to eliminate Maj. Funkhouser is prompted by the belief that he is not qualified to pass judgment on moving pictures. This belief involves no reflection on his morals or his integrity. It does not arise from any doubt as to his ability to fulfill many of the duties of second deputy superintendent of police. But it is a conviction based on cumulating evidence that Maj. Funkhouser is temperamentally and intellectually unfitted for the position of censor.

"Ald. Maypole is of the opinion, therefore, that Maj. Funkhouser, because of his obvious limitations, should not longer be permitted to occupy that position. The new amendment provides that decisions or rejections shall be made by a majority vote of the censorship board, and, although its decisions are subject to review by the courts, it is intended that they shall be final in all ordinary cases.

"Unless we concede that Maj. Funkhouser has an exclusive monopoly on civic virtue, we must at least give Ald-Maypole credit for making a constructive suggestion. It is quite possible that his new amendment may furnish the best practicable solution of the film censorship problem."

That the situation in Chicago is of more than local importance, especially since Major Funkhouser took upon himself the right to slash patriotic films passed by the government, is proved by editorial comments in newspapers of other cities. The Pittsburgh Post, in advocating prompt handling of anything that looks like pro-Germanism, mentions the Funkhouser case specifically, saying:

"In Chicago there has been displayed at different times a tolerance of disloyal manifestations of one kind or another that is calculated to encourage individuals to take the law into their own hands. A case in point is that of Second Deputy Funkhouser, who in his capacity of moving picture censor has displayed a tenderness for German sensibilities quite out of keeping with his position as an American official.

Has "Thrift Stamp" Day

Manager Al Nathan of the Broadway Theatre, now under the direction of the Universal Film Company, lessees, should take a blue ribbon for patriotic innovations. His latest is "Thrift Stamp Day." On that day it was impossible for any patron of the Broadway Theatre to buy seats with money. The box office accepted thrift stamps only in payment of the admission price, the only money handled was the war taxes. Savings certificates of $5 denomination were accepted, but the change was given for them in thrift stamps. The stamps thus taken in by the Broadway on that day were taken over by the Universal Film Company as part of their contribution to the government loans.

Belle Bennett Collapses

Belle Bennett, Triangle actress who has just completed work in "Iron and Lavender," in which she is the featured player, is in a Los Angeles hospital suffering from a nervous collapse. Miss Bennett may not be able to resume her screen work for many weeks.

Chicago Exhibitors Organize "Affiliated" Unit

A Chicago unit of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation was formed last week when Charles C. Pettijohn called a meeting of exhibitors and explained to them the new plan by which pictures are distributed direct from the producer to the exhibitor.

The exhibitors present were enthusiastic about the project and came forward eagerly to subscribe for stock. A limit of $100 per theatre was put upon the stock. There was some rivalry for the honor of being the first to subscribe.

Charles Abrams, of the New Americus Theatre, an exhibitor many years in the business, pleaded for the first position because of the initial of his name. Others among the first were Samuel Gold of the Gold Theatre, Maurice Choynski and Joseph Hopp. After that the subscriptions came quick and fast.

A meeting will be called by the stockholders and the plans for the management of the Chicago unit will be perfected.

Red Cross Campaign Planned

The work of the motion picture industry in the coming Red Cross drive was outlined at an enthusiastic meeting of representatives of the various federations and associations held last week at the Hotel Astor, New York, at a luncheon given by William Fox, who is at the head of the allied theatrical and motion picture team.

Preliminary organization was effected, plans for a sweeping campaign were outlined and one subscription, that of Samuel Goldfish of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for $1,000, was announced. In addition, numerous pledges of hearty co-operation were reported, both from members of the moving picture and the theatrical industries.

Funkhouser Target in Court

Harry Smitz, attorney, on May 14 petitioned the Superior Court of Cook county for a writ of mandamus directed to Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy police superintendent of Chicago, Chief of Police Schuettler and the City of Chicago, commanding them to issue a permit for the exhibition of the picture, "My Four Years in Germany," without any of the eliminations ordered by the censor.

Fined for Sunday Showing

J. A. Bayeur, proprietor of the Premier Moving Picture Theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, was recently fined $20 and costs on a charge of violating the Lord's Day Act in keeping his theatre open and charging admission on a Sunday.

New $100,000,000 Corporation Formed?

CENTRALIZED DISTRIBUTION OBJECT OF REPORTED MERGER

HAVE the big producing and distributing companies at last joined interests and worked out a mutually satisfactory plan, looking toward the centralization of film distribution with the distinct economic advantages which such a plan involves for all?

This is the question which has New York film folk guessing just now. It is currently reported, although on whose authority nobody seems to know, that all the details of the formation of a $100,000,000 holding corporation, which will take over the distributing organizations of a majority of the leading companies, have already been completed, except for the actual filing of the papers of incorporation.

May Start in Fall

It is even said that the name of the new giant corporation is to be the Associated Booking Company, Inc., and that it will be ready for operation, taking over and absorbing all the local exchanges of the companies interested some time early this fall.

The very definite character of these rumors gives them an importance which might otherwise not attach to them, especially as it is known positively that earlier this spring there were many conferences between the heads of practically all the big producing and distributing organizations in the industry, with a single important exception, when the advisability of a merger of interests, similar to that now reported, was the sole matter under consideration.

At this time it was planned to bring together all exchanges controlled by the various companies under the direction of one central organization. In effect the principles governing the direction and organization of the United Booking offices in the vaudeville field, which have proved to be so economically sound and financially successful for the concerns interested, were to be applied to the motion picture industry.

Big Saving Possible

It was freely predicted that by such a centralization of distribution, an immediate saving of between $200,000 and $250,000 weekly would at once be effected in the reduction of selling costs and excessive overhead charges now borne by the various companies. Later this saving promised to be paralleled by a reduction in manufacturing costs of an amount approximately as great. This saving would be effected chiefly by relieving the different companies of the necessity for producing a given quantity of pictures during the year, which they are now required to manufacture to maintain their programs and sales organizations. This would result in fewer, but better, pictures being placed on the market, thus solving one of the most serious problems of the industry —that of over-production.

Each to Retain Identity

The plan for bringing the exchange of the different concerns under one roof and into one great distributing organization did not contemplate the surrender of the individual interests of any one of them. Instead, each company was to have its own representative in each booking office, but also under the authority of the exchange manager, who was employed by the main organization and who represented the interests of all. Any important differences or complaints could be referred by either to their home offices and decided by the directorate of the holding corporation in which each company had an equal voice.

At this time all were practically agreed that a co-operative alliance for purposes of distribution as outlined would be for the benefit of all, if the details could be satisfactorily worked out. It was admitted that the saving in both distribution and production costs, now borne by the individual companies, would reach a total that would be enormous, but the difficulties of evolving a plan equally advantageous for all proved too great and the conference held early this spring apparently came to nothing.

Need Declared Imperative

It was said then by some of the leaders in the industry that this or a similar plan must ultimately be put into operation, if conditions then existing and existing today were to improve and that all minor and individual considerations would have to give way before the sound economic principles involved, when it came to be a question of existence.

Evidently, some such thing has occurred, if the reported alliance of big film interests is, indeed, an accomplished fact. After all there were but two important obstacles in the way of a successful merger at the spring conferences and some way may have been found to surmount them.

One of these difficulties lay in the fact that the exchanges of the individual companies represent an exceedingly large investment, which though quite properly carried on the books as an asset, also are in fact and operation a distinct and heavy liability. No one was then able to suggest a plan meeting with universal satisfaction under which this investment, whether an asset or liability, could be transferred should the exchanges of the individual companies be absorbed into one great central distributing organization.

The other problem which the conferees failed to solve was the selection of the right man, the big personality, who would be capable of wisely directing the activities of so complex and widespread an organization.

Something Doing, Belief

These were the causes then privately given out as the reason for the failure of the big interests to get together. Doubtless it is the fact that these have been adjusted or some common ground found where all could meet, which may have given rise to the recent revival of the report of the final completion of the merger of big distributing interests. On the other hand the definite character of the details of its formation now current compels the attention of the industry despite the utter ignorance professed by some of those on the inside, or who should be on the inside, and the non-committal attitude of others.

Not all the heads of the various companies reported to be interested in the new corporation could be reached by MOTOGRAPHY before going to press, but of those who were asked about it some declined to make any statement for publication, others stated emphatically that their companies were not included in any merger at this time, and others still, while expressing approbation of the general plan, were quite as positive in saying that it was still unrealized.

Rowland Anticipates Move

Speaking for the Metro Picture Corporation, one of the companies active in the conferences which took place last spring, President Richard A. Rowland said:

"The idea of a booking arrangement similar to that in operation in the vaudeville field in which all the producers combined has been under discussion for a long time. Personally, I believe that the individual companies must ultimately come to it—perhaps sooner than most people think—if they are to find a way to escape the excessive overhead costs of our present systems of selling operation and distribution. This is a burden which is proving too heavy for every company in the industry and whether ups, but it proved a very poor drawing card.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Blindness of Divorce, with Rhea Mitchell (Fox)—A good six-reel sermon with many introductory, explanatory and lengthy subtitles. Direction and acting good but the picture had no drawing power with us, chiefly because it contained no favorite star. Why doesn't Fox put a picture like Cleopatra on the regular program to make up for some of these fair valued attractions?—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Woman and the Law, with Miriam Cooper (Fox)—Seven reels. A good picture but it did not draw as well as we thought the title would. Contains no favorite star. Needs heavy advertising.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Her Husband's Wife (Fox-Sunshine Comedy)—Where they got all the water they used in the second reel of this comedy is a mystery to me. Drew many laughs. They must have spent a nice sum of money to make this.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Goldwyn

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—A great production, pleased everyone. The star is at her best. She is there with that "something." In our opinion, this is the type of production in which she should always appear.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—Madge Kennedy is a real star. Comedy dramas are the thing.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

The Auction Block, with Rex Beach (Goldwyn)—A great production and story but somehow it disappointed our patrons.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A sure-fire production. Pleased everyone and that is what counts.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Can't say much for this. Business poor.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—Fairly good picture. Business good.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Kleine

The Curse of Iku, with Tsuri Aoki (Essanay)—A dandy picture, different. Pleased immensely. One week to good business.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis. Mo.—Downtown house.

The Gift of Gab, with Jack Gardner (Essanay)—An excellent picture with a poor title. Fair business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Efficiency Edgar's Courtship, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay)—From the praise the trade papers gave this, we expected something better and were disappointed. We advertised it big and played it at advanced prices and disappointed our patrons. It is too highbrow.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Skinner's Dress Suit, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—A dandy picture. Business poor on account of bad weather.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Skinner's Bubble, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—Not so good as the Dress Suit but it drew well.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Skinner's Baby, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—Really the best picture of the series, but a bit suggestive and I was criticized for showing it to children.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Uneasy Money, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay)—This went over O. K., but I still think Two Bit Seats is the best of his I have played to date.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Metro

Draft 258, with Mabel Taliaferro (Metro)—A very pleasing, timely picture with a great patriotic appeal. The star does very good work.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.—Downtown house.

The Weaver of Dreams, with Viola Dana (Metro)—A pleasing picture. The title is a draw-back.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Broadway Bill, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—A good north-woods picture but too much of the same old plot with no new twists. A poor fight.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Social Hypocrites, with May Allison (Metro)—This introduces Miss Allison as the featured star. She will draw better after working in a few more pictures. This one is O. K. Supporting cast good. Average business.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Mutual

Bab the Fixer, with Jackie Sanders (Mutual)—Plenty of Comedy. Pleased the audience.—J. Walton, Auditorium Theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Pride and the Man, with William Russell (Mutual)—An excellent picture, well photographed and with good lighting. Film in poor condition.—J. Walton, Auditorium Theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Her Second Husband, with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—Not up to other pictures we have seen this star in. All the players seemed to have the spring fever. Even the participants in the fight seemed languid.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

A Game of Wits, with Gail Kane (Mutual)—A pleasing comedy-drama that went over well.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Her American Prince (Mutual)—Film in the worst of condition. This picture was shipped in place of Her Sister, with Olive Tell. This class of service does great injury to the business. Attendance above the average as my patrons expected something better and were disappointed.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Beauty and the Rogue, with Mary Miles Minter (Mutual)—Film in poor condition. Star, picture and subject good. Business above the average.—

Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Paralta

His Robe of Honor, with Henry Walthall (Paralta)—Failed to pull much but was liked by all. The nearest approach to a real story in some time.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Madam Who, with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—While my patrons don't care for this type of story you've got to hand it to them for turning out a fine production.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Within the Cup, with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—Seven reels. Too long. On an average with previous Paralta offerings, which hold up well.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Paramount

Let's Get a Divorce, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—A very pleasing picture in which the star does some good work. Drew pretty good business on the opening day in spite of rain and it looks as though it would hold up well for a week's run.—M. J. Weil, Castle Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Honor of His House, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—A sad ending in which the Japanese sacrifices his life to save his wife, whom he has poisoned. Most of our people liked the picture but it did not draw.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

The Seven Swans, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A good picture for the kiddies, but this star should be given a real chance once in a while.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Hidden Pearls, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—Fair. Filmed in Hawaii and the scenery is there all right, but most of this star's films have an objectionable feature and this one is no exception.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

His Mother's Boy, with Chas. Ray (Paramount)—Didn't please as well as this star's pictures usually do. A little too rough.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

The World for Sale (Blackton-Paramount)—Beautifully made and I would say a good picture of its kind. Pulled no business at all.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

A Country Hero, with Fatty Arbuckle (Paramount)—This comedy, when music gives the proper effects, should make most any audience like it.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Jules of Strongheart, with Geo. Beban (Paramount)—This star's usual good picture but got me no money. Why is this? Most exhibitors make the same report.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Are Waitresses Safe? (Mack Sennett-Paramount Comedy)—Quite a few new stunts and it pleased.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

An International Sneak, with Chester Conklin (Mack Sennett-Paramount Comedy)—Good in spots but not up to the average of this make.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

The Land of Promise, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—Rather slow getting started but when it did get off, it was good. Good business.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A good picture. The Bab stories have all pleased and proved to be good drawing cards.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Widow's Might, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—This star always pleases. The picture is good.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

La Tosca, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—Another costume play, which is absolutely what the people do not want. Business fair.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

At Coney Island, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—A great comedy. Arbuckle puts life into our show and sends them all home happy.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Pathe

The German Curse in Russia (Pathe)—First week's run ever played at this house. Admission twenty-five cents. The biggest week the house ever had. Picture wonderful.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo Theatre No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.—Shopping district.

The German Curse in Russia (Pathe)—The second war film I have run and it pulled a big house. Seemed to be liked by all.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

The Mark of Cain, with Irene Castle (Pathe)—Picture only fair. Business the same way. Mrs. Castle could be made a great movie favorite if proper vehicles were given her.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo Theatre No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Naulahka, with Doraldina (Pathe)—A good picture of its type but it failed to pull me any business as oriental or costume films always fail to do.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

The Great Adventure, with Bessie Love (Pathe)—Light. Not much to it.—R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Petrova Pictures

The Daughter of Destiny, with Mme. Petrova—Very pleasing picture, the best thing Petrova has done to date. Played one week to good business.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.—Downtown house.

Select

Panthea, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—Star, acting, directing and photography perfect. The star made a big hit. Business good.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

By Right of Purchase, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—From comments I hear from patrons, I think the star is losing her charm for them. Eugene O'Brien does good work as the leading man. As a drawing card, this is above the average but as we pay more, why shouldn't it be?—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Triangle

A Soul in Trust, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—This one did not please our patrons. Too long drawn out and no action.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

American Aristocracy, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—A good picture to excellent business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia, Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Gown of Destiny, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—Film in fine condition. Star, picture and subject of the best. Business above the average.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

The Man Above the Law, with Jack Richardson (Triangle)—Star, picture and subject of the quality of the better pictures of Triangle. Business average in very cold weather.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Limousine Life, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—A breezy picture which sends them home satisfied.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Hopper (Triangle)—A very good picture, although the plot is slight. It makes very good entertainment. Another poor title which means nothing.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Captain of His Soul, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A good picture, but with too many close-ups. Action slow. Desmond is gaining in popularity.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Real Folks, with Barney Sherry (Triangle)—A pleasing picture but it could have been improved.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—Fourth run in the city, to excellent business for two days.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo Theatre No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.—Shopping district.

Flying Colors, with William Desmond (Triangle)—Another camouflage title. Picture fair but the title did not fit it.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Little Red Decides, with Barbara Connelly (Triangle)—We had seen lots of favorable comments on this picture and we now agree with them all. Little Barbara is O. K. and the Chinaman is "no slouch."—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Vitagraph

An American Live Wire, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—Picture not up to standard of Williams or Vitagraph. Business good on the first day, poor for the remaining two days of the engagement.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo Theatre No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.—Shopping district.

The Fall of a Nation (Vitagraph)—Best yet. One woman remarked, "I did not want my boys to go to war but now I can see them go and never shed a tear." Business big.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

World

A Leap to Fame, with Carlyle Blackwell (World)—A good picture. Everyone well pleased. Plenty of thrills and a few good laughs. The kind our audience likes. Give us more.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

A Woman's Way, with Ethel Clayton (World)—An excellent picture, a little old but in good condition. Business fair.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

The Rise of Susan, with Clara Kimball Young (World)—A good clean story with no vampiring. Business good in rain.—A. B. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

The Web of Desire, with Ethel Clayton (World)—Good picture. Business fair only on account of strong opposition.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Paying the Price, with Gail Kane (World)—A fair picture. Good views of Washington, D. C., and of submarines. Business good.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

State Rights and Specials

Married in Name Only (Ivan)—One week to good business. While not a great picture, it pleased and is a good box-office attraction.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.—Downtown house.

Those Who Pay, with Bessie Barriscale (Ince)—A big box-office attraction. Star and story excellent. Two weeks' good business.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

The Zeppelin's Last Raid, with Howard Hickman (Ince)—Beautiful, spectacular, timely, superb production. Good business for a week.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

The Crisis (Selig)—A timely, stirring story which will please the most critical audience. A wonderful box-office magnet for two weeks.—J. L. Sweeny, Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

Serials and Series

O. Henry Stories (Vitagraph)—Good stories, well produced, but they do not please because they are not ideal. There are no heroes.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

The Neglected Wife, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—First chapter drew well and seemed to please, especially the women.—A. E. Herman, Crystal Theatre, Brookport, Ill.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—This serial had a poor start, due to extremely cold weather. I put it on on the poorest day of the week and so far it has made good. Business has about doubled on the day it is run.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

The Mystery Ship (Universal)—Started extra well. My patrons have not forgotten The Voice on the Wire and from the looks of it, they will not be disappointed in this serial. Business has improved on the day on which it is run.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

"Blindfolded" an Unusual Story

Many features from the standpoint of plot, suspense of interest and acting combine to make Bessie Barriscale's Paralta play, "Blindfolded," one of the best pictures in which she has ever appeared.

It is an unusual story of the underworld. The story is woven about the thrilling life of Bessie Barriscale as "Peggy Muldoon," the adopted daughter of "Patrick Muldoon," who is well-known among crooks as "The Ear" because of his remarkable powers of hearing.

Before the opening of the story, "Patrick Muldoon" is blinded by a premature explosion of nitro-glycerine while he is robbing a safe. From this time on he educates "Peggy" to believe that there is no wrong in robbing the rich. He trains her in all the cleverness of the art of safebreaking which has made him famous.

She progresses to such an extent that "The Ear's" men depend almost entirely upon her for their living. She accompanies them on all their "jobs" and with the aid of a stethoscope and her sensitive hearing powers, she can open practically any safe without the use of explosives. At last when she goes on a particularly risky expedition the police discover the crooks' activities and attack them in the midst of their work.

"Peggy" is captured, but refuses to disclose the identity of her accomplices. She is sent to the house of detention and upon leaving after two years of confinement with a completely reformed point of view, she obtains a position as companion with an elderly lady of refinement and social standing. "Peggy" in time meets "Robert Benton," her employer's son, and is married to him.

There is a startling climax which occurs when several of her former friends in the underworld find her after "The Ear's" death and threaten to disclose her past to her husband if she does not aid them in a crooked enterprise.

Cavalieri Film Titled "Love's Conquest"

Tragedy Barely Avoided in Making Lion Scene—Trainer Is Clawed Down, but Workman Kills Beast with Ax

THE last scenes in the picture starring Lina Cavalieri have been taken by Edward Jose at the Fort Lee studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marking the completion of the biggest Paramount production thus far undertaken in the east. It will be released under the title of "Love's Conquest." It is from the story of "Gismonda."

The sensational lion scene was taken last week, in which Courtenay Foote as Almerio, the huntsman, rescues the child of the Duchess of Athens from the lion's den, and it nearly resulted in a tragedy. The lion was a magnificent specimen, whose record of killing three trainers should have led to its execution, but its present owner and trainer, J. A. Cahill, believed he had controlled it sufficiently to hold its temper in check.

A thrilling scene was enacted in which Foote succeeded in beating the lion off and scaling the walls with the child in his arms. The lion had become thoroughly enraged, and when the trainer sought to drive it back in its cage it leaped upon him and attacked him with teeth and talons.

There were five hundred persons taking part in the scene and pandemonium reigned. Women shrieked and fainted. Director Jose and his assistant, Edward Pennell, were caught in the mob, which surged toward the exit in a panic.

The lion picked up the unconscious form of Cahill in its teeth and stood snarlingly at bay, undaunted by the missiles which were hurled at it and the streams from fire extinguishers striking its face and eyes.

In the studio John Abbott, Jr., a carpenter, heard the cries of the mob and the roars of the lion and snatching up a fire ax rushed to the scene. Leaping into the arena he charged upon the enraged beast and brought the ax down upon its head.

Stunned, the lion dropped the trainer, and twice more Abbott swung his weapon upon the skull of the animal, which crumpled lifeless to the ground. In the meantime the telephone operator had called the police and an auto patrol was racing to the studio, followed by an ambulance. Cahill was rushed to the Englewood hospital, where his life was despaired of for several days, but it is reported that he will survive.

Scores of workmen are busily engaged this week in dismantling and removing gigantic settings which were constructed for the picture. An idea of the cost of the production can be gained from the fact that the expense of razing and carting away the sets amounts to more than is spent by some producers in making an entire five-reel picture.

Crosland in Army

Alan Crosland, the able young director who worked with Alice Brady on a forthcoming Select Picture, has been placed in Class One A of the selective draft and has already joined the National Army.

"The Caillaux Case" Books Fast

Reports from the offices of William Fox indicate that 'The Caillaux Case," the expose of the alleged pro-German plot of Bolo Pasha and the notorious "Caillaux ring" in France, has aroused the keenest interest among exhibitors.

This interest has been intensified by the recent execution of Bolo and the impending trial of members of the staff of the notorious Bonnet Rouge, the pacifist organ with which Ex-Premier Caillaux was associated before his imprisonment.

Advance bookings are declared by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, to exceed those of any other Standard picture.

The Fox organization bases this remarkable demand on the claim that "The Caillaux Case" is one of the most timely photoplays ever produced and on the notoriety of the characters involved.

Besides, the great popularity of France and her people in America and the shattering by the United States government of the alleged conspiracy have added a patriotic interest.

"Over There" Goes Big

Doing a record business on a four-day run with only three days' notice in which to make preliminary announcements is another record for Select's patriotic photodrama, "Over There." This bit of business took place in Cleveland, at the Alhambra Theatre. G. N. Greenbaum, the theatre's manager, has written the Select Cleveland office as follows:

"As you know, we booked 'Over There' only three days before dates of showing. With little chance to advertise it extensively, we put the picture on to a jammed house both performances the first night, and the same has been the rule since. And what is more, the comments of our patrons showed that they thoroughly enjoyed it."

Lockwood in "King in Khaki"

Harold Lockwood's next starring vehicle, to follow "Lend Me Your Name," is Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, "A King in Khaki."

Though its title savors of the military, "A King in Khaki" is in no sense a war story. It concerns a picturesque, khaki-clad figure, named Smith, who goes from New York, where he has acted as a newspaper reporter, to an island in the semi-tropics to take charge of a promotion scheme to develop the island's resources.

Fred J. Balshofer, who put the book story in scenario form, will direct the picture.

Northwest Convention Active

WILLIAM H. DEETH IS ELECTED PRESIDENT

By a Special Correspondent

TWO DAYS chuck full of action, verbal and otherwise, made the seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest at the West hotel in Minneapolis May 7 and 8 one of the best ever held by that body. The gathering did much to cement the organization to the national league and to create a better spirit among exhibitors and exchangemen.

William H. Deeth, manager of the American Theatre, Minneapolis, was selected by the new board of directors as president for the ensuing year; Ralph E. Parker of the Sunbeam Theatre, Duluth, Minn., vice-president; Clyde H. Hitchcock, Princess Theatre, Minneapolis, secretary, and Daniel Eselin, University Theatre, Minneapolis, treasurer.

New Board of Directors

The convention selected the following men for the board of directors: Billy B. Watson, New Garden, Minneapolis; D. W. Chamberlain, Grand theatres, Mankato and Fairbault, Minn.; D. F. Eselin, University, Minneapolis; C. H. Hitchcock, Princess, Minneapolis; Fred Upham, Rialto, Minneapolis; W. H. Deeth, American, Minneapolis; Joseph Friedman, Park, St. Paul, and Ellsworth Cameron, Como, St. Paul.

James G. Gilosky, president of the Northwest body for three terms, refused to be a candidate or nominee for any office.

Debate Over By-Laws

Two tickets entered the field and, with only one exception, the white ticket candidates for the board of directors were all elected. The election was preceded by considerable argument about the legality of proposed changes in the by-laws and also about the legality of the election, but the first mentioned question was settled when an attorney informed the convention that if the corporation's charter stated that the board of directors would select officers for the body that a new charter would have to be taken out before the by-laws, changed to permit election by ballot, would be effective. The second named argument was brought to a termination when it was found that a quorum was in attendance.

The convention opened with about 100 exhibitors from all parts of the northwest and visitors from New York, Chicago, Aurora, Ill., Grand Rapids, Mich., and Indianapolis in attendance. In the absence of Governor Burnquist, who had promised to welcome the delegates, but who had to leave the capitol in St. Paul for a business trip, President Gilosky made the initial address.

Gilosky Pleads for More Unity

Mr. Gilosky assailed those who had tried to break up the organization during the past year by severely criticising the administration without giving thought or words to the many good things accomplished by it. Mr. Gilosky answered reports that the northwest body would likely withdraw from the national league by saying that he had evidence that the convention intended no such action. He pleaded for more unity within the organization and was loudly applauded upon completion of his talk.

Lee A. Ochs, national league president, followed Mr. Gilosky's talk with a short address on loyalty and the value of organization. Mr. Ochs stated that he had always considered the northwest body as one of the most loyal to the national body and stated he was surprised to note any inference that the northwest organization desired to withdraw.

Mr. Ochs told of a few of the national league's activities during the past few months and urged the convention to select a strong delegation to send to the Boston convention in July. Mr. Ochs said he would not be a candidate for president again and that exhibitors need have no fear of his using so-called "steam roller" tactics this year.

Pledge Support to Wilson

Secretary Hitchcock offered a resolution directed to President Wilson, assuring him of the unanimous support of the exhibitors. The resolution was adopted hurriedly amid wild cheering and hand clapping. Reading of letters from congressmen and exhibitors and the appointing of committees took up the remaining time of the opening session.

The committees appointed consisted of: Grievance, Billy B. Watson, Minneapolis; Fred Upham, Minneapolis; Ed. F. Hinz, Minneapolis; Al Steffes, Minneapolis, and William Watson, Excelsior, Minn.; resolutions, Joseph Friedman, St. Paul; H. C. Zander, Rhinelander, Wis.; D. F. Eselin, Minneapolis; Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn., and R. C. Gibbs, Huron, S. D.; credentials, D. W. Chamberlain, Fairbault, Minn.; Thomas Foster, Stanley, Wis.; D. G. Rodgers, Minneapolis; Archie Miller, Devils Lake, N. D., and Dan Eselin, Minneapolis. W. G. True, Minneapolis, and C. S. Watson, St. Paul, were appointed sergeants-at-arms.

Afternoon Session Hums

The afternoon session on the first day was devoted to a discussion of the advance deposit system, C. O. D. shipments and return expressage, a war talk by Corporal Arlington, returned Canadian soldier, and the reading of resolutions.

S. K. Leen, manager of the Ruby Theatre at Jamestown, N. D., told of his troubles with C. O. D. shipments and paper shipments and after a long debate the chair appointed Mr. Leen as the chairman of a committee to draw up resolutions dealing with the subjects referred to so that they might be presented for adoption the following morning.

S. G. Lebedoff, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Minneapolis, offered a resolution requesting national distributing companies to give greater authority to local managers in the matter of accepting or rejecting contracts. Mr. Lebedoff cited several recent instances where contracts for big productions calling for good-sized rentals were rejected by home offices at the eleventh hour and higher rental rates demanded despite the fact that local managers had pleaded that such action by home offices would injure future business. Mr. Lebedoff's resolution was easily carried.

Legislative Committee Gets Task

A resolution requesting that exchanges buy Liberty bonds with money held as advance deposits from exhibitors and another urging the organization's legislative committee to see that a bill was presented to the next Minnesota legislature providing that exchanges keep all advance deposit moneys deposited in local banks were discussed at length and finally turned over to the legislative committee for action.

M. A. Brown of Riceville, Iowa, brought up the matter of paying war tax on reels released before October, 1917, and stated that he had won his case against exchanges charging such tax by continually refusing to pay it, but by paying the tax on reels released after October, 1917.

C. C. Pettijohn, prominent American Exhibitors' Association member, was called upon to explain the tax problems and did so in a few words. Mr. Pettijohn stated that producers had no legal right to charge a tax on reels released

Herman J. Brown Boosts United Theatres

Prominent Idaho Exhibitor Sends Out Letter to All His Friends Urging Them to Line Up Behind Proposition

THE enthusiasm with which exhibitor members of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., are aiding in the spread of the doctrine of co-operative operation is reflected in letters that pour into the United offices with each mail.

Several of the exhibitors have composed form letters which they are sending to their friends and fellow-exhibitors endorsing the United project and urging affiliation. By no means the least interesting of these letters is that which has been sent out by Herman J. Brown, the president of the Exhibitors' League of Idaho, to all his acquaintances in the business. In it he states:

"The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is destined to mark the opening of a new era in our business. There is no company in the field with which it cannot compete, provided you give it your support. It is the most clean-cut business proposition that has ever been offered a retail dealer in America.

"The funds of this company are protected. If it does not raise enough capital, ninety per cent of the money turned in by you will be returned to you. Could anything be more fair? I earnestly urge every exhibitor in the state of Idaho and my friends everywhere to join United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., even if they have to go to the bank and borrow the money."

Mr. Brown adds that he himself has contracted for four theatres under his management, that he is receiving no bonus of any sort, or the promise of any office or any other inducement, but is working for the success of the project merely because of his confidence in its ultimate success, based on a thorough investigation, and because of his belief that it will benefit the industry.

Similarly, L. W. Brophy, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association of Oklahoma, writes that he has investigated both the personnel of the company and the standing of its depository and that he has found them of the highest order. And A. J. Gilligham, one of Michigan's foremost showmen, informs his exhibitor-friends that he knows the proposition is going over and going over big, not only because some of the biggest men in the business are affiliating themselves with it, but because the whole plan is open and above-board.

Meanwhile, the organization of the personnel of the United organization is rapidly nearing completion. President Berst in a few days will be ready to announce the complete advisory board, composed exclusively of exhibitors.

Lee A. Ochs, the company's vice-president, following his attendance at the seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest in his capacity as national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is making stops en route back to New York in several large cities to further the United cause.

Fox Star in Russian Story

A powerful production giving Virginia Pearson an oportunity for superb dramatic work in the character of a Russian princess who joins the revolt against the aristocrats, is announced in "The Firebrand," the current special feature release from William Fox's eastern studios.

Edmund Lawrence had charge of the direction and E. Lloyd Sheldon was the author of the scenario.

Victor Sutherland, who played opposite Miss Pearson in "Daredevil Kate," is the leading man.

Anderson, Kane and Brown Out of Paralta

De Wolf, Katz and Associates Buy Their Interests and Company Will Now Be Reorganized

JOHN E. De WOLF, Herman Katz and associates have bought all the interests in Paralta Plays, Inc., held by Carl Anderson, Robert T. Kane and Nat I. Brown.

This transaction is the result of an amicable understanding between the parties concerned, who have been the potent factors in the organization of Paralta Plays, Inc., and subsidiary companies, and under the terms of the agreement Messrs. Anderson, Kane and Brown have sold their holdings in all these companies.

Paralta Plays, Inc., will undergo a complete reorganization by the new owners, who will continue the production of high-class photoplay features.

Robert Brunton, who has been the chief executive at the coast studios, will remain in this capacity, and will also retain his entire staff of directors.

This announcement puts an end to the recent rumor which intimated that Paralta Plays, Inc., would probably discontinue producing. Paralta executives not only vigorously deny this rumor, but declare that each star on their roster will continue to make eight productions a year, and that they are now negotiating with other prominent film luminaries to be added to the present list in the near future.

Paralta Plays, Inc., made its debut in March, 1917, producing several features before making any releases. The first issue was "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan, presented in January of this year. Then followed productions featuring Bessie Barriscale, Henry P. Walthall and Louise Glaum. Eighteen features have been completed to date.

Films "By Hook or Crook"

Director Dell Henderson of World is busy picturizing "By Hook or Crook," featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley. The locale is principally in the environs of New York, so the World director is engaged in discovering suburbs for satisfactory backgrounds.

Two strong scenes from Virginia Pearson's new Fox production, "The Firebrand."

"The Golden Goal," a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature with many dramatic situations, two of which appear above. The picture stars Harry Morey and Florence Deshon. It is a release of May 20.

A Good Way to Put Over Serials

EXHIBITOR TELLS OF FREE MATINEE FOR CHILDREN

By Charles H. Ryan

Manager, Garfield Theatre, Chicago

Having gained an enviable reputation for success with serials through complimentary school children matinees on the Saturdays when the initial episode was on the program, Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield Theatre, Chicago, was asked by Motography to explain his methods in detail. The result is the story appended. Mr. Ryan is known personally to many readers of Motography, while he is known of by hundreds as a result of frequent reports to the department entitled "What the Picture Did for Me."

TO START WITH, we have 3,000 tickets printed, which costs us about $2.50. I then go to the school stores of our neighboring public and parochial schools and leave with each store about 200 tickets and tell them what they are and that it is without cost to them to hand them to the youngsters when they buy in their store. In fact, I never get turned down, because the stores are glad to get "something for nothing" that is a help to their trade.

I keep within a half mile radius of the theatre because if you go too far away from the theatre you will get the children in on the free tickets, but they will not follow the serial if they live too far.

Mails Tickets with Programs, Too

Also I place one ticket in each program of my weekly mailing list, which at the present numbers 900, all of which have been handed in—no directory or election list names—all real, live patrons.

The remaining tickets I pass out to the children at the theatre. There is a chance of children getting more than one ticket, but why worry; they will only pass them to some other child, as they cannot use more than one themselves and that is what you want—the more children you reach, the larger the return on your advertising stunt.

Well, now, that takes care of the distribution part of the stunt.

The time on the ticket is 12:30 p. m., which is 90 minutes ahead of our regular show and does not interfere with our matinee.

On 3,000 tickets we generally show to about 1,100 children, as we have done this on 5 serials and we know that all tickets are not used.

We do not give them the entire show. We show the two reels of the first episode and probably a comedy with it, making the show last forty-five minutes. Also we have all of our coming feature slides ready and tell the youngsters when they can see Hart, Fairbanks, Chaplin or Pickford by showing them on the screen. Sometimes we get the chorus slides from four popular songs that the children all know and we have the organist play them and all the children sing—and how they do enjoy it!

May Bring New Patrons

The children go home and tell their parents how well they liked the show and then they come in the evening. You may land some new patrons who never knew your show-house was in existence till you pulled off this stunt.

Sixty per cent of your patronage of children who viewed the first episode of your serial will follow it through its fifteen or twenty episodes. "The House of Hate," our next serial, happens to be twenty reels.

Saturday Best Serial Day

We run our serials on Saturday and find it the best day. We have not missed having a serial on Saturdays continually for 3 years.

And would you believe it? After giving the free show to 1,100 children we have about 400 children's paid admissions that same day and our receipts are about the same as if we had had no free show. Dope it out yourself. I can not.

Nubian Guard? No, a Baptist!

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios, was directing a big scene in "The Demon," with Edith Storey as the star. It was in the throne room of the Sultan of Morocco, a beautiful and massive setting. Among the "extras" was two negroes.

In the midst of a thrilling moment Director Baker shouted: "Come now, come! Bring on the Nubian guards!"

The dusky supers stood by, dumb and unheeding.

"You," shouted Baker to the larger one. "You are a Nubian; don't you know it?"

"'Deed I ain't, boss," returned the super. "I'se a Baptist and ain't been nothin' else for twelve yeahs!"

Petrova Gives Protege-Heroine $100

Star Is Prompted to Open Purse When She Reads That Blind Child Has Saved Many Lives in Fire

A FEW DAYS ago the New York papers carried a column story on little Rosa Cohen, a nine-year-old blind girl, who saved the lives of many other blind children when a fire broke out on the first floor of the Blind Babies' Sunshine Home, 1256 Eighty-third street, Bath Beach.

Madam Olga Petrova in riding habit. The Polish star is an ardent admirer of horseflesh, owning several blooded animals.

Madame Olga Petrova read of the child's being awakened by the smell of smoke and how she got out of her little bed to sound the fire alarm, running from cot to cot in her dormitory to awaken the eight little girls who slept with her there, and then, rousing the boys in the dormitory across the hall and marching all the children to the street.

Rosa then went back and roused Mrs. Grace McMillan, the night superintendent, who awakened the nurses and other attendants. The blind child's exceptional coolness and nerve prevented any traces of fright or panic on the part of the thirty other children, whom she led from the building exactly as if the occasion was but another oft-practiced fire-drill.

Madame Petrova has long been interested in the blind children at the Sunshine Home and having heard of Rosa's intense desire to learn to sing and play the piano, obtained permission from the superintendent to have Ward Stevens, the composer, who has set music to some of the Polish artist's original lyrics, undertake Rosa's musical education.

So when she read of her little protege's heroism, she sent her a $100 check, enclosed with the following letter:

Dear Little Rosa:

I have just come back from Asheville, North Carolina, to find what a heroine my little friend has been. I'm enclosing a check for $100 and I want you to take Mrs. McMillan's advice as to how it is to be expended in your behalf.

My love to you, dear child.

OLGA PETROVA.

Lawrence Starts New Feature

Edmund Lawrence, who had charge of Virginia Pearson's newest drama, "Firebrand," the current William Fox Special Feature, this week will begin directing a powerful play by George Scarborough, to be released under the title of "For Gold," with the same star.

Mr. Lawrence made his directorial debut with the Fox forces in the production of "A Daughter of France," which is said to have proved an immensely popular vehicle for Miss Pearson, although Mr. Lawrence screened most of the picture under the handicap of illness. Probably no director in the industry is more popular with his technical staff and company of actors than Mr. Lawrence.

Star Plays Part that Represents Ideals

Constance Talmadge Says She Would Have Been Interior Decorator If She Hadn't Become an Actress

IT IS seldom that a star has the opportunity to visualize on the screen her real ideals and theories of life. But fortune has ever smiled upon Constance Talmadge, the youthful Select star, and so she has had the chance to show her myriad admirers just the kind of girl she would be if she had not become a queen of pictures.

"Connie" is sturdy, self-reliant and independent as well as highly artistic, and the resulting combination is a practical idealism which comes to the fore in every one of the many activities in which this young charmer is interested. This fact is strikingly illustrated in "The Lesson," Miss Talmadge's latest Select Picture, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick.

"Since the time when I got my first rag baby," says Miss Talmadge, "dolls were to me only objects to be used in playing house. Other girls might play school, but playing house was my favorite pastime. I love to trim up things—for my favorite pastime is still playing house—and to make our rooms oases in the desert of hodge-podge housefurnishing, which is everywhere about us.

"In these times when it is especially necessary for the American girl to be self-reliant, there is no field outside of the dramatic arts—from which many are barred—which it is more natural for her to enter or in which she can rise faster and farther than interior decorating.

"Of course, I am most enthusiastic about my picture work, but if I had not been fortunate enough to get on the screen, I would surely have followed the career of Helen Drayton, the heroine of my latest picture, 'The Lesson.'"

Helen Drayton, it should be explained here, is the small town wife of a New York architect whose crabbed parsimony drives her to make money "on the side." She begins by arranging the decorations for the parties given by other women and after her separation from her husband she establishes a studio, where she is very successful. Of course, when "Chet" Vernon (played by Tom Moore), the beau of her girlhood days, comes along, Helen finds her true happiness.

The heroine of "The Lesson" is a "regular" American girl—pretty, vivacious, independent—in other words, Constance Talmadge. In this picture, the charming young star portrays her every individual ideal; "The Lesson" is a dramatization of her aspirations and outlook on life.

An Attack and a Defense of Pictures

EDITORIAL AND LETTER IN REPLY

THE ATTACK

By Dr. Frank Crane

Editorial in New York Globe, May 7, Addressed "To Movie Men."

I went to a Movie last night. I am mad yet. I was insulted.

How did any Movie Man ever have the audacity to present such a picture? What does he think the American Public is, anyway? Paralyzed from the chin up? Or solid bone?

Oh, the photography was all right, the pictures were good—fine effects, sunsets, and faces seen reflected in mirrors, and soldiers marching in silhouette against a red sky, and close-ups where we saw the villain's face working with crime-gripes, and all that; and the girl at the piano was a fair player, and knew enough not to play the Spring Song during the Snow Scene, nor Chopin's Funeral March while the fond lovers were a Maying hand in hand, nor Rock of Ages while the wicked D. Desmond was looting his uncle's safe; and the Price was right, being fifteen cents; indeed, everything about the affair was excellently gotten up—

Except the Story.

And that was cheap, poor, and wholly impossible.

Which is the reason why I ask, Why, when the billionaire Movie Magnate hires the most expensive, handsome, and capable Actors he can find, and procures the services of the most expert photographers, and builds Scenery that costs a fortune, and buys advertising space in newspapers and magazines with a high hand and a stretched out arm, and deluges every newspaper office a foot deep with press notices, and gets photographs of his film beauties in all the magazines, and everything, why, I repeat, does he get the Barber to write his stories?

Why pay Mary Pickford a billion a year, and then get the Teamster or the Plasterer to write the Story for fifty cents?

For the average Movie Plot is simply punk.

What grudge have Movie Men against regular Authors?

Why are Actors cheerfully paid $1,000 a week, while if an Author wants $1,000 a year the Movie Man will have a fit?

Doesn't the last named gentleman realize that, after all, the Story's the thing?

Which reminds me of one Senator Billy Mason told. He went down to some town in Southern Illinois to make a speech during the presidential campaign. Arriving about noon he entered a barber shop to get shaved. The negro who barbered him said:

"Y'all ought to been here this mawnin,' Senator, and heard Colonel Robinson's speech. It was the grandest speech I ever listened to in my life. That man is suttenly the mos' eloquentest man I ever done sot under. He talked two hours an' a haf. I could a listened to him fo' a week. Yassir, it was suttenly a gorgeous ad-dress."

"I'm glad to hear that," replied the Senator. "What did he talk about?"

"What did he talk about?" answered the negro, and then after a moment's hesitation added, "Well, he didn't jist say."

THE DEFENSE

By Jerome Beatty

Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation.

I HAVE just read your editorial in the Globe, "To Movie Men," and to paraphrase it, "I am mad yet. I was insulted. How did any editorial writer have the audacity to make such statements in print? What do you think the American public is anyway—paralyzed from the chin up?"

Do you think that they are going to believe that sort of talk? I'm afraid you have been talking to some of those disgruntled members of the Author's League and not to the successful members of that league.

Most Stories Above Average

We are perfectly willing to admit that a few of our stories are bad, so are a lot of editorials in the Globe—but the majority of our stories like the majority of your stuff, is far above the average. We are trying hard and we are paying real money to authors. For instance, just a few days ago Douglas Fairbanks paid $10,000 for the rights to "He Comes Up Smiling."

The trouble is, Dr. Crane, that you're not at all fair about it. You damn us all—every story we put out—when as a matter of fact, you will find that the average quality of our stories is just as high, if not higher, than that of the stories in the magazines that reach the people who go to the movies. The Saturday Evening Post, I believe, would be the best example.

Unfair as to Authors

You ask, "Why are actors cheerfully paid $1,000 a week while if an author wants $1,000 a year the movie men will have a fit." You know that's unfair.

You say, "The average movie plot is simply punk." That's not true.

You say, "Why pay Mary Pickford a billion dollars a year and then get the 'teamsters and plasterers' to write the story for 50 cents?"

Let's take Mary Pickford's pictures that you say were written by the "teamsters and plasterers" for 50 cents.

Bret Harte a Good Plasterer

The "plasterer" who wrote her most recent release, "M'liss," was Bret Harte. A darn good man with a trowel. She is now working on a story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd.

Before "M'liss," she appeared in "Stella Maris," which, you remember, came from the whip of a first-class cart driver named William J. Locke.

If you saw Mary Pickford along in December, you noted among the productions of "teamsters and plasterers" in which she played, were "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, and "The Little Princess," by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Pay of Poor Plasterers

To get down to the "teamsters and plasterers" or their agents, who have drawn such insignificant sums as one to ten thousand dollars, either for no work at all (when we merely bought the rights to an already produced play or novel) or for two or three weeks' work in which it was necessary merely to outline the skeleton of the story are:

Alice Hegan Rice, Joseph C. Lincoln, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Edward Sheldon (The Song of Songs), Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells, Maurice Maeterlinck, Victorien Sardou, Earl Derr Biggers, Harry Leon Wilson, Arthur Wing Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, Robert Hichens, Perley Poore Sheehan, Maximilian Foster, Owen Davis, David Graham Phillips, Granville Barker and Laurence Housman (Prunella), Larry Evans, Hendrik Ibsen, Frederick Ballard (Believe Me Xantippe), George M. Cohan, Marion Polk Angolotti (The Firefly of France), George Broadhurst.

These you will admit are pretty good "teamsters and plasterers" and they are people that have been writing for us only

Affiliated Distributors to Start Soon

Details of Booking Plan Are Being Explained to Exhibitors All Over the Country

THAT the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation will be organized on a nation-wide scale and ready to start a definite schedule of releases within a short time, is the promise held out by the progress which the new company has made, according to Charles C. Pettijohn, its general counsel.

Although incorporated only three weeks ago, this new co-operative booking movement has been received with unusual response on the part of exhibitors all over the country, and the work of completing the affiliation of the various independent exhibitors' booking associations that are now operating with this national body is going on rapidly.

Just as soon as these affiliations are consummated, the exhibitor organizers of the central body will take up the work of assisting exhibitors in territories where units have not yet been formed in the organization of their associations.

The principles of the new Affiliated were presented in detail by Mr. Pettijohn at the Minneapolis convention last week, and steps were taken immediately to gain for the Minnesota exhibitors the benefits accruing from an affiliation with this plan.

Byron Parks, secretary of the Exhibitors' Committee which is responsible for the formation of the Affiliated, addressed a meeting of the Pittsburgh exhibitors last Tuesday night, and under the direction of Fred Herrington, the organizer of the Tri State Exhibitors' Circuit, the western Pennsylvania exhibitors are now completing the details necessary to join in this co-operative movement.

Following the meeting Mr. Parks left for Salt Lake City to effect the affiliation of the exhibitors of the six western states now organized in the Exhibitors' Booking Association.

Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors are also lining up their forces, enthusiastic meetings having been held in Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Philadelphia during the past week. The meetings in the first three cities were attended by Mr. Pettijohn, and the one in Philadelphia by Sydney Cohen and John Manheimer of New York.

That the exhibitors of these various sections see in the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation the means of obtaining the fullest advantages to be derived from a co-operative booking organization is evidenced by the readiness with which they have responded financially to the organization of their respective units.

While the investment required of each exhibitor is a nominal one, the willingness with which exhibitors everywhere have come forward has been a revelation to those who know what a task it usually is to raise money in the industry, regardless of the purpose, and is regarded as a striking testimonial of the confidence of exhibitors generally in the fairness of the plan.

The secret of this response, according to those responsible for the Affiliated, is the fact that these funds remain in the control of each exhibitor's unit, the nature of the financial arrangement between the unit and the Affiliated being simply that of a trust agreement.

Shame, Cleo, Shame

And Cleopatra has come to this!

The wicked vamp who has held the record against all challengers longer than Ty Cobb has led the American League in batting, has turned to slapstick in order to lure the men folks.

Lawrence Semon, the Vitagraph comedian, is to blame.

He wanted to play Caesar, and in order to do so, had to drag in Cleo, and the result is "Romans and Rascals," a Big V comedy scheduled for release by Vitagraph during the week of May 20.

Semon appears in the triple role of author, director and star. He has produced the story in 1,000 feet of fast action and has dressed the picture with unusual richness of setting.

Young to Direct Williams

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, has engaged James Young to direct Earle Williams in his next feature, which probably will be "The Man from Brodneys," a five-part play made from the novel of George Barr McCutcheon of the same name.

Tom Mills, who has directed Mr. Williams in his last three features and is now engaged in completing "The Girl in His House," a Blue Ribbon feature made from the story by Harold MacGrath in which Mr. Williams will be presented on June 24, will take a rest when he is through. Mr. Mills suffered an attack of grippe during the making of "The Seal of Silence," with Mr. Williams and his leading woman, Grace Darmond, and he has not fully recovered his health.

President Smith says that Mr. Williams and his company, the members of which have been working at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood since the first of the year, probably will remain in the west for an indefinite period.

George D. Baker in Hospital

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios, is in Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles, recovering from an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Baker was stricken at his desk and underwent the operation a few hours later.

During Mr. Baker's illness his duties will be assumed by Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro, who is in direct charge of the west coast studios.

R. Ross Riley and Charlie Riley of Riley Brothers, managers of the Wigwam theatre at Overland, Kansas. Charlie is now serving his country on a man-o'-war, while his brother is doing double duty at home.

New Theatre at Dayton, O., Draws Crowds

Mark Gates, Formerly Connected with the Circle at Indianapolis, Is the Manager

THE new Dayton Theatre, Dayton, O., which has just been completed at considerable cost, is now open to the public. That the city appreciates beautiful settings for screen entertainments is proved by consistently good attendance.

Mark Gates is manager of the house. Mr. Gates is an acquisition from Indianapolis, where he was connected with the Circle Theatre. He has had much experience in the business, dating from the time when, at the age of 14 years he was head usher in the Grand Opera house of Syracuse, N. Y. This theatre was the first one owned by the Shuberts, with whom Mr. Gates continued association for more than fifteen years.

At the age of 17 Mr. Gates was sent to Springfield, Mass., where he was treasurer of the Nelson theatre, later going to Utica, N. Y., and to Rochester, where he was for four years connected with the Shubert interests.

The second season the Shubert theatre in Indianapolis, known as the Murat, was open, Mr. Gates was appointed secretary-treasurer and assistant manager, in which capacity he served until attracted by the possibilities of the motion picture business.

It was while in Rochester that his attention was first attracted to the possibilities of the big theatre in the motion picture game. In Rochester, as in many other cities at that time, there was an absence of any really big theatre devoted to the showing of pictures, and Mr. Gordon of the firm of Gordon Brothers conceived the idea of building a million-dollar house with the intention of using it exclusively for screen showings.

Managers of legitimate theatres and the managers of the picture houses were a unit in saying that it was a dream and could not be made a commercial possibility. Mr. Gordon, however, had the courage of his convictions, and the million-dollar picture house came into being.

Mr. Gates watched it grow, step by step, and being a close friend of the builder was permitted to learn just what commercial results were possible. These were so great as to be almost beyond belief and so, when an opportunity offered in Indianapolis, Mr. Gates immediately set about the organization of a company of which the Circle theatre is the outcome. This theatre is today one of the most prosperous theatrical properties in the country.

In June of 1916 the attention of Mr. Gates was attracted to the possibilities of Dayton as a good location for a theatre of the kind in which he is a firm believer, and he was successful in organizing the Dayton Theatre company, which has since brought to a conclusion his original conception.

At the same time he was working on the Dayton project he was informed that the Valentine theatre of Toledo might be available, and it took him but one week to show the owners that it would more than justify the expense of extensive remodeling if it were changed into a moving picture house.

This has been done and this property, managed and operated by Marcus Loew, is now a commercial success, after having had its "ups and downs" as a home of legitimate offerings.

Mr. Gates married a cousin of Bert Feibleman, manager of the Cohan & Harris syndicate, and though they settled in Indianapolis, they have now, since the starting of the Dayton theatre, taken up their residence in Dayton.

The new Dayton is a beautiful house. It is in the Adam style both as to exterior and interior, the front being of terra cotta with polychrome ornaments recalling the Wedgewood medallions which are always a part of the designs of the famous brothers Adam.

The front is three stories in height with space on each side of the main entrance lobby for store rooms. On the second floor front one room extends the entire width of the building and would make an ideal location for a tea room of the first grade, while just above on the third floor is a room of the same kind that is to be used as a show room for merchandise in conjunction with one of the store rooms below.

The main entrance is covered with a broad illuminated marquise of glass and iron. From this main entrance five broad doors lead into the lower foyer.

The entrance gives one a feeling that the patron is welcome. The location of the ticket booth is such as to give each patron the idea that he is not obliged to travel a block before getting it, and inside the door the hospitality extended by the mere detail of decoration gives everyone a feeling of restfulness combined with pleasure in arrangement.

Up broad stairs the patron may go, if waiting for a friend, and wishing to rest meantime. Retiring rooms for both men and women are on the second floor.

An unusual, yet most satisfying arrangement of seats in the balcony is the placing of wicker chairs in what may be called boxes, but which are lower than the balcony seats.

The front of the balcony has a space in the center in which are secreted the operating machines; this spacing being unnoticed except from the very front of the house.

The stage is picturesque in its setting. A balustrade extends across following the lines of a low balcony. At each end are huge vases on pedestals, and from these hang great sprays of climbing roses as though rioting out of bounds. Vines form a semi-roof, and there are flowers placed to give the idea of a real Italian garden.

Curses, Jack Dempsey, you shall die! A scene from Fatty Arbuckle's latest comedy for Paramount release, entitled "Moonshine." The villain here is Al St. John. Though a villain, he wears a wrist watch.

The screen is of gold fibre and at night is lowered into a narrow pit in order that the stage may be clear and the night watchman may see from the front to the rear wall and from the north to the south wall interruptedly.

The lighting system is of the kind that can give any peculiar effect desired.

The music is under the direction of Hewin H. Thomas.

The success of Mr. Gates' ventures in other cities makes the success of the Dayton an assured fact.

The officers of the operating company are: Sidney G. Kusworm, president; Harry I. Schenck, vice president; Frank R. Wright, secretary and treasurer. Directors: Sidney G. Kusworm, Harry I. Schenck, Frank R. Wright, Meyer Efroymson, Isidore J. Feibleman and Mark Gates.

The officers of the theatre building company are: Charles W. Dale, president; H. J. Williams, vice president; Frank A. Wright, secretary; H. H. Darst, treasurer. Directors: Charles W. Dale, H. J. Williams, Frank R. Wright, H. H. Darst, Frederick H. Rike, Sidney Kusworm, Meyer Efroymson, Isidore J. Feibleman and Mark Gates.

Metro Gets Director Hopper

E. Mason Hopper, one of the best-known directors on the Pacific coast, has joined the directing forces at Metro's studios in Hollywood. Mr. Hopper started to work at once, guiding Edith Storey in the drama, "As the Sun Went Down."

Convention Committees Are Chosen

"Boosters Boom Boston" Get-Together at a Dinner and Pave the Way for Annual Meeting of League

IMMEDIATELY following the publication of the official call issued by President Lee A. Ochs of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America designating Boston as the scene of the annual convention and exposition to be held July 13 to 20, the "Boosters Boom Boston" held a "get-together" dinner for the purpose of formulating plans to make the Boston convention and exposition the biggest and most successful in the history of the business. Most of the picture men of Boston and its vicinity attended, together with several guests from New York.

A special committee was appointed to take the necessary steps to bring to Boston during the convention period leading representatives of the film industry throughout the world, and thus make the Boston show truly international in scope and character. Speakers called attention to the fact that "pictures will form the main line of defense against German propaganda, and it is the opportunity and duty of the National Association of the motion picture industry, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and all other allied associations to make the 1918 exposition in Boston of sufficient interest and importance to attract the men of the allied nations and the president of the United States."

Other committees that were chosen with members aggregating a hundred in number included that on arrangements, Harry Asher, chairman; music, Frank J. Howard, chairman; publicity, Joseph A. Di Pesa, chairman; guest, Jacob Loury, chairman; entertainment, Harry F. Campbell, chairman; state days, A. S. Black, chairman; finance, Irving E. Jones, chairman; decoration, George K. Robinson and A. E. Somerby, chairmen; executive, E. R. Gregory, chairman; N. A. M. P. I., Michael J. Lydon, chairman; and badge, L. Dadmun, chairman.

Owing to his attendance at the convention of the exhibitors of the Northwest at Minneapolis, President Ochs was unable to be present, but a telegram addressed to Chairman Sam Grant was read in which he prophesied unprecedented success for the coming exposition.

During his stay in the Northwest Mr. Ochs was informed that that section would be represented with full quotas and the response to his call generally assures a greater gathering of exhibitors than ever before.

Mr. Grant, who has been made co-manager of the exposition with Frederick Elliott, announced that a sufficiently large number of producers and stars, accessory dealers and others connected with the industry had volunteered to participate in the exposition to assure its success in advance.

Fox Titles Five Films

"Names have been selected by Mr. Fox for five productions on which actual photography began last week, or will, in one or two instances start this week," says an announcement from the Fox offices. "The films star Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, Peggy Hyland, George Walsh and Tom Mix.

Miss Pearson's subject, the story of a woman who won and paid the price, will be released under title of "For Gold."

"Miss Innocence" is the title chosen for a dainty comedy-drama starring June Caprice. This is a recital of the startling adventures of a beautiful girl in modern Bohemia.

"Peggy Hyland's picture will be known as 'Other Men's Daughters' and is quite different in character from either of her two previous vehicles, 'The Debt of Honor' and 'Peg of the Pirates.'

"In California, Gladys Brockwell already has in hand a feature that will be called 'The Bird of Prey' and Tom Mix is progressing on a fast-moving drama to be released as 'Fame and Fortune.'"

"Story First" Is Pathe Policy, Says Brunet

New General Manager Reveals Plans in First-Interview Since Assuming Control

THE STORY — FIRST OF ALL. That is the policy Pathe intends to emphasize even more than it has in the past. Announcement of this fact was made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, in the first interview he has granted since assuming office. Mr. Brunet said:

"The remarkable business system of the French Pathe company is evidence that it is an opportunity and a privilege for us to follow the policies outlined by Mr. Pathe, properly adjusted to American conditions.

"Manufacturing and distribution are commercial propositions, but the production end is entirely different. By 'production' I mean the scenario writer and the director, who at least must keep their own individuality.

"Only with difficulty is art commercialized, as well as fancy and originality, which are the bases of the motion picture industry, and those who would believe the contrary are wrong, especially if they also believe that it will suffice for them simply to obtain contracts with celebrated artists in order to succeed.

"Whatever his or her fame, there is no star capable of being worth the amounts required in producing the negative if the scenario is only mediocre.

"The scenario, which is the main point, is the brain-substance of individuals, whose output cannot be forced and increased at will even with much money.

"A half dozen scenario writers, with a capital of only $20,000 or $40,000, will always represent a force which will be able to fight advantageously against any organization, no matter how powerful, which would be pretentious enough to attempt to absorb by itself the entire business.

"Each scenario writer associated with his producer and perhaps with the star will always find a distributing concern to release interesting productions, which will consent to give him the support of its exchanges and will rent the picture under conditions which will suit him best.

"Mr. Charles Pathe goes further and holds that this is the future method of exploiting pictures. It is only when the majority of our big men will have admitted this theory that we will see the cessation of a chaotic situation, the crisis of which is in large part due to the exaggeration of capital which is called upon inconsiderately with the view of combining elements of the business which should remain divided.

"It is the above 'formula' which is to dominate the future of our operations. We will, if necessary, be the financiers of interesting productions of which we will only seek a modest share for ourselves, presenting to the producers a world-wide sales organization now recognized as very strong and which we are unceasingly improving."

Three Triangle men who have enlisted in the Reserve Officers' Corps. They are Director Clifford Smith, his star, Roy Stewart, and Assistant Director Dick Rush.

Studios Face Slab Famine

Western film companies will be issuing "slab" cards soon unless the mill men become more reasonable. Slabs in the film world are slabs as known to all, except that they have the bark on. They are used in the making of cabins and stockades.

Until the demand became aggravated they were about the cheapest things in California, but with the demand the price went up and the supply diminished. W. S. Smith, manager of Vitagraph's Hollywood plant, had a hunch such things would happen and he laid in a stock he felt certain would meet all demands.

The making of the Blue Ribbon feature, "Baree, Son of Kazan," in which entire settlements of log cabins predominate, was a severe drain on Manager Smith's hoard, not to mention William Duncan's lavish but necessary use of them in his newest serial, "A Fight for Millions." A real blow fell, however, when an entire camp in "Baree" was burned, a supreme sacrifice to screen realism, and steps were taken at once to Hooverize all slabs wherever found and in whatever condition.

Hart Keeps Same Leading Woman

When William S. Hart appears in "Selfish Yates," his newest Artcraft picture, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and directed by himself, it will be noted by screen patrons that Jane Novak again appears as his leading woman.

The beauty and charm of Miss Novak was made apparent in "The Tiger Man," wherein she supported the star admirably, so well, indeed, that she was again cast in the opposite role.

In "Selfish Yates" she takes the part of Mary Adams, the girl who is left friendless and alone save for her invalid sister in a rough mining camp town. Her sweetness finally turns the scales of Yates' life and makes him see that there is something in life besides himself.

U. S. Films Well Booked in West

Sol L. Lesser, chairman of the division of the United States Official War Films in California, reports that, due to the combined co-operation of film exchanges, wonderful progress has been made in the booking of the United States official war pictures in the west.

The films comprise twenty-six one-reel productions, showing the life and training in every branch of Uncle Sam's service. They are full of 'pep' and exhibitors are expressing satisfaction with them as fillers.

Builds New House Next to His Old One

J. A. Quinn of Los Angeles Plans to Use It for Runs After Introductory Week for Pictures in Rialto

WHEN the citizens of Los Angeles emerge into the morning sunlight and rush through their morning newspapers on the way to their automobiles or street cars it is a common occurence for them to encounter a virile, full-page advertisement of the Rialto Theatre, putting the steam and enthusiasm of that famous little show place behind a motion picture production.

And on such occasions the picture world knows that J. A. Quinn, the little wizard of Pacific Coast exhibitors, feels assured that the picture he is advertising either has possibilities for a full week of capacity business from early morning till midnight or that it is good for a run.

Mr. Quinn has a nine hundred-seat house. Everyone recognizes that to carry a big feature production and the overhead in a theatre of this size the management must keep the seats filled from the moment the doors open until they close. And Quinn knows this better than anyone else in Los Angeles.

Therefore he turns to the daily newspapers to "sell his show" to the public. He takes no chances. He uses big space and pays cash for it. He uses quarter pages without skimping or stinting. He goes the limit by jumping on occasion to full pages in the stronger newspaper mediums. He uses "punch-'em-in-the eye" advertising copy, but clean copy. He nails attention.

Like James Clemmer of Seattle, Quinn has a tremendously clever advertising man—a young man full of boyish enthusiasms, but of seasoned experience. His name is Bob Blair and he knows the show business. He doesn't waste his time circling around his selling points. He picks out his bull's-eye, and he hits it oftener than most advertising men.

Quinn trusts his advertising man. When he says, "Bob, what do you think we can do with this picture?" he knows that Blair will seize upon all the exploitation values in the production under inspection. An example of the abilities of Quinn and his ally is found in the Rialto's experience with Goldwyn Pictures, which have their Los Angeles first run home at the Rialto.

Today there have been nineteen Goldwyn Pictures released—one every second week. Quinn has played eight out of the nineteen productions two weeks each and one of these eight, "The Cinderella Man," for three weeks. In other words, when backed up by showmanship of a skilled and modern exhibitor, fifty per cent of Goldwyn's total of productions released have had runs of two weeks each.

Mr. Quinn has more than a mere hobby—it is actually a plan about to be put in execution — that he can make any strong picture stand a run of three or four weeks, or longer, in Los Angeles. He made "The Whip" run nine weeks to remarkable business.

But he cannot do this without sacrificing the Rialto's fine established business. So he has leased the property immediately adjoining his Rialto and already is at work on a second theatre to bear another name. He could have torn out his side wall and doubled the capacity of his present house, but he didn't wish to do that. He wants to have two houses.

He wishes to take a fine, strong picture, play it one week at the Rialto, link it up with newspaper advertising and move it next door to the new house and there let it settle down for as long a run as his showmanship and skill can obtain for it.

When this time comes you may confidently expect that J. A. Quinn will advertise in his home town newspapers on the liberal scale employed by the department stores to move goods off their shelves. If advertising moves goods out of a store it will move a similar huge volume of people into a theatre, reasons Quinn, and you can imagine the cooperation he receives from his home town newspapers when he holds such opinions.

Miss Clark Plays Dual Role

Increased interest is added to the production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount picture by the fact that Marguerite Clark is playing the dual roles of "Topsy" and "Little Eva," two dissimilar characters, which will demonstrate the versatility of the star.

The amusing antics of the pickaninny provide scenes wherein Miss Clark can utilize the comedy talents which she displayed on the speaking stage, and as "Little Eva" the pathetic incidents draw upon her well known dramatic ability.

The make-up of "Topsy" completely disguises Miss Clark, which will be found in strong contrast to the opposite role, and the illusion is strengthened further by scenes in which the two characters appear simultaneously. This is accomplished by the use of double exposure photography.

Wild Flowers Delight Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh has been arriving daily at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee with her arms laden with dogwood and cherry blossoms and her hands holding bunches of violets and trailing arbutus. She does not buy out a flower shop, as might be supposed, but drives through the Jersey woods in search of the simple spring flowers, which she loves better than any hot-house product.

Five Special Features from Fox in June

"Blue-Eyed Mary," "Ace High," "We Should Worry!," "The Scarlet Road" and "The Kid Is Clever" Are Titles

FIVE productions from the eastern and western studios are to be released as special features next month by William Fox, according to the June schedule, which has just been announced. This is the order in which the pictures will be issued:

June 2—June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary." The story of a girl's sprightly adventures in the field of love. Staged by Harry Millarde from the story by Frances Crowley.

June 9—Tom Mix in "Ace High." A tale of adventure in the service of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. Written and directed by Lynn Reynolds.

June 16—Jane and Katherine Lee in "We Should Worry!" An impish, stormy comedy-drama written and staged by Kenean Buel.

June 23—Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road." The drama of a woman's triumph over the wolves of society. Directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the story and scenario of Charles Kenyon.

June 30—George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever." A surprise photoplay built on an original dramatic structure.

"'Blue-Eyed Mary' shows Miss Caprice in one of the most appealing parts she has yet had," says a Fox statement. "The supporting company consists of Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallon, Jack McLean, Henry Hallam and Florence Ashbrooke.

"'Ace High' is a perfect vehicle for Mix. Those who are at all acquainted with the type of work that Mix does need no assurance that he makes an excellent figure as one of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. Mix's horsemanship, in fact, has never been surpassed on the screen.

"'We Should Worry!' is the most expensive film that Jane and Katherine Lee have had. A big cast was taken to the southland for all the exterior scenes. We are confident that exhibitors will vote the story even more laugh-compelling than highly successful 'Two Little Imps.'

"We have been much longer than usual in the making of the new Gladys Brockwell feature, 'The Scarlet Road,' because of a substitution in the cast. Bertram Grassby, who was playing opposite Miss Brockwell, was injured and forced to give up the part. Charles Clary was then given the role and all the scenes in which Grassby had appeared were re-photographed.

"In 'The Kid Is Clever,' the last special feature for June, we have provided the athletic George Walsh with another of the action and 'stunt' productions which have won him such high favor. The story tells of his adventures—in the person of Kirk White—in the little republic of Bulladonia. Kirk knocks everything but the 'i' out of Bulladonia, when once he starts on his rampage.

"The first of the Sunshine Comedy releases in June will be 'Wild Women and Tame Lions,' in which several kings of the forest and a score of pretty girls combine to produce a record-making laugh-bringer, under Henry Lehrman's direction."

New Broncho Billies Go Fast

The second set of ten revivified Broncho Billy dramas are now offered by Essanay and are being booked rapidly.

The first set of ten, which began March 1 with "Broncho Billy's Leap" and ended with "Broncho Billy's Last Deed" on May 3, had such a tremendous run that it was decided to issue the second block beginning with May 10 and running to July 12.

These are all western dramas of the hills and plains and are fifteen minutes in length. New paper and new prints with exceptional photography by Essanay's new process add much to the pictures. A complete line of advertising material is being issued on the pictures. Special mailing cards in three colors also are being sent out to all exhibitors, announcing the plays.

The Kleine exchanges, through which the pictures are being released, report that there is a great demand for western dramas. The majority of exhibitors are booking the entire block, planning to run one each week on a certain night and advertising to this effect.

The new set of ten are: "Broncho Billy's Squareness," "Broncho Billy's Secret," "Broncho Billy and the Greaser," "Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke," "Broncho Billy's Grit," "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls," "Broncho Billy Wins Out," "Broncho Billy Trapped" and "Broncho Billy Rewarded."

Completes "Lend Me Your Name"

With the return of the Harold Lockwood company to Hollywood from the mountain recesses of California, where several exterior scenes were photographed, the production of Metro's forthcoming screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's novel, "Lend Me Your Name," was completed under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer.

In "Lend Me Your Name," Lockwood makes his reappearance in farce comedy after having been seen in five dramas and comedy-dramas. The last farce in which Lockwood was starred was "The Haunted Pajamas," released by Metro last summer.

May 27 is the release date of the new picture.

I, Mary MacLane Is Lost—Then Found

Eccentric Author Explains Disappearance in Chicago by Saying She Merely Wished for Privacy

I MARY MacLANE, who bares her love affairs in the Essanay feature, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," created considerable excitement both in the film world and among the general public, by mysteriously disappearing from the Planters Hotel, Chicago, leaving behind a couple of nighties and a large collection of perfervid love letters.

Her friends declared she had been under great mental stress due to financial embarrassment and asked the police to search for her. They suggested that she might be found in a hospital or at the bottom of the lake.

For more than a week not a trace of her could be found. Finally she turned up and calmly announced she had registered at the Auditorium Hotel under an assumed name so as to get a rest from her arduous work in filming the Essanay picture and that she was preparing to go into vaudeville.

The love letters left in her room carry date lines of Washington, New York, and a score of other cities. One runs:

> Darlingest: Not to know where you are! I love you—don't you love me? Tell me. TELL me.
> You feel far away—that makes me desperate. I LOVE you. I'm going to have you — you won't be taken away from me. You're sweet—you tear at my throat and at my heart—you're sweet. Darlingest—and elusive and far away—not far away—not far away, CLOSE—in me—in my heart and SOUL, darlingest. Darlingest, I won't let you be taken from me. I won't let you. You own me. You do—. You WANT to own me. I am owned by you. LOVED by you.
> Darlingest your loved.
> M———.

Another reads:

> Darlingest: I cannot bear this. I must have you—love you—see you—feel you—if you love me—if you ever did love me—pause—think—as I have—our love is much too precious — too rare — to throw away lightly. I can't fight it—tried to.
> I belong to you wholly as a dog to his master. Come take me, do with me as you wish. I shall fight duty, obligations, everything save you — my sweet.
> Always just your, F.

Miss MacLane's financial embarrassment is said to have been the result of her uncontrollable desire for luxury. She had been living at the Blackstone Hotel, the finest hostelry west of New York, until she went to the Planters, a popular priced place. With vaudeville engagements, however, it is presumed she will soon have all she needs—for the present at least.

Theda Bara as she appears in the new Fox production, "Salome." The other player has the part of John the Baptist.

Good Cast in "Honor's Cross"

Screen players of unusual merit are in the cast of "Honor's Cross," a Selexart production distributed by Goldwyn.

As Jane Cabot, Rhea Mitchell, the star, gives a performance destined to put her at the top of the ranks of motion picture favorites. In turn, she is a cabaret dancer, a seamstress and a waitress.

To Herschel Mayall is entrusted the important role of Thomas Dolan, a corrupt politician. It is a part full of big opportunities, with Mayall equal to all of them.

Edward Coxen is another prominent artist whose work is certain to win commendation. He has the role of Lee Stevens, a sturdy mountaineer lured to the city by Dolan.

Roy Laidlaw is admirable as "Gentleman Jim" Cabot, a former lightweight pugilist, but later a fighting heavyweight loafer.

Adele Farrington, as Marion Cabot, mother of Jane, does marked credit to a difficult role.

Fox Hires Burton George

William Fox announces the addition of Burton George to his directorial staff. Mr. George is a director of long standing, most of whose work has been done on the west coast, but he will make his pictures for Mr. Fox in the east. The first will star George Walsh and bears the tentative title of "The Sleepwalker."

Carl Harbaugh, under whose direction the last two Walsh subjects have been filmed, is to direct Peggy Hyland in her third Fox production, "Other Men's Daughters."

Jack Livingston and Jack Abbe, the oriental actors, as they appear in the Triangle play, "Who Is to Blame?"

"Who Is to Blame?" Heads Triangle Bill

"Old Hartwell's Cub" Is Second Feature of Week and Keystone Comedy Completes Program

A DRAMA, "Who Is to Blame," featuring Jack Livingston and Maud Wayne, the former Keystone beauty, heads the Triangle program for May 19.

This is a screen adaptation of the story by E. Magnus Ingleton. It was directed by Frank Borzage and photographed by Pliney Horne. Jack Livingston has the part of a young American lawyer, Grant Barton, and Maud Wayne will interpret her first dramatic part as Marion Craig. Jack Abbe, the talented Japanese juvenile, who had an important part in "Her American Husband," will be seen as Taro Sam.

According to the story, Grant Barton, visiting Japan, is attracted by the pleasing personality of Taro Sam, a "rickshaw" driver whom he employs and later takes to America. In this new land of promise many things happen to enhance the affections of his little brown friend, until Taro's love for Barton becomes the one big thing in his life.

Then Barton meets beautiful Marion Craig, whom he marries. During her absence he becomes involved in an affair with Tonia Marsh (Lillian West), a paid spy of Japan, who long ago had sold both loyalty and patriotism to the highest bidder. It is then that Taro Sam's loyalty is tested and he sacrifices the love and admiration of his benefactor that he may save Barton from a life of sorrow and regret. He evolves a plan whereby Tonia Marsh is disposed of, while Marion and Grant are reunited in happiness. Then Taro, with a sad smile, returns to his native land, where he lives a life of the real happiness that comes as a reward of a sacrifice worth while.

A Japanese tea room, oriental costumes, rickshaws and rickshaw costumes furnish settings and scenes of unusual beauty.

"Old Hartwell's Cub," featuring William Desmond, is the second release of the week. Mabel Richards wrote the story, while the continuity is by George E. Jenks, formerly of the staff of the Saturday Evening Post. It relates the development of a young blacksmith, whose only objects in life are his love and admiration for his drunken father, from sodden indifference to the place of one of the foremost citizens of the town, through the love and inspiration of a good woman.

The story relates how Bill Hartwell, the village blacksmith, young and handsome, but despised and reviled by the narrow-minded inhabitants of Matherville, defends his father, who through an inherited love for drink, has gained the reputation of a village drunkard. When old Hartwell is placed in jail, Bill takes his sledge, batters down the door and rescues the old man. The villagers, led by Deacon Grimes, attempt to drive the Hartwells from the town, but at the height of the battle Rev. David Lane, who believes in practicing what he preaches, extends the hand of brotherhood to young Hartwell.

Bill is stunned by this display of friendship and almost succumbs when the minister invites him home to supper. At the minister's home Bill meets Mary Lane and their love results.

Edward Jones, at heart a crook but ostensibly a salesman of Bibles, attracts the attention of the Ladies' Aid Society. Caught in a compromising position, Mary accepts Jones' proposal of marriage without the knowledge that he has a wife in Chico, an Arizona town where vice flourishes.

Jones flees from Matherville, but Mary follows him, only to find that he and his wife keep a disreputable saloon in Chico. She demands money she has loaned him to invest for her, and he in desperation pleads with her to accept a position as a waitress. She agrees in hopes that she can obtain the money and return to her native village without the brand of a thief.

The climax is reached when Bill Hartwell, whose father has dropped dead, drifts into Chico. Here Bill is mistaken for a horse thief and is about to be lynched by a mob of enraged cowboys when Mary succeeds, after a desperate ride, in reaching the scene in time to save his life. She has no trouble in establishing his innocence by means of a letter which she has obtained from the wife of Jones identifying the actual thief.

The men want Bill to remain in Chico. But finding that Mary has never become the legal wife of Jones, he claims her and takes her back to Matherville as his bride.

William Desmond is Bill Hartwell, while Mary Warren, who so successfully played opposite Desmond in "An Honest Man," will appear as Mary Lane. Thomas N. Heffron directed.

The concluding release is a two-reel Keystone Comedy formerly announced for release under date of May 12.

World Buys "The Unveiled Hand"

World has just purchased a striking story, "The Unveiled Hand," by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, and the work of preparing the continuity for it is now under way.

General Film Triples Line of Pictures

Now Distributing Product of Thirty-One Manufacturers and Is Negotiating with More

GENERAL FILM COMPANY is now releasing the product of thirty-one manufacturers, tripling its list of producing clients since last fall.

From an official of General Film comes a statement reviewing the increase in activities, which accounts for the recent shift of the headquarters to 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York; the removal of the New York exchange to the ninth floor of 729 Seventh avenue, formerly occupied by the Paramount exchange; the removal of the Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington and Montreal exchanges to more desirable quarters, and other improvements.

"General Film Company is able to care for a multitude of big accounts," said the official, "because its sole business is that of a service company. Any motion picture product of merit can find in General Film a route to its market. We are handling now a volume of business such as the company has not had in recent years. This does not show completely in regular weekly releases, because not all of our clients produce on the traditional weekly schedule. In fact, isolated special releases of all lengths are now being routed through our exchanges that formerly were sold through state rights exchanges. The owners of these films are convinced that one statement a week from one responsible concern covering the whole field economically and intensively is just about the right thing.

"General Film did not start its service expansion at the easy end. It started with the biggest undertaking of its career—with the acceptance by 'Hodkinson Service' of General Film as its medium for serving the country with Paralta plays. Our company felt big enough to tackle this and quickly proved itself to be, in that our exchanges already have $1,500,000 worth of business laid out on the product.

"The same smooth running machinery that handles a huge proposition like this is also able to accommodate any amount of other product, and it is doing so.

"General Film's plan for handling releases from many sources in one central organization has benefits that now are thoroughly understood. The chief of these is the elimination of extravagant duplicates in the physical distribution of film.

"Having thirty exchanges, each thoroughly organized and equipped, all directed from headquarters in New York and constantly inspected by a force of travelling auditors and supervisors, the organization finds its task simplified by the more product it handles. Every customer for one product becomes a customer for another. If these were distributed through several exchanges in the same town each sale would have to be made separately at a compound of selling cost instead of a simple one."

The official added that a great deal more new product is under negotiation which will be announced later.

A Thriller the Camera Missed

Joe Rock leaped twenty feet once from one skyscraper to another in making a Vitagraph Big V Comedy and this leap was his record until last week, when he went it a full ten feet better.

There was no director or camera to register the leap, but the way Rock tells it and the evidence he offers are most convincing. Joe was sunning himself outside his cabin on the side of Look-Out mountain, not so far from Hollywood. A ten-foot rattlesnake was doing likewise. The snake knew Joe was there, but Joe's first intimation of the propinquity, as the comedian puts it, was the song of the rattlers. Then it was Joe made the leap in question and just as the snake struck at him. Joe turned the corner of the cabin still in midair and presently returned with his shotgun.

Now, as to the jump being thirty feet. Joe was seated precisely where the snake's head fell when he shot it off. The snake, head and all, was ten feet long and it was just twice his length from the head to the corner of the cabin. And Joe went another ten feet around the corner.

Apfel Starts New Picture

Immediately upon the filming of the final scenes of "Merely Players," Director Oscar Apfel of World Pictures, commenced the direction of Kitty Gordon in "Mandarin's Gold," which was an original story from the pen of Philip Lonorgan and was adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard of the World staff.

Miss Gordon plays the lead and is supported by Irving Cummings, George MacQuarrie, Albert Hart and several others of note. The picture deals with life in Chinatown, New York, and the casting department was confronted with the difficult task of assembling an Oriental cast to support the star.

Star Is Taken for College Girl

Usually mistaken for anything but a screen star when she is away from the Goldwyn studios, Madge Kennedy was amused recently when she visited a New York shop where was not known.

"This is a model very popular with college girls," the saleswoman remarked in showing the little actress a simple dress. Madge Kennedy smiled and said, "But isn't it too youthful for me?"

"I'm sure your mother will like it," answered the clerk. "Why not let me send it on approval?"

When Miss Kennedy gave her name the secret was out, of course, and it caused a ripple of surprised comment.

Next Normand Feature "The Venus Model"

Star Takes Role of Working Girl Who Pulls Business Out of Rut and Makes Man of Owner's Profligate Son

GOLDWYN announces Mabel Normand in the successor of "Joan of Plattsburg." It is "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant.

The title is derived from a bathing suit created by Kitty O'Brien (Mabel Normand), who is employed in the factory of Braddock & Company. The business is going to the dogs by reason of old-fashioned methods, which means that Braddock bathing suits are without the snap and style demanded by alert buyers, of whom Bergman (Alfred Hickman) is the most exacting. And Braddock (Alec B. Francis), the head of the firm, has other troubles. His health is failing, for one thing, and his son Paul (Rodrique LaRoque) is wasting his time at college on associates who can do him no good. Hattie Fanshawe (Una Trevelyn) is the chief parasite.

Kitty has her troubles, too. "Dimples" Briggs (Nadia Gary) is in imminent danger of being taken from the warm-hearted factory girl. Dimples is a child whose scapegrace father turns up at intervals to wring money from Kitty by threatening to take Dimples from her. Briggs (Edward Boulden) makes the lives of both a burden, but Kitty is helpless in her love for the little girl.

But when Braddock goes away for his health the resourceful Kitty determines to straighten out his tangled affairs. She designs a smart bathing dress which she calls "The Venus Model," and against the opposition of the manager, Bagley (Edward Elkas), the model is made up and promptly creates a sensation among the buyers. Kitty is promoted to the exalted post of chief designer and business takes an upward spurt.

Then comes Paul Braddock, touched by a letter written by Kitty explaining the condition of his father. He does not tell the girl who he is, contenting himself with asking for a job. Kitty offers him work and under her tutelage Paul makes himself a useful member of the company.

Paul decides he cannot live without Kitty as his wife and comes to her little home to ask her to marry him. Kitty refuses, resolved to be a successful business woman before she thinks of love. In another room Dimples is struggling in the arms of her father, who means to kidnap her until Kitty comes across with enough money.

Dimples kicks and claws herself free and rushes into the living room, followed by the enraged Briggs. Paul springs to the rescue and a furious fight is waged, Briggs firing at the youth, who falls unconscious. At this point the police enter, on the lookout for Briggs, an old offender.

Then Kitty, fearful that Paul is dead, knows she loves him. When he opens his eyes he realizes that the girl loves him as he loves her.

The return of Braddock, Sr., brings the play to a close. Restored to health and rejoicing in the success of his business, he listens to Kitty's story of the young man who has helped her. The old man regrets that his son has no taste for business. Kitty laughingly flings open the door and introduces to Braddock the new assistant, his own son.

A scene from "Honor's Cross," a Selexart picture starring Rhea Mitchell, which is being distributed through Goldwyn

Gets Western Role to Liking

During the years that Henry B. Walthall, Paralta star, has been one of the most popular players of the silent drama, he has appeared in a great variation of types, from "the little colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation" to a judge of the supreme court of New York State, in "His Robe of Honor."

But until the making of "With Hoops of Steel," Mr. Walthall had never appeared in the role of a cowboy. The reason is easily understood, for Mr. Walthall has never consented to appear in any story the basis of which was overdrawn to any great extent from life as it is really lived.

In "With Hoops of Steel," however, Mr. Walthall has found a story that depicts the life of the cattle ranges of Texas in a true and graphic manner, at the same time containing all the elements of red-blooded action and romance that are needed to carry a story of this kind successfully.

In the role of "Emerson Mead," he portrays the character of a man at the head of independent cattle owners, who have been oppressed by the high-handed methods of a large cattle syndicate. He is accused of murder by the head of the syndicate, and is captured after a series of thrilling incidents.

Circumstantial evidence is so strongly against him that conviction seems certain. Then there comes that twist in the story when gunplay, law and prejudice are swept away by the vindication of the man through love.

Most of the scenes of the picture were taken on the cattle ranges of Texas and in the desert country of Arizona.

World Gets Paul West Story

"The Love Wraith" is the title of a story by Paul West which has just been purchased by World Pictures. It is considered one of the best Mr. West has ever written and he has penned scores of the best stories seen on the screen in addition to writing great quantities of material for various publications.

Since the deal was made Mr. West has been called to England by a cable message from H. P. Davidson, director of the American Red Cross work abroad.

Chaplin's Famous Little Dog Is Dead

Lonesomeness for Absent Master Proves Too Much and "Mutt" Succumbs to Broken Heart

A PALL of sorrow was thrown over the Chaplin studios last week, after every effort of medical science failed to save or even prolong the life of the dearly loved "Mutt," that now nationally famous little white mongrel, co-star with Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life."

After a siege of illness of four weeks' duration, with each day gradually drawing Mutt closer to the end, the petted idol of the comedian is in his final resting place. The veterinary surgeon who watched over the dog with the same care that would have been given a child found his skill no match for a broken heart.

Mutt died of a broken heart and the end was hastened through self-starvation. Although there was everything for Mutt to live for and there was nothing too good for him, the absence of the star, who was devoting his time in the interest of the third Liberty Loan in the southern states, denied the poor little mongrel of the one thing he wanted—the loving attention of his master.

As far as it is known Mutt came into the world friendless. He appeared at the Chaplin plant a cowering and shivering mongrel half scared to death. Charlie befriended the animal and it was not long before they were fast friends. There was no one excepting the comedian who seemed to interest Mutt. The dog was with the star from early morning until long after work was done for the day. Charlie was the only one who could feed him.

Mutt never could get used to Charlie's absence from the studio and no one could make him understand that Charlie would be back some day. Every hour found the little animal anxiously waiting outside of the star's dressing room and each day Mutt's refusal to accept the food that was offered him was the cause of the loss of more strength. Finally he collapsed.

Charlie does not know of Mutt's death. He is recovering from a nervous breakdown brought on by the strenuousness of his Liberty Loan tour and it was feared that the shock would hold back his recovery. It will be sad news for the star. Charlie loved Mutt.

A little mound of earth, close to the spot where Mutt in the character of "Scraps," dug up the purse of money for his master in "A Dog's Life," is the burial ground. The grave is surrounded by old cans, rags, bottles and other refuse. There are no floral tributes, just cans. That was the way Mutt lived. The tombstone is not of granite, but it is an old shoe and on the sole is crudely scratched, "Mutt died April 29 — A Broken Heart."

There is one thing that is certain, if there is a dog heaven, Mutt is there.

Sees War Comrades on Screen

Ovid Dally of West Mansfield, Ohio, an American ambulance driver who recently returned from France, dropped into a motion picture theatre at Springfield, Ohio, the other day to see "Heroic France," the five-reel Mutual war special.

Suddenly he shouted and rose in his seat. On the screen was flashed the picture of a group of American ambulance drivers and among them he recognized two of his comrades. They were Captain Bigelow and Peter Kent.

"I worked with Kent and Bigelow," said Dally, "in Bordeaux and Paris, and it surely did my heart good to get a glimpse of their faces again. I recognized them instantly. In the course of the film I thought I recognized several of the other men with whom I worked, but I was not sure."

Earle Works Hard on New Job

Director William P. S. Early, who is a recent addition to the World forces, has made considerable progress in the filming of "The Blood of the Trevors," a Maravene Thompson story starring Barbara Castleton. Madge Evans, Jack O'Mare, Alice MacWade and Charles Ellison are the major members of the cast.

Exchanges in Theatre Building Barred

Indianapolis City Council Enacts Ordinance That Will Compel One Company at Least to Move

THE Indianapolis City Council has refused to assume responsibility for permitting a film exchange to be operated in the same building where a theatre is located.

The vote has just been taken by the council on a new fire prevention ordinance, introduced at the request of Mayor Charles W. Jewett. Under the terms of the ordinance, which will become effective in a few weeks, the Mutual Film Corporation will be compelled to move out of its quarters above the Keystone Theatre in North Illinois street.

The Keystone is operated by Edward G. Sourbier, county treasurer. At a public hearing on the ordinance Mr. Sourbier asked that the ordinance be changed so as to permit the operation of the film exchange above his house, as he leases the second floor to the film corporation. He declared he would lose $10,000 if he had to break his lease.

The ordinance really grows out of the disastrous Colfax fire which resulted in the death of six persons. A firm, which cleaned motion picture films, had its workshop in the basement of the Colfax building, and the fire started in the workshop. There was a theatre nearby.

From the action of the council and statements of its members, there was no disposition on the part of the individual councilmen to work a hardship on Mr. Sourbier and consideration was given to plans for making the film exchange quarters safe for the employes and the public attending the theater below.

The council decided, however, that the safest thing to do was to pass the ordinance as it was drawn and eliminate the possibility of a catastrophe.

The fire prevention bureau, under the ordinance, will be operated as a division of the city building commissioner's department. The head of the bureau will be known as the director of fire prevention.

The ordinance gives the director power to stop the use of any building which does not comply with the provisions of the amended code.

Seyffertitz to Stay with Lasky

Despite announcements to the contrary, Gustav Seyffertitz, one of the most valued members of the Lasky stock company, will remain with the organization, appearing in Artcraft and Paramount pictures.

"Over the Top" Crowds Bring Out Police

Opening Night at Majestic Theatre in Memphis Finds Mob Storming Box Office—Similar Success Elsewhere

POLICE RESERVES had to be called out in Memphis to restrain the crowds seeking to see "Over the Top" at the Majestic Theatre, according to a telegram received by the Vitagraph Company from Charles McElvray, general manager of the Majestic Amusement Company.

In Syracuse, N. Y., where it ran at the Hippodrome, the picture played to capacity business for two consecutive weeks, thereby recording the longest run of any attraction in the history of Syracuse, according to a wire from A. J. Sardino, manager of the Hippodrome. Syracuse is known in theatrical circles as a "two-day" town, so that this record for "Over the Top" would seem to indicate a remarkable appeal.

"Over the Top," by showing at the Majestic in Memphis for nine days, also hung up a new mark, according to the telegram from Mr. McElvray.

"Congratulations to Vitagraph upon your release of 'Over the Top,' which we ran for nine days with greatest of success," McElvray wired. "It is the only picture we ever ran for week successfully, four days being our maximum. After opening night it was necessary to call for police assistance to handle crowds. Results on 'Over the Top' were revelation to us."

The Syracuse manager wrote in similar vein, his message reading:

"'Over the Top' the greatest picture ever made. I played it for two consecutive weeks to capacity business. This is the longest consecutive run of any attraction in the history of Syracuse. Some of my patrons returned four and five times. Am arranging for return engagement. Wish to compliment Vitagraph on its splendid publicity campaign, which was of immense assistance."

"Over the Top" opened in scores of leading theatres all over the country last week and reports from various sections are along the same lines. It opened for indefinite runs in the Pitt Theatre, Pittsburgh; Majestic, Detroit; Globe, Boston; Alhambra, Los Angeles, and Doric, Kansas City. In Boston, the Massachusetts State Board of Censors made a special dispensation in favor of "Over the Top," permitting it to be shown in the Hub on Sunday.

The Keith and Proctor circuit of theatres in the New York metropolitan district was added to the list of bookings last week, thus bringing into line another of the principal circuits in the New York territory. The big picture is now slated for showing in the Moss, Fox and Keith & Proctor chains.

In several sections of the country patriotic exhibitors have used "Over the Top" in a practical way in aid of the Liberty Loan and War Savings Stamp campaigns.

Billie Rhodes cures her husband of the tobacco habit in the new Strand-Mutual comedy, "My Lady Nicotine."

Manager Wolff of the Temple Theatre in Lawton, Oklahoma, in this way was instrumental in adding more than $40,000 to the Liberty Loan quota for Commanche county. He is scheduled to open with "Over the Top" for a four-day run on May 28. On April 25 he gave it a special screening at which he had four hundred of the leading business men of the town as his guests.

After showing the picture, which aroused the audience to great enthusiasm, he turned the occasion into a Liberty Loan meeting and within fifteen minutes had obtained pledges which the Lawton News in a first page news story said "put Commanche county within sight of its quota."

Many Book "Hearts or Diamonds?"

The increasing popularity of William Russell is reflected in the first-run bookings of "Hearts or Diamonds?" the first production of his own company, William Russell Productions, Inc.

"Fighting Bill's" strenuous type of action in such productions as "The Midnight Trail," "In Bad" and "New York Luck" has made him solid with exhibitors who are looking for pictures with a real "punch," and "Hearts or Diamonds?" has established a record for first-run bookings.

Among the prominent theatres which have booked this drama for first run are: The Stanley, New York; Liberty, Seattle; T & D, San Francisco; Tom Moore, Washington; Strand, Denver; Butterfly, Milwaukee; Green Mill, Dallas; Rialto, Indianapolis; Park, St. Louis; Palace, New Orleans, and Strand, Cleveland.

The Woodlawn and the Drury Lane theatres, new high-class neighborhood houses in Chicago, both opened with "Hearts or Diamonds?" and reported sold-out houses and enthusiastic comments.

Gradwell Now Heads World

Ricord Gradwell, former vice-president and general manager of World Pictures, was elected president and general manager at the annual meeting of the board of directors last week. Joseph L. Rhinock, former president, has been named chairman of the board. Other officers elected are as follows: Vice-president, E. J. Rosenthal; vice-president, Lee Shubert; secretary and treasurer, Briton N. Busch. The following were named members of the finance committee: Joseph L. Rhinock, Ricord Gradwell, Milton J. Work, Paul Stamm and E. J. Rosenthal.

New York Times Lauds "Masks and Faces"

Complains That Wonderful Picture Slipped Into City Without Warning for an Insufficient Run

THE complaint that a photoplay is too modestly advertised by its producers and exhibitors is a rarity so great that most persons would say it never could happen in this much advertised industry. But here is an article from the dignified, conservative New York Times, stating emphatically that "Masks and Faces," the English production handled by World Pictures, is much better than its advertising claims it to be and is so excellent a photoplay that is is worth listing among the remarkable pictures of the year. The comment follows:

"Those who went to Loew's New York Theatre and Roof on Saturday, most of whom undoubtedly went because it was Saturday and not because of any special attraction for them in the modestly advertised feature film, saw a photoplay in which probably more men and women of note connected with the English stage appeared than in any previous screen production.

"Among those whose faces were seen were Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, George Bernard Shaw, Sir James Barrie, Sir Arthur W. Pinero, Irene Vanbrugh, Gladys Cooper, Sir John Hare, Dion Boucicault, Dennis Neilson Terry and Lillah McCarthy.

"The play was 'Masks and Faces,' a screen adaptation of the story of the famous Peg Woffington as narrated in Charles Reade's novel, and it was produced at the instance of a committee of the Academy of Dramatic Art as a means for raising money for the academy's war relief fund.

"As a sort of prologue to the play the members of the committee, including Shaw, Barrie, Pinero, Hare and others, were shown seated around a table discussing plans for increasing their fund. Each rose to make a short speech, and spectators were able to see the celebrities in action. The actors and actresses mentioned above and a number of others appeared as the characters in the play.

"Why a film of such exceptional origin and cast should slip into New York without special arrangements and be shown for one night only as part of a daily changing bill at a house that does not exhibit photoplays in continuous run will be a puzzle to many. The reason, it would seem, cannot be found in the film itself, for, though the photoplay undoubtedly lacks certain elements of appeal for the multitude of movie fans, it has a quality and a character that should make it highly interesting and entertaining for thousands of persons.

"Even if the great names associated with it were unknown, 'Masks and Faces' would be far above the average of photoplays. Although its development lacks smoothness and the story belongs to that old school of extravagant and impossible romance which has little vogue today, one watching the picture does not have to concede any more than in the case of almost any other photoplay, and the art displayed by the actors is a rare delight to any one able to value and appreciate real acting.

"Few in the cast have adequate opportunity for their abilities and some of them do not seem to fit their parts, but a sufficient quantity and quality of first-class acting, as distinct from the capering and grimacing before a camera, remains to make the film decidedly worth while.

"It will be a pity if another and more auspicious exhibition of it is not made here."

Reid Is Victim of Impostor

Wallace Reid, Paramount star, was the target of a mysterious impostor recently. The man made his appearance at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash., where he succeeded in fooling many persons before it was learned that Mr. Reid was busy before the camera. The mustering officer and military police spent three days trying to run down the bogus star, but finally announced that he had vanished.

Keeps Zane Grey Title for Film

Although it was believed at first at the William Fox offices that "Riders of the Purple Sage" would not be retained as the title of the big William Farnum de luxe production now well in hand in the west, Mr. Fox has definitely determined to keep the name of this famous Zane Grey novel for the picturized version.

The chief reason for this decision, Mr. Fox says, is the desire to let exhibitors profit from the wide publicity and word-of-mouth advertising that Mr. Grey's book received.

"There are undoubtedly thousands of persons throughout the country," Mr. Fox declares, "who will welcome the opportunity of seeing the story in film form, although they never read the novel itself. They have heard of its power and were the title changed they probably would not recognize from billboard advertising that the production is really a faithful transcript of the book.

"The temptation was strong to call it 'Lassiter,' after the name of the vigorous and virile character that Mr. Farnum is impersonating. Mr. Farnum himself, however, was one of those who protested against any change."

Mrs. Wilson Praises "My Own United States"

President's Wife Sees Picture at Red Cross Benefit in Harry M. Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre

THE big outstanding event of a patriotic week in Washington was the Red Cross benefit performance at Harry M. Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre, when "My Own United States" was presented before official Washington and a capacity audience that cheered the production to the echo.

The Interstate Commerce Commission Red Cross Auxiliary, a branch of the big central body, which has as members the wives of cabinet officers, senators and other officials, sponsored the event.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson occupied a special box and became so enthused that she not only applauded, but at the conclusion of the showing exclaimed, "This is indeed a wonderful picture."

In boxes arranged on each side of the White House box were Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall, wife of the vice president; Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the secretary of the navy; Mrs. Albert Burleson, wife of the postmaster general; Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the speaker of the house, and Mrs. Ollie James, wife of the senator from Kentucky.

The Knickerbocker, which is one of the finest theatres in the country, was decorated by Arthur L. Robb, the manager. Patriotic bunting was displayed everywhere. Informal receptions were held in the Presidential Promenade, which is one of the most interesting features of theatre service to be found anywhere. This is a long room, decorated in French grey and ivory, containing portraits of all the presidents of the United States.

The screen showing of "My Own United States" was preceded by the recital of "A Man Without a Country," by Colonel Barry Bulkley, one of the directors of the Knickerbocker Theatre Company. Then came the picture. Scarcely half a reel passed before the cheering and applause began. This was continued throughout the presentation and served as a remarkable tribute to the skill of the producer.

"My Own United States" is completing a big week's run at the Casino Theatre, another of the Crandall theatres, and has made a remarkable impression.

Goldwyns Shown on Transports

Goldwyn pictures are to amuse American soldiers on their way to fight the foe in France. In an effort to make the boys' trip across the Atlantic as comfortable and as pleasant as possible, the Community Motion Picture Bureau, acting for the government, has arranged with Goldwyn to have six of its best productions shown for an indefinite period on local transports.

An attractive scene in the new William Fox picture, "True Blue," starring William Farnum.

A Strange List of Extras

Horace Williams, casting director at Metro's west coast studios, declares that "The Demon," Edith Storey's newest starring vehicle, gave him the hardest job of his twelve years' experience in the selection of the cast to support Miss Storey.

Principal characters in the screen romance caused Mr. Williams the least worry. But among those whom Mr. Williams was required to engage, for "bits" and extra work, were the following: One sultan, and women of his harem; one Arab chief and followers, three dozen bewhiskered merchants of Algeria, one dozen Moslem and Christian slaves, one slave auctioneer, twenty fierce Corsican brigands, three nautch dancers, ten Nubian guards, one hundred assorted tourists, the pick of Los Angeles; one goat, one donkey and one Ford!

Film Serves Double Purpose

"My Lady Nicotine," the Mutual-Strand comedy scheduled for release May 21, in addition to being a clever, thoroughly funny Billie Rhodes subject, is a happy piece of propaganda for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

The story is built around the efforts of a young wife to break her husband of smoking. Persuasion failing, she tries patent tobacco cures with serious and laughable results.

The wife's persistence in the face of defeat, however, appeals to the husband's sense of humor and he decides to send all his cigars to the soldiers in France.

The final scene shows a group of tobacco famished "buddies" receiving the cigars in the trenches.

William Hinckley Dead

William Hinckley, one of the most widely known of the younger motion picture actors, in which profession he had been engaged for four years, died last week at Mount Sinai, following an operation. He was 23 years old.

Mr. Hinckley was a member of the Screen Club and several other motion picture organizations.

Lytell Writes Scenario

Now it's Bert Lytell, writer, as well as Bert Lytell, actor. The young film star, who until recently was a matinee idol of the legitimate stage, is co-author of the scenario of "No Man's Land," which, following "The Trail to Yesterday," will be his second Metro picture. Mr. Lytell collaborated with A. S. Le Vino in adapting a novel by Louis Joseph Vance.

Confirms Pauline Frederick's Change

Willard Mack, Star's Husband, Joins Goldwyn Too as Head of Scenario Department

FOLLOWING the publication in the east of dispatches from Los Angeles giving Willard Mack as authority for the report that Pauline Frederick pictures shortly will be produced by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company and distributed through Goldwyn, Mr. Mack, who is Miss Frederick's husband, confirmed this statement when seen at his New York home.

Going still further, Mr. Mack revealed that he had assumed personal charge of Goldwyn scenario department, with his offices at the company's studios in Fort Lee.

Mr. Mack's association with Goldwyn is not the first appearance of this playwright in the field of motion picture production or editing, his affiliation with the screen having begun in the days of the Biograph Company and continued virtually without interruption since that time.

While busily engaged during the last four years in writing some of the theatrical hits of the past decade, such as "Kick In," "Broadway and Buttermilk," "King, Queen, Jack" and "Tiger Rose," Mr. Mack has constantly contributed stories to the screen. In 1917 alone twenty-seven of his screen plays were picturized and released.

"I should say that I am merely returning to the motion picture field in a newer and bigger environment," he said when seen at his home in New York.

"Further interest is added to the step I have taken by the fact that in the course of my work I have been able to select and obtain for production the first three stories for Miss Frederick, who, as you know, is Mrs. Mack.

"Miss Frederick, at the termination of her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be starred by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company, recently formed, and her productions will be released through Goldwyn. When she begins work she will be under my personal direction."

William Desmond, Triangle star.

New Lytell Play Progresses

Bert Lytell is making excellent progress on "No Man's Land," his second picture as a Metro star. Will S. Davis, the director, Mr. Lytell, Anna Q. Nilsson, the star's leading woman, and other members of the cast spent two days on location on the far-famed Adolphus Busch estate, in the heart of "millionaire's row" on Orange Grove avenue, Pasadena, and obtained a number of beautiful exterior "shots."

"No Man's Land" is a story of love and thrilling adventure. It is not a war story, the title being descriptive of a mysterious island off the Pacific coast.

Select Forced to Reprint "Over There"

Feature Goes Especially Well in Denver, Where America Theatre Packs House Four Days Straight

SELECT'S patriotic photodrama, "Over There," is in such great demand these stirring days that the corporation has been forced to reprint the subject.

Many prints are being made on a rush order and shipped as fast as ready to the territories most in need of them. The first batch goes to New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Seattle, Omaha and Denver, the five cities where the need for extra prints is most pressing.

In the Denver territory "Over There" has been riding to success on the popular wave of patriotism, which has helped to put this territory over so well in all war measures. An ovation which was accorded this picture when it was shown at the America Theatre in Denver has been duplicated in scores of theatres in the Denver territory. At the America—Denver's largest house—the theatre was sold out from the time the show opened in the morning until it closed during a period of four days.

Rendition of George M. Cohan's immortal marching song, "Over There," was made a feature of this showing, as it has been in almost all cases.

Since it is no easy matter to keep such a large house packed for four days, it is interesting to know how Manager Talbot went at his problem.

Instead of being afraid to play up the fact that "Over There" contains war scenes, he used printers' ink and advertising space to inform the Denver community of this fact and of all of the patriotic angles to the picture. Then he booked Cook's Drum Corps, a famous musical organization, and one of the largest drum corps in the United States, to appear simultaneously with the picture.

The drum corps, of course, played "Over There" and all of its known variations constantly. Between numbers, the audience was moved to the point where it rose and sang "The Marseillaise," "Star Spangled Banner" and other patriotic airs of the allies.

The result was that Mr. Talbot's theatre cleaned up.

Increase Select Runs

M. Kashin, the well-known Brooklyn exhibitor who owns the high-grade Marcy Avenue Theatre, has expressed his approval of Select Pictures by asking for an extension of the length of runs in his theatre under his Select contracts.

"After playing Select releases for one day," said Mr. Kashin, "I found it impossible to handle all the people. It resulted that I was forced to book your releases for two days. That was a month ago. However, I must request in this letter that you mail me contracts to cover a three-day run on your future releases. This request has been made necessary for two reasons: Scientific advertising and the quality of the goods which backed it."

Baby Actress in Big Role

Norma Haas, the child actress who played "Dearie" in the Metro production, "The Claim," starring Edith Storey, will be seen again in the star's forthcoming picture, "The Demon." Little Miss Haas is still on the sunny side of five years. She has the part of the heroine, Perdita, when at the age of six she is sold in an Algerian slave market. Miss Storey enacts the role of Perdita grown to womanhood on the island of Corsica, where she finally wins the love of the man who had "bought" her.

Irene Castle Again on Pathe Program

"The Mysterious Client" Presents Star in Picture That Gives Fresh Evidence of Her Ability

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT," with Irene Castle, Episode No. 11 of the Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," the second chapter of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series, Harold Lloyd in "Two-Gun Gussie" and Hearst-Pathe news reels comprise the Pathe program for the week of May 19.

Judging by advance announcements of "The Mysterious Client," Irene Castle has displayed fresh evidence of her acting talent and the new release, in which the star is supported by Milton Sills and Warner Oland, is said to be her most interesting picture.

"The Mysterious Client" is an Astra production in five reels and was directed by Fred Wright. The plot is a consistently gripping one, and the feature has been beautifully mounted.

The eleventh episode of "The House of Hate" is called "Haunts of Evil" and the intrepid star has thrills aplenty. Miss White disguises herself as a woman of the underworld and camps on the trail of the Hooded Terror. There is a startling denouement guaranteed to make the twelfth episode a thing to wait for with expectancy.

Part II of "Britain's Bulwarks" is called "Messines and Its Irish Captors," and shows Messines and Wyschaste during the storming and capture by the North and South Irish regiments and Canadians. The picture shows the ruins of the villages, the indomitable Irish troops proudly carrying the trophies seized from the Huns, troops in action and resting up after one of the bloodiest battles in history.

"Two-Gun Gussie" has to do with a youth who graduates from a musical conservatory to become a jazz lizard in the "Howling Poodle Tango Bar." He buys a book of rules on "How to Be Tough," so that he may enter into the general gaiety of the place, and when he really begins to believe he can eat nails without getting indigestion, the action becomes fast and furious.

Arbuckle Likes New Picture

The romantic theme of his latest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Moonshine," released May 13, and the familiarity of the American public with the subject, is counted upon by "Fatty" Arbuckle to make this the most popular picture he has produced.

"Fatty" plays the part of a "light-footed" government sleuth who invades the territory of the grim mountaineers and feudists who acknowledge no law, and the bulkiness of his anatomy forces him to the use of ingenious camouflage. "Buster" Keaton is his valiant assistant.

Vitagraph Players Face Busy Schedule

New Subjects Chosen for Alice Joyce, Earle Williams, Gladys Leslie, Harry Morey, Shipman and Whitman

ALICE JOYCE, who is expected to complete her work in "Find the Woman," the O. Henry romance of New Orleans, during the present week, is scheduled to start next on "To the Highest Bidder," according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Smith says he purchased "To the Highest Bidder," a novel by Florence Morse Kingsley, as one of the best stories Miss Joyce has had since joining Vitagraph. Tom Terriss will direct her.

In addition to this play, Mr. Smith also has in contemplation for Miss Joyce another O. Henry play, the title of which he is not prepared to make public.

For Earle Williams, several strong plays have been picked out, his next vehicle after "The Girl in His House" being "The Man from Brodneys," which will be directed by James Young. This has been called the best story which George Barr McCutcheon ever wrote and was read by millions in book form.

Other works in preparation for him include "Out of the Dark," an original story by Roma Raymond and Jane Dixon, and "A Gentleman of Quality" from the pen of Frederic Van Rensselaer Roy.

With "Baree, Son of Kazan" completed, Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman began work about two weeks ago on "A Gentleman's Agreement," by Wallace Irwin, and they are now said to be well advanced with its production under the direction of David Smith.

Two other plays are in prospect for this company, one being an O. Henry play, "A Matter of Mean Elevation." This story has been specially built and probably will bear a more graphic title when it is produced. "By the World Forgot," a powerful story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, also is ready for this company.

Gladys Leslie, working under the direction of Martin Justice, will begin work this week on "The Rebel," an original story by Douglas Bronston. She completed "The Scoop Girl" last week and no time was lost in starting her on the new feature.

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe and a strong supporting cast under direction of Paul Scardon, is working on "Tangled Lives," by James Oliver Curwood, and as soon as he finishes this feature will begin work on "Fiddler's Green." This story, written by Donn Byrne, ran in the Saturday Evening Post not long ago and is pronounced an exceptionally fine subject for Morey.

Viola Is a Clever "Boy"

Viola Dana, in "The Only Road," which follows "Riders of the Night" and "Breakers Ahead" in the Metro program, cuts her hair short for a number of the closing scenes. After snipping her curls and donning boy's attire Miss Dana is mistaken for a youth, and a pretty girl in the photodrama flirts with her—that is, "him."

Rothapfel Eager For Petrova Pictures

Writes President Collins That "Daughter of Destiny" and "The Light Within" Had High Box-Office Value

AN announcement was made last week by the Petrova Picture Company that Madame Olga Petrova's two forthcoming productions, "The Life Mask" and "Tempered Steel," will be seen at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, during the next six weeks.

"The Life Mask," the third special vehicle in which Madame Petrova appears, has been booked by S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli, for an engagement at the Rialto the week of May 12. "Tempered Steel," Madame Petrova's fourth special feature, will be presented at either the Rialto or Rivoli during the early part of June.

Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, has received the following letter from Mr. Rothapfel:

Dear Mr. Collins:

Since our recent talk, I have been looking over my Rialto attendance records again and find that the Petrova figures are even better than I told you.

During the four months I have played two Petrova Pictures, "Daughter of Destiny" and "The Light Within," the former played to more money than any other picture, save one, which has appeared at the Rialto during the period; and the latter played to more money than any other picture, except "Daughter of Destiny" and the one picture referred to above. In other words, your two pictures rank second and third in point of box office value, over a period of eighteen weeks.

These facts, together with my admiration for Madame Petrova as an artist, lead me to accept, with pleasure, your very kind offer to allow my theatres to continue presenting Petrova pictures, notwithstanding the severance of my relations with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) S. L. ROTHAPFEL,
Managing Director.

Madame Petrova is now preparing to go on a tour of the country in the interest of War Savings Stamps, following the completion of her fifth special production, "Patience Sparhawk."

Sets Record in Denver

All attendance records for Saturday, Denver's biggest picture day, were broken by Alice Brady's newly released Select Picture, "At the Mercy of Men," at Denver's biggest playhouse, the America Theatre. The two entrances to this huge playhouse, one on Curtis street and one on Sixteenth street, became jammed early in the evening, with the result that every possible person who could pack himself into the huge auditorium was admitted between eight o'clock and closing time. When the day's receipts were counted, "At the Mercy of Men" had set a new record.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

George Kleine writes:

"There is a statement published in the Exhibitor's Trade Review, Volume 22, page 1738, to the effect that the General Film Company 'has taken over the business of the George Kleine Exchange in New York.'

"This statement is untrue, and as far as I know not the slightest attempt was made by the paper to verify it. It is in line with another statement printed to the effect that I had sold my Canadian business to one Mr. Smeraldi. This was also untrue, and the paper printed it without attempting to verify the alleged fact.

"The least that a responsible publication can do when it hears such reports is to verify them before publication.

"For your information I will add:

"I have not sold nor do I contemplate selling my film distributing business operating under my name and the trade name 'George Kleine System.' This business is being conducted conservatively and is as sound as any in the industry.

"On January 1, I changed releases from the program system to superfeatures and short length features released at irregular intervals. We have had some of the most conspicuous successes of the year including 'The Unbeliever,' 'Ruggles of Red Gap,' 'A Pair of Sixes,' 'Brown of Harvard,' the Flagg Comedies, etc.

"We have coming a number of big features not yet advertised, among them a great Italian war picture made by Cines at Rome at the instance of the department of war and munitions of Italy; also 'Young America,' a Cohan & Harris play, and 'Hawthorne of the U. S. A.'

"In Canada our offices are about to be merged with those of the General Film Company; they have not sold out to me nor I to them, the merger maintaining the interests of both parties and involves economy of operation only."

Harry Raver, president of the Showman's League of America, writes:

"Through the columns of your valuable publication I wish, on behalf of the Showmen's League of America, to express appreciation for the splendid support given to our Showmen's Hospital Benefit at the Hippodrome (New York) by the representative men and women of the motion picture profession who so unselfishly aided in making the event a success.

"As chairman of the motion picture division of the ticket committee, I sent through the mails an appeal for recognition of our effort to provide hospital care for showmen in adverse circumstances who become ill, and was overwhelmed by the generous and wholehearted response.

"Not only did the best blood of the industry respond financially, but I was made happy in the knowledge that they used their seats and assisted in filling the huge Hippodrome to capacity. That, in spite of dozens of other benefit performances, the Liberty Loan Drive and other appeals for funds, our undertaking was a tremendous success, we of the Showmen's League feel duly proud, but more particularly so because the first appeal I have ever made to the motion picture profession was answered so generously and freely.

"And when it is considered that some $70,000 worth of Liberty Bonds were sold to our audience and that members of the motion picture industry subscribed for at least one-third of the amount, there is added reason for exultation."

Coffey Brothers, owners of the Cozy theatre at Marinette, Wisconsin, write:

"We can't say too much for the manager of the Mutual Film Exchange at Milwaukee, as we have been doing business with him for two years and find him to work for the interest of the exhibitor in every respect. You can't beat their service during the past winter. Train service in this locality wasn't the best owing to snow blockades, but our Mutual manager at Milwaukee was always a day ahead of the storm with his program. Their pictures are the very best and the films in best condition."

Brevoort Theatre Opens

An invitation audience filled the 2,500 seats of the new Brevoort Theatre, Bedford avenue off Fulton street, Brooklyn, when this photoplay rendezvous threw open its doors for the first time.

The new playhouse is under the management of A. H. Schwartz, who controls the Rialto and Linden theatres in the Flatbush section, Brooklyn. These theatres are under the immediate management of William Price. They were built under the personal supervision of Harry Schwartz, now in training at Camp Upton.

The initial program at the Brevoort had as its special features Charles Chaplin's latest comedy, "A Dog's Life," and the Metro feature, "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly.

Norma Talmadge a Hard Worker

Norma Talmadge is not in the self-indulgent class. Having worked at top speed for six weeks to complete "De Luxe Annie" in time for advance showing the middle part of May, according to the Select schedule, Miss Talmadge has plunged at once into a new production. "De Luxe Annie" was finished Friday afternoon. The new picture was started promptly at nine o'clock Monday morning.

This picture was to have been directed by the Franklin Brothers, but C. M. Franklin has been called to service and the production is being directed by Sid Franklin alone.

West Penn Company Formed

The West Penn Photoplay Company has been formed at New Castle, Pennsylvania, to exhibit pictures in that city. It has taken over the Regent and Star theatres of New Castle, and Charles Freeman, former proprietor, is general manager of the new company's local interests.

The company, capitalized at $100,000, intends to branch out and annex theatres in other cities. A. Goldman, of the Monarch Theatre, Euclid avenue, Cleveland, is one of the members.

Anita Stewart Narrowly Escapes Death

Star's Auto Is Struck by Street Car in Brooklyn and Hurled Against Bus Carrying Extra Players

ANITA STEWART, with her director, Wilfrid North, and members of the Vitagraph Company working with her on "The 'Mind-the Paint' Girl," narrowly escaped death in an automobile accident last week when returning to the studio from location. The car in which they were riding was struck by a speeding trolley car at Sixteenth street and Third avenue, Brooklyn, and hurled against a motor bus in which were riding twelve extra members of the company.

Miss Stewart suffered an injury to her head and neck and was badly bruised about the body; Mr. North's foot and head were injured and Virginia Nordon, another passenger, suffered bruises. Both girls suffered so from shock that they had to be put under the care of a physician. Eight in the bus were hurt, two girls being hurled to the ground.

George Stewart, the fifteen-year-old brother of Vitagraph's star, who is working in the picture, was saved from death by the prompt action of Miss Nordon. Young Stewart was thrown from the tonneau of the star's car and was plunging headlong to the ground when Miss Nordon caught him and drew him back.

All of the injured were rushed to the studio, where Albert S. Smith, president of the company, was waiting for them with a physician. He had been notified by telephone and had the emergency hospital made ready. After receiving first aid treatment all were taken home.

Mr. Smith said it was a wonder Miss Stewart and the others in her car were not killed and credited their escape to the fact that the motor bus prevented the smaller machine from turning over. He said Miss Stewart exhibited excellent nerve and after a day's rest was ready to resume work.

There was only a brief interruption in "The 'Mind-the Paint' Girl," which will be the first of the special series of Anita Stewart pictures contemplated by Vitagraph. The Frohman Company, from which the rights were purchased, has been lending Vitagraph assistance in the matter of suggestion and Mr. Smith is authority for the statement that this will be the greatest picture in which Miss Stewart ever has appeared.

Symphony Nears Completion

With amazing speed and thoroughness, augmented forces of carpenters, electricians and concrete workers are rapidly completing the new Symphony Theatre of New York, which Aubrey M. Kennedy of Kennedy Theatres, Inc., is building at Broadway and Ninety-fifth Street. Threatened delays about the date of opening this addition to Manhattan's fine theatres have been practically dispelled.

Mr. Kennedy and his general manager, Charles M. Cole, have "camped" on the premises day and night and no workman on the building has been more untiring in his efforts to establish a new record in theatre building than has either of those officials.

As a result the finishing touches are about to be given to the house and soon the actual date of its opening will be announced.

Many innovations in theatrical appointments and equipment will prove agreeable surprises to the Symphony patrons. Every detail providing for dignified comfort has been thoroughly studied out and provided and already applications for reservations for the opening night and for succeeding weeks are pouring in to the Symphony offices.

Minter Play Honored

After a personal preview of "A Bit of Jade," the recent American-Mutual release starring Mary Miles Minter, Sidney Grauman booked it for first run in Los Angeles for Grauman's new million dollar picture palace.

Bessie Barriscale Plays Juvenile Role

"Rose O' Paradise" Affords Star Many Opportunities to Score Heavily by Emotion and Charm

A BRAND new characterization is promised by Bessie Barriscale in her seven act adaptation of Grace Miller White's popular American novel, "Rose O' Paradise," which is her forthcoming Paralta play.

"Rose O' Paradise" was recognized among the "best sellers" upon its publication several years ago and it is declared to have taken its place alongside "Tess of the Storm Country," by the same authoress, as one of the most delightful stories of the past decade. It is one of those ingratiating tales that holds the interest from the start and enthralls with its vivid characterizations.

The story concerns the adventures of a little optimist, Jinny Singleton, rightful heiress to a fortune left by her mother, but made victim of a chain of unpleasant circumstances by her scheming uncle. Jinny is sent by her dying father to live with Lafe Grandoken, an old cobbler, who was formerly a gardener in the employ of the family. On the way, she meets Theodore King, a wealthy and upright man, who lives in the vicinity of the cobbler's shop and who is fascinated by the little girl.

Later, Jinny is annoyed by Maulding Bates, the town bully, who persists in his unwelcome attentions, until one day he is soundly thrashed by King. Morse, Jinny's uncle, learning of Bates' grudge against King and the girl, conspires with him to get them out of the way, in order that he may obtain complete possession of Jinny's inheritance. But Bates becomes embroiled in a controversy with Morse, and, for revenge, goes to the cobbler's to inform him of Morse's plan. Morse follows him there and shoots him. He then kidnaps Jinny and conceals her in a deserted house.

The cobbler is arrested for the crime and Jinny escapes just in time to reach the court room to save the old cobbler and to learn of King's love for her.

In the role of Jinny, Miss Barriscale has added another triumph to her already long list of screen successes. The part offers her countless opportunities to score heavily, not alone with her emotional powers, but with her effervescent personality as well. She has invested the story with all the charm and sweetness that has won for her such a host of friends the world over.

Northwest Exhibitors Active

either prior to or after October, 1917, because, he said, the national revenue officers had informed him that the producers were supposed to pay a war tax on film and that when exhibitors paid exchanges fifteen cents per reel that it was doing nothing less than letting the producers off without paying one cent of tax.

Mr. Pettijohn added that he believed a good test case would bring about results that would mean a saving of millions of dollars to exhibitors. J. A. Sherwood, Madison, Wis., president of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' League, repeated Mr. Pettijohn's statements and urged a test case.

An auditing committee composed of W. G. True and T. E. Hansing, Minneapolis, and Frank Nemec, St. Cloud, Minn., was appointed to examine the secretary and treasurer's reports previous to their reading May 8.

The final day's sessions opened with a rush. The grievance committee reported having successfully settled all grievances at hand. The secretary's report was read and adopted. It showed 172 members in good standing, 78 in arrears and thirty-two new names added to the roster. The treasurer's report showed there was $370.44 in the treasury at convention time.

When Chairman W. A. Steffes of the by-laws committee began reading its recommendations he met stiff opposition. When he urged changing of clause No. 4, which provides for the election of officers by the board of directors, he was informed by two delegates that neither the by-laws committee nor the delegates could effect such a change owing to state laws. Mr. Steffes replied that he had had legal advice on the subject and that such action was permissible.

Heated debate followed and the chair appointed a committee to obtain legal advice. The by-laws arguments were renewed at the final session, but ended suddenly when an attorney upheld the views of Mr. Steffes' opposition.

While the ballots for the board of directors were being counted, Thomas D. Schall, blind congressman from Minnesota, addressed the convention on patriotism. Frank Rembusch, Joseph Hopp, Lee Ochs, C. C. Pettijohn, Thomas Furniss, Thomas J. Hamlin, Rose Tapley, Jesse Goldburg and various local exchange managers also addressed the convention.

Tuesday evening exhibitors were guests of the Goldwyn exchange at a trade showing in the Gold Room, Hotel Radisson, and of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit at a showing of "My Four Years in Germany" at the Metropolitan.

World Gets Line on Best Type of Pictures

Canvasses Country Through Salesmen and as a Result Will Concentrate on Stories of Lighter Vein

ONE of the strangest conferences in the history of the industry has just been conducted, through the mail, by World Pictures.

To get a comprehensive idea of the wants of exhibitors during war times World asked all of its salesmen to give their honest opinion of just what the organization should be turning out.

As the result of this conference and a careful survey of picture conditions in England, France and Italy, World determined to increase its output by the addition of the Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler comedies and to produce pleasing pictures of civil life, reflecting hope, optimism and uplift instead of the sordid and tragic phases of life.

Of course, there will be occasional war pictures, depicting the tense, dramatic phases of the war, but these will not be morbid or depressing.

In making these plans World feels that motion pictures in the coming months will more than do their bit in maintaining the nation's high morale, in giving the war burdened population cheerful, refreshing amusement and in emphasizing the fact that eventually the American boys will be back to resume their former normal life.

In England the theatres have become so important that the government has reduced their taxes so that they can continue to operate and in France the theatres have been subsidized.

An Attack and Defense of Pictures

recently. If I went back to 1917, I would have to pay extra postage on this letter.

If what you say is true—"If any author wants $1,000 a year the movie man will have a fit"—then, we must by this time be a mad-house of epileptics, for it is hardly probable that any of these "plasterers and teamsters" would be satisfied with the wages which you say are the union scale. It is junk such as your editorial that holds us back when we need encouragement.

We are trying our best to get good stories. We are paying a pile of money for them, and we are frank to admit that it's no easy job to pick them. Instead of your unfair criticism, we should be getting your help, because the motion picture is the universal amusement and it is up to all editorial writers to make that amusement better. They can't do it by criticism that is so inconsistent that nobody believes it.

Sit right down now and give me a list of novels or plays that you think would make great motion pictures. Give me a list of authors who would be willing to write for motion pictures if they were given their own price. We will not only be grateful for your suggestions, but will go after the stuff. I think if you make out a list we will be able to show you that either a great many of them have already been produced and that you didn't happen to see them, or that for some good reason—not our reason but a reason that you will admit is sound—they will not make good motion pictures.

Consider the drama. All of it—vaudeville, stock companies, New York productions and Omaha productions. Average them all up and I think you will find that the quality of the motion picture stories is higher than the quality of those produced on the stage.

That's all. I didn't mean to be rough in this letter. I'm just bouncing back your own language to you.

Petrova Takes New Role

A radical departure from the type of role usually portrayed by Madame Olga Petrova will be found when "Tempered Steel" is released for public view.

Written especially for the star by George Middleton, author of the Broadway success, "Polly With a Past," Madame Petrova's fourth special feature is an out and out melodramatic thriller.

The role of Lucille Caruthers, which Madame Petrova depicts, is that of a stage-struck southern society girl who suddenly finds herself involved in the mad whirl of theatrical life in Manhattan. Through a chain of peculiar circumstances she finds herself guilty in the eyes of the law of murder.

In the working out of the various dramatic emotions which abound throughout the picture, Madame Petrova is called upon to furnish acting of the most realistic variety. Her thousands of screen admirers will be delighted to find a versatility as odd as it is surprising.

There are several sensational and exciting scenes in "Tempered Steel" which will make a direct appeal to so-called "movie audiences" and the picture may be classed as one of the real melodramatic features of the present year.

Toledo Theatres Organize

Toledo theatre and picture house managers have formed what will be known as the Toledo Amusement Managers' Association, with Joe Pearlstein of Keith's Theatre as president. Other officers are:

Vice-president, H. B. McLelland; secretary, A. J. Beck; treasurer, E. H. Klink; directors, E. H. Gerstle, Carl Kneiser and A. Horwitz. C. K. Friedman has been retained as legal advisor.

Film Inspectors

Difficulties have arisen in Dallas, Texas, between the film inspectors and the exchange managers. The girls who inspect the films for the Dallas exchanges were urged to form a union. The managers objected to some of the demands and many of the girls struck.

they like it or not, each of them will eventually have to find some way to reduce or distribute it.

"The centralization of distribution would result in a saving to the industry in both distributing and producing costs of somewhere in the neighborhood of $350,000 to $450,000 weekly. That amounts to around $20,000,000 a year, which might be saved and which is now entirely lost. That is interest on quite a tidy sum, as you can doubtless figure.

"As far as Metro is concerned, however, we have made no alliance with any of the other concerns, though it would be premature to say so even if we had.

"All I care to say now about this phase of the matter is that if any such combination is in process of organization, Metro will at least consider forming part of it."

In the absence of Samuel Goldfish, head of Goldwyn, who is now on the coast, the vice-president, Frederick B. Warren, would only make a brief statement, denying emphatically that Goldwyn was one of the companies included in the reported combination.

"I feel I can state positively, on behalf of Mr. Goldfish," said Mr. Warren, "that Goldwyn has no intention of allying itself with any other organization or association of distributing and producing interests. We have gone ahead alone and we shall continue to do so. Of course we have heard about the reported merger, but it does not affect us, nor have we, as far as I know, and I am sure I would know if such had been the case, participated in any conferences relating to it."

A statement of similar character was made in behalf of President Brunet of Pathe.

Percy Waters, one of the best known men in the industry, as an official of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, stated that the company had not been approached in the matter and as far as he knew had made no new affiliations of the character reported.

"It may be that the report of this new incorporation has some foundation," he said, "for such a booking arrangement would have tremendous advantages, economic as well as otherwise, for all concerned, but if so, we have not heard any details. I believe, however, that some such re-adjustment of the distributing interests in the industry cannot be long deferred under present conditions."

Other well-known film men also professed ignorance of the reported merger, but declined to make any statement for publication at this time.

"There is nothing in it, at least as yet," said one of these, who insisted that his name should not be used. "But if there were you can readily understand that any statement at this time would be premature.

"Many things may happen in the next sixty or ninety days which would make it very unwise for any companies who might be or wish to be affiliated with such a distributing organization to announce the fact and until all could announce it, none should do so."

"Devil's Wheel" Pleases Convicts

George Gordon Wade, writing in the Star Bulletin, the periodical published at Sing Sing, pays high compliment to "The Devil's Wheel," a recent Gladys Brockwell picture shown to the inmates.

"The Devil's Wheel," the review says, "is absorbingly interesting, for it moves quickly and smoothly throughout; and the situations are developed and produced with a naturalness that enlivens the telling of a gripping story."

Franklins to Direct Norma Talmadge

Talented Brothers Come to Select After Turning Out Successful Fairy Stories for William Fox

NORMA TALMADGE has obtained the Franklin Brothers to direct her next picture.

Among the men who have achieved signal success as directors the names of C. M. and S. A. Franklin are very prominent. The acquisition of this team by Miss Talmadge is therefore another step in the perfection of her series of Select Pictures, in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

The Franklin Brothers, although both young in years, have had a full experience in the field of the screen. They directed Miss Talmadge in some of her earliest successes, when the Select star was enrolled under the Triangle banner. Among the later productions they have directed are "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" and other productions of William Fox.

The Franklins, not content with their achievements in the directing end, cooperate to an unusual extent with the scenario writer by actually collaborating with him in the preparation of the continuity.

This experience is standing them in good stead in this production, for Paul West, who was retained to write the scenario, recently made a sudden decision to sail for France and see active service. His departure, therefore, has thrown almost the entire preparation of the script onto the directors. Mr. West, it will be remembered, was the scenarioist for "De Luxe Annie."

Theatre Fire Costly

A fire starting in the film room of the Victoria Theatre, Three Rivers, Quebec, destroyed the theatre and then spread to the business and residential section of the city, causing a large property loss.

Paramount-Artcraft Honors J. W. Allen

Promotes Him From Position as San Francisco Manager to Special Representative, Effective at Once

J. W. ALLEN, formerly manager of the San Francisco office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been promoted to the position of special representative to exchanges and has just arrived in New York to assume his new duties.

Myron H. Lewis, formerly manager of the Los Angeles exchange, has been made manager of the San Francisco office, and J. J. Halstead, formerly assistant manager at Los Angeles, has been made manager of that office.

Just prior to his departure, Mr. Allen was given a farewell dinner in the Italian Room of the St. Francis Hotel, which was attended by all the local exchangemen and leading exhibitors.

Mr. Allen takes over his new duties after eleven years' association with the motion picture industry, during which time he was chiefly connected with the exchange business. He started at the bottom, as an operator, and later became an exhibitor, thus gaining actual experience in this branch of the industry, which proved a great assistance to him later.

Mr. Allen has been managing exchanges for the past seven years, his early experience in this field of the business having been gained as a booker and salesman. In fact, he has filled practically every position in the exhibiting and exchange fields and has a thorough knowledge of the business from the showman's viewpoint as well as from the distributor's angle.

For the past three years Mr. Allen has been manager of the San Francisco branch handling Paramount and Artcraft pictures under District Manager Herman Wobber. In 1915 his office won Paramount's first prize in the contest for the greatest amount of business obtained in ninety days. In addition to a silver cup, his office was given $1,000 from Paramount and $1,000 from Mr. Wobber to divide among the staff.

In 1917 Mr. Allen made a trip to China, Japan and the Philippine Islands covering a period of six months during which time he placed the Paramount product in these countries. He is the first exchange manager to institute the direct-by-mail campaign to the theatre patron in behalf of the exhibitor, which is now widely used throughout the industry.

In speaking of Mr. Allen's promotion, Walter E. Greene, managing director of distribution, said:

"Widely known and liked and thoroughly acquainted with exchange and exhibiting problems, Mr. Allen in his new work will prove another strong link in the chain of Famous Players-Lasky service now rapidly culminating in a standard of value, marking a new era in the annals of the motion picture distribution world."

Marion Davies Film Due Soon

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses," the first production undertaken by the Marion Davies Film Company, to exploit the beauty whose name it bears, is well under way at the Biograph studios in New York and is now definitely promised for release early in June.

Julius Steger, who is giving his undivided attention to the production, has surrounded Miss Davies with a cast that is remarkable—Wilette Kershaw, leading woman in many Broadway dramatic successes, including the successful series of short dramas presented by the Princess Players at the Princess Theatre; George Le Guere, one of the best known juveniles and now appearing in "Business Before Pleasure"; Harry Benham, popular Broadway matinee idol, and at present leading man of "The Rainbow Girl," and Edward O'Connor, one of the finest character actors on the American stage, now playing in "Sick-a-Bed."

Mae Marsh Features Switched

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the substitution of "All Woman," a dramatic story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, as its Mae Marsh release for June 2 in place of "The Glorious Adventure." The last-named production will be the subsequent Marsh release.

Signs are nothing in the life of Johnnie Hines, World star. He smokes where he chooses.

New Book About Pictures

A new book called "The Art of Photoplay Making," by Victor Oscar Freeburg, has just been published by the MacMillan Company. It treats motion pictures as a new and distinct art form, allied to both painting and the drama.

The book is the latest and one of the most scholarly volumes on the subject of pictures and is very interesting because the author takes concrete examples of recent productions and discusses them from the standpoint of artistic worth.

The book is illustrated by reproductions of stills from the pictures described. Anyone who has been interested in the recent developments in the art of the photoplay will enjoy the discussion.

The growing number of books of such merit to the literature of motion pictures is gratifying to admirers of screen plays and further illustrates the fact that the art has outgrown its "infancy."

Such a book as this will have the effect of arousing a greater interest in photoplays among the higher classes of people, who can do much in aiding development of the industry.

The book sells for $2.

Won't Cut Griffith Feature

"Hearts of the World" seems to be aiding in the war for a free screen in more than one city. At the same time that it was causing trouble for Chicago's censor czar, it was a storm center in Philadelphia.

Elliott, Comstock and Gest have won the first point in their attempts to show the David Wark Griffith feature in that city uncensored. Common Pleas Court No. 4 has handed down an order restraining the Pennsylvania Board of Censors from eliminating certain scenes from the film production, and in consequence the picture is to be seen at the Garrick Theatre. The entire Board of Judges rendered the verdict after seeing the scenes objected to by the censors.

The legal aspects of the case grew out of the determination of the producers not to remove the scenes with which the censors take issue, and in consequence the premiere was postponed, although a large invitation audience saw the production and expressed approval.

"The Power and the Glory" Begun

June Elvidge, World star, has joined Director Lawrence C. Windom in South Carolina, where the latter is busy picturizing "The Power and the Glory." The cast includes Madge Evans, Albert Hart and two well-known juvenile actors, Charley Jackson and Sheridan Handy.

Latest News of State Rights Productions

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Ernest Shipman Announces New Picture

Majority of 52-a-Year Schedule Already Acquired and Remainder Are Assured by Plans Made or in the Making

AN ANNOUNCEMENT by Ernest Shipman carries the names of numerous pictures for the current year, including twelve from the W. H. Clifford Company, featuring Shorty Hamilton in his new five-reel comedies; six from the Francis Ford Producing Company, which has already released "Berlin via America"; twelve from the Josh Binney Company, featuring Funny Fatty Filbert in a series of two-reel comedies; "A Nugget in the Rough," a five-reel western comedy drama; "Trooper 44," featuring the state police of Pennsylvania; "The Tiger of the Sea," a seven-reel story from the pen of Nell Shipman, and six features from the Titan Feature Photoplay Company of Spokane.

More pictures are necessary to reach the announced output of fifty-two per year, but contracts now executed and other plans in the making give Mr. Shipman assurance of exceeding this number.

With the exception of Nell Shipman's "Tiger of the Sea" and the forthcoming productions of the Titan Company, territory has been disposed of on all of the pictures in hand, and in some cases almost sold out. Foremost buyers of the United States and Canada are doing business on a cash basis with Mr. Shipman for most of his output. Some of these buyers represent new blood in the industry and others have been doing business with Mr. Shipman for several years.

A system which first of all brings the selling value of the picture to a mutually satisfactory basis, and then guarantees to the buyers a strict fulfillment of all contracts, is enabling Mr. Shipman to dispose of the most of his territory without the necessity of screening the pictures.

Thirty-four states have been contracted for on the Francis Ford feature, and with the exception of three buyers all have bought on the strength of Mr. Ford's past reputation and the generally favorable trade paper reviews. Those who exploit the first Ford feature have the option on his other product.

Mr. Shipman aims to represent the independent producers in the open market and states he will only handle product which appeals to the active class of exhibitors and meets with the full approval of the governmental authorities.

Australia Likes Goldwyns

"Polly of the Circus," the Goldwyn production starring Mae Marsh, has scored as big a success at the Town Hall, Melbourne, Australia, as it achieved in America. Reports are that 2,000 were turned away during a three-day run.

It was the first Goldwyn production shown in Melbourne and its success prompted F. W. Thring, managing director of J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd., Australian distributors for Goldwyn, to write the home office.

On the heels of this news comes word from Melbourne that Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" was seen by capacity audiences for a week at the Star Theatre. On the final night of the engagement the management was obliged to give an extra performance.

Goldwyn is also in receipt of glowing reports from other cities in Australia, "Polly of the Circus" having almost duplicated at Sydney its big hit at Melbourne.

Dicker Over Hayakawa Films

Charles Greenberg, secretary and general counsel of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, through which pictures featuring Sessue Hayakawa are to be released, has left Los Angeles on a flying trip to New York.

A delegation of foreign film market buyers reached New York recently and had planned to visit Los Angeles for the purpose of entering into arrangements with the company for the use of the Hayakawa Productions abroad. But Mr. Greenberg was notified by wire that other matters were detaining the delegation in New York and it was suggested that he make the trip to the Atlantic coast to close the negotiations.

As he had contemplated visiting New York in a few weeks anyway, Mr. Greenberg's summons enabled him to "kill two birds with one stone."

Sells Metro Rights

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., exporters of film, has sold the Metro specials, "Revelation" and "Blue Jeans," for Scandinavia.

Mr. Garrett recently sold the entire Metro program under contract for Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, Bolivia and Peru.

As president of the Bengar Picture Co., Mr. Garrett sold "Brown of Harvard" for Brazil and "The Garden of Allah" for Java and the Straits Settlement.

Frank Hall Seeks Another Big Picture

U. S. Exhibitors' Head Declares Big Specials Are Necessary to Draw New Business and Keep Old

WITH the completion of all preparations for the immediate release of the two new U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation productions, "Men" and "The Crucible of Life," President Frank Hall is again keeping his committee of selection busy with a view to finding, at the earliest possible moment, another picture that measures up to his standards.

Starting with Ince's "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Mr. Hall's first choice for release under the U. S. banner, and taking into account the business done by "Those Who Pay," "The Belgian" and "Just a Woman," the demand for pictures with special advertising angles, according to Mr. Hall, is much greater than the supply.

"The theatres need and must have big special productions at frequent intervals," he said. "There is no business in the world which can as little afford to fall into a rut as the show business and experienced theatre managers are therefore constantly on the alert to find something out of the ordinary to give them an excuse to make the kind of a noise that will attract unusual attention to their theatres.

"They know that there is no such thing as a fixed amount of box-office business independent of the attractions. They also know that when business is not building it is falling off. Big special pictures are necessary not only to draw new business, but also to keep their regular patrons from losing interest. Extra efforts to attract new patrons are imperative and it is up to us, as distributors, to give them exceptional pictures as often as possible."

Both "The Crucible of Life" and "Men" were produced under special conditions with a view to making them exceptional productions. Captain Harry Lambert staged the former for the Authors' Film Company, while the latter is the initial offering of the new Bacon-Backer studios.

General Film Law Tangle

Virtually all the motion picture producers and film corporations of importance appeared in person or were represented by counsel in Justice George W. Mullan's Special Term Part of the Supreme Court this week in an action brought against them by two preferred capital stockholders of the General Film Company.

The two plaintiffs, Percival L. Waters and James B. Clark, in their complaint and summons charge the defendant producers and corporations with declaring dividends to themselves out of funds owned by the General Film Company, amounting to more than they were entitled to under the laws of New York.

As chief of counsel for the many defendants, former Judge Samuel Seabury denied every one of the many allegations made against the defendant stockholders. Judge Seabury also declared that the alleged contract upon which the action is based has been made illegal by the United States Supreme Court's decision in relation to the anti-trust proceedings brought against most of the defendants in the present case.

Urges "Duping" Abroad

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., several weeks ago prophesied that the British government would place an embargo on all merchandise not needed for government supplies. Manufacturers of film realize that co-operation is necessary and Mr. Garrett hopes that they will see the wisdom of aiding to facilitate the shipping of films, even if this means acting in a way not strictly in accordance with their usual business methods.

The most important question concerns the duping of films, which is not now allowed. About this Mr. Garrett says: "Amusements are wanted to keep up the morale of the people who are in the war zone and conditions are such that duping privileges are asked. It is distinctly understood that the people would naturally prefer prints originally drawn from the negative, but if there are no other means of getting prints over and the cost of getting over stops these people from making money this way and the country in general desires to see American pictures, it shows the patriotism on the part of these various exploiters that they are quite willing to take duped prints and exploit them so as to give amusement to the people in the zone."

The next two Bud Fisher animated cartoons that William Fox will release will be "Superintendents" and "Tonsorial Artists."

Canada Eager for American War Pictures

Illustration Is Found in "The Eagle's Eye," Which Has Drawn Capacity Business Wherever Shown

CANADIAN audiences are responding eagerly to American propaganda pictures since troops from the "states" have been placed in the first line trenches and are doing their part with the Canadians in holding back the Hun.

The unification of the fighting forces has apparently created a desire for all information which can be acquired as to the attitude of the residents of the United States toward the war and the reasons for beliefs held here in regard to the world struggle. Any pictures which in any way reflect the war attitude of this country are in big demand.

Reports of the Foursquare-Superfeatures, Ltd., exchanges which are handling "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty episode serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, the recently retired chief of the United States secret service, indicate that the demands for the serial are extraordinary. Canadian exhibitors have seized upon the slogan of "Twenty reasons why America went to war" in connection with the picture and have found that it brings results anywhere in the Dominion.

The release date in Canada was six weeks later than in the United States, and to the Brant Theatre at Brantford goes the distinction of the premier. The first episode, dealing with the sinking of the Lusitania, was run there on April 15. Although Brantford is less than 25,000 in population the management booked the serial for a run of three days on each episode and reports that business was record breaking.

The Griffins Amusement Company, which controls the largest circuit of theatres running pictures in Canada, started the run of the serial in their houses in Ontario during the first two weeks of May. Eight of the houses are in cities of less than 20,000 population, yet the serial was booked for runs of three days in each of the houses on each of the episodes and those which have started report capacity business.

"The Eagle's Eye" Completed

The Whartons have completed the filming of the nineteenth and twentieth episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," the serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, the recently retired chief of the United States secret service.

The twentieth episode brings the serial to a conclusion by showing the events which immediately preceded the declaration of war.

The Story of the Picture

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Artcraft

OLD WIVES FOR NEW—(Five Reels)—May 20.—A Cecil De Mille production of the David Graham Phillips novel, adapted for the screen by Jeanie Macpherson.

In a little village Charles Murdock, a young man of promise hastily weds a handsome woman, but many years later, she has developed into a fat, lazy, slovenly housewife in whose presence her husband, still youthful in sentiment and bearing, finds little comfort or enjoyment. He meets another woman and when he contrasts her daintiness of manner and intellectual charms to his slatternly wife, his soul rebels at his legally enforced companionship with the latter and he seeks relaxation in the society of the younger and handsomer woman.

An incident in Charles Ray's latest Paramount feature, "His Own Home Town."

The slovenly wife soon realizes that her husband's love for her has waned, but it is only when she learns the truth that her jealousy is aroused. She brings an action for divorce, a step her husband rejoices in, and she is aided in this contingency by her husband's private secretary under whose influence she now finds herself with the result that a mighty transformation takes place within her. She becomes a votary of fashion, but as far as her husband is concerned, her rejuvenation comes too late, for he is hopelessly in love with the new woman whom fate has cast in the pathway of his career.

So it transpires that when the husband is badly injured in a railroad accident and when this young woman coming from nowhere nurses him back to life, his love for her reaches the crucial stage. There is a murder, and the young woman's name is coupled with the crime in a slanderous manner. To protect her reputation, the mismated husband takes a third woman to his heart and thereupon the wife obtains a divorce and weds the secretary. The young woman follows the divorced husband abroad and after a series of intensely thrilling incidents they are united and find happiness in their love.

Selfish Yates—(Five Reels)—Ince—May 20.—Featuring William W. Hart, who also directed the picture. Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

The scenes are laid in the town of Thirsty Center, Arizona. Yates is a dive keeper and saloonist. He prides himself upon the fact that he is the most selfish man in the country. He thinks of no one but himself, and his motto is to look after his individual interest first and let the devil take the hindmost. Mary Adams, with her little sister, Betty, drives into Thirsty Center in a prairie schooner. Yates is greatly annoyed at their intrusion and when Mary appeals to him for work he contemptuously refers her to his Chinese cook who puts her to work as a scrub-woman. While scrubbing in the dance hall, early one morning, Mary plays "Nearer My God to Thee" on the organ. The music awakens Yates and causes him to angrily upbraid her. She turns from him in contempt and he is unable to analyze the peculiar sensations that overcome him when in Mary's presence. Mary is the object of "Rocking Chair" Riley's loathsome attentions, and he resolves to make her his prey. A young man is shot while attempting to rob a Mexican of a flask of whiskey, after liquor had been refused him by Yates, and the body is brought into the dance-hall where the funeral takes place. Under the compelling eye of Mary, Yates officiates at the service, and he realizes suddenly that he loves the girl madly and the knowledge renders him furious. Enticed by a ruse from her shack by "Rocking Chair" Riley, Mary goes ostensibly to meet Yates and when he discovers the ruse he follows and finds her struggling with Riley. A desperate battle follows, Riley is badly beaten, while Mary faints as the result of an injury inflicted by Riley and is carried to her cabin by Yates. She pleads with him not to injure Riley and when the miners hear of the attack and are about to lynch Riley, Yates saves him. He returns to Mary's cabin, finds the light burning for him in the window and now realizes that Mary loves him and all ends happily.

Bluebird

$5000 Reward—(Five Reels)—May 25.—Featuring Franklyn Farnum. Gloria Hope plays opposite. Douglas Gerrard directed.

When Dick Arlington married, it was with the utmost misgiving. His wife was the daughter of the farmer for whom he worked, under an assumed name. Dick finally decided to tell Margaret that he was a fugitive, accused of the murder of his rich uncle. With perfect faith in him, Margaret set out with Dick to return to the city where the crime was committed, and though Dick did not look for any help from his arcadian wife, it was she who finally solved the mystery which had puzzled the police for nearly a year. For Tracy, Dick's lawyer and confidant, who had advised him to run away in the first place, was inveigled by his sudden infatuation for Dick's wife into a full confession of the crime.

Then it was Dick's turn to doubt his wife, for Dick had been doubting some one all through the picture. First it was the strange secretary that his uncle had hired, and whom he suspected of the crime. The secretary had now turned out to be a noted detective. Then it was Tracy, in whom he had put the most implicit confidence. He had turned out to be the actual murderer. And now it was his wife. How could she have fooled him so grievously?

"It was a plant," said the secretary. "She did just exactly as I told her to do, and that was the only way we ever could have gotten that fox-faced lawyer to confess." And for the first time in a year Dick's mind was free from any suspicion.

The Guilt of Silence—(Five Reels)—May 18.—Featuring

Virginia Pearson is the star in "The Firebrand," a Fox production.

Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. Story by Ethel Hall directed by Elmer Clifton.

Smith had lost his voice in a terrible storm, from which he had been rescued more dead than alive by Harkness. Having lost all of his worldly possessions, Harkness took him into his own household. In a few years Harkness expected to be a rich man, as he had discovered gold, and the success of his mine depended upon his keeping it a secret. But he had fallen under the influence of Amy, a flashy woman of the dance-hall type, and much against Smith's advice he had married her. The next day the whole of Alaska knew that Harkness was sitting upon a gold mine, and the rush for surrounding property began. Harkness, in an endeavor to save what was left, went to the claim so hurriedly that he couldn't wait for his daughter, who was coming to make him a visit. Smith, however, met her as he was leaving in disgust, and fearful of her life in that wild camp, returned to Harkness' cabin with her.

When Harkness returned in the spring he found a strangely perturbed household. Amy had a baby, Smith was in love with Mary, the daughter, and she would have been in love with him, except that she suspected him of betraying her father, and Amy herself accused Smith of the parentage of her child. In a situation of tremendous intensity, Smith shot through the shoulder by Harkness, regained his voice in time to warn his benefactor to run after his wife. He did so, and discovered that she had been untrue to him from the moment she had decided to marry him, and had profited heavily by her disclosures of his mining operations.

Inasmuch as she was already the wife of another, he let her go.

Fox

Peg of the Priates—(Five Reels)—May 12.—Featuring Peggy Hyland.

Margaret Martyn is kidnapped by pirates during the dinner given to announce her arranged engagement to a young fop, whom she does not love. On the pirate ship she covers her face with flour and pretends to be dead. The pirates then start to bury her ashore, lest her ghost haunt them on the water, but she moves, hoots and frightens them out of their treasure cabin.

Dressing as a boy, she next appears before them with the announcement that she is a ghost whom they must obey. They believe and are obedient. They discover the reality of her existence, and she swims out to hide on the ship just before her poet lover appears with a government crew to rescue her.

The Fair Pretender—(Six Reels)—May 19.—Featuring Madge Kennedy. Story by Florence C. Bolles.

Sylvia Maynard (Miss Kennedy) is a typist in the office of a play producer. She has aspirations to go on the stage. In attempting to prove to her employer her remarkable acting ability, Sylvia is caught by his wife while she embraces him in a mock love scene. Naturally, the girl is discharged. She is ejected from her lodgings, too, and seeks another room.

There she discovers a certain play which had been rejected by her former employer. Sylvia remembers the author of it, a young man of singular appeal, one Don Meredith. So taken is she with the argument of the drama, that a girl can do anything if she determines in her heart to "put it over," Sylvia announces to herself that she will plunge into an adventure. It takes the form of acquiring a fictitious husband and introducing herself as his widow at a fashionable suburban hotel. The girl has chosen her new name at random, Mrs. Brown, and of course the recent death of the captain in France occasions nothing but sympathy from the friends she makes among the guests.

Soon she is found as a member of a house party in a nearby home of great wealth. There she meets the author of the play who, of course, does not recognize her as the former office fixture. Promptly he falls in love with the fascinating little widow, never dreaming that she means to sell his drama or perish in the attempt.

At this juncture Sylvia's hosts plan a surprise for her, though they fear the shock may be too great for the frail little widow. An aviator has arrived from abroad to instruct the American flying forces in training not far from the town. He is Captain Milton Brown and must be the husband of Mrs. Brown. So without warning Sylvia is confronted by the handsome stranger. She handles the ticklish situation with extraordinary skill. Instead of regarding her as a usurper, Captain Brown falls in with the deception, only too happy to claim so captivating a wife. But poor Don is heartbroken at the way things are going, for he had reached the stage where life without Sylvia seemed unendurable. Now he must give her up.

How this tangle is finally unraveled, disclosing Sylvia not as the masquerader she is but as a girl entitled to the sympathy and heartfelt thanks of everyone; how Captain Brown relinquishes all claim and how Don comes into his own—all this Miss Bolles, the author, has worked out in the story.

Slippery Slim's Dilemma—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 25.—With Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin.

Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete are roommates, also rivals for the hand of the fair Sophie. Slim claims to be a singer and guitar player. Sophie invites them to call, especially asking Slim to bring his guitar. Mustang Pete gets there first and Slim stops beneath the fair Sophie's window and serenades. Next morning Pete awakes first and paints Slim's face. Then he spreads the news that his roommate has smallpox. After a particularly humorous escape from quarantine, Slim proves him immunity, Pete confesses and Sophie returns to her first love, Slippery Slim.

Broncho Billy's Squareness—(One Reel)—Essanay)—May 10.—With Broncho Billy, Marguerite Clayton and Fred Church.

Earl Briggs, a ranchman, and Carl Underwood, are in love with Grace Woodward. Earl is the favored suitor and in time Grace becomes engaged to him. Some time later the stage is held up by Broncho Billy, a notorious outlaw. A fierce battle ensues in the woods between the posse and the bandit, in which Broncho Billy is wounded. Briggs returning to his home finds the wounded man and takes him to his shack, where he administers first aid. A few weeks pass and Broncho Billy regains his health. Before departing from Briggs, he gives him a gold locket in appreciation of his kindness. The sheriff's sister recognizes the locket as her own and informs her brother, who places Briggs under arrest. Broncho Billy sees Briggs being led away to jail and promptly gives himself up to the law, saving the innocent man from disgrace. Grace marries Briggs, and Broncho Billy is left to face the court of justice.

Broncho Billy's Secret—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 17.—Broncho Billy, sheriff of Cheyenne County, in love with Marguerite, is accepted by her. Marguerite's father approves of the engagement. Little did Broncho Billy know the father of the girl he is going to marry is a notorious outlaw. After holding up a stage one day, Clayton is pursued by the sheriff and his posse. The chase ends by Clayton being shot, and crawling on his hands and knees, he reaches his home. The sheriff trails him by the blood tracks. Clayton dies, leaving a confession in full, with the sheriff. Broncho Billy realizes that if Marguerite is told about the life her father had led, it would break her heart; so he burns the confession in the stove. Broncho Billy takes Marguerite into his arms and claims her for his own, and promises himself that she will never know the terrible truth.

Broncho Billy and the Greaser—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 24.

Broncho Billy, the mail carrier, ejects a Greaser from the post-office for pushing a girl out of his way. The half-breed is thoroughly angered and swears revenge. Broncho then goes home, and on his way loses his mail bag. He does not miss it, so goes to bed that night unaware of his loss. The girl he protected at the post-office finds the mail bag, and when she approaches Broncho's shack to return it, she sees the Greaser prowling about. She hastens to a dance hall where she tells her friends of Broncho's danger, and she leads the way back to his shack, where they arrive just in time to save him from being stabbed while asleep.

Cyclone Higgins, D. D.—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Every minister who has ventured into Yellville, a Southern mountain town of the roughest kind, has been speedily discouraged by its lawless element. Then Cyrus Higgins, D. D., an itinerant preacher, and his faithful Chinese servant, Johnathon Moses Chi Wu Lung, arrive on mule-back. The women at once show interest in the stranger, who although he toes in and wears goggles is enough of a Beau Brummel to satisfy Yellville. One of the first girls he meets is Sally Phillips, the belle of Yellville.

The deputy sheriff, Jasper Stone, annoys Sally with his attentions. Higgins interferes. Stone watches for a chance to get even.

Robberies have been on the increase in Yellville, and the sheriff visits Jasper Stone, his deputy, demanding an investigation. Stone, realizing it is "up to" him to produce a criminal, forces the weak-minded Abner Phillips to pose as a robber, and then arrests him. Then he goes to the Phillips home to abduct Sally. She has fled for safety to the minister's house. Higgins and the faithful Chinaman spend the night wrapped up in blankets sitting on the bench outside. Next morning Stone spreads through the town the news of Sally's presence at the minister's house, and a scandalized group of citizens calls on Higgins. The widow Pryor is the first to arrive, and she is at once convinced of Sally's innocence. Stone demands that the minister come out and fight, and Higgins finally does so. Slowly he removes first his glasses and then his coat, to make ready for the fray. Stone knocks him down twice before he gets ready for action, but then the tide turns. The parson completely wipes the earth with Stone, and then offers up a prayer. To his question, "Do any of you gentlemen care to continue the argument?" there is no answer. An old settler remarks, "Now I know what C. Higgins, D. D., means. It is Cy-co-lone Higgins, Damn Dangerous!" And henceforth he is known only as "Cyclone."

"Cyclone's" Sister Mary comes and takes Sally away with her to give her the advantages of schooling and society. Cyclone's loneliness is lessened by Dorothea, a little child who is left on his door-step. She follows him everywhere, imitating his walk, believing everything about her "Cy-kone Papa" perfect. Higgins now realizes that he is in love with Sally, and she finds that the polished youths of the city fail to interest her.

Jasper Stone, filled with "Dutch courage," determines to have his revenge on the minister, and starts for his home brandishing a revolver. The Chinaman rushes for aid, but before anyone can arrive Higgins is in peril. "Cyclone" never flinches. With the revolver held at the pit of his stomach, he says "Shoot! I am not afraid to die." Aid comes in time, and the minister's first action is to force Stone to get down on his knees and thank God that he has been spared from committing murder. Stone's badge of office is removed from him, and he is taken away to jail.

Sally returns from school and she and "Cyclone" lose no time in coming to an understanding, while Dorothea, "the gift of God," places a chubby, loving arm around each.

Mutual

Her Terrible Time—(One Reel)—Strand—May 14.—Featuring Billie Rhodes.

Mary goes to visit a school friend and falls in love with the friend's brother. The romance develops with alarming rapidity and is approved heartily by the family.

Jack is sent away to close a contract for his father and his unexpected departure makes Mary lovesick. She steals away from the family to suffer alone and accidentally, then sentimentally, enters Jack's vacant room. At his desk she begins to write in her diary, thoughts about Jack intended for her own eyes only.

The family's arrival forces her to make a hurried exit. She remembers that she has left her diary on Jack's desk. Her efforts to get into the room unobserved fail, and when she finally does, her exit is prevented.

Jack returns unexpectedly and finds Mary in his clothes closet. Her scream awakens the family. Difficulties increase and finally father, mother and sister enter. Jack says they are married.

After the family has departed Jack and Mary make their way out the window in search of a nearby minister to make good on Jack's story.

My Lady Nicotine—(One Reel)—Strand—May 21.—Starring Billie Rhodes.

Jack had to swear off smoking when he became engaged to Mary, but broke his pledge after the honeymoon. Mary put some Nico Not, a cure for the smoking habit, in his coffee, and Jack thinks he has an acute case of the falling sickness until he discovers the dope in the kitchen cabinet. He substitutes sugar for the Nico Not, and leaves an article on the dangers of patent medicines where Mary can find it. She returns, reads the article, finds Jack in an apparent fit on the floor with the bottle of Nico Not in his hand, and frantically calls a doctor. Jack tells the doctor the joke, but Mary overhears, gets a loaded cigar and presents it to Jack. The explosion throws him into a real fit, and wife laughs. Jack swears off, and they both ask the audience to do likewise and send the smokes to the boys "over there" in the trenches.

The Mating of Marcella—(Five Reels)—Ince—May 20.—Featuring Dorothy Dalton. Directed by R. William Neill from a story by Joseph Franklin Poland.

Marcella is an American girl, who, by reason of her father's continued illness and inability to ply his avocation, that of a musician, is living in straitened circumstances. Pedro Escoba, also a musician but a man not to her liking, pursues her with his attentions, but she prefers to work as a modiste's model for the support of herself and father, rather than marry him.

One day in the modiste's shop, Marcella meets Lois Underwood, a show girl who has married Robert Underwood, a rich man, solely for his money. She has a child, Bobbie. One day Underwood injures Marcella while driving his motor car and he takes her to her home. Underwood is greatly attracted by Marcella's beauty, and he shows his growing dislike for his frivolous wife. Marcella's father needs the services of a specialist for the cure of his ailment and to obtain money for that purpose Marcella agrees to a plan of Mrs. Underwood to live in the West for a time under the assumed name of Mrs. Underwood, while the latter goes on a yachting voyage with Count Louis Le Favri, with the ultimate object of obtaining a divorce from her husband.

Little Bobbie falls ill, and Marcella nurses him devotedly until the child's health is restored. Mrs. Underwood files suit for divorce and callously names Marcella as co-respondent. Escoba finds Marcella and makes threats only to be thrown out of Underwood's residence. A discarded lover of Mrs. Underwood's seeking revenge upon her, dons a chauffeur's uniform and with Mrs. Underwood and Count Le Favri in the car he deliberately drives into a lake, the three meeting death by drowning. Underwood is free to wed and Marcella becomes his wife.

His Smothered Love—(Two Reels)—Sennett Comedy—May 6.—With Chester Conklin, Harry Gribbon and Marie Prevost.

Chester Conklin is a street car conductor who has high social ambitions and too little money with which to realize his dreams. While out on a summer's holiday he meets Marie Prevost, a delightful summer girl, who displays a roll of bills presumably big enough to pay the national debt, and he instantly conceives a scheme by which he may simultaneously become possessed of the girl and her money.

While Marie is bathing in the surf, Conklin rescues her from death by drowning, or rather he convinces her that he did. She is filled with gratitude, greatly to the chagrin of Harry Gribbon, the sweetheart of Marie and Conklin's bitter rival.

Conklin returns to his duty as conductor the next day and being a young man with an eye to the main chance, he short changes Laura LaVarnie, the mother of Marie, quite unaware of the fact that she is the maternal parent of the idol of his heart. He disguises himself as a "Count" and starts forth to the home of Marie where a grand soiree is being given. He is received with all the honors due his exalted station and is the lion of the hour.

But the irritated mother appears on the scene and she recognizes in the bogus count the conductor who had taken advantage of her absent-mindedness to cheat her. Conklin is ejected with great severity and Gribbon hastens to claim Marie as his bride.

Conklin plans revenge and as a wedding present he sends Marie a bottle of wine which he had previously filled with deadly drugs. Then his conscience gets the better of him and he begins a mad chase after the honeymoon express to prevent the happy couple drinking the poisoned wine. He later makes the discovery that by an accident the bottles had been mixed and that the supposed poisoned wine was harmless. So he returns to his duties as conductor chastened and resolved to turn over a new leaf.

The Reason Why—(Five Reels)—Featuring Clara Kimball Young. Story by Elinor Glyn, arranged by Mary Murillo. Directed by Robert G. Vignola.

The story relates the experiences of Zara Marinoff, the wife of a brutal Russian. After her husband is killed in a fight, she takes her adored son Mimo to London and there hides him in a boarding house while she goes to her uncle. Francis Markrute, to whom she had before appealed for aid without letting him know of her marriage or her child. Markrute, wealthy and socially ambitious, plans to marry her to Lord Tancred, scion of an admirable though penniless family of the nobility. At first Tancred scorns the idea, but when he meets Zara is quite willing. After their marriage she scorns and denounces him as a fortune hunter. Mimo is taken ill. Frantic, Zara leaves a big party in their honor to go to him. Tancred follows and sees the little fellow in her arms, dead. Again misjudging, he starts to leave her when she explains all and confesses her love.

Her Decision—(Five Reels)—May 12.—With Gloria Swanson, J. Barney Sherry, Darrel Foss and Ann Kroman.

The heroine enters into a loveless marriage to keep the secret of a sister's disgrace. She loves a man without character and marries a man with character who loves her. As a wife she falls in love with her husband.

Phyllis Dunbar (Gloria Swanson), the secretary of Martin Rankin (J. Barney Sherry), is in love with Bobbie Warner (Darrell Foss). Rankin loves her, proposes marriage and is regretfully refused.

Phyllis' younger sister, Inah, becomes involved with rich Billie Dexter and attempts suicide. Phyllis persuades her to give up the attempt and promises to obtain money to send her away.

Warner refuses Phyllis a loan and she offers to marry Rankin if he will let her have the money to send Inah away. Rankin offers to help her without marriage, but Phyllis refuses. Rankin agrees to the marriage. The two live like pals rather than a married couple. Phyllis retains a strong love for Warner. Finally she asks her husband's permission to seek out Warner with the purpose of finding out whether she cares for him as deeply as ever. Rankin gives his consent. Phyllis finds Warner intoxicated and repulsive. Her love is killed. She returns to Rankin and declares: "Now I have found my real love."

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

"PERSHING'S Crusaders," the big United States government war feature, packed the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati at every performance during a week's run beginning April 29. Every attendance record in the history of this capacious house was broken and the demands of hundreds of people anxious to see the film resulted in an extension of the run for another week.

In active charge of the initial showing was W. J. Benedict, acting for the Committee on Public Information.

From Cincinnati "Pershing's Crusaders" went to the Opera House in Cleveland, opening there on May 12, thence to Chicago, where a two weeks' run begins on May 20.

George Bowles has charge of the booking arrangements and his long experience with such features as "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" is a sufficient guarantee that the United States will be more than capably represented.

That the people of the motion picture studios have responded gallantly to the government's call for war workers is well known and nowhere have they done better work than at the Hollywood Gauze Station in support of the Red Cross, which has made an excellent record lately under the leadership of Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Mrs. Cecil B. De Mille and Mrs. Wilfred Buckland. The Hollywood station was organized by Mrs. De Mille, who soon had a large force of women and girls from the studios, who went to the station to take instruction in the making of the much needed surgical dressings and bandages. Later Mrs. De Mille was transferred to the Los Angeles Gauze Station Headquarters, but she retained the honorary chairmanship of the branch. Mrs. Lasky and Mrs. Buckland are now in charge of the station. Prominent among the teachers are Mrs. William C. De Mille, Mrs. Wellington Wales and Miss Peggy Hagar.

The Yorke-Metro Company, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for Metro, has moved its base of operations from Metro's West Coast studios to a plant of its own at 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood. Prior to the company's occupancy, extensive alterations and additions were made in the plant and in its equipment to increase production facilities. The first picture the Lockwood company will put on in its new home will be "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama, based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel of that name. In spite of its warlike title, "A King in Khaki" does not deal with a war subject of any order. Fred J. Balshofer made the adaptation of the book for screen purposes and will also direct the production.

Three changes in the management of its exchanges were announced during the week by General Film Company. H. K. Evans, well known in theatrical and moving picture circles, has assumed charge of the Minneapolis branch. He was formerly manager of the Pathe exchange at St. Louis and has had a wide selling experience. Irving C. Jacocks, a former General Film employe, has returned to assume the management of the New Haven General Film office, succeeding W. V. Hart, who will in the future be attached to the New York City exchange. H. E. Elder has been transferred from the St. Louis office, which he managed for a long time, and he now takes charge of the Washington office.

Charles Ray was easily the star of a baseball game at Vernon, California, last Sunday, between the team of the Fox studio and a team made up of players from all the studios on the coast. Charlie drove in the first run for the All-Star team, figured in a triple steal, as well as stealing two bases himself. He fielded without an error, and one would never have thought to watch him play that he had not played baseball for six years. The following three days, however, Charlie confessed to being rather stiff. The game was played for the benefit of the Red Cross and a tidy sum was raised.

Raymond B. West, the Paralta director, who has staged more of that company's productions than any other director, is suffering from a broken arch in his left foot. Mr. West believes that the fracture is due to natural weakness of the bone brought on by the constant use of his feet in driving his automobile. He is anxiously awaiting sufficient recovery so that he will be able to undertake the production of J. Warren Kerrigan's next Paralta play, "Toby," which he has been chosen to direct.

With the death of Louis A. Cella, millionaire, St. Louis has lost one of the most powerful theater magnates in the West. Mr. Cella and his wife were both ill at the same time and both died within four days of each other.

Mr. Cella had the controlling interest in several of the best theatres in St. Louis. They are the American, Orpheum, Grand Opera House, Park, Shenandoah, Kings, Columbia and Strand.

Mr. Cella's estate is estimated at $12,000,000. The deceased couple had no children and the estate will go to relatives of Mrs. Cella.

Hotel Lobby Covers Whole Stage

A hotel lobby, which would rival in magnificence that of the famous Biltmore or Savoy, has been erected at the Triangle Culver City studio and covers an entire glass stage. It is being used in the H. O. Davis production, "Prudence Pays the Piper," in which Olive Thomas has the featured role under the direction of Frank Borzage. The company has completed work at the fashionable Virginia Hotel at Long Beach, Cal., where many of the exteriors were taken, and will spend the week at the studio doing the hotel interiors.

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

W. L. HILL fairly beams these days whenever "The Bluebird" is mentioned. Nearly everyone had predicted that the picture was "too highbrow" to run successfully for a week at a downtown theatre. Mr. Hill held the other side of the argument. He contended that a picture might be a work of art and a money-maker at the same time; that the people would support the best.

The newspapers tell part of the story. They announce that by public demand the picture is held over for a second week. Mr. Hill will gleefully tell you the rest. During the first week of its run, with unfavorable weather conditions, "The Bluebird's" record was this:

It opened Monday, May 6, to a good audience. Business on the second day increased ninety-two per cent; on the third day, 122 per cent over the first day; on the third day, 153 per cent, and something of an increase each day thereafter.

Mr. Hill, who is publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, is greatly enjoying the return to his first love, exhibiting. He planned in detail the excellent presentation of the picture. Among the noteworthy features is the use of a saucer-shaped screen, so that the picture can be seen perfectly from any angle. Mr. Hill insists that the projection receive unusual attention and that the picture be run in correct time and never speeded. The musical accompaniment is carefully worked out and the aim is to have the entire program harmonious.

A little courtesy characteristic of Mr. Hill is his forethought in taking care of the press, so that the theatre pays even the war tax on their passes.

Mr. Hill gave the picture an interesting first-night presentation. A very distinguished audience viewed the play. Boxes were occupied by the British consul-general, Horace Nugent, and party; the Belgian consul, M. Albert Mouleer, and friends; the Japanese consul, M. Kurusu, and party, and M. Barthelmy, the French consul. The boxes were draped, each with the flag of the nation represented.

Another interesting party was that of Mrs. J. B. Sherwood, the well-known society woman, and a deep student of Maeterlinck. She was delighted with the screen version of the play, declaring it was interpreted perfectly.

Efficiency and motion pictures, once strangers, become better acquainted every day. Efficiency in studio management is becoming the rule rather than the exception, but the addition of an efficiency manager to the staff of a film exchange is a further step ahead. The Universal offices in Chicago now boast one in the person of F. W. Barlet.

When the fifteenth floor of the Consumers' building, which contains the Jewel, Bluebird, Universal serial, Century Comedy and other divisions, became so busy that a traffic policeman was almost a necessity, Efficiency Manager Barlet was called in instead and he set to work harnessing up some of the "lost motions" and wasted energy.

His office is in the center of things and he is perfecting a most business-like arrangement, under which everyone, while unhampered in his own field, is responsible to one authority.

Mr. Barlet has had military training and is putting army ideas into office practice. He is seeking to develop whatever initiative and special ability each employe may have.

Local theatres are already at work aiding the fuel administration in the "Buy your coal now and increase storage facilities" movement. An educational film is being run which shows coal undergoing the various process from the mine to the consumer. The picture was made merely as an educational, but proved to be excellent for the administration's purpose when a few changes were made in it and a few subtitles added. I. L. Leserman, manager of the Chicago Universal offices, supervised the arranging of the film for government purposes.

The Rose Theatre, managed by H. C. Miler, has obtained a seven-day first run Loop franchise from the United Picture Theatres of America.

T. W. Chatburn of the Vitagraph exchange is busy with plans for an elaborate presentation of "Over the Top," the big patriotic feature, at the Auditorium in the near future. He hopes to have Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, the author and star, present at the opening performance.

Billboard displays are ready for posting, and as soon as the date for the opening is set, further announcements will be made. A twenty-two piece orchestra will interpret the music written for the picture.

Mr. Chatburn's desk is ornamented with interesting models of proposed stage settings for the presentation. The picture is being booked rapidly throughout Illinois.

"Revelation," the Metro feature starring Nazimova, is this week's attraction at the Playhouse, following "My Own United States." Major Funkhouser, who, after giving it a white permit, changed his mind and made it pink, took another look at it and again issued a white or general permit. Therefore, a week later than it was scheduled, it opened at this Michigan avenue theatre.

The picture attracted capacity houses on its opening day in spite of rain. The audience was very evidently delighted with the vivid work of the star and the high character of the story and applauded it generously. The picture is above the average in every respect and is a credit to Metro.

Bookings for "The Unbeliever," following its successful presentation at the Auditorium Theatre, are pouring into the George Kleine offices. Among the Chicago houses in which it will be shown are those of the Ascher and Lubliner & Trinz circuits, the Gold, the Crawford, Kedzie Annex, New Americus, Oak Park, Karlov, Woodlawn, Julian, Century, Sitner's, Schlinder's, Oakley, and Paulina. All of these theatres are planning a special presentation of the feature. The picture also will be shown for another week or more in the Loop at H. C. Miller's Rose Theatre on Madison street.

F. B. Rogers, manager of the Pathe exchange, gave a showing of "The Yellow Ticket," which features Fanny Ward, to the trade and newspaper critics last week. The picture, which is an exciting melodrama of Russia before the Revolution, received many favorable comments. It is very interesting, well directed and well photographed, and in it Miss Ward creates one of her best screen roles.

Martin Saxe, manager of the Knickerbocker Theatre, 6225 Broadway, for Lubliner & Trinz, has enlisted in the navy and expects to be called to the country's service at an early date. Because of his success at the Knickerbocker, Mr. Saxe was named as the manager of the new Pantheon Theatre, which will open some time in August, but he will probably be in war service by that date.

The Howard Theatre, the new Seaver & Zahler house, just opened on Howard avenue, near Evanston, has one of the most attractive lighting displays imaginable. This illumination is specially effective as seen from the "L" trains and undoubtedly brings many patrons from Evanston. The high class presentation of pictures and the good music then make regular customers of them.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, came through Chicago on his way to California and paid his first visit to the local Goldwyn exchange. With the acquisition of Pauline Frederick and Geraldine Farrar as Goldwyn stars and the renewed contracts with Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy, the company is attracting its full share of attention from exhibitors.

Irving Mack, publicity manager at the Universal exchange, now has an assistant, Miss Gertrude Abrams. It seems that whenever the "powers that be" want anything well done, they appoint Irving as the man to do it, with the result that in addition to being publicity manager, he might have half a dozen titles.

Close-up of Belle Bennett, Triangle leading woman.

The old Parkway Theatre, Clark street and Diversey Parkway, has been remodeled and rebuilt, and is reopened as the Drury Lane Theatre. "Hearts or Diamonds?" first of the William Russell pictures from the Russell studios, was the first attraction.

The Drury Lane has a seating capacity slightly less than 1,000. As the Parkway Theatre it was one of the first big neighborhood motion picture theatres in Chicago. It has been dark alternately for more than a year.

The owners, Grossman and Mitchell, have spent a large sum rebuilding it and have placed W. R. Riddell, an old-time theatrical manager, in charge as manager.

John Hahn, assistant secretary of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is making an extended trip through the West in the interest of the Rothacker organization. Mr. Hahn will spend several days in Denver at the studios of the National Film Corporation, a day or so at Salt Lake City visiting the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit there, and then will go direct to Los Angeles, where he will devote two or three weeks to personal calls on the Rothacker customers and friends in that territory. Mr. Hahn expects to return to Chicago about May 28.

E. O. Blackburn, of the sales department of the Rothacker organization, has returned from his Eastern trip, where he was personally directing the production of a number of multiple reel industrial pictures.

Jack Byrne, of the studio department of the Rothacker organization, is in Minneapolis, Minnesota, co-operating with Major Schmidt in the production of a picture to be presented by the United States Fuel Administration.

Blaine McGrath, editor of the Mutual Screen Telegram, gave a special exhibition of one issue of his news reels before the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago the other day. The issue contained pictures of members of the club busy making Martha Washington bags for French refugees.

"Restitution," an elaborate ten-reel production, made by the Mena Company and showing the struggle between democracy and autocracy since the beginning of the world, is the present attraction at the Auditorium Theatre.

Geraldine Farrar was in the city last week, visiting her husband, Lou-Tellegen, who has been starring here in the stage play, "Blind Youth." Miss Farrar begins her picture work with Goldwyn about June 17.

G. S. Anderson, of the sales department of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has just returned from an extensive trip through southern Illinois, where he was supervising a number of industrial productions.

William Niles has been added to the force of Vitagraph salesmen and will cover northeastern Illinois for the Chicago office. Mr. Niles is well known in newspaper and film circles.

J. B. Koppel of the Adelphi Theatre is planning to use the Boy Scouts in his neighborhood to aid him in presenting both "The Unbeliever" and "My Four Years in Germany."

Harry Levy, head of the industrial department of the Universal Film Company, has come to Chicago from New York for the purpose of opening an industrial department here.

"Tarzan of the Apes" succeeds the Gerard picture, "My Four Years in Germany," at the Colonial Theatre.

Mrs. Sydney Goldman, wife of the Jewel manager, is on her way to California to visit friends and relatives.

"Hearts of the World" is pulling capacity business at the Olympic.

Realism Almost Costs Life

Realism that came close to the border between life and death was injected into the Triangle play, "The Heritage," by Jack Richardson and Pete Morrison. Richardson as the "heavy" was forced to flee to his cabin and the action required that Morrison fire five shots at him as he slammed the door on his pursuer. Richardson consented to the stunt when he was assured that none but Morrison, who is a good marksman, would handle the gun.

Richardson arranged that as he disappeared within the cabin he would fall heavily upon the floor and that this would be the cue to fire. As he lay prostrate behind a flimsy door, Morrison opened fire.

Five bullets cut their way through the door and passed less than five inches above Richardson's body. Two cameras, one showing Morrison firing and the other revealing the bullets splintering the door, recorded the action.

Marion Davies Film Finished

Marion Davies' first production for the Marion Davies Film Co., an interpretation of Katharine Haviland Taylor's popular novel, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," is practically finished and the offices and studio of the concern buzz with activity in the final preparations for releasing the picture.

Julius Steger, under whose personal direction the production was created, is busy titling it and within a few days Miss Davies and the principals of the company which is exploiting her will have an opportunity to view their first effort on the screen.

At that time decision will be made whether to exhibit the production for a summer run on Broadway or to confine the activities of the company to the usual limitations of manufacturers and present the picture through the distributing channels ordinarily employed.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

"OVER THE TOP" WITH EMPEY!

STRAND AMUSEMENT CO.
918-922 STATE STREET
ERIE, PENN'A

May Eighth, 1918.

Vitagraph, New York.
Gentlemen:

"OVER THE TOP" broke the record at the Strand on receipts. That means a tremendous business, for we felt that we had probably reached the top when we played "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" to 30,000 people.

No first-class house can afford to miss running this picture. It is splendid war propaganda, and unquestionably induced many to enlist in Erie. It had the house going at all times—and is a money-maker!

Very truly yours,
STRAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY
W. J. HAYES, Manager.

In Every City, Town and Crossroads in America—

"OVER THE TOP" will put box-office receipts "over the top" of any previous high record ever made with a motion picture.

Disturbers in the Audience

SAYS a "War Bulletin" on one of the weekly programs of the Garfield Theatre, Chicago:

"A movement is on foot to make use of gas masks, when the war is over, as silencers for those who read the titles out loud."

Theatre rowdies who throw things about the house or who use objectionable language are promptly ejected by the efficient manager. But the scarcely less annoying imbecile who reads aloud everything on the screen that can be read is practically safe. Some day an outraged audience may fold him up in his seat; but unfortunately there is no law against him. And classified with him are the individual who has seen the picture before, or read a review of it, and proceeds audibly to anticipate its development; and the fellow who knows something about the production or the stars, and wants that fact appreciated by his neighbors. All these disturbers of the peace are beyond the physical reach of the exhibitor.

It strikes us, however, that the Garfield Theatre, with its whimsical paragraph, has shown the way to the only possible control of audience ethics. Frequent repetition of such verbal cartoonery should finally penetrate the ivory armor of even the most egotistical and inconsiderate of visitors.

Exhibitors who print weekly programs (and there should be about twelve thousand of them) can serve and please ninety-nine per cent of their patrons by aiming a little disciplinary comment at the irrepressible one per cent.

The Red Cross Drive

THE Red Cross drive which is on this week is undertaking to raise a hundred million dollars—practically a dollar for every man, woman and child in the country.

Every exhibitor will, of course, make a personal contribution for more than his arithmetical share of the call. But in addition he should remember that his thousand or more of regular patrons represent a thousand or more of dollars for the Red Cross. He can help wonderfully in the collection of this amount by running the Red Cross films, backed up, if possible, by the creation of a little atmosphere in the way of nurse uniforms.

Remember, also, that the Red Cross makes a big drive only when the money is in immediate demand; and that after the drive is over, there is still need for all the support we can give to the work that not only saves the lives of our boys, but that returns to the fighting line men who would otherwise be lost as our defenders. Viewed in the most cold-bloodedly practical light, the Red Cross is a huge human repair shop, whose efficient maintenance work in caring for the military machine over there enables the rest of us, over here, to keep the wheels of business turning.

Support the Red Cross ALL THE TIME to the limit.

Newspaper Space

BEING curious as to the persistently flippant and negligent treatment accorded the motion picture by the majority of newspapers, MOTOGRAPHY has been sending out a series of interrogatory letters to city editors all over the country. We are not yet ready to announce the result, if, indeed, there be any result to announce, of which we are somewhat skeptical.

The subject is enlivened for a moment, however, by a letter from Fred Elliott of the National Association, calling our attention to the advent of a motion picture page in the Albany Journal. Mr. Elliott says: "The importance of the industry is just beginning to dawn upon the publishers of some of the important daily newspapers. . . . Many of them have for years been running columns containing news of the automobile world and it would be very helpful if these newspapers devoted equal space to the silent drama."

We used the baseball parallel; Elliott uses the automobile. Baseball does not bring an inch of advertising to the dailies; the automobile news does. From that standpoint, advertising would seem to have little to do with it—which is as it should be.

But the picture has all the advantages of all of them. It has more fans than baseball, and it is bringing more and more local advertising to the papers. There are more logical and business reasons why newspapers should run picture news every day than reasons why they should run automobile and baseball news.

Publishers who have not yet awakened to that fact might take a tip from the growing list of papers which are increasing their popularity and prosperity by logical treatment of the picture.

New Blow Aimed at Canadian Exhibitors

Province of Ontario to Impose License Fee System Based on Number of Seats and Population

FOLLOWING up the announcements by A. K. McLean, acting minister of finance for the Dominion of Canada, of the decisions of the federal government to impose a tax of fifteen cents per reel per day, and also to increase the duty on imported films from two to five cents per foot, T. W. McGarry, Ontario provincial treasurer, came across with the statement that the province of Ontario would impose a new scale of license fees "in addition to the recent dominion tax." It is expected that the new tax will net the Ontario government $100,000 per year.

The license fee system has been changed from a flat charge to a tax on seats, based on the size of the local population.

The new fee in all cities having a population of more than 10,000 will be 25 cents per seat. This will mean that several large Toronto theatres will pay about $400 per year. The former license fee was $150 per year in the larger centers. According to the new arrangement, there is a minimum fee of $135 per year for theatres having a seating capacity of 545 or less.

In cities where the population is from 5,000 to 10,000, the license fee is 20 cents per seat. In all municipalities under 5,000 population, a provincial license fee of 15 cents per seat is charged.

The povincial license fee for film exchanges has also been raised from $150 to $250 per year.

Traveling picture shows will have to pay a license fee of $200 instead of $150 and they receive the same privileges as the film exchanges permanently located in the province.

Even the operators have been hit by the new provincial scale. The annual license fee for projectionists was $5. They will now pay $8.

The new schedule goes into effect at the end of May, when the annual dues in Ontario become payable.

General Film Suit Still On

The plaintiff in the $2,000,000 suit brought by the two General Film Company's preferred stockholders against virtually all of the important film producers and motion picture corporations in the country, rested its case on Friday of last week. A motion was then made by Judge Samuel Seabury, as chief of the array of legal talent representing the score of co-defendants, to dismiss the suit.

Justice Mullan announced he would reserve his decision until the defendant's case had been entered.

Big New Chicago House

Harry and Max Ascher, who, under the firm name of Ascher Brothers, operate a number of motion picture theatres in Chicago, have purchased, or leased the Inter Ocean building at 55-59 West Monroe, and will convert it into a moving picture theatre to seat 3,000 persons. This will make the second largest house in the loop, the Auditorium ranking first and Orchestra hall third.

Miss Conover with World

Miss Theresa Maxwell Conover, prominent on the speaking stage, has cast her lot with World Pictures and will appear in important supporting roles. Miss Conover received her training under Augustin Daly and had prominent roles in many of the plays of Charles Frohman.

Chicago Unit Has Election

The board of directors of the Chicago Unit of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation held a meeting Monday, May 20, and elected officers for the ensuing term as follows:

National directors, Joseph Hopp and Louis H. Frank; president, William E. Heaney; vice-president, W. D. Burford; secretary, H. A. Gundling; treasurer, M. A. Choynski; auditor, Sam Gold. A stockholders' meeting was called for May 22. Already fifty-four exhibitors have subscribed for stock and there are a large number of applications.

More Canadian Troubles

The picture theatres of Sherbrooke, Quebec, will hold no more shows on Sundays. The Lord's Day Alliance of Canada has won its case against the local exhibitors under a Federal Blue Law which dates back several score of years. Judge Mulvena, the local magistrate, imposed fines of $20 and costs on the managers of the Casino and Princess theatres.

Renew Goldwyn Contracts

Madge Kennedy is the latest Goldwyn star to sign a new and still longer-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, under whose name and auspices she made her successful debut in motion pictures.

Mabel Normand will also continue as a Goldwyn star for a term of years.

Asks Open Nominations

Joseph Hopp's speech at the recent annual election of the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in which he asked that candidates for offices be nominated from the floor and not in a committee session, is arousing much discussion. Mr. Hopp made this motion because he felt that more open and democratic methods would be better for all concerned. In his speech he stated that he was not a candidate and had no candidates but that for the good of the league he believed a more public policy should be followed in all exhibitor affairs.

"We are fighting abroad to make the world safe for democracy. Why not be as democratic as possible right here in this league?" asked Mr. Hopp. "It is for the benefit of the majority. Then let everyone know what is going on."

Arrange Canadian Tax Rates

After consultation with leaders of the moving picture business in the Dominion, the Canadian authorities have decided to impose a duty of three cents per foot on all moving picture films imported from the United States and to collect a war tax of fifteen cents per reel per day for every day that a picture is exhibited, it is declared.

The exchanges will be required to pay the three cent duty while the exhibitors will be asked to pay the fifteen cents per diem charge as their share.

New Fox Office in Buffalo

Official announcement from the William Fox offices states that a vast increase in business in western New York state has made necessary the opening of a new exchange of the Fox Film Corporation in Buffalo. The company's Syracuse headquarters has been closed. The address of the new Buffalo exchange is 209-211 Franklin street.

Pastors Demand Censorship

Having been successful in defeating Sunday shows through the recent referendum, members of the Pastors' Union at Birmingham are now seeking to have pictures censored.

Michalove to New York Office

Dan Michalove has been appointed manager of the New York City exchange of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, succeeding C. B. Price.

Essanay Makes Food Films

At the suggestion of the United States government as a means of teaching food conservation the Essanay Film Company has begun the production of six short food reels.

Third Body of Exhibitors Is Planned

SYDNEY S. COHEN AND C. C. PETTIJOHN THE PROMOTERS

THAT the signing of a declaration of peace between the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and the American Exhibitors' Association, and the formation of a national business body of exhibitors, "divorced from outside interests and selfish purposes," might be brought about, was revealed this week in the interchange of letters between Sydney S. Cohen, who is president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and Charles C. Pettijohn, representing the A. E. A.

In the furtherance of this effort, it is understood that the officials of the A. E. A. may give consideration to the postponement of their convention and exposition, now scheduled to be held in Chicago this summer.

On their endeavors to place the League affairs of exhibitors on a more stable and harmonious footing, it is understood that Cohen and Pettijohn have the support not only of exhibitors of large interests in each of their associations, but of prominent exhibitors not heretofore identified with league affairs.

Cohen Outlines Plan

Mr. Cohen's letter, which started the ball rolling, follows:

May 13, 1918.

Mr. C. C. Pettijohn,
524 Longacre Bldg.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Pettijohn:

Believing in your sincerity and fairness and that you have the welfare of motion picture exhibitors at heart, I am addressing this letter to you in an effort to ascertain at least if it is possible within the next sixty days to bring the two national exhibitor organizations together under one banner.

I know, and I think you realize, that there are big, clean, sincere men in both organizations, and we may as well be frank with each other and admit that both organizations are at present hampered by members who have selfish interests to play. I believe that you and I are in positions at present, or we can at least start a movement, which may result in great good to motion picture exhibitors throughout the country. I am willing to take the initiative for this movement in our organization if you are willing to do likewise with the members of the American Exhibitors' Association. Will you co-operate with me in an effort to bring about a fair understanding among our respective members, and if possible an amalgamation of both national organizations into one united, efficient and unselfish organization which will divorce itself from all side issues, and devote itself solely to the business of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States and Canada?

Will you favor me with an immediate reply to this letter, and if you feel that we can conscientiously work together in the furtherance of a plan which will bring us all under one banner, I will be glad to meet with you and your associates and start the "ball rolling."

With kindest personal regards, I am

Very truly yours,
(Signed) SYDNEY S. COHEN,
President, New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Pettijohn Says He's Ready

Mr. Pettijohn's reply, equally as conciliatory, follows:

May 15, 1918.

Mr. Sydney S. Cohen, President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, N. Y. State,
331 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Cohen:

I am just in receipt of your letter dated May 13, and I am trying to comply with your request for an immediate reply.

While in the middle west last week I consulted with several of the officers and directors of the American Exhibitors' Association on practically the same subject mentioned in your letter.

I believe in you, Mr. Cohen, one hundred per cent. I have the utmost confidence in the men who surround you. I have so stated to the men with whom I talked last week, and I have this day sent a recommendation to Frank J. Rembusch, our national secretary, that a tentative date be set for our national convention and that such tentative date be not sooner than the first of August or the first of September. In the meantime, I am willing to join hands with you in an effort to bring about one national organization, with no "side issues," devoted exclusively to the business of exhibitors and ever ready to co-operate with any other branch of the industry for our common good.

Uncle Sam has recognized us as a potent factor in this great world war. He needs us, and I personally believe we will be worth more to him under one banner—the banner under which all American people are this day united—HIS BANNER.

I am ready to meet you.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) C. C. PETTIJOHN.

Both Mr. Cohen and Mr. Pettijohn declined to comment upon the letters, saying that they spoke for themselves, and that it was too early in the negotiations to venture any conjectures, other than to hope that it would be possible to find a common meeting ground for all concerned

Fox Prepares New Versions of Big Hits

Six Productions, Three Starring Theda Bara, and Three William Farnum, Soon to Be Released

AN important announcement from the William Fox offices says that the organization is about to release new versions of six of the most popular box office successes that Mr. Fox has made. The pictures, which are now being retitled and re-edited by Hettie Gray Baker, editor of the Fox productions, will be issued to exhibitors over a period soon to be announced.

The films are three Theda Bara subjects and three William Farnum plays. The Theda Bara subjects are: "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans." The William Farnum subjects are: "The Bondman," "The Plunderer" and "A Soldier's Oath."

"These dramas were chosen," the announcement says, "after an intensive mail inquiry had been made among exhibitors throughout the United States. The investigation included personal visits to leading exhibitors and a postal card canvass among thousands of them. Four thousand replies were received. The sentiment for the pictures named was surprisingly unanimous.

"The first of the group will be released sometime in the latter part of June. A decision has not yet been reached as to the exact order in which the six will go forth, but this question will be answered shortly. New and attractive lithographs, new photos and new lobby displays are a part of the subsidiary material provided for the exploitation.

"All of the various Fox exchanges have full details of our plans and the exhibitors can get complete information from the branch managers. It should be noted at once, however, that the six photoplays are to be marketed separately and independently of any of our other productions.

"We believe that we have assembled a half-dozen films that box offices everywhere have recorded as nothing short of remarkable. 'A Fool There Was,' for instance, is certainly a memorable subject. The drama is not only among the most famous of the Theda Bara photoplays, but is recognized as one of the best known pictures in cinema history. The basis of the compelling story that it tells is the Kipling poem and the Burnes-Jones painting, 'The Vampire.'

"'The Clemenceau Case,' another Theda Bara photodrama, is a work that 'threshes society with a living whip,' as its author, Alexandre Dumas, declared. It shows vividly the lengths to which a woman of pantherish nature will go when her instincts lead her.

"The third of the Bara pictures, 'The Two Orphans,' Adolphe D'Ennery's immortal work, was long a classic of the stage, and gained rather than lost in its transfer to the screen. Miss Bara appears as the beautiful Henriette, one of the two sisters about whom the drama is woven.

"William Farnum's three plays are equally excellent. 'The Bondman' is a great visualization of conflicting passions, with a never-to-be-forgotten climax. In this masterly Hall Caine story, Mr. Farnum is seen as Red Jason and as Stephen Orry, the vagabond, and his characterization of the dual role has been the subject of widest praise.

"Of similar dramatic value are 'A Soldier's Oath' and 'The Plunderer.' The former is a gripping recital of a virile man's struggle in wartime, while the latter is an excellent picturization of Roy Norton's famous romance of the gold country."

Artcraft

The Whispering Chorus (Artcraft)—The poorest picture I have run in a year. It is a gruesome tale, and yet the director might have given it such an ending that everyone would have gone away from the theatre with the feeling that it was the greatest production of the year. Eighty per cent or more of the American people believe in immortality. Here a man goes into Paradise with the same old limp, the haggard look, the criminal appearance he had in life. And yet he has just made the supreme sacrifice. He has laid down his life to save others pain. If the director has only transfigured him, shown upon his face the smile of the conqueror, depicted him with a rejuvenated body, the limp gone, the limbs straightened, the clouds silvery, the heavens opening to welcome him, and a smaller child floating past him in the clouds, what an ending that would have been! The audience would have gone away with a feeling that there is compensation for all our ills, that true repentance is acceptable and that there is a kinder judgment. When will the directors begin to study the psychology of our audiences?—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.

The Tiger Man, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—Excellent, to good business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Down to Earth, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—A little better than his former feature. Went over well to good business.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

In Again, Out Again, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—It's great, chuck full of comedy.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Pride of the Clan, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—The poorest Pickford picture we have received.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

What Is the Picture's Box Office Value?

IS THE film you are running in your theater today a money maker? Pass the word on! Does the picture draw the crowds? Tell the exhibitors in the other states. They want to book the same pictures. Tell them in Motography's "What the Picture Did for Me" Department.

Amarilly of Clothesline Alley, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—A very clever production and the star fits the role. This was well received and brought good business.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class, critical neighborhood.

Bluebird

Mother O' Mine, with Rupert Julian (Bluebird)—A beautiful story, splendidly acted. Will surely please wherever it is shown. It is bound to leave a lasting impression and also a lesson.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit

Empty Pockets—A very good picture of the underworld type. Drew well.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Fox

The Soul of Buddha, with Theda Bara (Fox)—A typical Bara picture, a trifle lacking in spice. It was well received and drew extra good business. The audience was well pleased.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Du Barry, with Theda Bara (Fox)—Not up to Miss Bara's standard. We were disappointed in it. Played to good houses matinee and evening.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Peg of the Pirates, with Peggy Hyland (Fox)—Too bad! I wouldn't advise running it.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Moral Law, with Gladys Rockwell (Fox)—Very good. This is the kind of a picture the people like the star in. Drew well.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Blindness of Divorce (Fox)—A very good picture with a moral. An all star cast. The people were well pleased with it.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

When a Man Sees Red, with William Farnum (Fox)—Good acting, but patrons were not pleased. Just an ordinary feature.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Woman and the Law, with Miriam Cooper (Fox)—Some picture and big business. These standards are surely great.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Sunshine Comedies (Fox)—Real fun producers. Some exceptional and new-fangled stunts. Rough, but people enjoy them.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheuhm Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Stolen Honor, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—More was expected of this beautiful star.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

Cupid's Round-up, with Tom Mix (Fox)—This is some picture of its kind, but drew little business because the star is new here.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

Goldwyn

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Picture great. Star great. Played to advanced prices.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Our Little Wife, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A fair picture. Madge Kennedy fails to attract attention here.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Splendid Sinner, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—A good production. Story somewhat different. Business increased on second night.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Floor Below, with Mabel Normand (Goldwyn)—A good subject, well put over. Mabel Normand means good business for us.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Face in the Dark, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—This is five reels in length. A good picture that will please all the Marsh fans. A detective story.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Kleine

Efficiency Edgar's Courtship, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay)—As a whole, very good. Taken from a good story. The star is fine. Photography excellent. Pleased our patrons.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

The Unbeliever, with Raymond McKee (Edison-Kleine)—Picture is full of action, with fine close-ups of trench scenes. It carries a wonderful punch and there is a sweet love story woven throughout. It should clean up in any neighborhood.—H. C. Miller, Rose Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

A Pair of Sixes, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay-Kleine)—A good six-reel comedy drama with good advertising possibilities and a title that is well known from the stage play. Have the Six of Hearts and Six of Diamonds painted on all your signs and cards.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Metro

Revelation, with Alla Nazimova (Metro)—One of the best pictures of the year.—H. C. Miller, Boston Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Revelation, with Alla Nazimova (Metro)—One of the best pictures ever made. Excellent.—Flossie A. Jones, Colonial Theatre, Waukesha, Wisconsin.

With Neatness and Dispatch, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—Bushman combines Fairbanks' and Chaplin's style in this picture and he gets it over. It is a crook farce with Bushman dressed in old clothes. I think you will find you will have no complaints from your patrons when you run this.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

My Own United States, with Arnold Daly (Metro)—Very patriotic. Deals with the history of the United States. The characters are well played. The story is good and all in all it is a very worthy production.—H. C. Miller, Rose Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Treasure of the Sea, with Edith Storey (Metro)—Picture average. Not a big box-office attraction, but it will get over. Some do not care for the star.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Revenge, with Edith Storey (Metro)—A good picture, with good action throughout. Well directed.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

The Shell Game, with Emmy Wehlen (Metro)—One of this star's best and she has never made a bad one. Business big.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

Daybreak, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—Fair. Did not draw here. Star is good except in close-ups.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—A good picture. Good print.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Metro Program—One of the most even and equitable of programs, in my judgment.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.—Highly critical audiences.

Mutual

Shackles of Truth, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—A very good picture, but rather sad. Russell draws splendidly. Good business in rain.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

Souls in Pawn, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—If we had known what this picture was, we would not have shown it. The heroine takes the part of a French woman who acts as a spy in her own country in the pay of the German government and the hero is a murderer. Yet they both go free and live happily ever after. Why are such films sent out?—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

The Upper Crust, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual) — An excellent picture, full of comedy, but this star does not draw. Business poor.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

Molly Go Get 'Em, with Margarita Fischer (American-Mutual)—A pleasing comedy-drama. Good acting, plenty of action, and an attractive star.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Paralta

Madame Who? with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—A splendid production, well acted. The story is surely a good one. —A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Paramount

The Biggest Show on Earth, with Enid Bennett (Paramount) — This is great. Miss Bennett is coming to the front fast. Drew a very good crowd.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

His Majesty, Bunker Bean, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—Pleased every one, but the title did not draw. This will please anywhere.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Rich Man, Poor Man, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A dandy picture to pretty good business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Unclaimed Goods, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—An excellent picture. Business fair.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Wild Youth (Blackton-Paramount)—A very high class picture, which was well received. A good story, beautifully presented. It is the best thing Blackton has done for Paramount. The Chicago press gave it some of the best write-ups in months.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Family Skeleton, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—The poorest Ray feature we ever had.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Love Me, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—The picture is good and the star is rapidly gaining in popularity. This was well received.—H. C. Miller, Acme Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Butcher Boy, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—An excellent comedy. As soon as "Fatty" appears, the laughs start. They are catching and continuous. Many situations call for a roar and a scream.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

The Law of the Land, with Madame Petrova (Paramount)—About the poorest picture I have run.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—About as poor as they make them. Star does not act.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Jack and Jill, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—Title misleading, but it is a very good picture. Business good.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

Sunshine Nan, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—One of the classiest little comedy-dramas I have seen in some time.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

Naughty Naughty, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—I consider this a good picture for entertainment value and most of my patrons agreed with me. You will find this will please above the average. A comedy-drama of small town life.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago. — Middle class neighborhood.

Naughty Naughty, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—This entertained our audience very well. A clever story with a good moral.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.—Highly critical audience.

His Hidden Purpose, with Chester Conklin (Sennett-Paramount)—Contains many laughs and helps build up a good show. We have no fault to find with this brand of comedies. They average up well.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

La Tosca, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—For drawing power, it is poor. For dramatic art, this is good, but I would not have booked it for our house had we had our choice in this matter. Will they please keep away from these costume plays! It is about time we had a picture with Pauline Frederick that will please.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Pathe

The Naulahka, with Doraldina (Pathe) —A very interesting subject, fine settings. Drew better than we expected.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Great Adventure, with Bessie Love (Pathe)—A nice family picture, pleasing and entertaining.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Innocent, with Fannie Ward (Pathe)—Miss Ward does some fine work in this picture. A good story, well directed and produced. Drew big business.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Loaded Dice, with Frank Keenan (Pathe)—Strong and emotional all the way through.—Wm. Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

The Hillcrest Mystery, with Irene Castle (Pathe)—A detective story with an unsolved mystery. Plenty of excitement and action. The title is a little against its box-office value but the name of Mrs. Castle put it over for us and we did well with it. She is well known here through the serial, Patria.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Select

The Honeymoon, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—A very good picture.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.—Highly critical audience.

Shirley Kaye, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—There has been a marked improvement in the work of this actress. My audiences were critical at first, but because of the star's good work in Select pictures, I am now sure of a good house when I present her.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.

Select Pictures are hard to beat.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.

The Shuttle, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—Good but it did not draw. Title is against it. The star is gaining in popularity.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Triangle

The Bond of Fear, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—A wonder of a production. A strong opening and strong ending.—William Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

Double Trouble, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—The worst picture I have run. Drew a big crowd, which was too bad.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Shoes That Danced, with Pauline Stark (Triangle)—Fair of its kind. Pictures gangster life in East New York.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

The Food Gamblers, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—A good picture, patriotic.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Borrowed Plumage, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—Play O. K. but these costume pictures do not take.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Sudden Jim, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—A fine production. Ray has a chance to show his skill.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Vitagraph

The Sixteenth Wife, with Mark McDermott (Vitagraph)—The best McDermott picture we have had. Good business in rainy weather.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

The Message of the Mouse, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—Very good. Star draws well and the picture went over big.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

Dead Shot Baker, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—A real picture and the kind that goes well here.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

Within the Law, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—A wonderful production but for some reason it did not get the money with heavy advertising.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theatre, Chester, S. C.

World

Wanted, a Mother, with Madge Evans (World)—Drew well. Madge is a wonderful little actress. This will go over anywhere if properly handled.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Masks and Faces, with Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson (World)—If we could have viewed this before we ran it, we would have canceled it or put in on the shelf. It is one of those old-fashioned, lifeless costume plays, six reels of tiresome acting with no action and it will go over the heads of seventy-five per cent of your audience. Why World picks out these plays in the open market is a mystery to me. Exhibitors do not want costume plays.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Serials and Series

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—Chapter five. Business holding exactly even this week.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—Chapter six. Business fell off with this episode, but it was probably because the enlisted men left town on this day.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

The Price of Folly, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—Very poor. Miss Roland must be tired.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—A serial story so impossible and so improbable that much of its entertainment value is lost. It looks as though they tried to burlesque a melodrama.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Hidden Hand, with Doris Kenyon (Pathe)—This serial fell below our usual business. It contained too much "rough stuff" and impossible escapes. The grownups did not care as much for it as the ones featuring Pearl White.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

State Rights and Specials

The Zeppelin's Last Raid (Ince-State Rights)—A good picture to good business in spite of heavy rain.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The Zeppelin's Last Raid (Ince-State Rights)—A very good picture, showing the destruction done by the Zeppelins. Very spectacular.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Bargain, with W. S. Hart (State Rights)—Not up to the standard of present-day Hart pictures. This is three years old and it looks it. Titles are amateurish. It was a disappointment to us. Funkhouser made many cuts in it, and the Chicago copy, which was wound on six reels, was only about 4,500 feet.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Messenger, with Billy West (Standard)—Terrible.—H. C. Miller, Alcazar Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

For good comedy run Pathe, Keystone, Mutual and Fox and your patrons are pleased all the time.—William Maguire, Gem Theatre, Silverton, Colo.

Universal Consolidates Its Exchanges

Products of Parent Company and Subsidiaries to Be Handled Jointly by Single Organization in Each City

ONE of the most complete changes ever attempted in the industry is being completed by the Universal Company in its distributing organization for the purpose of promoting economy and efficiency.

The change was inaugurated on May 20, when the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., took over the business of all of the branch exchanges distributing Universal products in the United States, with the exception of a few exchanges not controlled by the producing company.

Now not only will Universal attractions be handled by Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., but these exchanges also will handle the output of Jewel Productions, Lois Weber Productions, Bluebird Photoplays, Century Comedies and Lyons and Moran Comedies.

It is in combining the numerous interests that the economy will be practiced. For a long time Bluebird controlled its exchanges and Jewel also had exchanges, entailing a large overhead expense in rents, salary of office force, deliveries and incidentals too numerous to designate.

With the combination of the exchanges this excessive expense will cease. Eventually the saving will be felt by the exhibitors, who will be given the benefit of the economies caused by the new system.

By the new arrangement the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., takes over the business of Universal exchanges as follows:

Independent Film Exchange, Pittsburgh.
Universal Film Exchange, Detroit.
Universal Film & Supply Company, Kansas City.
Universal Film & Supply Company, St. Louis.
Universal Film & Supply Company, Oklahoma City.
Universal Film & Supply Company, Fort Smith, Arkansas.
Universal Film & Supply Company, Wichita, Kansas.
Universal Film Exchange, Chicago.
Universal Film Exchange, Milwaukee.
Universal Film Exchange, Denver.
Universal Film Exchange, Salt Lake City.
Universal Film Exchange, Butte, Montana.
Film Supply Company, Portland, Oregon.
Film Supply Company, Seattle.
Film Supply Company, Spokane.
California Film Exchange, San Francisco.
California Film Exchange, Los Angeles.
California Film Exchange, Phoenix, Arizona.
Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis.
Laemmle Film Service, Omaha.
Colonial Film Exchange, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.
Laemmle Film Service, Des Moines, Iowa.
Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, Cincinnati.
Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, Columbus, Ohio.
Cincinnati Buckeye Film Compay, Louisville.
Central Film Service, Indianapolis.
Rev Film Service Albany, N. Y.
Victor Film Service, Buffalo.
Victor Film Service, Cleveland.

C. H. MacGowan, general manager of Universal, on Saturday, May 18, accompanied by six assistants, left New York for a trip around the entire circuit for the purpose of supervising the change. Before leaving he said that the change would be effected automatically and that everything would be working smoothly from the start.

The change in the method of distribution does not mean that changes will follow in the Universal sales organization. All of the branch managers will retain their positions, but hereafter will be given assistance by the home office that will lead to greater possibilities for themselves and for the exhibitors served by them.

Smoke Makes Star Unconscious

"Striving for realistic effects is all very well in its place," says Norma Talmadge, "but—!"

The star's remarks were occasioned by a scene in her next Select production to follow "De Luxe Annie." The location was the roof of the American Theatre, Eighth avenue and Forty-second street, New York, kindly loaned to Miss Talmadge and her company by Marcus Loew. The story called for a brave action on the part of the heroine. The star stepped out before the safety curtain on the stage and addressed the extras who were impersonating the audience.

"Don't be frightened," she called, "take your time and all will get out safely."

This was all a part of the story—so were the volumes of choking smoke rolling from three sides of the auditorium onto the heads of the extras.

But just at this moment some enthusiastic stage hand touched off a particularly enthusiastic "smoke pot" down in the orchestra pit, just at Miss Talmadge's feet. Up bellowed the smoke in dark, nauseous clouds, and down went the star for the count!

Miss Talmadge was quickly carried to the wings and revived and a little while later the filming was resumed with one stage hand less on the company's payroll.

Actress Balks at Kissing

Whatever egotism Frank Mayo may ever have had, he hasn't any now.

For two weeks the process of filming a new feature had been going on and the director finally reached the point where he planned to shoot the love scenes.

"Now you put your arms around his neck and kiss him," said the director to the young woman playing opposite Mayo.

"I don't do anything of the sort!" cried the girl, stamping her foot.

"What do you mean—why won't you?" asked the director.

"I don't dare to kiss him," the girl declared. "It is one of the things that is forbidden by my church."

All efforts to overcome her conscientious objections failed. She simply wouldn't do it. Consequently it became necessary to rewrite the story so that the kissing could be eliminated, as the girl had already been filmed in too many scenes to permit of her removal.

Vanderlip Kills Theatre Boycott

WAR SAVINGS CHIEF CONDEMNS THAT FORM OF ECONOMY

A MOVEMENT in Los Angeles restricting school children from picture theatres in order that they might spend their money entirely for thrift stamps has been wiped out through the energetic action of Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Frank W. Vanderlip, president of the National War Savings Committee.

In response to appeals from the N. A. M. P. I., Mr. Vanderlip has taken immediate steps to right affairs in Los Angeles, and to prevent a similar condition arising elsewhere. The national association acts as a result of a request from Mr. Goldfish, who is now in the west on business.

Telegram From Goldfish

Mr. Goldfish had wired Mr. Brady as follows:

"A very serious situation has arisen in the city of Los Angeles whereby the school children are made to pledge themselves not to patronize motion picture theatres, thereby buying thrift stamps. This situation is so serious here that the picture theatres have been deprived recently of 50 per cent of their revenue. If we as an industry allow a condition like this to develop throughout the country it will put the majority of exhibitors to bankruptcy, thereby affecting the producers and reducing their revenue.

"I therefore strongly urge you to call a meeting of the war committees and put this before them, so that the matter may be taken up with the proper officials in Washington immediately. I am at the Alexandria Hotel and will appreciate advice as to what action you have taken. Regards."

Statement From Exhibitor

This was followed by an alarming statement of theatre conditions in Los Angeles from Frank R. McDonald, president of the Theatre Owners' Association there.

"At the request of Samuel Goldfish we are appealing to you to assist us in obtaining federal aid in overcoming German propaganda, which has already decreased the attendance at our theatres 50 per cent," he wired. "The system is to have the teachers throughout the public schools pledge the children not to attend moving picture theatres under pretext of buying thrift stamps.

"Kindly call Washington officials' attention to the fact that we have dedicated our moving picture theatres as temples of democracy for the use of our government through the instrumentality of the Four-Minute Men organization, and the propaganda destroys the value of our theatres as a public forum.

"Incidentally the tax receipts for this district for amusement alone have decreased the past month approximately $125,000. Thirty-two of our theatres have already closed, and many more will close unless some relief is afforded."

Vanderlip Protests Move

Mr. Vanderlip immediately wrote to C. A. Davidson, state director of the National War Savings Committee in Los Angeles, calling to his attention the seriousness of the situation and its injustice in view of the very vital work now being done by every branch of the film industry in furtherance of the government's war plans. In his letter Mr. Vanderlip said:

"Word just comes to me from Los Angeles that there is a movement there in connection with the War Savings campaign to pledge the school children specifically not to attend motion picture shows.

"The motion picture men are naturally very much concerned about such a movement as this. I do not feel that it is the sort of movement to be encouraged. I am very strong, indeed, in the belief that school children and everyone else should be pledged to economize to save and to buy War Savings Stamps, but for the War Savings organization to pick out the specific thing to be refrained from is, it seems to me, a mistake.

Recalls Exhibitor Patriotism

"There is, too, another side to the matter. The motion picture people have been very well disposed, not only toward War Savings, but toward all the government activities, and in many ways have been extremely helpful to the government. Right at the moment many motion picture organizations are offering to carry 'trailers' on all the releases of new pictures for the next three months, and it comes particularly hard when they are co-operating in this way for us to select them as particular ground for economy.

"That a child may find it necessary to economize in his motion picture expenditure if he takes a pledge to save, that it may be desirable for him to refrain from such expenditures, is undoubtedly true, but I do not think that we should start a campaign specifically to pledge school children not to go to motion picture shows."

Mutual to Distribute Hayakawa Films

Eight Productions Announced for Period Covering Forty-Eight Weeks—First One July 15

EIGHT Sessue Hayakawa special productions, produced by the Haworth through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Pictures Corporation, will be distributed through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The first of these pictures, now under the working title of "His American Birthright," has been completed and will shortly be ready for screening at Mutual projection rooms.

The first picture will be released July 15, and will be available for pre-release to leading exhibitors by special arrangement. These special arrangements will be handled through the representatives of Haworth or by application to Mutual.

The eight productions will be released at intervals through a period of forty-eight weeks. They will be presented in five or six parts.

The negotiations for the distribution of the pictures have been conducted by Charles Greenberg, secretary of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, and James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual. Mr. Greenberg gives promise of a product of decidedly exceptional box office value.

"We have set out to make Hayakawa pictures with a greater attention to vehicles and the refinements of production than the star has ever had before," said Mr. Greenberg. "Hayakawa has been thoroughly established with an earned reputation of stardom of the first magnitude. For a long time it has been true that his name on the billing means a big house and a long run.

"We have proceeded, therefore, to lay out a line of production for him that will enable his box office value to demonstrate itself and exploit itself unhampered by any parallel releases or releasing conditions.

"The cast in the first picture is certainly ample evidence of our sincerity of purpose in giving Hayakawa the ample support that will enable his best work. The cast includes Marion Sais and Tsuri Aoki—Mrs. Hayakawa—Mary Anderson, and several others who have played 'on their own' in productions of feature merit. The direction is by William Worthington.

"Hayakawa has in our opinion a remarkably well established box office value. He is quite what one would call a 'natural star.' There has been nothing of artificial stimulation in his career. He has not been a creation of advertising and publicity. He has made his screen fame for himself, entirely out of his own ability and genius. That means a standing with the public that makes his pictures a sound investment for the motion picture exhibitor.

"We have chosen the distribution facilities of the Mutual Film Corporation after an investigation which leads us to believe that through Mutual we will get the benefit of a service to the exhibitor which has been firmly established and well demonstrated. The Hayakawa pictures will, of course, be accompanied by a full line of exhibitor aids and advertising accessories which will be in keeping and in quality with the pictures themselves."

Papers to Boost Normand Film

In furtherance of its advertising campaign for Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn picture, "Joan of Plattsburg," Goldwyn has arranged for the publication in more than 200 American and Canadian newspapers of a full-page fiction version of Porter Emerson Browne's story, illustrated with stills from the production.

Mr. Browne himself has prepared the article and Goldwyn has had it prepared for newspaper use in 7 and 8-column-page matrices, which are being sent to all newspapers requesting them.

Goldwyn has directed its branch managers and salesmen to make every effort to tie up the publication of the story with the showing of the picture. Theatre owners also will work through newspapers with which they advertise.

Benjamin Chapin Honored

In recognition of his services in visualizing the life and character of Abraham Lincoln for posterity, Benjamin Chapin has been honored by the Lincoln Memorial University of Cumberland Gap, W. Va., which has conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Literature. This information has just been transmitted to Mr. Chapin by the following telegram:

"It gives me much pleasure to announce that the degree of doctor of literature was conferred upon you at the annual commencement of the Lincoln Memorial University in the college auditorium, in recognition of your distinguished services in interpreting the life and character of Abraham Lincoln. Cordially yours, Dr. George A. Hubbell, president."

Chapin conceived the idea of perpetuating the character of Lincoln in films five years ago, and recently announced the completion of his labors in "The Son of Democracy," a series of ten two-reel subjects, each a separate story of America in the making. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation released these subjects under the Paramount trade-mark.

Buys Three Theatres

C. E. Stillwell of the Stillwell Amusement Company of Spokane has bought the Rose Theatre, Colfax, Wash., and two other motion picture houses, one in Moscow and one in Pullman. J. S. Nelson, formerly a salesman for Mutual in the Spokane territory, is managing the theaters.

Presidential Booms Spring Up

M. P. E. L. AGITATED AS CONVENTION NEARS

BOOMS of presidential candidates from the ranks of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are springing up all over the country as the date of the annual convention in Boston grows nearer. Reiteration by President Lee A. Ochs of his refusal to be a candidate again has added to the strength and interest of the booms.

At a recent dinner in Boston a boom for Ernest H. Horstman was set in motion and was so enthusiastically received that it seems certain that Mr. Horstman will be the candidate presented by the section in which the convention and exposition will be held.

John O'Donnell Put Forth

Similarly, from Philadelphia comes the news of another dinner, held to proclaim the candidacy of John O'Donnell, a member of the executive committee of the league.

Without a dinner or an organized boom, persistent calls for Thomas Furness of Duluth were heard during the recent convention of the exhibitors of the northwest, and Frank Eager of Nebraska and Sydney Cohen of New York are also frequently spoken of.

Ochs Insists on Retiring

Efforts to induce Mr. Ochs to stand for office again are unavailing. "I really mean it," is his unvarying response. "I am leaving the league at the end of my second term, stronger and more powerful than at the end of my first term, and certainly much more so than when I first took office. That surely is recompense enough."

Mr. Ochs is now vice-president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and intends to devote himself exclusively to the furtherance of the co-operative exhibitor movement, which that company is fostering.

Fight on for 1919 Convention

Besides organizing for the purpose of supporting the booms of local candidates for the national presidency, the exhibitors in various sections of the country are uniting their strength in the hope of bringing back from Boston the award of the location of the 1919 convention and exposition.

St. Louis is going to put up a strong bid, and the men from that city and its vicinity say that nothing will stop them from winning it.

They will find themselves with a fight on their hands, however, if any weight is to be attached to reports from Chicago. That city believes itself due for a return engagement on the part of the biggest event in the film world.

New York Quiet But—

As usual, nothing is being heard from New York, but the chances are that the representatives from that city will have had their say before the convention agrees upon the location to be selected.

All planning to attend the convention and exposition are warned to anticipate the lack of sufficient hotel accommodations, and are urged to make reservations as far in advance as possible. There is only one exhibitor who feels absolutely safe in the matter of sleeping quarters, and he is coming on a cat-boat and plans to sleep on the River Charles.

Exposition Will Be Success

The Boston exposition will without question be the greatest of its kind in history, and in addition to exhibitors from the United States and Canada, the producers, distributors and stars, those of England, France and Italy, will attend.

The boosters have got right down to business in selecting committees. More than a hundred hustling, bustling Boston boosters will serve on the various committees to make the Boston show the show of shows. Samuel Grant will be a co-manager with Frederick Elliott in general management. They already have the undivided support of the entire association and plans are already assuming concrete form. The biggest producers in the country with their stars, the men who have built the trade up to its present magnitude as fourth in industrial importance in the world, the accessory dealers, exhibitors and everyone who has to do with moving pictures will participate in the Boston exposition and its success is assured well in advance.

Heading the various important committees will be several of Boston's leading exhibitors. Harry Asher, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New England, will serve as chairman of the arrangements committee, and his prominence in the field of film will lend added importance to his position as chairman of the important arrangements committee.

Members of Various Committees

The other committees are as follows:

Arrangement—Harry Asher, chairman; C. Bean, A. S. Black, W. R. Burns, H. F. Campbell, John M. Casey, B. H. Cornell, W. L. Dadmun, J. A. Di Pesa, R. W. Brown, L. S. Eyster, E. J. Farrell, G. M. A. Essanay in Crusade on Film Pirates

First Convictions Obtained in Cleveland, Where Organized Gang Is Brought Into Court

ESSANAY has begun a wholesale campaign against film pirates and has succeeded in obtaining its first convictions under the criminal statutes.

The first action was taken in Cleveland, where Joe Morrow was arrested and found guilty in the county court of receiving stolen property and of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The minimum sentence is one year in prison and $500 fine. Lee Friedman was convicted of larceny.

Sentence has not been pronounced in either case, the court withholding its findings until the completion of the trial of another man, who also is charged with receiving stolen property and with contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

This is but the first of a series of prosecutions which Essanay is conducting. Action will be taken on criminal grounds in several cities as soon as all the evidence is completed.

In Cleveland it was shown that the film thefts were conducted by an organized band which made a business of pirating films. Essanay discovered that several Broncho Billy and Chaplin films were missing. Andrew J. Callaghan was dispatched to Cleveland to investigate. He discovered that films were being shown that did not come from the authorized exchanges. These were traced to the men who were renting them out.

Detectives followed these films when they were returned and found that the business was conducted from a shack in the outskirts of the city. The place was raided and Morrow and an accomplice arrested. Twenty-five stolen films, some of them belonging to Essanay and several to other companies, were found.

The detectives also waylaid Friedman and took him into custody. He confessed to the thefts. He said the gang's method was to bribe boys working in exchanges to steal the films. Friedman admitted taking several films from an exchange for which he worked.

The same organized method of theft was discovered in other cities and arrests are expected shortly.

Lytell Shoots Shark

There is one less shark in the Pacific ocean because of Bert Lytell's skill with a revolver.

Lytell and members of his supporting company were on location at the beach working in his forthcoming Metro picture, "No Man's Land," when Lytell was required to handle a pistol in a fight scene. There was also a "close-up" of a handful of steel-jacketed bullets.

In his left hand Lytell was holding the bullets before the camera and in his right was the pistol. Will S. Davis, directing the picture, was gazing seaward when suddenly he shouted: "Shark ahoy!"

Lytell whirled around and loaded his weapon. The shark sped shoreward, intent on catching a smaller fish. With the moving target at 150 yards Lytell fired three times. As one of the bullets found its mark the shark sank and then reappeared lifeless on the surface.

Griffith Makes One Story Out of Three

New Artcraft Feature Will Be Based on Best of Each Plot with Locales Nearly Circling Globe

ON the heels of his great success, "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith plans to launch another huge war drama which will be released as an Artcraft picture.

Though Mr. Griffith has withheld all information regarding the story, he has permitted it to be known that the picture will present an entirely different angle from that of "Hearts of the World," and it is reported on good authority that he does not intend to depict a single battle scene, using the world-war merely as a background for a poignant love story.

A fact of much interest is that Henry Walthall, who gained prominence under the direction of Mr. Griffith, especially in the character of the little colonel in "The Birth of a Nation," has been engaged for the cast, which will also include Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, George Siegmann and other prominent players in "Hearts of the World."

As near as now known, scenes will be laid in France, Canada, Hawaii and Scotland, some of which were photographed when Mr. Griffith was in Europe, and others are being made in settings reproduced in California.

The picture promises to be a revelation, for it will probably be a combination of three separate stories, originally written for three distinct Artcraft pictures, and Mr. Griffith has taken the strongest points in each story and blended them into one production, the threads being interwoven as the story progresses and ending in a powerful climax. This accounts for the widely separated locales, nearly circling the globe.

Following his established custom, Mr. Griffith is conducting elaborate rehearsals before the various scenes are actually filmed.

Goldwin To Double Its Output

WILL RELEASE MORE THAN FIFTY PICTURES A YEAR

IN ITS second releasing year Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will double the number of its productions from the present basis of twenty-six annually to more than fifty, according to announcement just made from California by President Samuel Goldfish.

This step will be good news to exhibitors and comes in direct response to their demands and their whole-hearted support.

During its second twelve months Goldwyn will release:

Geraldine Farrar, six productions.
Pauline Frederick, eight productions.
Mabel Normand, eight productions.
Mae Marsh, eight productions.
Madge Kennedy, eight productions.
Rex Beach, six productions from his biggest works.

And six productions with a popular male star, whose name cannot be announced at this time.

Farrar to Start Soon

"Within a fortnight," says Mr. Goldfish, "Miss Farrar will begin her first Goldwyn production. From the day of her entry on the screen this brilliant artist has been a sensationally successful star and our plans for her future foretell a doubling of her popularity through the selection of even greater screen stories than she has had before.

"Miss Frederick unquestionably ranks as one of our greatest emotional actresses, a beautiful woman of rare charm and constantly increasing popularity, both with the public and exhibitors. Owners of theatres everywhere have had proved to them her great box-office drawing power.

"It gives me great pleasure to witness the successes of Miss Normand, Miss Marsh and Miss Kennedy, three of our stars who have carried us so far forward during our first year as a producing organization.

Miss Normand Gains Friends

"Miss Normand has increased her reputation and her popularity since joining Goldwyn. There were persons who doubted the wisdom of having her step outside the fields of comedy but these doubts vanished instantly and she was at once recognized as a splendid dramatic actress. In taking this step she has not deserted comedy, as is evidenced by 'Dodging a Million,' 'The Floor Below,' 'Joan of Plattsburg' and her next production, 'The Venus Model.'

"Miss Marsh is today a greater favorite than ever before. She has more than justified all of the predictions we made for her.

Samuel Goldfish.

"The faith we had in Madge Kennedy even before her first picture was completed has been amply borne out. She was an instantaneous success on the screen.

"Heretofore, as is generally known, there has been usually but one Rex Beach production annually. Every production ever made from one of his famous stories has made money for exhibitors. Goldwyn is assured of six Rex Beach productions in a single year, thus guaranteeing six additional times in each year when theatres playing his productions will do capacity business.

Withholds Star's Name

"I am not yet ready to announce by name the popular male personality to be starred by Goldwyn, but I am assured in advance of his great popularity with the American public."

"In June we shall announce our marketing or releasing plans and policies for the coming twelve months. The step we have taken in doubling our production output was foreseen from the beginning of our career. With twenty-six productions we first wished to build an organization and develop its capacities and facilities. We did not intend to be hurried into the making of machine-made pictures. We wished to test out our sales and distributing organization and also we desired to girdle the globe with our sales offices and alliances.

"In all of these things we have succeeded. We have what I consider to be the finest technical and executive organization in the industry.

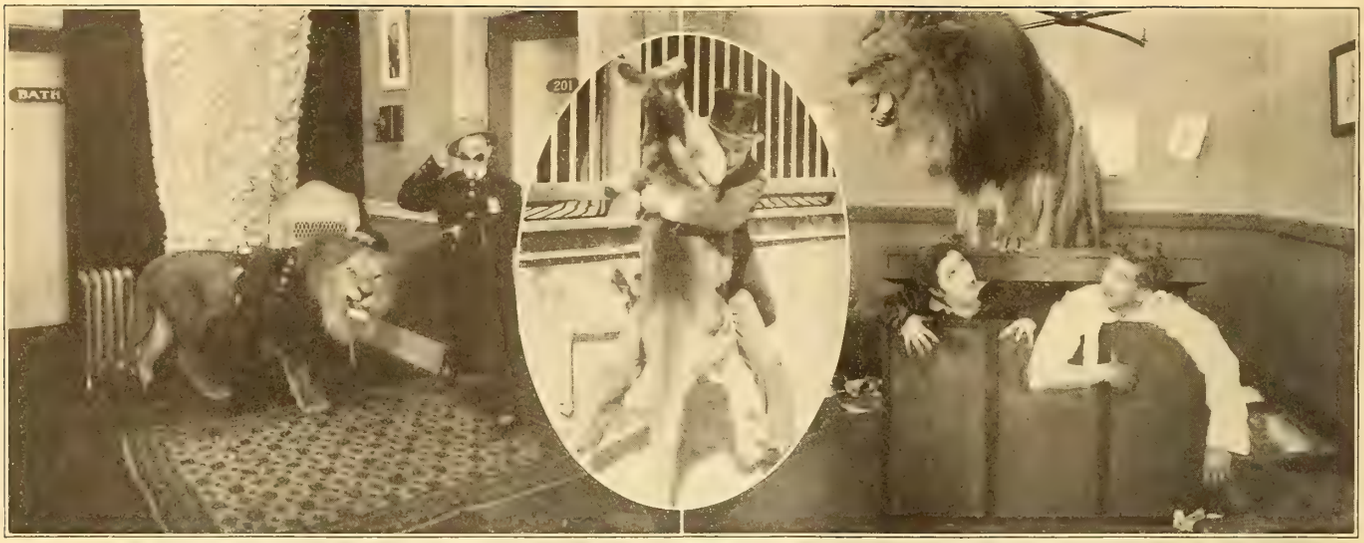
"Doubling of our production does not mean any lessening of our interest in distributing independently made pictures. Goldwyn keeps 'open house' for the makers of all worthy pictures."

Petrova Talks in Philadelphia

Madame Petrova made a special trip to Philadelphia last Thursday at the invitation of Harry Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and delivered an interesting talk at the Stanley Theatre on behalf of the Red Cross Fund.

This was the first time that Madame Petrova has made a personal appearance at any picture house in Philadelphia and the audience was so enthusiastic that the star was recalled again and again.

In addition to speaking for the Red Cross, Madame Petrova recited some of her original poems and sang one of her own songs. Philadelphia will be visited again by the star when she starts out on her extensive trip from New York to the Coast in the interest of Thrift stamps.



Appeal Fails to Oust Major

Pending the decision on the Maypole ordinance, which would take the censorship out of the hands of Major Funkhouser, the latter still holds power undisturbed. In the case of "My Four Years in Germany," the petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the showing of the film without cutouts has the endorsement of the committee on public information. George Creel, in answer to the complaint of the producers about the Major's censorship, telegraphed the suggestion that the matter be taken up with Governor Lowden, demanding investigation and removal. Governor Lowden, however, notified them that he also was without power to act.

Fox to Film Morris Story

"You Can't Get Away With It," one of the most famous stories of Gouverneur Morris, short story writer, novelist and war correspondent, is about to be filmed by William Fox with Jewel Carmen as the star.

The story is that of a girl, once wealthy, who enters into a domestic arrangement with a man because she is unable to stand up under grinding poverty. She accepts the man's proposal in the face of his honest warning that "she can't get away with it," and the consequences which she pays form an absorbing drama of a great problem.

Affiliated Increases Capitalization

Raises Total From $100,000 to $250,000 So Co-operative Advantages Can Be Put Into Operation Quickly

ALTHOUGH scarcely a month old, the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation last week increased its capitalization from $100,000 to $250,000.

This addition to the original investment was deemed desirable according to Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel, to take care of the big response with which the co-operative plan back of the Affiliated has been received by exhibitors.

"We want to be in a position to meet every demand that will make for the furtherance of the 'direct from producer to exhibitor' plan," said Mr. Pettijohn. "While we thought our original capital was more than ample to take care of the development of this idea, three weeks of operation has shown us that this movement is going to grow much faster than our most sanguine expectations and that additional capital is desirable to take care of this rapid expansion.

"The founders of the Affiliated are determined that the desire on the part of exhibitors in sections not yet organized into booking associations for participation in the benefits of this organization shall be instantly heeded.

"It takes money to send organizers into these sections and get these local bodies under way and this added capital is to be devoted, in part, to seeing that such bodies are properly placed on their feet. Since the Affiliated is absolutely paying its own way, without calling on exhibitors for a penny for promotion expenses, this recent action of increasing the capitalization in so short a time shows how much confidence we have in the soundness of our plan.

"Those responsible for the organization have been so encouraged that they have expressed a willingness to put unlimited funds into the project, if necessary, to make its co-operative advantages operative immediately on a nation-wide scale."

Meetings for the purpose of perfecting arrangements for the association of booking organizations with the Affiliated were held last week at Chicago and Indianapolis. The Chicago gathering, in Fraternity Hall, resulted in more than one-half the trust fund, necessary to complete such an affiliation, being paid in.

Other territories well on their way toward the consummation of their trust funds are Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Philadelphia and New York.

Meetings this week are scheduled for St. Louis, Kansas City and Cedar Rapids.

Book Stores to Aid Picture

In anticipation of the forthcoming production of "Missing," Commodore Blackton's new Paramount offering from the novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, New York book stores are well stocked with copies of the book and doubtless the same plan will be pursued by all live newsdealers throughout the country.

The picture will enhance the sale of Mrs. Ward's book and the book will intensify the interest in the picture so that it will be a mutual advantage and exhibitors will probably find many opportunities of co-operating with the local book stores to this end.

Sylvia Bremer plays the role of the heroine in the picture.

Theatre Ordinance Overthrown

The notorious picture show ordinance of North Little Rock, Ark., which requires that theatres may be conducted only in fireproof buildings, constructed according to specifications provided by the city, was held invalid the other day by Chancellor J. E. Martineau, who granted the injunction against the city sought by George B. and Marion Rose.

Suit to enjoin enforcement of the measure was filed soon after its second passage in April, 1917, on the ground that it was unjust and arbitrary. An amendment to the complaint alleged that it was passed by the North Little Rock City Council to give the proprietor of the only picture show in the city a monopoly on the business.

The complaint alleged that Mr. and Mrs. Rose owned a brick building at 221 Main street, formerly occupied by the Aptco theatre, which was suitable for a picture house and that the operation of the ordinance prevented their deriving revenue from the building.

Chancellor Martineau ruled that the ordinance was "unreasonable and unjust." It is probable that the case will be tested in the Supreme Court.

Ushers Avert Fire Panic

A panic was averted by the prompt work of the employes of the Tudor Theatre, New Orleans, the other day, when a fire started in the projection booth.

Smoke was detected by the audience. Ushers acted quickly, showing patrons out, and the building was soon emptied.

Heat caused one of the automatic fire sprinkling plugs to blow out. Fixtures and chairs on the main floor were damaged by water to the extent of $300. The fire was extinguished by employes before the arrival of the fire department.

Paralta Chiefs "Step on the Gas"

ARRANGE FOR MUCH GREATER FUTURE

FOLLOWING the announcement that the entire holdings of Carl Anderson, Nat I. Brown and Robert T. Kane in Paralta Plays, Inc., had been purchased by the financial interests whom Herman Katz and John De Wolf represent, a statement has been received from Los Angeles in which Mr. Katz reveals news of even greater importance.

Robert Brunton, chief executive at the Hollywood studios since the inception of the corporation, and Jesse Durham Hampton, the Katz statement says, have purchased the new Paralta studios and will turn out the Paralta plays. The pictures will remain the property of the corporation. Los Angeles will be headquarters, New York serving principally as a distribution point. The interrupted schedule will be resumed and production increased by the engagement of new stars.

All Issues Adjusted

Mr. Katz's statement follows:

"Following numerous conferences, the issues existing between the Paralta interests have been satisfactorily adjusted and our full program of production will be immediately resumed. During the period of this adjustment, however, curtailment of the Paralta program has been necessary.

"In consequence of such a state of uncertainty which often attends the settlement of corporation disagreements various wild rumors regarding our organization were circulated. Inasmuch as such reports had no foundation, I know that the public will be interested in an authentic statement of the facts.

Organization Is Recalled

"Paralta Plays, Inc., and Paralta Studios, Inc., were organized about a year ago by Robert T. Kane and Nat I. Brown, both of whom had had experience with motion picture organizations. Associated with them was Carl Anderson. The financial backing of the organization was represented by John E. DeWolf and myself. Robert Brunton, recognized as a highly competent executive in motion picture productions, was also a partner and officer, being our director of productions.

"Owing to disagreement over matters of policy and internal details of management, the stockholders divided into two factions. On one side was the financial element represented by Mr. DeWolf and myself, and on the other side stood Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson, identified with the inception and promotion of the companies.

Backing Always Sound

"It was during the settlement of the various issues that our production program was curtailed. Throughout all of this time, however, the financial backing of the Paralta companies was perfectly sound, but until our interests, which had invested more than $1,000,000 in Paralta, could be assured what element was to control, operations under normal and satisfactory conditions were out of the question. Further uncertainty is now happily at an end.

"The adjustment of all differences has been effected by our purchase of the interests of Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson in the Paralta companies and these gentlemen are no longer associated with us or Paralta.

Brunton Retains Holdings

"Mr. Brunton retains his financial holdings and is now in complete charge of the production of Paralta pictures. A further agreement has been effected in the detail and manner of production. The Katz and DeWolf element will limit their activities to financing, owning and distributing pictures under the title of 'Paralta Plays, Inc.,' while Mr. Brunton and Jesse Durham Hampton, prominently identified with the moving picture profession, have arranged the purchase of the new and extensive Paralta studios on Melrose avenue, Hollywood.

"There they will make pictures for Paralta Plays, beginning May 9. The name of this plant will be changed to the 'Brunton Studios.' An abundance of new capital to carry out our reorganization plans is in hand, so the resumption of the full Paralta program is now assured without further delay.

Will Keep Star Policy

"We will maintain the policy of stars, each with their own producing company. Enrolled under the Paralta banner now are Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum and J. Warren Kerrigan.

"While our present program calls for the production of thirty pictures a year, negotiations are under way with several other well known screen artists to join the ranks of Paralta stars. Their acquisition will materially increase our annual production of screen features.

"Another important part of the Paralta policy will be the reorganization of the Los Angeles and New York offices. Our efforts are to be concentrated in Los Angeles, while New York is to serve chiefly as a distributing center. The latter detail of the Paralta program is being most ably handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which has already broken all records by booking more than $1,500,000 in contracts for Paralta pictures now in hand."

Paramount Signs Up John Barrymore

First Picture Will Be "On the Quiet," Willie Collier's Famous Play From the Pen of Augustus Thomas

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, last week announced a notable addition to the list of stars appearing in Paramount pictures in the person of John Barrymore, whose dramatic work on the stage and screen has placed him in the very foremost rank of leading actors of to-day. Mr. Barrymore has signed for a series of pictures, work on the first of which will shortly be commenced in one of the eastern studios of the corporation.

This engagement marks Mr. Barrymore's return to the screen as a Paramount star. Several years ago he made his motion picture debut under this banner, among his initial film hits being "The Man From Mexico" and "Are You a Mason?" His work before the camera immediately proved his adaptability to motion picture acting and he rapidly became popular among followers of the photoplay. After a triumphant season in the silent drama for Famous Players, Mr. Barrymore returned to the stage to take up engagements which resulted in several other big successes on Broadway.

In his announcement, Mr. Lasky said:

"Inheriting exceptional dramatic talent from both paternal and maternal branches of his family, 'Jack' Barrymore fairly leaped into stardom, becoming a popular idol practically from his first appearance, and in the fifteen years he has devoted to the stage he has scored some of the most sensational successes in the history of American drama. He has proven equally popular in England and Australia. Among his starring vehicles which became most prominent are 'A Stubborn Cinderella,' 'The Fortune Hunter,' 'Uncle Sam,' 'Half a Husband,' and 'A Thief for a Night.'

"A forecast of his talent for pantomimic acting was perhaps first given in his portrayal of Mac, the prince in 'A Stubborn Cinderella,' in which he held the audience for five or six minutes without a word being spoken in a tense scene, a novel and daring performance on the legitimate stage and which won unstinted commendation from critics throughout the country.

"Mr. Barrymore's initial picture will be an adaptation by Charles E. Whittaker, from Willie Collier's famous play, 'On the Quiet,' in which Mr. Collier toured America twice and presented for a long run in London. It was written by Augustus Thomas and was acclaimed everywhere as a well conceived and genuinely humorous farce.

"The first presentation was made at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, where it ran for a whole season and went on tour the following year. Mr. Collier then took the play to London and upon his return to America in December, 1905, revived it for another run at the Criterion Theatre. Thomas W. Ross has also toured with 'On the Quiet,' with notable success.

"The story deals with Robert Ridgway (the stellar role), who is in love with Agnes Colt, an heiress whose guardian is her brother, who desires his sister to wed a nobleman and frowns upon her attachment for Ridgway. By the terms of the will the girl must marry a man approved by her guardian or lose $16,000,000. Amusing complications result in which the brother is cleverly trapped into giving his consent to the marriage.

"To direct this picture, Chester Withey, associated for some time with D. W. Griffith, has been engaged and is now on his way from California to start work in the East."

Metro Gets Veteran Actors

Three veterans of the "palmy days" of the spoken drama are in the cast supporting Edith Storey in her forthcoming Metro play, "As the Sun went Down." They are George W. Berrell, Alfred Hollingsworth and F. E. Spooner.

The picture is a screen adaptation by George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios, of his own play, written fifteen years ago.

"Movie" Romance in "Speakies"

A ROMANCE that developed in two days is one of the interesting sidelights of the latest Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft picture, "Say, Young Fellow."

Ventura, California, was the scene of the Fairbanks story. Director Joseph Henaberry obtained permission from Miss Mae Nolan there to use the family estate.

It was really a case of love at first sight, just like it often happens in the "movies," but this time it was in the "speakies."

Mr. and Mrs. Henaberry are spending their honeymoon touring California in an auto that was a gift from Fairbanks.

Canadian Manager Comes to U. S.

The announcement, important to moving picture men throughout Canada, was made recently that William Griffith Mitchell, Manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, White Plains, N. Y. Mr. Mitchell was formerly assistant manager of the Strand Theatre, Toronto.

The new manager of the Regent will be Roland Roberts, manager of the St. Denis Theatre, Montreal, since last August. Mr. Roberts was manager of the Toronto Regent before.

Both men are widely known in theatrical circles.

Woman Manager Packs Three Houses

CLEVER SHOWMANSHIP IS SECRET OF HER SUCCESS

By Genevieve Harris

THAT the feminine touch applied to the art of running a picture theatre may be a Midas-touch, turning the dross into gold, is proved by the career of Mrs. Flossie A. Jones of Waukesha, Wis.

But if you think she acquired her golden touch through mere wishing as old King Midas did, you should have dropped in to see her a week or so ago on the day she reversed the stage settings of her small town "opera house" until their "seamy side" was toward the audience, worked a transformation with paints and stains, a few sketches and some furniture, costumed her stage hands and a dozen of the local high school boys in Parisian student outfits, and with the aid of a couple of vaudeville dancers, staged a creditable imitation of an Apache den in Paris before the war.

Energy Is Her Middle Name

Mrs. Jones possesses two of the leading qualifications of a successful exhibitor—first, an intelligence which provides her with clever ideas; second, the energy to put these ideas across in a whirlwind style which is irresistible.

Some time ago MOTOGRAPHY published an account of her career in Waukesha, from the time she got into "the game," about two years ago, with a "lemon" of a house, until, at the head of a company she had formed and in which she owned a large share of the stock, she managed the town's three theatres with surprising success. That she has not stood still is shown by her continual effort to put pictures across in the best showmanlike style.

In the first place, although Waukesha is a small town, Mrs. Jones is really in competition with Milwaukee theatres. Unless she puts on unusually good shows for a small town her patrons take the trolley to Milwaukee. On the other hand, she has to pay a big price for these big feature pictures and her number of possible patrons is limited. To make money, on most of them, she must play to capacity houses at advanced prices. She does this and she accomplishes the feat by her own style of advertising.

Her method of exploiting a picture, in big-town style, is illustrated in her handling of the Metro feature, "Revelation," starring Nazimova. The picture was expensive, but Mrs. Jones knew it was well worth the price both to her and to her patrons. She must charge a higher than usual admission and get the people to come. But how could she convince them that this was something out of the ordinary?

Prologue Draws the People

This was the object of the prologue, enacted in the setting described at the beginning of this article. She announced that she was going to stage a real Parisian cabaret scene, with Apache dancing. She hired a team of vaudeville Apache dancers and a bare-foot solo dancer, who played Nazimova's role of "Joline" in this opening act. And it was this novelty prologue that attracted the crowds.

"The picture did not need anything of this sort to aid it as entertainment," Mrs. Jones said. "It is one of the finest productions I ever saw and can stand on its own merits before any audience. But the people didn't know this. I used the prologue just to get them into the house. The picture enchanted them, as I knew it would.

Turns Patrons Away

"I ran it in the Colonial Theatre, an 800-seat house. I reserved all the seats, six hundred of them at fifty cents, two hundred at twenty-five. I ran it two days, one performance a day. I announced that owing to the elaborate prologue only one performance an evening could be given. This was another advertising dodge, further to impress upon the people the un-

New Frederick Picture Completed

Star Enacts Role of Gypsy Who Becomes Powerful Factor in the Social Life of Paris

EMILE CHAUTARD has just finished "Her Final Reckoning," his first production for Paramount release providing Pauline Frederick with a starring vehicle of intense emotionalism. The character Miss Frederick portrays is a creature of moods, inheriting a passionate nature from her gypsy mother which is disclosed in her love of outdoor life and her partiality to wandering gypsy bands whose wild music touches responsive chords in her heart.

Her mother never married, having been captured by a Russian prince during a military invasion and carried to Russia against her will. Marsa, the child, grew to young womanhood and as her father lay dying she forgave him for her illegitimacy. After he had passed away it was discovered that he had left her an enormous fortune and she later became a powerful social factor in Paris.

Interesting characters are introduced by Director Chautard in the wood scenes where Marsa visits the gypsies, accompanied by her wolf hounds. The dogs play an important part in the picture, for when a former lover who betrayed her attempts to obtrude himself upon her as she is about to be happily married she turns the dogs upon him and he is all but killed. His attempts to be revenged result in a sensational climax, in which he ultimately loses his life.

The hundred thousand feet of film taken for "Love's Conquest," the Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri, has been trimmed to about fifteen thousand and Director Edward Jose is engaged in cutting it down to its final length. While it is the biggest production ever filmed in the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, remarkable speed was made, occupying less than eight weeks of time after camera work was actually begun. Many of the big exteriors were already constructed on the grounds of the Fort Lee studios when Mr. Jose started photographing the story and the thousands of costumes and the numerous props were all on hand.

Mr. Jose is casting for Madame Cavalieri's next picture and the settings are being constructed. It is expected that production will be commenced this week.

The Elsie Ferguson Company, producing "Heart of the Wilds" in Yellowstone Park, is expected back this week and will go to Fort Lee, where the interiors will be filmed. This Artcraft picture will present some thrilling scenes and sensational feats of horsemanship. Director Marshall Neilan staged several incidents on the high trails of the mountains and Miss Ferguson rode perilously near the edge of a deep canyon.

A dare-devil stunt is the performance of a cowboy, who escapes after a gunfight in which his opponent is mortally wounded, and to elude his pursuers turns his madly galloping horse down a steep shale cliff. Though plunging and slipping on the treacherous rock, the surefooted animal brings its rider safely to the bottom.

Big Booking Negotiated

What is said to be the biggest booking of the spring season was given last week by Marcus Loew to Goldwyn for Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," which will usher in the summer season at every Loew theatre in the New York metropolitan and suburban zones—covering a period of seventy odd days.

That such an exhibitor should give this blanket booking to the big Rex Beach special production lays emphasis upon the power and quality of the picture, which already has begun to break records for exhibitors in all parts of North America.

The booking was obtained by Alfred Weiss, one of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation's vice-presidents.

Lone Star Redeems Stock

Ten per cent of the outstanding preferred stock of the Lone Star Corporation, a $1,500,000 concern, is being redeemed at 110 plus accrued dividends, according to an announcement issued from the offices of the corporation in Chicago.

The Lone Star Corporation is the concern organized for the merchandising of the series of twelve comedies featuring Charles Chaplin, produced by the Lone Star Corporation and released through Mutual.

A large percentage of the original capital represented by the preferred stock has been returned to the stockholders. Meanwhile the pictures are said to have a long working life ahead.

Fans Like Russell Play

"I want to take this opportunity of thanking you for booking 'Hearts or Diamonds?' for me," writes Michael Rosenbloom of the Majestic Theatre, Charleroi, Pa., to Mutual. "It surely is a good picture. Knowing it to be just released and my theatre running it first, I took special attention in getting the verdict from my patrons, and without any exception they said it was fine."

"Hearts or Diamonds?" the initial production of William Russell's own company, is one of those pictures of fast action and exciting moments with an element of mystery in which "Fighting Bill" hits on all cylinders right through.

Theda Bara Completes "Under the Yoke"

Fox Advertises Feature as "The Picture of the Fight for Love of a Woman of No Regrets"

THEDA BARA'S super-production, "Under the Yoke," described as a fighting drama of the Philippines, which William Fox will release in June, has just been completed at Hollywood, according to a wire received at the Fox offices in New York.

In "Under the Yoke," which tells a story of an incident in the early days of American occupation of the islands, Miss Bara portrays a character which is said to combine all the salient qualities of Carmen, and of Cigarette in "Under Two Flags."

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, reminding exhibitors of the triumph which Miss Bara scored in "Carmen" and "Under Two Flags," declares that in "Under the Yoke" the star again appears in a sympathetic role, this time depicting the romance of a young Spanish girl who is in love with an American army captain.

The picture is based on a story by George Scarborough, author of several stage and screen successes, and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson, who wrote the scenarios for "Cleopatra," "Salome," "Romeo and Juliet" and most of the other Theda Bara successes.

The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards. This was the twenty-sixth picture he has directed for William Fox.

The story of "Under the Yoke," which is declared to depict a situation utterly new to the screen, is being described in advertising and publicity matter, including lithographs issued by Fox, as "the picture of the fight for love of a woman of no regrets."

In love with an American army officer, Maria, the daughter of a wealthy Spanish grandee, rejects the suit of the overseer of her father's plantation. The rejected suitor foments a revolt, captures the girl and her sweetheart, and is about to put them to death when they are rescued by a force of American troops.

Innovations are said to have been introduced in the photography, which, besides depicting the beauty of the tropics, contains many stirring battle scenes between American troops and forces of insurrectos.

Duncan Speeds Up Serial

A report from the Vitagraph western studio received last week by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, declares that William Duncan, star and director of "A Fight for Millions," is working on so many different parts of the serial that only he and W. S. Smith, studio manager, know definitely where he stands. However, Duncan is more than holding up to the schedule he set himself when he started out.

One of the big scenes last week was in a stockade in which Duncan used several hundred actors as mounted police, Indians and cowboys.

From the distributing organization of Vitagraph comes the information that inquiries are arriving from all parts of the country on the serial, which is scheduled to follow "The Woman in the Web."

Puts Picture Plan Up to U. S.

Frederick Burlingham, an American cinematographer who returned recently from Switzerland, said in New York last week that he had laid before the American government a plan of combating the propaganda Germany is carrying on in neutral countries by means of motion pictures.

Mr. Burlingham said that as soon as American or Allied films enter Switzerland they come under the control, in one way or another, of the German motion picture trust backed by that government.

"Sometimes the films are bought outright through dummies," he said. "If there is any pro-Ally matter in them it is censored out or twisted to make it favorable to Germany. When the play, 'The Invasion of the United States,' was sent abroad, the Germans bought it and changed it to portray an invasion of Berlin.

"The British war film, 'The Battle of the Somme,' was exhibited in Switzerland, but the theatres, mostly controlled by Germany, charged 10 francs to see it and only 2 francs to see a German film. The Germans made a bad mistake, however, when they showed a film of the exploits of the raider Moewe. The Swiss had lost food boats to German torpedoes, they resented the film.

"The only way in which the Allies can get films with a democratic meaning into the neutral countries is to organize an inter-Allied corporation that will control the film from the time it is produced until its final showing. The films could be exhibited on a license system providing that the exhibitor must not permit the film to get into German hands.

Norma Talmadge Takes Role of Dancer

"Sid" Franklin, Her New Director, Says Star Has Improved 1000 Per Cent Since They Were Associated Before

NORMA TALMADGE, Select star, who recently completed a screen version of "De Luxe Annie," is proceeding rapidly with the filming of her succeeding production. It is the story of a little music-hall dancer who is rescued by her soldier lover from a theatre fire and also from falling prey to one of the harpies who infest the dramatic world.

"Sid" Franklin, who is directing Miss Talmadge, is fairly glowing with appreciation of the actress' performance.

"Even back in the old times," said Mr. Franklin, "when Norma Talmadge was first being starred and my brother and I were her directors, it was easily patent that here was a girl whose future held remarkable promise.

"After our association was severed, my brother and I were always on the lookout for her pictures and we followed with great interest her career as a Select star, noting the increased felicity of her performance in each succeeding production.

"It was with genuine pleasure, therefore, that we accepted her invitation to return as her directors and when my brother was called into the service my envy at his opportunity to win glory on the field of battle was partly balanced by the realization of my own opportunity on the screen through Miss Talmadge.

"This wonderful little actress—only superlatives can describe her work—has improved a thousand per cent since the days when we first worked together. There is no limit to her capacities and her ability to 'put over' every shade of emotion and feeling while portraying the character to the very life."

Shall We Shoot the Trumpeter?

By Melville Davisson Post

IN the old fable the trumpeter captured by the enemy prayed consideration because he bore no arm, but he was answered that he incited the soldier to battle and was therefore equally dangerous. The policy of the enemy was sound. The trumpeter was an effective belligerent.

I think the German government would consider our newspapers and periodicals as the most dangerous element of our fighting force. I think the kaiser would rather shoot these belligerents than any other.

But for our magazines and newspapers America could not have been awakened; but for them it cannot be kept aroused to the impending peril of German world dominion. Insidious German propaganda would lull the country to slumber but for the blare of these never ceasing trumpeters.

Beyond question it would be wisdom for the kaiser to shoot them. But is it wisdom for our own government to shoot them? And they are effectively shot if an unwise revenue postal law drives them out of existence.

The staggering cost of paper and the unparalleled advance in labor and the price of every printing material, has removed any question of profit. This immense patriotic industry can hardly maintain itself: to now burden it with a heavy revenue tax and increased postal rates is to decimate this arm of our fighting force. All the little magazines and newspapers must stand up against the wall, not for the kaiser's bullet, but for our own.

We must cheerfully bear the burden of this war; we must bear it to save ourselves from the murderous Hun in his amuck of frightfulness. But can we not distribute the weight of this burden so it will not entirely crush to death the little newspapers and magazines?

Write to your senators and congressmen in protest against this destructive and disastrous postal "zone" law!

Mutual Announces American Series

Leaves Room in Schedule for Special Productions to Come, Among Which Are Some Starring Edna Goodrich

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION announces a contract for the release of a series of five-part productions from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc.—one every other week beginning May 27.

A new whirl of activity is sweeping through Mutual and plans are under way for the release of a series of special productions of the first rank. An announcement of these is shortly to be issued from the offices of James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual. Mr. Sheldon is dividing his time between the Chicago and New York offices in his negotiations and operations. The Mutual schedule includes:

May 27—Minter—"Social Briars"—An appealing story of a village beauty who seeks fame in a big city, but finds her path to glory beset with thorny briars. Directed by Edward Sloman.

June 10—Fisher—"A Square Deal"—The effect of "Higher Thought" on a girl brought up in ultra conventional environment. Story by Albert Payson Terhune in "Red Book." Scenarioized by Elizabeth Mahoney. Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

June 24—Russell—"Up Romance Road"—A young man of adventurous spirit considers his engagement to the daughter of his father's partner too prosaic and he decides to break the engagement. Story by Stephen Fox. Directed by Henry King. Produced by William Russell Productions, Inc.

July 8—Minter—"Ghost of Rosy Taylor"—A beautiful American girl, finding herself alone and destitute in Paris, becomes involved in a series of mysterious events. Story by Josephine Daskam Bacon in "Saturday Evening Post." Directed by Edward Sloman.

July 22—Fisher—"Impossible Susan"—How a girl left to bring herself up in the free and unconfined outdoors convinced a cynical philosopher who believed in the superiority of the "sterner sex" that he had neglected the study of the "weaker sex." Story by Joseph Franklin Poland. Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

The preliminary arrangements have been made for the production, also, of a series of feature productions starring Edna Goodrich. Production will start shortly in New York studios. It is planned to give Miss Goodrich more pretentious productions and bigger vehicles than any of those in which she has previously appeared.

The Mutual schedule of short length productions of feature quality, including Billie Rhodes in Strand Comedies and the Screen Telegram, the Mutual news reel, will be maintained. In addition, a series of one-reel specialty pictures of a new type and extraordinary quality is shortly to be announced.

"The prospects are exceedingly bright for Mutual," observed President Sheldon. "We have by the contract just announced a consistent sequence of high class productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher. We have almost ready to announce a series of special features of the very first magnitude, featuring one of the best known stars of the screen. We have a well established and constantly improving news reel, the Screen Telegram. I do not need to make comment on the Strand Comedies. They have set a standard of their own in the trade.

"There may be some question as to why we have adopted an every other week release for the five-part productions on our regular schedule. In the first place, it was desirable to make room in our releasing plans for the special productions that are to come. Then also it is wise to take cognizance of the fact that there has been a large waste in productions released through the summer period. Too many pictures without adequate drawing power have been crowded into the summer market.

"The picture business has reached a stage of development and maturity where it must from now on take cognizance of the slackening of the theatrical market in the warmer months. We have some lessons to learn from the stage in this game and one of them is that the public must not be overfed on production in the summer. Do you know that one big group of film producers and organizers recently took under consideration a plan to suspend all releases for six weeks, beginning July 1?

"We are not that radical. There is a good business to be had right through the summer, but observation proves that the best commercial course is to release fewer productions and work them harder. This is better policy both for us and for our customers, the exhibitors. Longer runs are coming in steadily, as evidenced by the reports from Mutual's branches.

"We are enjoying a pleasant growth of business. 'Hearts or Diamonds?' is making a sensational success in various quarters of the country. It has had the distinction of being the production presented at the opening of several of the biggest new theatres in the United States. We have others with just as big box office possibilities to come.

"There is a decidedly healthy trend in business among the theatres. Better showmanship is making for the theatre prosperity and is having a most favorable reaction on the manufacturers and distributors."

No, Alice Brady is not posing for the camera in a new story, nor is she about to commit murder on her companion, Director Emile Chautard. She had the dagger in her hand in connection with the filming of "The Ordeal of Rosetta," when the director walked up and started a conversation during a rest period. The camera man did the rest.

Fine Cast in Anita Stewart Feature

Conway Tearle and Vernon Steele Especially Engaged to Play in "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl"

ANITA STEWART, with a cast of exceptional strength, is hard at work at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn on "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero which is to be the first in the special series of Anita Stewart features planned by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company.

In announcing the cast for this production, Mr. Smith says that he has tried to give Miss Stewart the finest talent obtainable, and a glance over the list of players indicates that he has succeeded admirably.

Miss Stewart, of course, will play the role of "Lily Parradell," the piquant musical comedy girl, and opposite her, in the part of "Viscount Farncombe," will be Vernon Steele, who created the role in the original London production of the play. Mr. Steele is one of the talented English players who have won favor in this country both on the stage and screen. One of his best successes was in the role of the parson in "Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh.

Conway Tearle, recently with Ethel Barrymore in her Broadway production of "The Lady of the Camelias," returns to the screen in Miss Stewart's company, playing the role of "Captain Nicholas Joyce." Mr. Tearle is too well known to exhibitors and fans to need an introduction. His work in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Foolish Virgin" and "The Common Law" with Clara Kimball Young, "Stella Maris" with Mary Pickford, and other notable productions, has given him front rank among film players.

In addition to these, many of Vitagraph's most popular favorites will be seen. Evart Overton, star of many Blue Ribbon Features, will appear as "Morris Cooling." Templar Saxe has been cast for the part of "Lionel Roper," Denton Vane will portray "Sam De Castro," Arthur Donaldson, last seen in "Over the Top," as von Emden, chief of the German spy system, will play "Vincent Bland," Virginia Norden, who appeared in support of Miss Stewart in "The Combat," "His Wife's Good Name," and other pictures, will have an important role, and in addition there will be thirteen other feminine players.

In the original production on the legitimate stage, Billie Burke had a company of thirty-two persons, and the same number of players will be seen in support of Miss Stewart. This is one of the largest casts, from the standpoint of name parts, that has ever been put on the screen.

President Smith states that "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl" will be given an elaborate production in the matter of settings and that the wardrobe of the star and the supporting women will constitute a fashion show in itself.

Miss Stewart, for several weeks before she started work on the play, divided her time between the Vitagraph studio and her modiste, with the result that she will be seen in a variety of gowns and frocks.

Mr. Smith says he is now considering several of the plays which have been selected tentatively for Miss Stewart's other features and he expects to be in a position to announce the titles within a few days.

News Reel Pictures Derby

Pictures taken during the running of the Kentucky Derby at historic Churchill Downs, Louisville, Kentucky, are contained in Screen Telegram No. 23, released by Mutual May 19. Exterminator is shown winning the classic, which carried with it a purse of $20,000. A tremendous crowd, estimated at 40,000, including the governor of Kentucky and many notable army men and civil officials, witnessed the race.

Miss Dalton Takes Strange Part

In the new Thomas H. Ince picture starring Dorothy Dalton, "The Mating of Marcella," released via Paramount May 20, will be found a plot at once odd and convincing. It is a story by Joseph Franklin Poland and was directed by R. William Neill, who has directed all the Paramount pictures starring Miss Dalton under Mr. Ince's supervision.

Marcella is an American girl, pretty and refined, and in straitened circumstances. Her father is a musician, but ill, and so Marcella is forced to be the provider. Escoba, whom her father wishes her to wed, is not to her liking.

Marcella is a model in a modiste's shop and envies the women who may own the gowns she displays. One of these is Lois Underwood, a show girl who has married Robert Underwood for his money. She has one child, Bobbie.

Underwood nearly runs down Marcella in his car and drives her home, being attracted by her beauty. Her father needs a specialist to cure his ailment. To get money for this Marcella agrees to a plan on the part of Mrs. Underwood, who wishes to take a yachting trip with a count, to live in the west for a time under her name so that divorce proceedings may be established.

Marcella is found by Underwood, who discovers his wife's scheme. Bobbie falls ill and Marcella nurses him back to health. Lois brings her suit and names Marcella as correspondent.

Escoba has followed Marcella to Underwood's office, making threats. A jilted lover of Mrs. Underwood dons chauffeur's garb and with the woman and the count in the car drives it into a lake and sacrifices three lives, but frees Underwood, who marries Marcella.

Metro Announces Releases for June

"The Demon," Starring Edith Storey, Is First—Others Feature Viola Dana, Lytell, Bushman and Bayne

THREE of Metro's four June releases were staged at Hollywood and the other was made in New York City. The stars represented are Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the order named.

"The Demon," starring Miss Storey, is released June 3. This is a picturization of the novel of the same name written by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. George D. Baker, western production manager, both adapted and directed the story. As Perdita, Miss Storey has a role which marks her departure from dramas of western life into the field of romantic comedy and satire.

Perdita is an American girl, sold in childhood in an Algerian slave market and reared in the bandit-ridden hills of Corsica. Her parents having been assassinated by order of the Sultan of Morocco, the child was rescued by her nurse, Aissa. Jim Lassells, a young New Yorker, unexpectedly learns that by the death of Harold Brooks, his cousin, he inherits his fortune. Brooks had married a Greek woman and Perdita is their daughter.

When Jim and his tutor, Tom Reardon, visited a slave market, they buy a Christian child, which is offered for sale, in order to keep her out of the hands of a Moslem. Jim places Perdita, the name given the girl by Aissa, in a private school in Corsica. She grows to maturity, meanwhile developing a fiery disposition, which wins her the name of "The Demon." Before the end of the story Jim learns that Perdita is the daughter of Brooks and is therefore the rightful heir to the money. However, after scenes of stirring adventure, Perdita and Jim find mutual attraction in each other, which removes any need of dividing the fortune.

"The Only Road," with Viola Dana as the star, will be released June 10. George D. Baker and Albert Sehlby Le Vino are responsible for the story and scenario and Frank Reicher did the directing.

The star is presented in the role of Nita, a sweet American girl brought up in the squalid atmosphere of a Mexican peon's adobe hut. Nita is a regular tomboy and leads Manuel Lopez and his wife a lively dance. Presumably she is their daughter. Sent West by his father to redeem himself, Bob Armstrong arrives at the Buena Vista ranch, which is in charge of his father's old friend, Mrs. Clara Hawkins. He meets Nita, by protecting her when Pedro, a Mexican, tries to kiss her. Both Nita and Bob are pleased with each other.

Pedro's father, Ramon, tells him that Nita is really the daughter of Mrs. Hawkins. Since Ramon has failed to win Mrs. Hawkins, he demands that Pedro marry Nita in order to get the Hawkins estate. Father and son contrive a scheme to get the girl, but their efforts are frustrated by the intervention of Bob.

The Mexicans swear they will lynch Bob and follow Nita and him. Little Nita's skill with a revolver saves the situation and Bob. Under unusual circumstances Nita and Bob are married and then they part. However, a happy reunion takes place and happiness reigns for both.

Bert Lytell makes his second appearance as a Metro star in "No Man's Land," which will be released on June 17. The star himself, with A. S. Le Vino, adapted this story from Louis Joseph Vance's novel of the same name. Will S. Davis directed. Mr. Lytell plays Garret Cope, the hero, who is seen in prison garb in many scenes of thrilling action.

"The Scheme," presenting Bushman and Bayne, is the final release of the month, being offered on June 24. Katharine Kavanaugh of the Metro Eastern scenario staff wrote "The Scheme" and June Mathis prepared the continuity. Charles J. Brabin directed. Mr. Bushman plays Hugh Dexter, a young man who believes he is a woman-hater.

Wichita to Get New Theatre

A new theatre is planned for Wichita, Kansas. The stockholders of the building company, C. C. McCollister, J. H. Cooper and W. D. Jochems, have completed all the plans and hope to have the building completed by September 1. Lee S. Naftzger, president of the Southwest State bank, has leased the ground to the company for 25 years. The total cost of the building, when completed, will be $75,000.

The theatre will have a front of 50 feet and will run back 140 feet. It is to be three stories high. The theatre itself will occupy the lower floor and business offices will be opened on the other two floors. There will be a store room on each side of the main entrance, to be used as refreshment and light lunch rooms.

The front will be finished in light cream terra cotta, with color tints of red and green mixed in. The Spanish style of architecture will be used with a cornice on the top of red Spanish tile.

Mr. McCollister, who is now manager of the Star Theatre, will manage the house, which will be called the Wichita. Feature films and probably vaudeville will be shown.

Uniontown Theatre Reopened

The new Rex Theatre of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, enlarged and fitted out with new equipment, was formally reopened the other day with "My Own United States," the Metro patriotic feature starring Arnold Daly. Motion pictures of the first day crowds were taken and shown subsequently as an added attraction.

"Standardize"—Slogan of United Theatres

President Berst Declares Organization Already Has Accomplished This in Price, Quality and Service

THAT standardization has come to be a big word in big business, claiming success as its by-product, and that the plan of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., offers its exhibitor-members standardization in three very important phases, were the texts used in the first of a series of communications addressed to the exhibitor-members and dealing with the aims, progress and methods of operation of the company, which was issued last week by J. A. Berst, its president.

To begin with, President Berst declared, there would be standardization of price. The United plan eliminates the necessity of dickering or bargaining on the exhibitors' part to obtain desirable film.

The rental price the exhibitor will pay will be mathematically determined and will be uniform in houses of the same classification the country over. It will be definitely set in the exhibitor's contract as a small fraction of one per cent of the total wholesale purchase price of film co-operatively bought, a price based upon the cost of its manufacture plus a reasonable profit for its producer and the actual cost of distribution.

As these figures will be available to the exhibitor-members at all times, the rental price to the individual will be known to him in advance. It will be absolutely fixed and no degree of cleverness on the part of a salesman or no strength of opposition in the neighborhood can raise it a penny.

Then there would be standardization of quality. An exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled corporation, President Berst explained, would know no law higher than the exhibitors' wants and needs. Representing as it will, thousands of exhibitors, it would naturally have the pick of the market from which to select its releases.

In addition, there would be standardization of service.

Meanwhile, the organization of the personnel of the United organization is rapidly nearing completion. President Berst in a few days will be ready to announce the complete advisory board, composed exclusively of representative exhibitors. Frank Eager of Lincoln, Neb.; H. E. Ellison of Denver, George H. Grives of Colorado Springs, William Nevils of Dallas, Tex., and E. E. Richards of Kansas City are the most recent additions to this board.

Start on "As the Sun Went Down"

Production of "As the Sun Went Down," Edith Storey's newest starring vehicle, following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea" and "The Claim," was begun on Friday at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood.

South Leans to Sunday Shows

Due to the pressure of military necessity there is a liberalizing tendency in the south regarding Sunday shows, according to Orrin C. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, who has been making a survey of recreation conditions for the Playground and Recreation Association of America, Mr. Cocks visited Wilmington, Greenville and Charlotte, N. C., Columbia, Charleston and Spartanburg, S. C., Augusta, Atlanta and Macon, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla.

"All of these cities," he says, "have a strong feeling about preserving the sanctity of Sunday and the closing of commercial entertainments on that day. In view of the fact, however, that the church has not made good in solving the problem of the Sunday activities of the soldiers in neighboring cantonments, the pressure of events is tending toward the recognition of the need of some form of commercial entertainment.

"In Chattanooga, the ministers have not objected to the use of pictures on Sunday and the citizens feel that the community atmosphere has been improved as a result. The entertainments have not interfered with the church services. The influence on the non-church group has been found to be decidedly wholesome.

"In Atlanta the ministers have agreed not to oppose motion pictures in the city auditorium on Sunday afternoons if no admission charge is required. Some fine motion pictures are now being shown in Charleston.

"In all the towns mentioned the exhibitors have been peculiarly alive to the needs of their cities and have exercised discernment in the selection of pictures. In this way they have won the respect of their communities. This will have a marked relationship upon the further use of pictures for the soldiers on Sunday afternoons. A characteristic of the motion picture exhibitions in the southern cities is that one man usually controls practically all the shows in a given community."

Two Artcrafts the Same Day

For the first time two Artcraft pictures will be released on the same date—May 20—when Cecil B. DeMille's superphotoplay, "Old Wives for New," and William S. Hart's "Selfish Yates," will be presented simultaneously. Two widely divergent themes form the basis of these pictures, the first being a domestic drama dealing with the upper stratum of society, and the latter harking back to the primitive days of the western frontier.

Scenes from "Baree, Son of Kazan," a Vitagraph-Blue Ribbon feature with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. The picture is filled with virile action.

Vitagraph to Release "Baree" on May 27

Famous Dog Story Will Be Program Feature, Though It Is Said to Outrank a Famous Special Production

"BAREE, SON OF KAZAN," adapted from one of the strongest stories ever written by James Oliver Curwood, will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program feature the week of May 27. Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are the stars of the picture, which was produced under the direction of David Smith.

The play, it is declared by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, is on a plane with the Vitagraph special production, "God's Country and the Woman," the other Curwood story of the Canadian North Woods which was made by Vitagraph, with Nell Shipman and William Duncan in the leading roles.

"Baree, Son of Kazan," has all of the virility of action and strength of atmosphere which characterized its predecessor and is declared to possess even higher melodramatic values.

The story, as it ran serially in the Red Book, proved one of the most popular features that publication ever offered to its readers. Those who read the story will recall that it was the biography of Baree, a cross-bred nomad of the wilderness, half dog, half wolf. The life and travelings of Baree led him into stirring adventures wherein he repaid the kindness of a beautiful French-Canadian girl by saving her from a villainous suitor and putting her tormentor to death.

In making the picture, Director Smith used five Malamutes—ranging from the puppy stage to the full-grown dog—as the story progressed, the biggest beast enacting the role of the avenger.

The picturesque and powerful style of Curwood has been retained in the adaptation of the story, and the richness of material, action and background is indicated by the fact that the scenario called for the taking of 391 scenes. This is an unusually large number for a five-reel feature and would seem to indicate a wealth of material.

Director Smith took his "snow stuff" in the snowsheds around Truckee, Cal., where the most effective snow pictures have been made of late, and the "stills" suggest that he has obtained wonderful effects.

La Voy Will Return to Front

Merl La Voy, war camera correspondent, is leaving shortly for his third tour of the European battlefronts on an engagement with Burton Holmes, the lecturer.

La Voy's camera work is well known in the motion picture industry in connection with the film entitled "Heroic France," released through Mutual. More recently, returning from his second journey to the front, Mr. La Voy completed "Heroic Serbia," a picture portrayal of the personalities and activities of the Serbian front. The Serbian pictures were made under the auspices of Howard Logan of Chicago, who has presented the American Red Cross with the film.

In his work for the screen, Mr. La Voy has visited the French, English and Serbian fronts, spending nearly two years in France and England and a year in Serbia. He has posed many of the great men of the war, including Asquith, Bonar Law, Clemenceau, Castelneau and Briand. His exploits in affairs photographic have ranged from a climb of Mount McKinley in Alaska to looping the loop in an allied war plane over Mount Olympus in Greece.

Schools Closed to See Film

The following letter on "Over There," Select's patriotic success, was received by the Buffalo branch office from the Board of Education at Ithaca:

"Recently the Strand, one of our local moving picture houses, put on for the benefit of the Junior Red Cross Enrollment Fund the picture 'Over There.' All who saw this picture are warm in their praise. The story is strong, the acting excellent and the photography beyond criticism.

"While the story emphasizes the seriousness of war, it is free from the harrowing scenes which frequently make such pictures unfit for young children. The city schools were dismissed early on this afternoon that those children who were too small to go to the evening performance might have an opportunity to see the picture.

"The junior and senior high schools co-operated with the Junior Red Cross organization in selling tickets and advertising.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "A. E. LA BARRE, chairman, motion picture committee."

New Play for Vivian Martin

Vivian Martin, Paramount star, is soon to appear in a film version of William J. Locke's "Viviette," which in book form has been exceedingly popular and which should make a most entertaining picture.

Julia Crawford Ivers, who wrote the Tom Sawyer scenarios, and many other Paramount pictures as well, is responsible for the translating of "Viviette" to the screen.

Walter Edwards, who recently completed a picture in which Constance Talmadge appeared, has transferred his allegiance to Paramount for the time being and is directing the film.

Seven Paramount Pictures in June

Players Starred Are Lina Cavalieri, Vivian Martin, Sessue Hayakawa, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid and Enid Bennett

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation puts its best foot foremost in the schedule of Paramount releases for June, which has just been issued by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, listing seven of the biggest productions ever turned out by this company. Four of the pictures were made in the west coast studios, two in the east, and one comes from the Thomas H. Ince plant.

Six of the pictures present a formidable array of stars, including Lina Cavalieri, Vivian Martin, Sessue Hayakawa, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid and Enid Bennett, and the seventh is another of the J. Stuart Blackton photoplays.

"The June releases will more than safeguard Paramount exhibitors from any slight falling off in attendance which usually takes place in the last month of spring, when people are inclined to be lured by the pleasant weather to seek outdoor recreation unless worth-while attractions draw them to the picture houses," said Mr. Greene.

"The first subject in the order of release is the presentation on June 2 by J. Stuart Blackton of "Missing," an absorbing story of love and war from the tremendously successful novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, in which appear Thomas Meighan, Robert Gordon, Winter Hall, Sylvia Bremer, Ora Humphrey, Mollie McConnell and Kathlyn O'Connor. The story has a sympathetic appeal, dealing with a young officer in the English army who is reported lost in battle, and is particularly appropriate at the present time.

"On the same date the spectacular Lina Cavalieri picture is issued, entitled 'Love's Conquest,' being an adaptation from 'Gismonda,' the famous Sardou drama. Edward Jose directed this photoplay, which is the most pretentious ever staged in the east. Gigantic settings were constructed to represent the city of Athens in the early sixteenth century, and thousands of people appear in the various scenes.

"On June 9, Jesse L. Lasky presents Vivian Martin in 'Viviette,' from the book of the same title by William J. Locke, scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers and directed by Walter Edwards. The story deals with the love affairs of a girl after she leaves a finishing school. Three men are suitors for her hand, and the violent temper of one, fanned by insane jealousy, nearly causes a tragedy. In the cast are Eugene Pallette, Harrison Ford, Kate Toncray, Clara Whipple and Donald Blakemore.

"The same day marks the release of the Pauline Frederick production of 'Her Final Reckoning,' adapted by Charles E. Whittaker from 'Prince Zilah,' the famous play which served as a starring vehicle for Sarah Bernhardt, Jane Hading, Mme. Modjeska, Ellen Terry, Eleanor Duse and other emotional actresses. Emile Chautard, the distinguished French actor and producer, directed this production, the first directed by him for Paramount release.

"Hayakawa is the star of 'The Bravest Way,' released June 16, showing the dramatic experiences of a Japanese in the United States, who follows the traditions of his race in sacrificing himself, through loyalty to a murdered countryman, wedding the widow, though he loves another girl. There is considerable suspense in the story before the true lovers are united. The scenario is by Edith Kennedy and the picture was directed by George Melford. In the cast are Florence Vidor, Tsuru Aoki, U. Apyama, Jane Wolff, Tom Kurahara, Winter Hall, Josephine Crowell, Goro Kino, Clarence Geldart and Guy Oliver.

"A stirring and patriotic subject is 'The Firefly of France,' released on June 23, with Wallace Reid as a French aviator, a dashing role for which the young star is admirably fitted. Ann Little has the leading feminine role.

"June 23 is also the date of the release of the Thomas H. Ince production, 'A Desert Wooing,' with Enid Bennett in the stellar role.

Marguerite Clark as little Eva in the Paramount picturization of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Uncle Tom's Cabin to Have Fine Setting

A remarkable tribute was paid to Marguerite Clark by army officials when she and her company were engaged in producing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the Paramount picture in which she plays the dual roles of Little Eva and Topsy, by granting her permission to work inside the Jackson barracks in Louisiana. During war times cameras are taboo near fortifications and barracks, but in consideration of the work of the star on behalf of the Liberty Loan and her heavy contributions to war relief organizations she was given the privilege of using some of the buildings as backgrounds for the production.

Many of the structures were erected as far back as 1826, and by reason of the careful maintenance by the government are in an excellent state of preservation.

The Colonel's quarters at Jackson barracks was exactly the type of house desired for the St. Clair mansion in the story and was very acceptable to Director J. Searle Dawley, who had searched in vain for an old southern mansion of the proper period without modern touches.

The slave market was staged in front of the old St. Louis Hotel in New Orleans, which is a historical landmark, and during slavery days was one of the most famous slave auctions in the south. An old relic used in the picture is the auction block upon which thousands of negroes were knocked down to the highest bidder, husbands and wives parted and children torn from the arms of their mothers.

One of the sensational incidents is a scene wherein a slave girl makes frantic attempts to recover her child, which prove ineffectual, and the grief stricken mother destroys herself by leaping into the swift waters of the Mississippi. The calloused owner who stood unmoved by the display of mother love becomes furious with rage at the loss of his $1,000 chattel.

Star to Make Thrift Stamp Film

Mabel Normand's originality, combined with her desire to be of genuine service in connection with the present Thrift Stamp drive, is responsible for the star's forthcoming appearance in a strange picture.

She will act in a specially written scenario, a short subject calculated to show a new phase of the benefit to be derived from liberal purchases of Thrift Stamps. In no sense a tract, the little play will entertain first of all and incidentally drive home a message in telling fashion.

Society Drama Heads Triangle Program

"Old Loves for New" Features Margery Wilson in Picture with Scenes That Range From New York to Cattle Country

A DRAMA OF SOCIETY, "Old Loves for New," featuring Margery Wilson, is the first release on the Triangle May 26 program. The story is by Adela Rogers St. John. It relates how a shallow and thoughtless debutante is married to the worldly son of wealth through the tactful efforts of her mother, and how later in the far West this loveless marriage develops into a real romance.

In accordance with the story the mother of Gwendolyn Alcot (Margery Wilson), having spent all her income, is straining a generous credit properly to launch her daughter into New York society. The last hope for the Alcots is that Gwendolyn land a son of wealth in a hurry.

Harvey Martin, Jr. (Lee Hill), is the catch of the season. He is young and handsome and the only son of one of New York's powerful bankers. He becomes infatuated with Gwendolyn. Old Man Martin, like his son, thinks that Harvey has discovered the real thing in the modern day, an old-fashioned girl, and the wedding plans are rushed.

Not long after the wedding Old Man Martin discovers that his son and daughter are idling away their lives like a pair of parasites, while Harvey finds that Gwen's seemingly unspoiled manner is just a cloak for her worldliness. However, he loves her dearly, and only his father's ultimatum that he go West and make a man of himself or be cut off, halts the merrymaking.

Gwen protests at leaving her luxuries, but her husband, who is now awake to his own worthlessness, is obdurate and they depart for the Martin cattle ranch in Mohawk, Arizona.

Being a tenderfoot, Harvey soon finds himself in bad with the boys, while Gwen, in rebellion, flirts outrageously with Jerry Marquis, the handsome foreman. To her sorrow she finds in Jerry a different man from those she has been accustomed to encountering in the city and she is found struggling in his arms when Harvey enters the ranch house. During a brief struggle Harvey realizes that as man to man he is not Jerry's equal—that he is unable to avenge his wrong.

Taking his wife, whom he blames equally with Jerry, and a former pugilist with him, Martin leaves the ranch and goes to a mountain cabin, where for a month he trains. Then he sets out for revenge on Jerry, leaving his wife locked in her room.

For the first time realizing her love for Harvey, Gwen manages to escape and after a thrilling chase succeeds in halting the fight, but not until Harvey proves himself Jerry's equal. He then listens to his wife's explanations and understands.

"High Stakes," the second release of the week, features J. Barney Sherry in the part of a modern Raffles, a distinctly different character from that portrayed by him in "Her Decision," a May release. Jane Miller, a new leading woman, will make her first appearance with Triangle, playing opposite to Sherry. Dick Rossin is also a member of the supporting cast.

A vault in the Kensington Museum in London is robbed of a piece of jewelry, "The Southern Cross." Inspector Reginald Culvert (Harvey Clark) is after the thief. During his investigations Ralph Stanning (J. Barney Sherry), the thief, calls upon him. Culvert realizes that Stanning is the man he is after, but lacks the evidence to warrant the arrest. He tells Stanning of his suspicions and vows he will get him. Stanning smilingly accepts the challenge. In various clever ways Culvert endeavors to trick Stanning into revealing himself as the crook, but fails.

Falling in love with Marie (Jane Miller), whose attempt to end her life in the Thames was foiled, Stanning marries her. They agree to forget the past and establish themselves in a fashionable country home, where titled personages, among them Lady Alice (Myrtle Rishell), accepts them as social equals. The arrival of a little son strengthens Stanning's determination to go straight.

But Culvert continues to hound Stanning. Meeting him after a few years Culvert tells Stanning that he is no longer connected with Scotland Yard. He says, however, that he is deeply interested in the reported theft of a pearl necklace belonging to Lady Alice, as his own son is under suspicion. Stanning, now realizing what a father's love for his son really means, offers to help Culvert's boy out of trouble. He requests Culvert to return to him a few days later, when he hands over to him a necklace. Culvert, convinced of the fact that he now has the thief cornered, is about to arrest Stanning, when Lady Alice appears and announces that her necklace has been found.

The astonished Culvert is ordered from Stanning's house, which he is about to leave, when Stanning with a sneer tosses the necklace into the fire, saying: "Paste —I made them because I thought you were a man and a father. I made them to save your son."

Louise Glaum Completes "Shackled"

Second Paralta Play a Stirring Drama of Tangled Lives with Sensational Climax

THE FINAL SCENES of Louise Glaum's second Paralta play, "Shackled," have been completed and the production is now in the laboratories of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, where it is being assembled for release.

The play is taken from an original story by Lawrence McCloskey, which deals with the life of Lola Dexter, a girl alone in the world, whose life is apparently wrecked through her love for Walter Cosgrove, a man with the veneer of a gentleman, but through whose nature there runs an undercurrent of debaseness.

On the eve of his wedding to Edith Danfield, he tells Lola that his funds are exhausted and that he is to marry this girl, whose father is a man of wealth. Grief stricken, Lola goes away and arrives in Palm Beach, Florida, where she becomes the companion of a man whose limbs are paralyzed and who is spending the winter months in that resort.

Lola's sunny disposition awakens new interest in life for the man. He falls in love with her and she consents to marry him. They return to his estate, where she finds that he is the father of the girl Cosgrove married. Terror-stricken, she decides not to let anyone know her past.

After a brief honeymoon Cosgrove and his bride return. He soon neglects her and becomes notorious in his affairs with women. Lola dares not intercede for fear he will denounce her to her husband, whom she has been nursing back to health and who is now able to walk.

The thread of the story becomes further tangled when Lola discovers that Edith is about to desert her worthless husband to elope with her former sweetheart, who has returned from the battlefields of Europe.

The study mounts to the highest tensity and the solution seems impossible—when the most unexpected happens and the final smashing climax sweeps aside the veils of intrigue and deceit with a single stroke which brings happiness as its reward.

Lincoln Brings Film to New York

E. K. Lincoln, who has been engaged in the making of a feature picture in California for the past three months, is expected to arrive in New York this week with a print of the subject. His plan of release will be announced upon his arrival.

Mr. Lincoln is a star of great popularity.

Last year he was featured in a big patriotic picture, "For the Freedom of the World," released by Goldwyn. He then supported Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor," also for Goldwyn, leaving the east for California to make the picture he is now bringing to Gotham.

World Proposes Title Clearing House

All Companies Would Submit Names of Pictures and Infringements Could Thus Be Avoided Easily

ONE of the most important, yet least heard of departments in connection with World Pictures is that of the title bureau.

The object of this bureau is not to suggest titles, but to protect the company from any innocent appropriation of titles belonging to features already produced and presented to which prior rights have been obtained.

When it is considered that 258,000 plays have been produced on the English speaking stage and that there are titles for more than 900,000 novels and short stories, it is not difficult to realize the tremendous task the title department has to keep from encroaching upon the rights of others.

Of course, in a number of instances the copyright laws guarantee the protection of titles and limit the use of a title for only a definite number of years. The copyright law thereby automatically releases a large number of titles each year.

It is generally believed that one can copyright a title, but the courts have held that a title cannot be copyrighted, as it is merely a handle to indicate the proprietary rights to certain subject matter. Still, the courts go further on the theory of unfair competition and guarantee proprietary rights to a combination of words because these words have something to do with a valuable right made so by usage.

The combination of words such as "Veribest," "Uneeda," "Takhoma," "Tarvia," has been classified as fanciful and such titles have been held to be the property of the creator. Generic words can not be appropriated.

Immediately upon the production of a picture, the title department of World Pictures searches through its catalogue to learn whether or not some one else possesses a prior right to the title, and if this is found to be so another title is selected.

Some day it is hoped that the production end of the industry will be so well organized that a clearing house will be established to which all titles will be submitted and passed upon.

World Pictures submits this idea for consideration.

"Million Dollar Dollies" a Fashion Treat

Famous Sisters Wear Many and Elaborate Costumes in New Screen Classics Production

A REAL fashion show of the screen will be presented by the Dolly Sisters in their Screen Classics production, "The Million Dollar Dollies." Roszika and Yancsi Dolly appear in forty-eight changes of costume in this five-act picture, which was written and directed by Leonce Perret.

The sisters in their up-to-date garb are involuntarily contrasted with beauties of the harem in flowing robes, and will prove once and for all, to the satisfaction of the Western Hemisphere at least, that the modish outlines of nowadays are more pleasing to the eye than the formless costumes of the Orient.

Every conceivable sort of apparel in which young girls are ever seen is shown in "The Million Dollar Dollies," and all are of the loveliest. Outside of its clever story and brisk action, the picture provides an ocular feast in its beautiful gowns and lavish stage settings.

The picture opens with Roszika and Yancsi just awakening from sleep, wearing the most exquisite night apparel. The gowns are of snowy white chiffon over silk, tucked in wide horizontal bands. The gowns are sleeveless, but are held in place by satin ribbons, caught with French handmade flowers. Close-fitting lace caps have big lace puffs at the back, are twice encircled with handsome flowers, and are tied under the chin with gros grain ribbon.

The sisters hear an auto-horn. Their fiances have arrived, to take them for a ride. Bare feet are thrust into pink silk "mules" and arms slipped into crepe de chine negligees, while they steal a peep between the curtains at the car below.

Dressing jackets of satin trimmed with deep lace, are worn while the preparations for the day are made. Next there are street costumes of strong-bodied charmeuse trimmed with fringe, with small, close hats to match, made of narrower fringe arranged row on row.

Fringe is an important item in the wardrobe of the Dolly Sisters in "The Million Dollar Dollies." Black and white sashes with deep white fringe form the distinguishing note in the black satin suits, faced with white, which Roszika and Yancsi wear when they go to call on the Princess. The princess' husband has ceased to love her and it is their duty to find a cure for him.

It is probable that the ravishing gowns worn by the girls have a great deal to do with the cure, although the prince himself may not realize that fact. Smart, bouffant black hats without a trace of white are worn with these suits.

Fringe is again used in its most idealized form, in the costumes worn when the girls appear at an entertainment in the Indian palace. These are made of iridescent beads sewed on a satin tunic, caught above the knee on either side with a knot of long strands of the beads. Huge ostrich fans are carried with these gowns, and ostrich feather head-dresses add grace and dignity to the effect.

The plot requires Roszika to impersonate a wonderful new kind of fish. She is wound in lengths of black gauze on which gold spangles are used to simulate scales. Both girls swim in the Rajah's private pool, wearing satin bathing suits of black and white vertical stripes, one shoulder being uncovered.

Woman Exhibitor to Fly

Mrs. Rose Johnson, who has been operating a picture theatre in Chitna, Alaska, for several years, is building a new theatre in that town and another in Valdez. Besides managing her theatres, Mrs. Johnson will carry the mail over the Fairbanks-Chitna route this year. During the summer the trips will be made by automobile, but next fall Mrs. Johnson expects to use an airplane.

Goldwyn Nails Pacifist Rumor

Through channels of some subtle influence—perhaps of enemy propaganda origin—a rumor recently reached the ears of officers of the war department that Goldwyn had produced and was releasing throughout the country a picture of pacifistic tendencies. Investigation disclosed that "Fields of Honor," written by Irvin S. Cobb and starring Mae Marsh, was the production in question.

Pursuant to their routine policy, the chief of staff's office communicated with the National Board of Review and through it Goldwyn was requested to send a print to Washington.

A Goldwyn executive accompanied the film to the capital, where it was shown to representatives of the chief of staff's office and members of the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities.

After seeing the film everyone present expressed astonishment that a charge of pacifism could have been made against a story as genuinely patriotic.

World Solves Location Problem

The job of selecting locations is at the best a difficult one and to aid their directors and assistants, World Pictures has had a scenic cameraman photograph the entire district within a radius of fifty miles of New York City where there are backgrounds which might prove of value.

Meadows, residences, forests, streams, bridges, brooks, parks, estates, fountains, factories, hills, and other topographical features have been carefully filmed and filed away.

Each photo is mounted and contains a statement on the reverse side of the distinguishing characteristics of the places, the distance from the studio, the means of transportation, the hotels and restaurants nearby and all other information which will assist the director and his staff in determining whether or not the place is suitable for their purpose.

Next Ethel Clayton Feature June 17

Star Will Appear on World Program in "The Man Hunt," a Whimsical Play of the West

ETHEL CLAYTON'S next appearance on the World program is announced on June 17, when "The Man Hunt" is scheduled for release. Rockcliffe Fellowes, who hitherto has been supporting Kitty Gordon, is associated with Miss Clayton in the principal role and the remainder of the cast is composed of Jack Drumier, Harry Warwick, Herbert Barrington, Albert Hart, John Dungan and John Adrizonia. Travers Vale directed.

Miss Clayton interprets the part of Betty Hammond, who was a product of the West and had known all the tribulations of the miner's life previous to her father's discovery of gold. Then came years abroad following her father's death, when she found herself an heiress. Numberless fortune hunters ardently courted her, but Betty had modern views of marriage and she resolved to marry only the man she selected, without waiting for a sympathetic response from the fortunate male.

One day she happened across an old tintype of Jim Ogden, who was her playmate in the mining town before the gold flowed in. Jim had attained the position of superintendent of her mines and under the pretense that she was a stenographer sent by the eastern office, she started to work under him in California. Jim secretly recognized her, but refrained from informing her and treated her distantly.

Betty at length broke out in rebellion and Jim discharged her, whereupon she disclosed her identity. But Jim told her that he recognized her at their first meeting.

Then Betty coolly suggested to him that they marry and was met with a refusal. During Jim's enforced absence, Betty called in Ben, a trusted miner, and with a party of other miners they captured Jim and kept him prisoner in a cabin. Betty again asked him to marry her, but was again met with a refusal.

Some days later some foreign noblemen who were suitors of Betty arrived, and Betty, in her endeavor to arouse the jealousy of Jim, suggested that they draw sticks for her hand. Jim arranged the contest, but the unfortunate men all drew sticks the identical size. Whereupon Jim promptly chased the three admirers out of the cabin.

Ben, the miner, had displayed considerable interest in Betty and her disappearance on the following morning with him aroused the ire of Jim. Calling a posse he decided to pursue the abductor and his captive.

A hot pursuit took place and Ben, finding that he was unable to make progress while hampered by his captive, abandoned Betty. Jim immediately picked her up and the other guards brought in Ben. Jim wished to inflict punishment upon Ben, but Betty intervened, explaining that she had ordered him to abduct her. Having so completely displayed his anxiety for the well-being of Betty, there was nothing left for Jim to do but consent to the marriage.

Star Takes Role of Violinist

A girl violinist is the heroine in Bessie Barriscale's forthcoming Paralta play, "Rose O' Paradise," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation this week.

Untutored Jinny—the heroine—has no names for her tunes. They just come in her head.

"I'll play about the fairies—the ones who live in the woods and hide away in the flowers and under the leaves," she tells the society people who have gathered to hear her play. Under the spell of her loveliness and music, imaginary elves steal from the solitude of the summer night. Jinny knows the mystery of the forest as a singer knows her song. She also knows that the world is full of happiness waiting for those who seek it.

Such a girl is Jinny, played by Miss Barriscale. She lives with an old cobbler in a squatter's cabin on the shores of Lake Cayuga, where the principal occupation of the inhabitants is "short wood" gathering. Here she is established in the poorest surroundings, but she rises to eminence.

More Snakeville Comedies

Essanay's Snakeville comedies have proved so popular with the public that exhibitors all over the country have been asking for more. Essanay announces that it will issue a second block of ten as soon as all of the first ten are released.

The last release of the first set is May 25, and the first of the second ten will be issued June 1, the remainder following through June and July, one week apart. The General Film Company, which is releasing these comedies, announces that they are in such demand that they usually are taken by the entire block, the exhibitor fixing one night each week for the showing.

The films feature the comedians, Slippery Slim, Sophie Clutts and Mustang Pete. They are western slap-stick comedies and full of life and action.

The new set of ten is as follows: "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung," "Slippery Slim—Diplomat," "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent," "Slippery Slim's Strategy," "A Hot Time in Snakeville," "Snakeville's New Sheriff," "A Snakeville Epidemic" and "Sophie's Birthday Party."

World Plan a Success

The success attendant upon the World Pictures plan to aid exhibitors during the duration of the war, was revealed this week. One of the high officials of World Pictures stated that over 1,700 theatres throughout America have availed themselves of the privilege extended to them under this plan of using the vast World library of pictures in much the same way that a public library is used.

"Over the Top" Continues Its Triumph

Proves Powerful Recruiting Argument as Well as an Entertaining Photoplay, Bringing Many to the Colors

"OVER THE TOP," Vitagraph's war special, in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey plays the leading role, continues its sweep across the country.

Among the new bookings reported from the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, are two of exceptional importance. In St. Louis, Martin Beck, head of the Orpheum vaudeville circuit, has booked the picture for an indefinite run in the Orpheum Theatre, the newest and finest house in the Beck chain. This is a remarkable tribute, marking the first time that Mr. Beck has permitted a motion picture to dislodge vaudeville in this house. The St. Louis run will be inaugurated this week.

In Chicago "Over the Top" will open for an indefinite run at the Auditorium on May 26. This will be the first showing of "Over the Top" in the Windy City and a successful engagement is predicted for it, based on record-breaking business in another big western city—Minneapolis—where it is playing to overflow crowds at the New Garrick Theatre. It is booked indefinitely in Minneapolis.

"Over the Top," judging from reports emanating from widely separated sections, is a good barometer of the American war spirit and shows that the North and the South, the East and the West, are all united in patriotic purpose. It also has demonstrated that the public is avid in its desire for photoplays which reproduce faithfully conditions in the trenches and show how the personal element enters into trench warfare, so graphically portrayed by Empey and the American soldiers who appear with him in Vitagraph's production.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, in transferring Empey's vivid experiences to the screen, has not only caused a magnificent picture to be added to the film world's record of achievements, but he and Wilfrid North, who directed it, have supplied the United States government with a powerful recruiting argument. The manager of the Strand Theatre, in Erie, Pa., where the picture was booked for a week, ran it nine days and stated that it not only broke his box-office record, but also was instrumental in increasing enlistments. An army officer, he declared, told him that enlistments during the run increased by 100 per cent and he attributed it to the influence of Empey and "Over the Top." In a letter received by Mr. Irwin, the Strand manager, W. J. Hayes, wrote:

"'Over the Top' broke the record at the Strand on receipts. That means a tremendous business, for we felt that we had probably reached the top when we played 'The Battle Cry of Peace' to 30,000 people. No first-class house can afford to miss running this picture. It is splendid war propaganda and unquestionably induced many to enlist in Erie. It had the house going at all times and is a money-maker. It is a picture with which the exhibitor can feel that he is serving his country from a patriotic view."

In Atlanta, where the picture opened at the Criterion Theatre, Monday, May 13, for a two weeks' run, the engagement was turned into a drive for enlistments, with the army officials of Fort McPherson working in co-operation with the exhibitor. Each day there is a military parade with the regimental band of Fort McPherson giving a concert at the theatre and twenty marines have been assigned to recruiting duty at the house during each performance.

Miracle Scene in "Salome"

A scene in the forthcoming Theda Bara super-production, "Salome," that is certain to arouse wide interest, is that in which a bolt of lightning from a clear sky wrecks the God Jove that both Salome and Herod worshipped.

J. Gordon Edwards, the director, called together the members of the Fox technical department at the Hollywood studios and told them just what was wanted. After much experimentation, an ingenious arrangement was made to give the effect desired. In order that Miss Bara herself might register the same surprise and fear that Salome must have shown, nothing was said to the star about the coming "miracle."

At a signal from Director Edwards, when all the lights had been turned off, a great ball of fire descended with the roar of a comet from the studio roof and headed straight for the Jove. With a loud report and a flash of flame, the bolt struck its objective, shattering the idol.

Celebrities Are "Doubled"

Exceptional success in reproducing on the screen famous persons now living is reported in the forthcoming Fox production of "The Caillaux Case," dealing with recent French history.

The ex-premier, Joseph Caillaux, his beautiful wife, Henriette Caillaux, Gaston Calmette, slain editor of "Figaro," and Bolo Pasha, the traitor to France who was recently executed, are reproduced on the screen with an amazing similarity of feature and mannerisms.

Takes Over New House

Manager Osborne of the Star Theatre, Kitchener, Ontario, has announced that he is taking over the new Regent Theatre at Guelph, Ontario, from Reinhardt and Collins. Osborne takes possession on June 1.

Miss Young Tells Role She Likes Best

Part of Zara in "The Reason Why" Interests Her Greatly Because Heroine Is Better Woman at the Finish

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, whose latest Select Picture, "The Reason Why," has been hailed as the finest production she has made in her long career, was especially interested in the characterization of Zara, the young heroine.

"I like most," said the famous star recently, "a part where I can feel the mental quickening caused by the growth of character under difficult circumstances. And in Zara, I had just that sort of part, a role which called for subtle intellectual development and fine delineation.

"Melodrama, which is developed without regard to character, does not interest me, no matter how thrilling the situations; but although 'The Reason Why' is intensely dramatic, its big situations are based altogether on character growth.

"Zara, as conceived by Elinor Glyn in the popular novel on which this photoplay is based, came from Russia to London. Her brutal husband had been killed in a tavern brawl, and with her child she flees to the shelter of her uncle, a rich English financier whom she has never seen. Her heart is hardened to men; her life is wrapped up wholly in her baby boy, although she must keep her marriage secret from her uncle.

"Arrived in London, after placing the boy under the friendly care of a genial lodging housekeeper—itself a tremendous wrench for her maternal heart—Zara accidentally overhears fragments of a conversation between her uncle and Lord Tancred, in which it appears that the nobleman is marrying her solely for the dowry she will bring him.

"Accordingly, after she becomes Lady Tancred, her cynicism causes her to struggle against the love for her husband which is growing in her heart. Here comes the most interesting part of the portrayal, to me, in the battle between the surface hardness of Zara and her fundamentally pure womanhood. The love which comes into her life brightens its darkest recesses, and ultimately she realizes the great prize in her hands. After mutual explanations, 'they live happily ever after.' In playing the part, I felt all this keenly, and realized that Zara had grown to be quite a different woman by the end of the story."

Jewel Carmen, who will star in the William Fox film version of Gouveneur Morris' story, "You Can't Get Away With It."

Alice Joyce Starts New Feature

Alice Joyce, working under the direction of Tom Terriss, last week finished work in "Find the Woman," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature made from O. Henry's "Cherchez la Femme," and this week will begin work on another five-reel feature, "To the Highest Bidder." This play is a reproduction of the Florence Morse Kingsley novel of the same title.

Carl Le Viness has been appointed assistant to Director Terriss in the direction of Miss Joyce, his engagement marking his return to pictures after a long absence due to illness. Mr. Le Viness formerly was with the American, Majestic, Reliance and Eclair companies and was regarded as one of the leaders in the field.

Baby Osborne Film Leads Pathe Program

Twelfth Episode of "The House of Hate," Lloyd Comedy, War Feature, Scenic and News Reels Complete Bill

ANOTHER of Baby Marie Osborne's popular series, "A Daughter of the West," heads the program to be released by Pathe for the week of May 26.

This production—five reels long—affords a view of the clever little star in a new role. There are thrills aplenty in "A Daughter of the West" and perhaps the scenes that will register the greatest hit are those in which Baby Marie, in appropriate cow-girl garb, rides her own pony, which in some mysterious way has been induced to "buck" a bit.

Baby Marie rides like a veteran of the range, and there is an exciting denouement in which she captures and holds prisoner the villain of the piece, a six-footer, till aid comes. Other amusing scenes are those in which she appears with her little colored boy playmate, a youngster, by the way, who is developing real skill as a screen player.

The twelfth episode of "The House of Hate," the Pearl White serial, is also released on this program. There is a big thrill in every fifty feet of this two-reel installment, with Pearl trapped in a gangster's den, the employment of a wireless to send an S. O. S. to Antonio Moreno, the hero, and a climax that will leave the audience on tip-toes, as usual.

The Harold Lloyd comedy released on this program is called "Fireman, Save My Child," and those familiar with the Rolin Comedies can imagine what the possibilities are. "Fireman, Save My Child" is in one reel, but the action would support a three-reeler.

Part III of "Britain's Bulwarks" (one reel) shows the hardships endured by the British army in the campaign in Mesopotamia. There is renewed interest in the Mesopotamian situation just now, following the British victories, in which Archie Roosevelt, son of the Colonel, played no inconsiderable part.

"In Southermost Russia," a one reel Pathe scenic film, and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 44 and 45 complete the bill.

Clever Methods of Advertising

PUBLICITY THAT MAKES FOR PROFITS

Kehrleins Score Heavily with "Ads"

California Exhibitors Feature Arrow Trademark Everywhere and Make Houses Well Known as Result

AMONG exhibtors who are extensive advertisers and owe much of their success to this fact are the Kehrlein brothers, owners of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, and two other houses in Fresno and Oakland.

A trademark arrow is the feature of all the Kehrlein advertising. By night, in bright incandescents, two flaming arrows illuminate the wide expanse of the side walls of the Kinema. The fire-tipped omens point downward toward the street on which the entrances of the Kinema open and at the upper ends of the arrows are red bulbs, denoting the feathers that steer the arrows in their flight.

In the newspaper advertising this arrow symbol pierces a "still" scene used to herald a coming or present picture and links the house still closer to its trademark, from which no open-eyed reader, pedestrian or motorist can escape. On billboards and painted signs the arrow persists—in the heart of the city, on the boulevards to the sea and along the roads leading out into the desert to the east.

Emil Kehrlein, himself managing director of the Kinema, is a distinctive and virile advertiser. He exploits a picture both inside and outside his theatre in such a manner as to invest it with the Kehrlein personality. And while he at no time neglects his attractions, he makes his policy a fifty-fifty one of building something that becomes a permanent house asset.

He remembers the value of the two whiskered brothers pictured on the cartons of a famous cough-drop; he remembers the uplifted finger of the famous and now departed Dr. Munyon; he knows the value created by the nude baby and the much-mustached Dr. Mennen on the talcum powder tin and, following the wise lines laid down by these national advertisers who have by these signs conquered, he has made Kinema and its arrows beacons of the day and night in his community.

Emil and his brother Oliver, who resides in Fresno and watches over the destinies of the Fresno and Oakland houses, are imaginative showmen. They are showmen of the new school—collegians who are willing to disregard the precedents and old-style principles of showmanship and strike out for themselves, creating their own precedents.

They are the firmest kind of believers in newspaper exploitation. They ignore, in the main, the cut-to-pattern advertising and publicity supplied by the producers and create copy adjusted to the towns in which they operate. They believe in copy simplicity; they believe in and use big space; they believe in plenty of open or white space. Therefore, they obtain dominating copy in whatever papers they use, whether the space occupied be large or small.

The Kinema cannot be said to emphasize over-strongly any one phase of its program. It attempts to offer well rounded showmanship. Its musical program is remarkable; its house atmosphere is almost without a parallel and its house comforts would require much space for description.

Mr. Kehrlein seeks constantly the biggest motion pictures—and usually finds them. But no one leaves his Kinema feeling that the picture has been the big or the only thing seen and felt. It has been part of an enjoyable entertainment—which is as it should be.

Lions Featured in Fox Comedy

A comedy remarkable because of the great number of animal "stunts" that figure in it, is "Wild Women and Tame Lions," a Sunshine Comedy release for June from Fox Film Corporation. This fun-maker has some thrilling scenes in which lions and crocodiles take part.

Carload of Children Advertise Film

Get Free Ride in Trolley Bearing "BlueBird" Posters, Only Requirement Being That They Make Lots of Noise

THE Allen Theatre, Calgary, put over a good advertising stunt in the presentation of the Artcraft feature, "The Blue Bird." A private trolley car was chartered for a Saturday morning and through an advertisement in the newspapers children with strong voices were invited to take a ride in the car free. On the sides of the car were long streams advertising the coming of the feature.

"We want some real strong lungs for these trips and if you cannot make enough noise to suit we will help you out," the management announced. The noise was produced.

The Allen Theatre, Toronto, has been making a specialty of various advertising stunts which have proved successful.

One of the plans consists of the distribution of picture post cards, which bear views of the exterior and interior of the theatre. The cards are given freely to patrons with the suggestion that they write to their friends, the theatre paying the postage.

Almost every day from thirty to forty of the cards are handed to ushers or ticket sellers for mailing. Of course, the messages are not private and it is noted that in almost every instance the writers praise the theatre. In the opinion of the management this form of advertising forms valuable boosting.

The cards and other advertising literature are always to be found on a small table just inside the entrance. The other literature consists of the Allen News, a weekly house organ containing details of coming attractions and references to various house features, musical request lists and small calendars for the current month.

The lists of musical selections are changed each month and with these the orchestra is able to provide music that the patrons desire. Requested selections of a special nature are played on Tuesdays and Thursdays of each week.

Show Uncensored Film

The managers of twenty-eight moving picture theatres in Winnipeg, Manitoba, have been found guilty of exhibiting an uncensored moving picture. The film in question was a one-reel subject which was released by a civic committee in charge of a clean-up campaign.

Charles H. Webster, secretary of the committee, said: "We had no time to have the film censored. If the censor board closes the shows the province will lose a couple of days' receipts from the Amusements Tax Act."

Local newspapers took up the discussion editorially. No actual prosecutions are expected, however.

Scenic and ballet spectacle entitled "The Primeval Forest," produced by S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, as a prologue to "Tarzan of the Apes." The ballet was composed of professional dancers and students of a ballet school. The scenes and electric effects were devised in a studio managed by the theatre.

Pathe and Press Join Hands on New Travel Series

By virtue of an important deal just consummated between Pathe and the Post Film Company, the release throughout the country of a new travel series will be made by Pathe in conjunction with leading daily newspapers.

Many of the most important papers in the United States are parties to the contract, and as each film is shown in each city, a travel article corresponding appears in the newspaper. The subjects are in single reel form.

The first release will be on June 16 and affords a striking and comprehensive picture of life in St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, bought from Denmark by the United States last year.

The newspapers signed up to participate in this project are as follows: New York Evening Mail, Philadelphia Inquirer, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Pittsburg Press, Baltimore American, Detroit News, San Francisco Chronicle, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Chicago Evening Post, Buffalo Evening News, Minneapolis Daily Tribune, Los Angeles Express Tribune, Milwaukee Journal, Denver News-Times, Portland Oregonian, Houston Chronicle, Atlanta Journal, Salt Lake Telegram, Dallas Dispatch, Charlotte Observer, Richmond (Va.) Times Dispatch, Duluth News Tribune, Grand Rapids Herald, New Orleans Item, Hartford Courant, Albany Times-Union Topeka Daily Capital, Birmingham Age-Herald, Arizona (Phoenix) Republican, and the Des Moines News.

Hot Fight Over Sunday Shows

Commissioner Carl H. Stubig of Sandusky, O., for the fourth time has sworn out warrants charging Commissioner John A. Himmelein, owner and manager of the Sandusky Theatre, and George J. Schade, W. W. Pope and William F. Seitz, Jr., other exhibitors, with having kept their places open on Sunday.

All of the cases are pending in municipal court. City Solicitor E. S. Stephens having refused to prosecute the cases, Judge Malcolm Kelly has been designated as special prosecutor.

New O. Henry Picture Promised

Another of O. Henry's famous stories is to make its appearance shortly as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature. It is "One Thousand Dollars," taken from the volume published under the title of "The Voice of the City."

Gaumont to Offer 10-Chapter Serial

Story Is One of the Monte Cristo Type, Wherein Hero "Comes Back From the Dead" to Avenge Wrongs

FOR a long time there has been a growing demand for a short serial which will hold the interest in every episode.

Recognizing this demand, the Gaumont Company will soon have ready for state rights buyers what may be called an amazing serial in ten two-reel episodes. This is an up-to-date story of the Monte Cristo type, featuring a man who returns "from they dead" to avenge his wrongs, and, incidentally, to aid others who have been oppressed.

There is not only compelling interest in every episode, but there is action and suspense in every foot. Frankly sensational, this serial is replete with startling surprises, thrilling dangers, and ingenious escapes.

"The Man from the Dead," who captures the sympathy of the spectators from his first appearance, is pursued by his enemies through the entire twenty reels, and his sensational escapes, it is claimed by Gaumont, have never been excelled.

"The Man from the Dead" has many claims to the close consideration of the discerning exhibitor. The photography is of the best, there is logical interpretation of plot by good actors, beautiful scenery, elaborate settings, wealth of idea and perfection in every detail.

Francis Ford Discussing script with Elsie Van Name, author of "Berlin, via America."

Apart from this, "The Man from the Dead" is in a class by itself. It can be compared with no other serial which has ever been produced, because it is so essentially different in every respect.

The picture has been produced with the independent exhibitor in view and instead of being of the usual serial length of thirty to forty reels it has been trimmed to twenty action-crowded reels with absolutely no useless padding.

While "The Man from the Dead" frankly is not "high-brow stuff," it can be depended upon to interest any spectator, young or old, who has red blood in his veins and enjoys the thrills of adventurous melodrama.

Gaumont plans to have the entire ten episodes complete in the near future, at which time trade showings will be arranged for the convenience of the buyers and exhibitors.

Third Shorty Hamilton Picture Is Released

The W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company announces the release of the third picture of the Shorty Hamilton series, entitled "The Ranger." Preview critics say it is a crackerjack.

The story is timely, having to do with German propaganda, the enemy aliens operating from across the Mexican border. Shorty, a member of the "Texas Rangers," is designated to trace these operations, that a movement to arouse disloyalty and sedition may be stamped out.

Working with the United States Secret Service, there is the promise of an abundance of thrilling situations and rapid action—a veritable five reels of liquid film fire that only curiosity can quench, and serving to supply this effervescent little comedian with limitless opportunity for a display of his laugh provoking heroics.

Shorty has a host of admirers among the fans and it is claimed that in this, his latest effort, a rare treat is in store for all who enjoy his rough and ready impersonations.

Garrett Sells Cuba Rights

Sidney Garrett, president of the Brockliss Inc., has sold "The Natural Law," rights for Cuba to the Central America Film Co.

"Berlin Via America" Sells Fast

Ernest Shipman states that he has found a ready market for "Berlin Via America," and that 75 per cent of the territory has been sold to representative buyers. This has been accomplished within the first ten days of the sales campaign and there are enough bona fide inquiries from unsold states to indicate that all these will be quickly disposed of.

Francis Ford, the star, and his players, accompanied by Elsie Van Name, the author, has arrived in Los Angeles and is even now well advanced in the production of "A Man of Today," the second release of the Francis Ford Producing Company. Both "Berlin Via America" and "A Man of Today" are the work of Miss Van Name. An announcement of the release date for the second production is expected soon.

Mr. Ford's popularity as a screen star is so firmly established as to create a demand for any product to which his name may be associated, while his long experience fits him particularly to the requirements of director general, as well as star, a dual capacity which he will fill in the production of the six big features announced for the current year.

Interest in "Sporting Life"

Unusual interest centers in Maurice Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," now in course of filming at the Tourneur studios at Fort Lee. This is due to Mr. Tourneur's phenomenal success with another Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip." Mr. Tourneur produced a wide variety of offerings for Paramount and World, including "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," and the Elsie Ferguson pictures.

Jerome Abrams Promoted

Jerome Abrams, who has been district manager of the Foursquare Exchange for the South ever since its inception, has been appointed special representative and called to New York to prepare for special duties that will commence next week.

Mrs. Wharton Back on Screen

Mrs. Leopold Wharton, who played in Wharton Serials and also in "The Great White Trail," is back on the screen again in the fifteenth episode of "The Eagle's Eye," the serial story of the German plots in America.

Binney Resumes Comedy Production

Territory for Entire Series of Twelve Pictures Expected to Be Sold in a Month Says Ernest Shipman

H. J. BINNEY, president and director general of the Florida Film Corporation, has returned from New York to Jacksonville, where work on the Josh Binney comedies will be resumed in the Klutho studios under his personal direction.

Mr. Binney has completed the first three of a series of two-reel comedies to be released one each month. He has selected as titles for these pictures, "Fred's Fictitious Foundling," "Fabulous Fortune Fumblers" and "Freda's Fighting Father," and not only have they received most favorable comment on the occasion of their recent screenings for groups of independent buyers, but several contracts for protected franchises for the entire series have been closed in various sections.

Ernest Shipman, acting as sales manager for Mr. Binney, reports sufficient bona fide inquiries to warrant the statement that all the territory will be disposed of within the next thirty days.

Mr. Binney's unbroken line of successful comedy productions is largely due to the fact that he is original, progressive, and a close observer of the ever changing demand of the amusement seeking public, with a willingness to meet its every requirement.

Having this thought in mind, Mr. Binney will endeavor to incorporate in absolutely every release of the Josh Binney Comedies a story of sufficient interest to pass on its own merits and made the more attractive by a series of rapid fire comedy situations all fitting consistently and legitimately in the unfolding of the tale.

usualness of the occasion. Then, too, since we turned many people away, I knew I could play to capacity business on a repeat engagement.

"About increasing admission prices for good pictures. Some exhibitors refuse to do this because they say they feel they are taking advantage of the people in raising on the bettter pictures. I cannot agree with this idea. I believe in raising the prices when the picture is unusually good because then the people will not compare the ordinary ones with it.

"If I had shown 'Revelation' at usual prices it would have killed every other picture of the week. People would have wanted as good a one every time. Now they consider it exceptional. Also, they appreciate more what they pay more for."

Mrs. Jones has many individual methods of advertising her regular productions. She pays special attention to her slides. No advertising slides are run except for the theatre itself.

"If my screen is worth a certain amount to the local drug store, it is worth at least that much to me," she says. "So I use it to advertise coming attractions, but I try to make the slides interesting by the use of funny sketches, catch lines, 'teaser' ads, etc."

Examples of Mrs. Jones' sketches for slides will be published in an early issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

Mrs. Jones also makes personal announcements about coming pictures before her audiences and explains to them just what sort of stories they contain, the admission price and if the price is increased, the reason why she must charge more.

She also works in union with local societies on certain pictures. The Parent-Teachers' association will aid her in advertising the Artcraft play, "The Bluebird," and she will give a benefit performance for their fund for the Belgian children. She will stage a prologue in showing this film, using a number of children.

"A live-wire exhibitor," describes Mrs. Jones, not only in her own theatre, but in her relation to exhibitors' associations. She was one of the state organizers for the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America. She likes to visit other cities to see how other theatres are run. In that way she gains enthusiasm and new ideas.

"The trouble with the small town exhibitors," says she, "is that they stick too close to their work. They should get away occasionally and come bock with a renewed interest. Visiting big theatres, attending conventions, etc., helps to wake one up and increase the fun to be gotten out of the work of theatre managing. There is a lot of fun in it, really, especially in a small place where you have to do everything yourself and can plan and study out things for yourself. I wouldn't want to be in a big city. I prefer making a stir in small one. It's much more fun."

Perhaps her attitude explains much of Mrs. Jones' success. She is a keen business woman, one whose methods bring money to the box office, but she has not forgotten how to have a good time just working out her own individual ideas.

The Story of the Picture

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT RELEASES

Fox

CONFESSION—(Five Reels)—May 19.—Featuring Jewel Carmen. L. C. Shumway, Fred Warren, Charles Gorman and others in cast. A story of an unjust conviction on circumstantial evidence. Bob and Mary are on their honeymoon and are staying at a hotel. A woman is murdered and circumstances throw suspicion on Bob. He is tried and convicted, but Mary and her father find the real murderer and save Bob.

J. Barney Sherry in the Triangle play "High Stakes."

The Firebrand—(Five Reels)—May 26.—Featuring Virginia Pearson. She plays Princess Natalya, the niece of Prince Andrei Rostoff, who wants her to marry his son, Boris. The Princess is in love with Julian Ross, an American novelist of Russian family, one of the leaders of the revolution. He is captured and placed in prison. While visiting the prison camp the life of the Princess is endangered by a falling rock. Ross saves her, and she promises to help him make his escape. She gives him a passport made out in the name of a servant in her uncle's household. Ross goes to Petrograd, where he continues his work for the revolution.

Treachery on the part of the Royalists, in league with the Kaiser, causes the slaughter of a regiment of Russian troops. Among the dead is the brother of the Princess. Ross learns that Prince Andrei and his son, Boris, are the traitors. Using the servant's passport which the Princess gave him, Ross returns and kills Andrei. This arouses the ire of the Princess, who threatens to kill Ross. She shoots him, causing only a slight injury. While recovering Ross convinces the Princess that her uncle is really responsible for the death of her brother. She forgives him and nurses him back to health and happiness.

True Blue—(Seven Reels)—May 5.—Fox Standard—Featuring William Farnum.

Gilbert Brockhurst is what is commonly known as a "remittance man,"—a person who at stated intervals receives a sum of money, usually sent on condition that he remain away from England. Brockhurst has married an American woman and has a son, Robert, six years old. Brockhurst feels that he has "married beneath" him. Mrs. Brockhurst receives a letter announcing that a relative has died leaving her a ranch in Arizona worth $20,000.

Shortly thereafter an English solicitor arrives and informs Brockhurst that his cousin is dead and that he is the Earl of Somerfield. The husband determines to go to England alone. The deserted woman dies on her ranch and the Earl of Somerfield, hearing of it, marries again and has a son, Stanley, who is regarded as the heir to the Earldom. He is a spendthrift. When the Earl is sent to America on a secret diplomatic mission, he brings Stanley with him and tells him that unless he reforms he will not take him back to England.

The Earl's eldest son has taken the name of Robert McKeever because of resentment at his father's desertion of his mother. The coming of the district school teacher, a pretty young woman, Ruth Stone, sets the countryside aflame. Because of the nearness of the "Little Z" ranch-house to the school, she lives there.

McKeever returns home and later finds Stanley Brockhurst in a gambling house near the "Little Z" ranch. He is in debt for $150. McKeever pays the debt, puts his half-brother in a wagon, and takes him to his ranch. In this wholesome atmosphere Stanley gradually wins the respect of all who know him. McKeever is fearful, too, that his half-brother is winning the love of Ruth Stone.

Stanley, after working out his debt, is inveigled into a crooked cattle deal by a Mexican, who, upon being denounced by the young Englishman, tries to murder him, but is himself killed by Bob McKeever.

Believing that he has lost the love of Ruth, McKeever tells her she may go to Stanley, and is surprised when she tells him that she really loves him.

Life brightens again for McKeever, and when the Earl returns and offers to make him his heir, Bob refuses and sends Stanley back to England—a man.

Goldwyn

Social Ambition.—(Six Reels)—Goldwyn Special.—Featuring Howard Hickman.

The opening scene of the play shows Vincent Manton (Howard Hickman), a New York financier, at his desk mapping out the day's work to a dozen or more employes. At night, much against his wishes, he is the debonnaire society man mainly because his young wife cares more about the social whirl than sitting around the hearth to hear her husband detail some financial coup that has added to his wealth.

Not long afterward, Manton, caught in a net during a series of wild speculations, loses the greater part of his fortune. The wife, who tolerates a husband only because his wealth will further her social ambitions, now balks at the thought of living with a man who is on the verge of financial ruin. Instead of sympathizing with him, she makes life extremely miserable for Manton, so much so that he agrees to her obtaining a divorce.

With no ties to keep him in the metropolis, Manton makes his way to Alaska, where, with the little money he has left, he buys an abandoned claim. For months he labors mightily in the shaft, but to no avail. Discouraged, Manton finds solace in drink at a camp dive. Before long he becomes a derelict, paying very little attention to his claim and incurring the enmity of the miners around him because of his sullenness, the result of his troubles.

One night he is severely thrashed by a gang of miners for insulting a cabaret girl at the resort. Realizing drink had made him irresponsible, she saves him from being killed and takes him to her home to nurse him. That strange acquaintanceship soon ripens into love and brings riches to both, for she finds gold ore in a doormat of his shack. He weds her, and, due mainly to her influence, the derelict of a month before becomes one of the wealthiest men in the Yukon region. More than that, her love is strong enough to make him forever forget his past in New York.

Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke—(One Reel)—Essanay—May 31.—Broncho Billy, Carl Stockdale and Marguerite Clayton are in the cast.

Broncho Billy, a prospector, receives an offer of $100,000 for his claim. The offer is overheard by Rundell, another prospector, and he proposes to sell his claim also. Broncho Billy, hearing of this, plans a joke. He places gold in the blasting hole at Rundell's claim, and when the old prospector blasts he is so delighted at his good fortune that he falls dead from heart failure. Broncho Billy sends a note to Marguerite, Rundell's daughter, telling her the sad fate of her father, and realizing that he was the cause of all the sadness, changes the signs on the claims, she thinking that Broncho

Billy's claim belonged to her father. He then notifies the Consolidated Mining Company that he does not wish to sell. When he sees the girl's sweet face he falls in love with her.

The Winning of Beatrice—(Five Reels)—May 20.—Featuring May Allison.

Beatrice Buckley succeeds with the aid of Robert Howard, a genial young salesman, in making her home-made candy booth the most popular attraction at the charity bazaar. John Maddox, a director in her father's bank, has induced Buckley to make him a big loan from bank funds. Buckley holds Maddox's note for the deal. When Maddox fails to pay, Buckley threatens to confess the transaction. Maddox forces Jenkins, an employe in his power, to steal the note. Buckley comes upon Jenkins in the act and the latter kills the financier in the scuffle. His death is attributed to suicide over his bank shortage and Maddox gloats over his own escape.

With the co-operation of Howard, Millie Nelson, her chum, and Millie's father's finances, Bee organizes the Honey Bee Sweets Candy Company, and within two years is a formidable rival of Maddox. The latter fails to break them with a strike, as Jenkins, though fatally wounded in the excitement, confesses the plot. Maddox then plans to buy their plant and is made to pay an extra $25,000 for an introduction to a goat, representative of their "secret ingredient," goat's milk. Bee then publishes the deathbed confession of Jenkins, Maddox is brought to justice and Bee puts a life bid on Howard when he offers to auction himself as one reliable husband.

Toys of Fate—(Seven Parts)—Metro Screen Classics.—Featuring Alla Nazimova.

Mme. Nazimova plays two roles. She first appears as Hagar, the young wife of Pharos, chief of a band of gypsies. Bruce Griswold, a dissolute man of wealth, lures her from her husband and child and then deserts. She throws herself from a window and her body is found by her husband. Finding Griswold's picture in a locket she wears, Pharos swears vengeance.

Twenty years pass. Their daughter Zorah has grown to womanhood. Griswold comes into the story again with his motherless daughter Blanche. Without knowing the relationship, he determines to win Zorah as he had won her mother. Pharos recognizes him, leads him on till the opportune moment. Zorah falls in love with Henry Livingston, Griswold's young lawyer. Livingston is also sincerely attracted to the girl. Howard Belmont, an unscrupulous district attorney, Griswold's friend, tells Griswold the way to get Zorah is to educate her. Pharos gives his consent to gratify Zorah, stipulating that she shall belong to no man except in marriage. Griswold assures him his intentions are honorable.

Two years later Zorah returns to have her hope of happiness dispelled by the news that Livingston is to marry Blanche, who has tricked him into the engagement. Feeling so utterly apart from her people, she then makes Griswold keep his promise to marry her. After the wedding, Belmont, who is also a dope fiend, urges her to take his "pills" to forget, three meaning death. She is putting three in a glass when interrupted by her father, who tells her of her mother and urges her to kill Griswold. While Zorah hesitates, Griswold enters and drinks the doped wine. Scorning Belmont, Zorah is tried for murder. When Livingston defends her, Blanche breaks the engagement. Zorah is acquitted and love wins.

Paralta

Rose o' Paradise—(Six Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale.

When Virginia's mother died, her father went insane. Morse, his half-brother, places him in an asylum and appoints himself Virginia's guardian. The girl, grown to young womanhood, lives on a farm with her father's violin as her chief companion. Her father regains his mind and manages to escape the asylum, and reaching home tells his frightened little daughter that he is her father. He knows that Morse has been using Virginia's fortune which her mother left, so Singleton sends the girl to live with their old gardener, Luke Grandoken, now a cobbler on Paradise Row. Virginia leaves that night with her violin tucked under one arm, and three little kittens in an old bucket under the other. Singleton dies of a heart attack brought about by all the excitement.

On arriving in Paradise Row Virginia finds a welcome from Lafe, but not from his wife Peg, who although a kindly soul, conceals the fact under a gruff exterior. Morse, having been informed of Singleton's escape, goes to the house only to find that Virginia, too, has disappeared. Morse is in love with Molly Merriweather, but Molly is in love with Theodore King, of whose firm Morse is a member. While playing her violin out in the woods one day Virginia meets King and his mother and Molly, who are out motoring. Morse traces Virginia through Molly and engages Maudlin Bates, one of the bullies of Paradise Row, to steal her for him. Bates reveals the fact and Morse shoots him. Lafe is accused of the crime. At the last minute, however, Virginia saves him and finds happiness with Theodore King.

Vitagraph

The Triumph of the Weak—(Five Reels)—May 13.—Featuring Alice Joyce.

Edith Merrill is a young widow with a little boy. Driven to desperation because of lack of food for the child, she steals a ring from a jeweler. The picture opens with the members of the jury taking their seats and rendering a verdict of guilty, whereupon the young woman is given five years in prison and the baby is placed in an orphanage. After three years Edith is paroled. She succeeds in locating Teddy, her little boy, and steals him from the asylum. In another city she is given employment by the superintendent of a department store, Jim Roberts, who falls in love with her. The two are married and, after months of happiness, Robert Jordan, a friend of Jim's, calls on him one day.

Jordan is a detective and recognizes Edith as an offender. To involve things still further, Mabel, also an ex-prisoner and friend of Edith's, is hiding from the police and seeks refuge in the latter's house, where she steals money from Jim. Jordan tells Jim that he is harboring a thief, and the two men attempt to trap Mabel by placing some money in a desk. In trying to steal the money Mabel is discovered by Edith, and a fight ensues between the two women. The men find Edith alone in the room with the desk broken open. Again they leave, to watch her, and Edith, helpless under Mabel's threat to expose her, is discovered by the two men stealing the money. The distracted girl reveals her past to her husband, whose heart softens, but Jordan insists upon arresting her. Jim promises to wait until she has served her term. On the way out the detective, touched by her courage, releases Edith, and proceeds to the Governor to get her a free pardon.

The Golden Goal—(Five Reels)—May 20.—Featuring Harry Morey.

In the Seamen's Mission where John Doran, a man of the seas, has come for a rest, he meets Beatrice Walton, a society girl seeking a change in her life by playing the organ in the Mission. Through Beatrice, Doran is given a job on her father's estate, and when she has awakened in him a strong affection for her, which she has no intention of reciprocating, she orders his dismissal. Doran works strenuously to amass a fortune, for he is determined to overcome the only barrier —money—which, to his mind, stands between him and Beatrice. With the assistance of Laura Brooks, a stenographer in the Talbot shipbuilding yards, where Doran is employed, he is advanced to the position of foreman. This is the first important step toward his goal, and he later becomes a leader in the workmen's union. Mr. Walton, failing in his attempt to get Talbot to sell his plant, schemes with his daughter to get Doran to call a strike. Seeing a chance to get a large sum of money thereby, Doran agrees, and just as he is about to call the strike he awakens to the perfidy of Beatrice and refuses to call the men out. The day is saved for Talbot, and Doran reclaims himself in the eyes of Laura, who has become much attracted to him.

Baree, Son of Kazan—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Nell Shipman.

The story introduces at the beginning Henry Carvel, owner of a newspaper in a Western city, and his son Jim (Alfred Whitman), who is its city editor. The father is shot and killed by a political boss following an expose of a big steal by the gang in power. An intimidated jury frees the boss of the murder charge, whereupon Jim Carvel kills his father's slayer in the courtroom and escapes. Jim, with a price on his head, flees the city and makes his way to a fur trading post in the Far Northwest, and in a brush with the Canadian Mounted Police another man, resembling Jim, is killed. Thus Jim is freed from the man-hunters.

The trading post is ruled by the factor, Bush McTaggart (Al Garcia), big, brutal and feared by all. McTaggart has tired of Indian women and is seeking a new victim in Marie (Nell Shipman), daughter of Pierre, a trapper, when Jim reaches Lac Bain, where he decides to trap the winter out and takes a cabin. Hostility that cannot be explained exists from the start between the factor and the American stranger, the only person at the post not afraid of the great hulk of a man.

Marie's only companion is the puppy, Baree, the wolf dog, which already fears and hates McTaggart for his brutalities. Jim senses the designs of the factor on the girl but keeps hands off, ready, however, at any time to accept an open challenge to battle.

McTaggart lets it be known he is going to a distant post and gets Marie's unsuspecting father to tend his store, thus leaving the girl alone and at his mercy in her cabin home. His confederate is a half-breed, De Bar, who owes Jim a debt of gratitude for saving his life from the rage of McTaggart. The breed's reward is to be a squaw McTaggart has discarded.

McTaggart goes to Pierre's cabin and attacks and is overpowering Marie when her father, fearful always for his daughter's safety, returns and is slain. Meanwhile, Marie, fleeing, is found by Jim and Baree, but she cannot explain and a crowd of Indians driven by McTaggart, who has told them Jim killed Pierre, seize and are about to kill him, when De Bar interferes and demands that the girl decide.

Fleeing across a lake broken by rifts of open water, is McTaggart carrying Marie. The men now realizing the truth, cannot overtake them, but Baree, the puppy, now a full grown dog, is the avenger. From behind, he leaps on the murderer and they are borne beneath the ice, while Jim draws the girl to safety and she realizes she has a happiness to live for that she had not realized before.

World

Vengeance—(Six Reels)—May 20.—Featuring Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton.

Andrew Cuddlestone is falsely accused of cheating at cards at his club for which he is obliged to leave England and seek refuge in obscurity in India. He marries a native woman and leaves to their baby son a heritage of hate and vengeance toward the real culprit, who happens to be his own brother.

The boy's mother takes him to the temple, where, in time, he becomes a priest. When he learns of his father's disgrace he journeys to England, determined to avenge his name. He is accompanied by a young girl who has been his constant companion since childhood and is devoted to him. Before leaving India she takes the precaution of stealing Buddha's one organ of sight, so that should fortune prove unkind she can raise money for living expenses for them both.

Once in England at the manor the priest decides to unmask the guilty man, which is not difficult, inasmuch as he has never lost his swindling propensities. At the same time he prevents the daughter of his father's best friend from losing her fortune, but he does not marry her, as was to be expected, inasmuch as Barbara Castleton was supposed to be the co-star. Instead he refuses to desert the girl who remained faithful to him for so many years, and who willingly incurred the displeasure of the Buddhists to keep him in pocket money.

Believe Me, Xantippe—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Wallace Reid.

George MacFarland, a man about town and wealthy, returns home one night to find that his apartment had been ransacked by burglars. He discusses the matter with two friends, Brown and Sole, and MacFarland bets $20,000 that he can commit a crime and elude the police for one year. In accordance with the wager, MacFarland forges the name of Brown to a check for $100 and this is to be deposited in bank the next day when search for the supposed forger is to be commenced.

The two men decide to win the wager by trickery, and they make up their mind to watch MacFarland when he leaves his house and to have him arrested at eleven o'clock, the hour agreed upon. They have him photographed by the aid of a flashlight, but when the lights are turned on again, lo! MacFarland had vanished, taking Brown's hat with him. The men take the check to the bank and MacFarland is a fugitive from justice. The police are provided with a description of him, and the country is flooded with his photographs, on which is MacFarland's favorite expression used at all times, "Believe Me, Xantippe."

MacFarland spends eleven months in retirement in a secluded farm house in the West. While hunting one day he meets Dolly, daughter of Sheriff Kamman, who asks him if he is hungry. When he replies, "Believe Me, Xantippe," she remembers the police circulars sent to her father, and she makes him her prisoner after covering him with a gun. MacFarland tells her the story of his wager and wires to his two friends in the East that he has been captured. Word is received that both friends had been lost at sea, but a few days later they turn up to claim their wager. It then develops that Dolly, who had made the capture, was not an officer of the law according to the terms of the wager and that MacFarland actually and technically had won his bet. Brown and Sole are forced to admit that the joke is on them and MacFarland makes Dolly his willing matrimonial prisoner for life.

Prunella—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Marguerite Clark.

Prunella, the child-heroine in this picture, is primly learning her lessons in the garden surrounded on the north, south and west by her queer spinster aunts, Prim, Privacy and Prude. A troupe of vagabond players come to town and the aunts desperately fear their innocent Prunella may chance to catch a glimpse of the merry tribe. As the sounds of music and revelry approach the aunts bid Prunella hasten to the house with them and they close all its shutters. Unfortunately for their plans, Privacy drops the key to the garden gate and sends Prunella to fetch it. In so doing, the child takes just one peep over the garden hedge, standing on her little stool on tip toes. The Pierrot swinging along the road at the head of the laughing mummers, sees her and gayly leaps the hedge to make violent love to the pretty child. That night he comes with a ladder and steals her away while the aunts slumber peacefully.

Margery Wilson and Darrell Foss in the Triangle play, "Old Loves for New."

The scene shifts back to the old garden three years later on a moonlight night just like the one when Pierrot has stolen Prunella away. There is only one of the aunts there now and she is leaving, for she has sold the house to a rich gentleman, a stranger, and only awaits his coming to give up the keys. Her surprise when she discovers that it is Pierrot himself, returned saddened and wiser to await Prunella's return to her old home, is as great as that of the audience when Prunella too comes back to the old garden, and "all's well that ends well."

His Own Home Town—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Charles Ray.

The scenes are laid in a small city, which is dominated by a political boss and several henchman, including a hypocritical churchman, the father of Jimmy Duncan, which latter role is portrayed by Mr. Ray. Despairing of realizing his ambition in his home town, Jimmy quits it to make his fortune elsewhere. He returns after a year or two upon the brakebeam of a train and quietly enters his paternal home, where he is met by his father and accorded a decidedly frigid reception, whereupon he leaves his parents' home forever. In protecting a man from robbery at the hands of gamblers, he is involved in a fight which provokes a police raid and results in his arrest and exile from the city. He achieves fame as a palywright, returning home two years later to take possession of a newspaper which had been bequeathed to him by the father of the girl he loves. With this newspaper he runs his political enemies to earth, puts a period to their grafting regime and rehabilitates the community. In this work he is ably supported by Carol Landis, whom he loves and who later becomes his bride.

Pathe

The Dagger Woman—(Five Reels)—Russian Art Film—May 12.—Featuring Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska.

Savonsky, a celebrated painter, is sought to assist in the staging of a series of tableaus, and meets Olga Kartoff, a beautiful young society woman. He is engaged in painting a masterpiece, but is delayed by the need of a suitable model; and, seeing in Olga, the form he requires, he at length induces her to pose for him, only, however, after first winning her love. The painting and the love affair progress nicely until, in the absorption of his work and the eternal egoism of the creative brain, the heart interest languishes. This leads to a final quarrel, which results, at the end, in her killing him.

The Mysterious Client—(Five Reels)—May 19.—Featuring Irene Castle, supported by Milton Sills, Warner Oland and Caesar Gravina. Fred Wright directed.

Harry Nelson, a young attorney, waits vainly for clients. Boris Norjunov offers him money if he will perform an unethical legal service for him. Harry refuses. Suddenly, Jeanne Darcy dashes into the office and begs Harry to protect her until she can put an envelope into a safety deposit box. The appeal moves Harry to accept, but he is attacked in the street and the envelope stolen. Jeanne begs Harry to come to her aid that evening, and he goes with her to a house where he is attacked by Boris, who threatens to harm him if he will not perform the shady legal work for him. Harry refuses and is locked in a room, and later in a mirror sees Jeanne in the arms of Boris. Jeanne sends Harry away with no explanations. Several weeks pass before he receives a summons from her to meet her in a deserted house where Boris has threatened to murder Miss Lonsdale, a kidnaped heiress. Harry goes to the rescue, sees Jeanne fire a shot at the heiress who apparently falls dead, just as the police arrive. Harry takes the blame to save Jeanne, but at that moment everyone bursts out laughing, and it develops that all this mystery was a plot to enable Jeanne, the copper king's daughter, to find a chivalrous husband, who wasn't after her money.

Triangle

Wolves of the Border—(Five Reels)—May 12.—Featuring Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick. The heroine, Ruth Warner, loves George Merritt in spite of the opposition of her father. Merritt is accused of stealing cattle. A Mexican bandit is the villain in the story, and just how it is discovered that he is the real cattle thief and after plenty of gun play and excitement that Merritt is a model young man is all worked out satisfactorily.

Who Is to Blame?—(Five Reels)—May 19.—Featuring Jack Livingston.

The first two reels depict the experiences of Grant Barton, an American lawyer, while visiting Japan. He becomes interested in Taro San, a ricksha coolie, and brings the boy to America.

Then the story shifts to America, where Barton meets and marries Marion Craig. Marion is called west by the illness of her mother. Her plan to surprise Barton by her unexpected return proves embarrassing to both. She learns that in his loneliness during her absence he has been an easy victim for the wiles of Tonia Marsh. Faithful Taro discovers the consequent estrangement of his master and Marion and carries to success a plan which presents Tonia to Barton in her true character and reconciles the young couple. The plan sacrifices his own honor, however, and he returns to Japan without confessing the plot.

Universal Special

The Bride's Awakening—(Five Reels)—May 26.—Featuring Mae Murray.

Mrs. Bennett, fearing that Richard Earle, who is only slightly in love with her, will cast her aside, asserts that if he leaves her she will kill him and then herself. Earle, who really has no intention of making her his wife, marries Elaine Bronson, but keeps it a secret. Shortly after the wedding Earle begins to neglect her, and at a party she is insulted by one of his drunken friends. Jimmy Newton, a guest, believing that she is only Earle's ward, protects her, but when he shows affection for her Earle's jealousy is aroused. Mrs. Bennett is subsequently discarded by her husband, and going to Earle's house hears him tell Newton of his marriage to Elaine. When Newton has left Earle strikes Elaine, who picks up a revolver. It falls behind the curtain where Mrs. Bennett is hiding, and as Earle strikes Elaine again Mrs. Bennett fires at him. As he falls a second shot proclaims the complete fulfillment of Mrs. Bennett's threat.

Mutual

Her Rustic Romeo—(One Reel)—May 28.—Strand—Starring Billie Rhodes.

Daisy is a musical comedy star. Her manager decides to put her in a rural drama, and sends her to a farm to study types and acquire the rube dialect. Down on the farm Hiram, the hired man, is in love with Tildy, the farmer's daughter. A handsome new hired man flirts with Daisy, makes a hit with Tildy, and Hiram is ditched. He tells his troubles to Daisy, who takes a hand in the game. She coaches Tildy to make violent love to the new hired man, who, tired of the game, spurns her. Daisy arranges that Pa, Ma and Hiram witness the hired man's perfidy. The hired man makes a sudden departure, Tildy and Hiram are reconciled, while Daisy returns to start rehearsals for the drama.

When the leading man of the company appears he turns out to be the hired man, who had also gone to the country for "atmosphere." He gets a shock when he discovers that Daisy is the leading lady. Tildy's pa arrives and starts to clean up with the actor-hired-man, saying he has broken Tildy's heart. Hiram and Tildy, just married, come on the scene, and disaster is averted. Both Daisy and the leading man had got enough "atmosphere" to put the play across, and rehearsals begin.

Billie Rhodes in the new Strand comedy, "Her Rustic Romeo."

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

FELIX MALITZ, president of the American Correspondent Film Company, and Gustave Engler, an employe of the concern, both Germans, are now in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, having been sentenced despite tears and pleadings. Judge Martin T. Manton, in the United States District Court in Brooklyn, imposed the sentence. Malitz's term is for two years and in addition he must pay a fine of $5,000. Engler was sentenced to serve eighteen months.

It was on a charge of having conspired to smuggle rubber into Germany and of having conducted a campaign of pro-German propaganda by attempting to show that the devastation in Belgium had not been as great as was charged, that the two were convicted.

"Your Honor, I am not guilty," Malitz sobbed.

"You are one of those persons who are called counterfeit citizens," replied Judge Manton. "You deserve no consideration at the hands of this court and you will get none."

"You are not quite so much to blame as the other defendant, having been an employe of the company," said Judge Manton to Engler. "So I will sentence you to serve eighteen months."

It was now Engler's turn to burst out crying, and he did so.

Rudolph C. Kopp, leader of the orchestra at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles, was arrested last week charged with being an unregistered alien enemy. Sid Grauman, owner of the house, said he had noticed that Kopp greeted his suggestions to play patriotic airs in a rather indifferent manner, and that also he had hesitated when requested to join the theatre employes in buying Liberty bonds. Kopp is a member of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra and has been a resident of that city for several years. The body of musicians he directed at Grauman's numbered forty and is considered one of the best theatre orchestras in the country. Mr. Grauman will question closely every member of his musical staff and promises that any with pro-German tendencies will be dismissed.

Russell Bassett, known internationally as "The Grand Old Man of the Screen," is dead from heart disease. The end came at his home in New York. In his sixty-four years on the stage and before the camera he had been the friend and associate of practically every big star from the days of Joseph Jefferson to those of Mary Pickford. During the past ten years he had been appearing before the camera chiefly in Paramount and Artcraft pictures, supporting practically every Eastern star of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, including Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, Pauline Frederick, Lina Cavalieri and Jack Barrymore. His last screen work was an important characterization in the new Madame Cavalieri picture, "Love's Conquest." He was 72 years old.

The first appeal to the courts from a decision of the Maryland Board of Censors will be heard in the Baltimore city court in the new May term. The appellant is Lewis J. Selznick, whose picture, "War Brides," formerly exhibited in Baltimore, is now under the ban of the board.

Before the break between this country and Germany "War Brides" was approved because the censors felt that, although it gave an admittedly exaggerated and depressing coloring to the experience of the soldier in actual warfare, it was then entirely harmless, at least to this country. But they think that the exhibition of the picture at the present time would have an absolutely unjustifiable deterrent effect upon recruiting, besides very much offending the present ardent war spirit of the people.

The Murray Hill Theatre, located at Broadway and Fourteenth street, Flushing, L. I., has been leased to Charles Krummeck of Manhattan through Walter Eagan.

The theatre has been entirely redecorated from pit to dome and will play a policy of feature pictures booked through the exchanges of Paramount, Artcraft, Metro and Bluebird. The resident manager will be Charles Riffle.

In addition to managing the Murray Hill Theatre, Mr. Krummeck will still conduct the Krummeck studio in the Savoy Theatre building on West Forty-third street, Manhattan, where he has established an up-to-date "sign painting" shop, catering to the mercantile and theatrical profession.

Friends and acquaintances will learn with regret of the death at Denver on May 12 of Abraham I. Shapiro, until recently Goldwyn's branch manager at Detroit. Mr. Shapiro resigned about two months ago to enter the army, but the doctors in the service rejected him on the grounds of poor health. After spending several weeks in New York, where his family lives, Mr. Shapiro went to Denver to enter a sanitarium. He was met at the station by W. S. Rand, manager of Goldwyn's Denver branch, but was so ill that he collapsed before he could be taken to the hospital. He never rallied and the end came soon. His body was brought to New York by a sister.

Clarence G. Badger, who is directing Mabel Normand at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, is a big booster for California roads, and even more so now that he has had some sad experiences on the thoroughfares in the East. Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Badger took a party of friends out for a day's outing, and while driving around Lake Placid, New York, they stopped at an inn for a bite to eat. On preparing to continue their journey, Mr. Badger discovered that the gears would not mesh. Investigation showed that the rear right wheel was all but off the axle, and that a few more revolutions would have caused the wheel to free itself from the machine entirely. After a lot of tedious work and much soiling of clothes Badger was able to get the car to a garage amid much longing for Sunny California.

A campaign to prevent careless exhibitors from holding over films has been started by the Goldwyn Minneapolis exchange. Frequent reports from exhibitors that prints have not arrived on the date set for screening, necessitating a substitution or worse, a dark house, have roused R. D. Fox, the manager, to action.

A registered letter is to be sent with every film shipment, giving the exhibitor full instructions where to send the print immediately after he is through with it. If the print does not arirve at the place designated at the specified time, the exhibitor who had it will be billed for an extra day.

Twelve U. S. marines, with an officer and a trumpeter, are helping to put over "The Unbeliever" in the state of Washington, and incidentally are increasing recruits. Before the picture begins a civilian makes a speech, introducing the marines. Just as he leaves the stage the trumpet sounds and the men begin firing blank cartridges. Then the curtain is raised and the picture opens. During the recent showing of "The Unbeliever" at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, this stunt brought great crowds to the show, the fact of the marines' appearance having been advertised in the daily papers.

Gloria Hope is bound to have a menagerie at her home in Hollywood yet. Every few days finds some new addition to her family of pets. Last week at the Griffith studios, where Gloria is working in the feature to be produced by D. W. Griffith for the Artcraft program, she saw a stray dog hanging about the sets, which took a great fancy to her. She fed it with the best that the company's fine cafeteria offered, and when she found out that the canine was homeless the temptation was too much, and she took the dog home with her, putting him among her large collection of dogs, cats, rabbits, birds, etc., and now he is one of the many who greet her when she returns from the studio.

Lloyd V. Hamilton, featured comedian with William Fox's Sunshine Comedies, spent the week end at San Diego, visiting the soldiers and sailors who are stationed there. "Ham" ran into many of his old studio acquaintances who have joined the colors and entertained in a royal manner. The chief purpose of his visit was to find out how he could aid the amusement program that the boys at the camps have every once in a while. He received several pointers. "Ham" is planning to arrange a big vaudeville show for them in the near future.

Bessie Barriscale is due to arrive back in Sunny California from New York on Saturday, and arrangements have been made whereby everything will be in readiness for her to start work Monday at the Paralta studios on her latest feature, "The Rainbow," which her husband, Howard Hickman, will direct. Hickman has been playing in Miss Barriscale's Paralta features, and has been associated with her in all her productions since the early Ince days, so if anyone should understand her work, he should.

One of the biggest contracts ever entered into by the Bee-Hive Exchange of New York on Billy West King Bee Comedies was made the other day by Julius Singer and the Crescent Theatre, Brooklyn. Starting on May 20, the Crescent Theatre plays for eighty-four consecutive days all of the Billy West comedies (one a week), starting with "The Handy Man." The Brevoort Theatre, Brooklyn, a brand new house seating 2,200, has contracted for all Billy West King-Bee Comedies two days each, starting with "The Handy Man."

Alfred Whitman was a guest at the exhibitors' luncheon given to the Vitagraph players in Los Angeles last week, and took a great deal of interest in all the talks made by the exhibitors regarding conditions existing in the photoplay theatres throughout the United States. Al likes to keep in touch with the exhibitors and film fans and never loses an opportunity of hearing how things are coming along, and especially about the class of pictures that are most popular with the film fans.

William Garwood, better known to his many friends in the profession as "Billy," has decided to come back to the films again, and arrived in Los Angeles this week from his ranch at Chowchilla, California, where he has been for the last seven months. Garwood has his ranch coming along very nicely now, so decided that he could get away long enough to do some more features. He intends to return to his ranch between pictures, so will be able to see that everything is carried on there as he wants it.

Henry King has been working hard during the past week on the third William Russell production for the Mutual program, entitled "Hobbs in a Hurry." King generally manages to get away every Tuesday evening to go to Vernon to witness the weekly boxing bouts held there, but last week he was missing from the ringside due to some night scenes he had to work on at location. It is seldom that King misses the Tuesday night encounters and he is always missed when not seen in his usual ringside seat.

In the aim to give Monroe Salisbury a new characterization to do in each one of his Bluebird productions, Universal has been scouring the scenario field in hope of finding some real good stories with a new type for Salisbury to portray. Henry Christeen Warnack, the dramatic critic and author of "The Honor System," as well as many other successful photoplays, has been engaged to write feature stories for Salisbury out of the ordinary run, so the fans can look forward to seeing the Bluebird star in some more highly interesting films.

L. A. Todd, formerly manager of the Seattle General exchange, has been engaged by John Danz to help him manage his Colonial and High Class theatres in Seattle. Mr. Todd is also cooperating with Mr. Danz on the plans for a new theatre which will be opened about the middle of July in the lower part of the down town district. This house will seat about 450 and will be the finest picture theatre in that vicinity. It is to be called the Star.

John Fairbanks, business manager of his brother's film company, appears in a scene of "Say, Young Fellow." It was all done in the spirit of fun, prompted by Douglas, who after witnessing the projection of this same scene remarked that he may be soon in the market for a new manager, because his brother is an excellent screen type. But the latter said: "One actor in the family will keep me in my same capacity."

Tom North, one of the best known and most popular men in the Pathe organization, and editor of the company's house organ, the Pathe Sun, has been appointed division manager with jurisdiction extending over the entire eastrn district. North's appointment follows closely on those of Ralph O. Proctor for the middle western and W. S. Wessling for the southern districts to work under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby.

Will M. Ritchey, chief of the scenario staff for the American Film Company, and considered to be one of the best authorities on photoplay writing, paid Los Angeles a visit last week with Mrs. Ritchey, motoring down from his home in Santa Barbara. Ritchey has not been able to get away from his work for several months and he enjoyed every minute of his trip.

Margery Wilson, titian-haired Triangle beauty, is back at the Culver City studio after a severe illness.

A Sample of Film Patriotism

During the recent Liberty Loan drive, Nell Shipman called a small boy out of an audience which she was addressing and presented him with a $100 bond by way of "starting things."

"Just figure, this would buy me four new hats," informed the Vitagraph star, directing the small boy in the signing of his name to the certificate.

A man in the audience, catching Nell's self-sacrificing spirit, spoke up manfully:

"Just for that, I will give you $25 for a new hat."

The crowd cheered. Nell accepted the $25 and dispatched a girl on a mysterious message. Within fifteen minutes the girl was back carrying a hat box. She and the box fought their way through the crowd to the platform, where she handed the box to Miss Shipman.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, here is the new hat one of you was so kind to buy for me. How much am I bid for it?"

And the hat sold for $100, which sum was then donated to the bond cause by the star.

Samuel Carver Praises Film

"'The Planter' was certainly a knockout," writes Samuel Carver, of the Family Theatre, Buffalo, to Mutual. "The crowd enjoyed it immensely. In fact, it is one of the best productions I've seen and my house took it with a vim. I played to a capacity house on it Sunday and had the mob jammed down the aisles during the evening. I'm seriously considering rebooking it for a return trip."

Mr. Carter expresses the consensus of opinion of exhibitors who have shown "The Planter." Tyrone Power never did more forceful acting on the stage than he has done in this big story of the tropics. Bookings on "The Planter" grow apace and repeat showings are the rule.

Reservoir Built at Studio

A large reservoir, surrounded by cliffs, has been built on the Vitagraph lot at Hollywood for Larry Semon's Big V Comedy Company. Horses and men will go over the top of the cliffs and a bridge built from one side of the reservoir to the other furnishes additional cause for thrills.

J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill., treasurer, and Sidney Smith, Chicago, Ill., secretary.

The executive committee consists of: Charles J. Law, Pana; Dee Robinson, Peoria; Paul Sittner, Chicago; Robert R. Levy, Chicago; Henry Von Meeteren, Chicago; W. D. Burford, Aurora, and E. Kunz, Springfield.

The delegates are: W. W. Watts, Fred W. Hartmann, Sam Katz, I. E. Berkson, G. M. Luttrell, W. E. Heaney, R. R. Levy, Walter Johnson, P. G. Schaefer, Ludwig Schindler, Alfred Hamburger, Wm. J. Sweeney, John Frundt, Sidney Smith and Harry C. Miller.

The alternates are: Dee Robinson, William Cadoret, George D. Hopkinson, L. Siegel, W. D. Burford, Rocco Navigato, William Rohe, Joseph Trinz, Paul Sittner, Charles Abrams, G. M. Laing, R. L. Jacoby, L. Zahler, Andrew Karzas and Dr. Atkinson.

There are only two changes in the new officers. Mr. Sweeney succeeds W. W. Watts of Springfield as treasurer, and Mr. Von Meeteren succeeds Charles G. Stuart of Chicago as a member of the executive committee.

HARRY BERMAN, general manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., was in the city last week, conferring with Sydney Goldman of the local Jewel office. He was very much pleased with the showing Mr. Goldman had made during the short time he has been in charge. Mr. Berman is responsible for the new Jewel policy of co-operating with theatres in which definite price is put on each picture and a certain amount given by the company itself for advertising.

For instance, in cities of from 6,000 to 10,000 population where the six Jewel features are first run, the entire group may be booked for a one-day run at $120, with $20 allowed for advertising. In suburban theatres near cities where the pictures have been shown, the pictures are booked at $100, $25 allowed for advertising. A fixed schedule has been worked out for all classes of cities and towns.

Sig Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream Theatre, has arranged to hold over "The Reason Why," Clara Kimball Young's latest Select Picture, for a second week. "My business on this feature last week was so satisfactory," said he in a letter of appreciation to the Select offices, "that it would have been a shame not to have continued it, especially since this week's business so far is even better than last week—and were it not for the fact that I have another Select Picture booked for next week, I would not hesitate to continue 'The Reason Why' for the third consecutive week."

"The Bluebird" brought its message of happiness to an unusually appreciative audience one day during the last week of its run at Orchestra Hall. W. L. Hill of the Famous Players-Lasky office, who is managing the theatre, had as his guests the members of an old people's home and an orphan asylum. The directors of the institutions arranged to bring the guests to the theatres in automobiles and a complete program was offered them. Maeterlinck's beautiful allegory being the feature. It was an occasion which will long be remembered by the delighted guests.

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis has joined the ranks of stars in filmdom. He has secretly signed up with Uncle Sam for an educational film. His courtroom in the Federal building was transformed into a studio, and he himself played a role in the fifth reel of a six-reel film being made in story form under the direction of the United States bureau of public information. It is to be called "The Immigrant," and is the first of a series of propaganda pictures which will be used in educating those of foreign birth who lack appreciation of being allowed residence here.

The Central Film office has received word that "My Four Years in Germany" played to capacity business for one week at the Terre Haute Opera House. It was booked for seven days at the Oliver Theatre, South Bend, Indiana, and drew such unusual business that its run was lengthened by three days. Big business was reported also from the Majestic, Logansport, Illinois, for three days. The picture then was brought back and played an additional three days to even larger box-office receipts.

The Pathe series of twelve single-reel subjects, "Britain's Bulwork," is beginning its run in a large number of Chicago theatres, including the Ascher Brothers and Lubliner and Trinz houses. The series is unusually interesting and timely. The opening installment shows the work of women in the munitions plants. Another reel shows German captives at work. The single reel special, showing the tanks in action, is vivid and interesting.

William Weiss, salesman for the Central Film Company, has returned from a four weeks' trip throughout southern Illinois in the interest of "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany," and the Chaplin pictures. Among the theatre men he visited were Joseph Erber, of Erber's Theatre, East St. Louis, Nate Erber, Lincoln Square, Decatur, and W. W. Watts, Gayety Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

Harry Corbett, manager of the Harper Theatre, put his house into spring costume in record time. Patrons went home a recent evening leaving the theater just as they had seen it many times before. When they came back next day they found a beautifully and artistically draped stage, an augmented orchestra and lighting effects that added greatly to the beauty of the house.

The Unity Photoplays Company have recently added to their list of features the following: Five Bessie Barriscale reissues; thirty two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies; twenty-three single-reel Chaplins; the Ivan plays, "Sins of Ambition," "Married in Name Only," and "Life or Honor"; the Jane Grey feature, "The Guilty Wife." Manager Mintz reports constantly increasing business.

The Fox feature, "Cleopatra," featuring Theda Bara, for a long time held up by the local censor board, has at last been passed and opens at the Colonial Theatre, May 27. Two performances a day will be given at regular theatre prices. An elaborate presentation is planned. A twenty-five or thirty-piece orchestra will accompany the play.

The United States Government has taken over Orchestra Hall for two weeks, beginning May 20, and is showing "Pershing's Crusaders," the first of the United States official war pictures. At the end of its run, Famous Players-Lasky will again take charge of the house. "Prunella," starring Marguerite Clark, will be the next attraction.

Manager Harry Weiss of the Central Film Company reports that bookings on "My Four Years in Germany" are so heavy that the force is working day and night. The Lincoln Square Theatre at Decatur broke the house record with it on a four-day house. It played to capacity business in the Fisher Theatre, Danville, Illinois.

T. W. Chatburn, new manager of the Chicago Vitagraph exchange.

Among the Select workers who have recently joined the colors are Earl Kerr of the office force in the Chicago branch and M. Monsky, a road salesman from the same branch. Although he had been affiliated with Select only a short time, Mr. Monsky had earned a high place for himself in the organization through his efficiency.

In a recent sales contest in the Universal exchange, twenty-five dollars was offered to the man who sold the most Bluebirds one week and fifteen dollars to the one selling the most Alice Howell comedies contracts. George Levine did not think one sufficient, so he proceeded to win them both.

"Revelation," the Nazimova-Metro feature, which has finished a very successful week at the Fine Arts Theatre, has been booked for five days at the Central Park, where it will be given an elaborate presentation, for four days at the new Woodlawn Theatre, and for runs at all the Ascher Brothers and Lubliner and Trinz houses.

The Rothacker Film Company is pleased with the favorable comments newspaper critics gave the photography and tinting in "Tarzan of the Tpes," recently shown at the Colonial Theatre. The finishing of the film was done at the Rothacker plant.

Many Chicago theatres have already received their "Certificates of Honor," which are to be presented to all theatres accommodating the four-minute men. The managers usually have these certificates framed and hang them proudly in the lobby.

A rehearsal of "Over the Top," the Vitagraph feature which begins its Chicago run at the Auditorium Theatre, May 26, will be given for the critics of the daily and trade papers Friday morning, May 24, at 10 o'clock.

The Chicago showing of the latest Fox Standard film, "The Caillaux Case," has been postponed. William Jenner, manager of the Fox exchange, states that it is a sensational picture and will be given a fitting first run.

"The Million Dollar Dollies," starring the Dolly Sisters, and the five-reel Sidney Drew feature, "Pay Day," form the program this week at the Playhouse.

"Mothers of Liberty," a patriotic feature handled by Griever and Herz, opened May 19 for a week's run at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Michigan avenue.

A. C. Wycoff, general auditor of the Vitagraph Company, was in the city last week in conference with T. W. Chatburn, manager of the local exchange.

The Star Sign Service, specialists in theatrical work, wish it announced to their many exhibitor customers that they are now located in more roomy quarters at 110 South Wabash avenue.

Harold Bolster, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures, stopped off in Chicago last week on a trip which includes the St. Louis and Minneapolis Goldwyn exchanges.

H. D. Charness, Central Film salesman, has left for a trip through Indiana and expects to be gone two weeks.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Central Film Company, leaves May 27 for a two weeks' motor trip through Illinois.

H. J. Bayley, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, reports unusually heavy bookings on the Capitol comedies, starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons.

Lewis J. Selznick arrived in Chicago, Monday, May 20, for a three days' stay. Mr. Selznick is on a tour of the West.

Sam Norville, Vitagraph salesman, was painfully injured in an automobile accident, but expects to be out in a few days.

A. L. Warner of the First National Exhibitors' office in New York arrived in Chicago, May 19, for a short stay.

J. B. Riley, formerly with Triangle, has been added to the Metro sales forces.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

The Films That Made Charlie Chaplin Famous

The Moving Picture Stories magazine says:

"There are many who believe that Charlie Chaplin did his greatest and best work in his earlier pictures. This undoubtedly accounts for the success of the famous Essanay-Chaplin comedies. They are as popular today as they were two years ago."

W. W. Irwin,
Vitagraph, New York

Congratulations on Empey in "Over the Top" and thanks for the wonderful co-operation of yourself and entire Philadelphia staff in making the engagement at the Academy of Music such a brilliant success. Sorry we could not get a second week at that theatre but previous rentals interfered. Have booked the picture in every theatre in which I am interested and expect a repetition of the record-breaking business which put "Over the Top" over the top of any picture that has ever played the Academy.

Volume XIX CHICAGO, JUNE 8, 1918 Number 23

Where Is the Man?

WE CALL upon the motion picture industry today for leadership!

We intend to insist upon it because the splendid business structure now builded will crumble and fall before its enemies unless we can have a united business interest and a larger sense of our personal responsibility.

THERE is approaching an election which is to prove to the motion picture business whether the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is fit to live, or whether it is a decadent doddard and a mistake that has outlived its usefulness.

William A. Brady, who has been much in the public eye since he was made president, has positively declined to run again for that office.

While we appreciate Mr. Brady and his enthusiasms we say in all friendliness to him, that we regard this as the best thing that could happen, for Mr. Brady has so centralized and focussed the calcium that the world knew NOTHING of the motion picture industry and EVERYTHING of Mr. Brady.

We shall not blame Brady nor the Almighty who created him, but these are the plain unvarnished facts.

WITH the most interesting ego in the field out of the picture, there confronts us the problem of finding for our industry the best mind, the most capable and the squarest man that we can draft into our service.

Who is that man?

What must be his qualifications?

* * *

FIRST of all he must know in the broadest way the problems of the industry.

He must be an implacable enemy of motion picture censorship.

He must be a man who has leadership and one who has demonstrated that leadership by a record of performance in our industry.

He must be fair and proved fair to the exhibitor and to the manufacturer or distributor—he must have vision and the ability to meet the greatest of our statesmen and influence them by his personality and argument.

GREATEST of all he must be a man recognized in the industry as one of brains, of talents, of real equipment—and he must have the common touch which permits him to understand the high, the middle and the low.

It is, perhaps, best if he be neither manufacturer, distributor nor exhibitor, but a man who is capable of understanding all three, of representing all three and of harmonizing as far as human possibilities will permit all of the factions in our great business.

WHERE is this man?
Who shall produce him?
Will it be possible to find him?
We have no candidate to offer.

We have our ideas and perhaps our leanings, but we want to have this matter handled in the squarest, fairest and most able manner.

WE CALL on the industry, therefore, to advise us and through us the industry of their pick and choosing.

We want this thing done in the open, in the light of day and not in the secret and suspected conference.

WHO is big enough to come forward and name the man?
Who will set aside his personal business choice and make an industry choice?

It is agreed that we need the National Association or its counterpart—but who is to lead it and express our personal opinion and carry out our ideas to our betterment?

GENTLEMEN of the industry, you have in front of you the question—come forward frankly with the answer—
WHO IS THE MAN?

Convention, Yes! Exposition, No!

AS THE entirely independent trade paper of the motion picture industry, MOTOGRAPHY feels in duty bound to ask a few frank questions regarding the Boston party scheduled for July. This is a season of great national stress, a time when every dollar is needed in patriotic effort and for the payment of taxes levied for the support of our part in the great war. We, therefore, are moved to ask:

Why hold a motion picture exposition at this time when neither the manufacturer, the distributor nor the exhibitor can afford the expense?

A convention of exhibitors? Yes, by all means—but why an exposition with the usual macing of the manufacturer out of money for space he doesn't want and doesn't profit by?

The only reason we can find for the holding of a motion picture exposition this year is to justify the job of Frederick H. Elliott, the secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and to guarantee the continuance in power of Lee A. Ochs of the Exhibitors' League.

As we understand Mr. Ochs is not a candidate for reelection, we are moved to another question—of what real practical use is Elliott to the industry now or in the future?

In the calm honesty of reflective thought—it occurs to us that the exposition should be dispensed with until after the war. If we are wrong—let our readers tell us and we shall be glad to record their opinions for the benefit of all the industry.

Pictures a War Time Essential

THERE is more than one side to the "essentiality" of picture production during war time. A single producer has just sent to the United States Government his first remittance for ten weeks' footage tax—and the check called for more than forty-five thousand dollars.

With keen enterprise the Universal company is following up its big payment with a request to the government officials for careful consideration of its significance. It is pointed out that any curtailment of the production for which there is so insistent a demand would at once result in a proportionate curtailment of tax revenue from a source which is demonstrated by this first remittance to be of immense potency.

The occasion for this defense of the producing industry arises, the company says, out of a rumor that government investigators are studying picture making from the point of view that it might be possible to operate all existing theatres with films already produced. The author of such a theory might argue that a year's cessation of producing would not work a vital hardship upon the exhibitors.

In this connection the company puts forward some interesting figures. Because there are some fourteen thousand theatres those only superficially informed might assume that figure as the possible field of presentation for each film.

The Universal's argument is that about eight thousand theatres form the hundred per cent goal, or saturation point, for the ideally distributed picture. The other six thousand houses, more or less, are competitors of some of these eight thousand, and therefore commercially ineligible for the same pictures. These are interesting figures, and worth some study.

As for rumors of picture curtailment, stirred up by recent activities of the government in filling its classifications of "non-essential" industries, we are confident that the alarmists will find little to work upon in this field. It is only the idle pleasure seeker, with eyes focussed upon the play side of his entertainment who questions the essentiality of motion pictures. Thinking men and women are wholly agreed that the picture in war time, far from being a non-essential, is more important than at any other time. The administration itself has expressed that very thought.

Major Funkhouser Suspended

CHICAGO PICTURE WORLD SEES RAPID ACTION

MAJOR M. L. C. FUNKHOUSER, second deputy superintendent of police and censor of motion pictures in Chicago, has been suspended by order of Acting Chief of Police Alcock, with the sanction of Mayor Thompson. Failure to obey orders is the charge.

Although there has been strong opposition to the major, his suspension came as a surprise. Mayor Thompson, shortly after his election, tried to remove him from office, but the major holds his position under the civil service law and cannot be summarily deposed.

The suspension order was issued, the acting chief said, because there were so many complaints that Funkhouser had not properly conducted the affairs of his division. No details were given.

Major's Aids Also Suspended

Two of the major's aids were also suspended. William H. Luthardt, secretary to the police chief, has been named acting second deputy.

The belief that the administration is carrying out a promise to get rid of the major has caused the reform forces to come strongly to Funkhouser's aid. They fear that the various changes which have taken place in the police department point to the intention of the administration to make Chicago a wide-open town.

The suspension of Major Funkhouser further complicates the censorship problem in Chicago. It comes at the time the Maypole ordinance, taking this power out of the hands of the second deputy superintendent of police, is before the city council.

The Maypole ordinance, as has been stated before, provides for the placing of the censorship powers in a board of twelve. Indications have been that the city council would pass this.

Maypole Ordinance Approved

The Maypole ordinance was passed by the city council committee on judiciary by a vote of eleven for and five against. The majority of the council members seem to favor it, in spite of the opposition many reform leaders have brought against taking the power from Major Funkhouser. The newspapers, too, favor the ordinance in strong editorials, decrying one-man censorship.

The suspension of Major Funkhouser has had the immediate result of arousing sentiment among the church and reform leaders in his behalf and the censorship question has become confused with the question of suppressing vice.

While the ordinance merely took the censorship power from the hands of one man and put it under the consideration of a jury of twelve, the reform leaders seem to have the idea that it will weaken the power of suppressing vicious pictures.

Picture Men Back Ordinance

Clarence Darrow and the picture interests are working for the proposed ordinance. Alderman Maypole, who introduced it, states that he is not in league with the picture men and is opposed to one-man censorship only on the ground that it is not fair.

At the meeting of the city council held Monday, May 27, Acting Chief of Police Alcock sent word that he would like to have it defer action on the Maypole ordinance until he has had time to look into it.

At this meeting, Alderman McCormick opened a defense of Funkhouser's censorship and asked questions concerning the attack upon the major. He did not refer to the suspension, but held to the action of the judiciary committee in recommending the Maypole ordinance. He submitted a minority report.

Police Chief Silent

When questioned about the suspension of Funkhouser, Acting Chief Alcock merely stated that it was for failure to carry out orders. Definite charges against the second deputy superintendent will be brought later, when an attempt will be made to show that his rulings were unfair.

In the meantime, the heads of a number of women's clubs, church and school societies are sending out protests against the suspension of the major and also against the effort to deprive him of his censorial powers over pictures.

The opinion of the aldermen who favor the Maypole ordinance, however, is that the censor board will be a safer guide to proper pictures than Major Funkhouser. They state that the charge that vicious pictures will be given a permit under the new ruling is false.

Maypole Assails Funkhouser Men

Alderman Maypole charged friends of the major with seeking to defeat the ordinance through misrepresentation.

Alderman Kaindl said:

"I favor the ordinance because it creates a board which will have power to act as well as plan and will remove dissension caused by one-man censorship."

Alderman Hrubec disputed the arguments that the present ordinance assures protection and prevents obnoxious pictures being shown children.

Madge Kennedy asks herself something in her latest Goldwyn picture, "The Fair Pretender," and seeks the answer in the mirror.

Love Me, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—Excellent. Dorothy Dalton is a strong star in this city.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

The Honor of His House, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—Picture very good. The star is popular here. Big crowd.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Mile a Minute Kendall, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—An excellent picture to fairly good business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The House of Silence, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—Not Reid's kind of a play. Business average.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Playing the Game, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—One of Ray's best yet. Fair business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Moonshine, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—One of Fatty's best comedies. One continuous laugh. Business good.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Lost in Transit, with George Beban (Paramount)—A good picture, and Beban, as usual, does fine work.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Countess Charming, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—This is the first appearance here of Eltinge, but he certainly made a hit. Picture very good.—A. Giacoma, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

The Price Mark, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—A good picture, but it failed to draw the crowd.—A Giacoma, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

The Eternal Temptress, with Lina Cavalieri (Paramount)—Star and settings wonderful, but the story is not strong enough.—A. Giacoma, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—Fair.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—A light, pleasing picture which helps to break the monotony of so many blood and thunder plays we have been getting lately.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

That Night, with Charles Murray (Sennett-Paramount)—My people were prepared to laugh at this, but could not. My first Sennett-Paramount and if the rest are like this, I shall not be pleased.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Nan of Music Mountain, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—Too many exterior scenes and too stretched out. No drawing power at all.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Flare-Up Sal, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—A very good western story. Not as good as some of Dorothy Dalton's other pictures, but O. K.

Pathe

Innocent, with Fannie Ward (Pathe)—A very good picture, but Miss Ward is not popular here.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Select

The House of Glass, with C. K. Young (Select)—Drew fairly well. Pleased all. A very good production.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

By Right of Purchase, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—Very interesting and well produced, but somehow it does not seem to bring them in as it should.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Triangle

Chicken Casey, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—Good acting on the star's part, but the story isn't much.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Shoes That Danced, with Pauline Starke (Triangle)—Fair.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

The Gun Woman, with Texas Guinan (Triangle)—Fair.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Real Folks, with J. Barney Sherry (Triangle)—Fair story, well produced.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Double Trouble, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—The poorest picture Fairbanks ever made. Business big.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—The best western picture Stewart has made. More on the Hart style. A very good fight and plenty of action.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—Fair.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

From Four to Six, with Winifred Allen (Triangle)—A pretty good picture with a story of war theme, which makes it interesting at this time.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

A Soul in Trust (Triangle)—Rather long, but a very good picture.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Little Red Decides, with Barbara Connelly (Triangle)—This is a dandy western, different from the rest. Well cast and well acted. The usual good Triangle photography.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Universal

Thieves' Gold, with Harry Carey (Universal Special)—An average western.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Nobody's Wife, with Louise Lovely (Universal Special)—Good.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Phantom Riders, with Harry Carey (Universal Special)—Good.—Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Vitagraph

The Desired Woman, with Harry Morey (Vitagraph)—A good play. Everyone was pleased.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Little Miss No-Account, with Gladys Leslie (Vitagraph)—A very good picture. Miss Leslie is surely a sweet little star.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Her Secret, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—Star well liked and the picture is O. K., but there is one suggestive scene which is accentuated by the fact that the whole story hinges on this scene.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers, with Nell Shipman (Vitagraph)—An excellent picture. I wish all pictures were as good as this.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Over the Top, with A. Guy Empey (Vitagraph)—This picture, when presented with good music, advertised properly, will pack any house and will satisfy all who see it. It gradually works up to a fine ending. Just a few of the incidents in the book are combined with a love story. Empey is a natural actor and does fine work. The best work is that of the coward, played by Morrison. Go after this picture hard, and don't neglect the music.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

World

The Cross Bearer, with Montague Love (World)—A somewhat religious picture. All right in a Catholic neighborhood. Warm weather hurt business.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

The Witch Woman, with Ethel Clayton (World)—A pink permit for Chicago, but there is nothing wrong with it. Story fair. Brought them in just the same.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

The Trap, with Alice Brady (World)—A fairly good offering. Alice Brady is losing popularity in this vicinity since we ran The Knife, which was cut by the censors.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

Serials and Series

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—Don't be afraid to book this. Plenty of action. Draws the crowd.—A. Giacoma, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

The Judge Brown Stories (General)—The nicest and classiest two-reelers ever put out. I have yet to see a bad one.—Miss Benesch, Bell Theatre, Chicago.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—Helen Holmes gets the money. In connection with Jimmie Dale and a comedy, this makes a good program.—Riley Bros., Wigwam Theatre, Oberlin, Kansas.

The Vulture of Skull Mountain, with Marin Sais (Kalem)—"American Girl" series. Acting fairly good. Plot thin. This was not liked as well as other "American Girl" pictures.—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theatre, Juliaetta, Idaho.

State Rights and Specials

Pendleton Round-Up of 1914-15 (Service Film and Supply Co., Portland)—Great. If any eastern exhibitor wants to show his patrons how we do things out west, show them this picture, even if you should have to book it from Portland. It is all in the picture.—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theatre, Juliaetta, Idaho.

The Whip (Paragon)—I did not see this, but all reports I had were of the best. They said it was a thrilling, well handled story, which never lets down but gets better all the time.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Spirit of the Red Cross—One of the finest pictures I have ever seen, but it didn't take here. People got the notion that because it was furnished free and run with a regular show without additional charge there was some graft connected with it, and we didn't have as good a house as I usually have without anything special.—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theatre, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Ralph Ince, Sawyer and Lubin to Produce

JOIN HANDS FOR MAKING OF BIG FEATURES

CONTRACTS have been entered into between Ralph Ince, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, it is announced, whereby a series of big special feature attractions will be produced, marketed and exploited, bearing the brand name of "Ralph Ince Film Attractions."

In addition to the three men mentioned above, the name of one of the leading figures of the industry, which is withheld for the present, will be linked prominently in all of the activities of the newly formed combination.

The agreement between these leaders brings together the much discussed angles of production and distribution in the closest kind of contract, effectually bridging the wide gulf at present between these elements.

Many Pictures to Be Made

The plans of the new combination are comprehensive. They embrace the production of a series of screen versions of celebrated stage successes and the works of famous authors, bearing the stamp of Ralph Ince's name, with the resultant guarantee which this will carry to all exhibitors.

When the details attendant upon the first offering are made public, a surprise is in store for exhibitors and public alike, inasmuch as they will disclose a startling innovation in the type of attraction and the method of staging.

In addition to assuring the success of these productions with the guarantee of Ralph Ince's name, and the use of vehicles universally known to fans and patrons of the "legitimate" drama alike, the plans of the new combination call for the use of all-star casts, embracing the names of film and stage favorites whose talents and personalities are a byword on the tongues of amusement goers.

The men responsible for the new organization have been quietly perfecting their plans for several months and every detail will receive minute attention before a crank is turned on the initial film. The names involved are ones to conjure with in the matter of production and distribution and it is believed the new organization will offer a solution of the most difficult problem confronting exhibitors large and small: Feature attractions of an assured box office value which can be rightfully exploited as such.

Name of Ince Well Known

The name of Ralph Ince is familiar to the public by reason of the innumerable successful screen productions to which it has been attached as director, and also because of his long connection with the Vitagraph Company of America, during which time he achieved fame as actor and director.

Prior to becoming one of the foremost producers of the business, Ince was a film player of note, appearing in the leading roles of many Vitagraph pictures. His characterization of the immortal Abraham Lincoln is considered one of the classics of the screen and to him belongs the distinction of having been the first actor of the films to portray this great figure in American history.

During his several years with the Vitagraph Company, Ince directed such successes as "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck" and "413." More recently he has to his credit the making of "The Eleventh Commandment" and "Ninety and Nine," both presenting Lucille Lee Stewart in the stellar roles; "To Day," starring Florence Reed; "The Woman Eternal," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "Fields of Honor," starring Mae Marsh; and a series of specially supervised pictures featuring Madame Olga Petrova.

Lubin a Leader in Trade

An acknowledged leader in the field of distribution and intimately familiar with the industry in its many ramifications, Herbert Lubin bears an enviable reputation as exchange man, state rights specialist and organizer of big financial projects. The former holder of the Metro franchise for the Dominion of Canada for several years, Mr. Lubin possesses an exact knowledge of the exhibitor's problems and requirements. He has been responsible for many innovations in the field of state rights distribution during the past twelve months.

A member of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., which scored a notable success in its handling of "The Warrior" and "Mother," he is known to practically every showman in the United States and Canada. In addition to his activities in the fields mentioned herein, Mr. Lubin also negotiated and consummated the contract whereby Madame Olga Petrova, the famous Polish actress, became the head of her personal organization. He is conceded to possess one of the keenest minds in the entire industry and has blazed the trail for many radical departures in distribution.

Sawyer a Pioneer in Business

Arthur H. Sawyer is one of the pioneers of the picture business, having been prominently identified for the past fifteen years with every branch of the industry. Originally an exhibitor and afterwards owner of one of the first chains of picture theatres in the United States, Mr. Sawyer became interested in production about ten years ago. After making an intensive study of this field, he was responsible for the organization

Maryland Censors Forced Into Court

Judge Duffy of Baltimore to Rule on Whether Rejection of "War Brides" Is Justified

MARYLAND'S censorship board has been dragged into the courts for the first time. Incidentally, the court was turned into a motion picture theatre, for a private view of "War Brides" was given at Baltimore the other day for the edification of Judge Duffy, the state attorney general and a few lawyers who will argue the case.

The court has been asked to pass upon an appeal taken from a decision of the censors forbidding the exhibition of the film. The suit is arousing much interest among lawyers generally, as well as among the men in the motion picture industry, as it is the first appeal to be taken under the law creating the board.

The appeal was made a few weeks ago by Sylvan Hayes Laucheimer, representing Stern & Wolf, of Philadelphia, counsel for Selznick & Company, owners of the picture.

The point at issue is one of patriotism and was raised more than a year ago following a request by Governor Harrington that the board should prohibit the showing of pictures which, in its estimation, were calculated to foster disloyal sentiments or to impair the morale of the community.

"War Brides" was passed by the board of censors in March, 1917, with a few eliminations, and was shown at Ford's in Baltimore for a week during that month. Shortly after the declaration of war by this country, the board notified Selznick & Company that the further showing of the picture in Maryland would not be permitted unless the film was submitted again for examination. This was after an opinion had been obtained from Attorney General Albert C. Ritchie that pictures calculated to obstruct or discourage recruiting were detrimental to the public morals in the present crisis.

The picture was withdrawn, and it was not until this January that it was shown to the censors again and rejected. A second showing failed to sway the board, and the appeal followed.

A claim by the board that it was doing a great patriotic work by clipping films "injurious to the morale of the public" was one of the pleas for its life made at the recent session of the Maryland Legislature, when the motion picture men made a strong fight to have state censorship abolished.

Goldwyn's "Joan" Honored

"Joan of Plattsburg," Goldwyn's patriotic comedy-drama starring Mabel Normand, was selected by the Children's Year Campaign Association in Washington, D. C., for a private showing at the Knickerbocker Theatre on June 4, to a distinguished invited audience. Among the guests were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and ladies of the cabinet.

Miss Normand appeared in person at the performance as part of a patriotic program arranged to give the play an appropriate setting as the story of the unswerving faith of the nation's women in time of war. The program was arranged under the personal direction of Harry M. Crandall, owner of the theatre, and Arthur Robb, his manager.

Decision Reserved in Film Suit

The taking of testimony in the General Film Company's preferred stockholders' $2,000,000 accounting suit, in which virtually every film producer and motion picture corporation of importance is named as co-defendant, is ended. Justice George Hullan, before whom it was tried, has reserved decision and directed that briefs in the action be filed next month.

Fail to Stop "Birth of a Nation"

The mayor and commissioners of Jackson, Tennessee, acting upon the statutory law and a city ordinance, attempted to prevent "The Birth of a Nation" from being shown recently. Notice was served on Dan Williamson, owner and manager of the Lyric theatre, that the picture would not be allowed.

Mr. Williamson sought and obtained from Chancellor Ross an injunction to restrain the city authorities from carrying out the order. The Chancellor then heard argument on a motion of the city to dismiss the injuction, and held that proof was necessary first to show that the result of the picture would be harmful. In the absence of such proof the court refused to dismiss the restraining order and thus the play was allowed to proceed.

Funkhouser Sues Trade Review

Major Funkhouser has filed a $100,000 libel suit against the Exhibitor's Trade Review and Leslie Mason of New York, its editor. The suit is based upon the publication of an imaginary interview between Funkhouser and the Kaiser in which the latter thanks the major for his "aid and comfort."

Suggests Film "Hall of Fame"

Maurice Tourneur's suggestion that the motion picture world should honor its pioneer investigator, Eadweard Muybridge, has created so much interest that Mr. Tourneur believes a definite plan should be launched.

Muybridge began his experiments in California in 1872 in photographing moving horses with a series of plate cameras placed adjoining each other. The Muybridge investigations, which secured a series of action pictures, led directly to the creation of the photoplay. These extended experiments were made possible by the grant of $40,000 by the University of Pennsylvania.

"I believe that we should erect a building—a screen temple—to Muybridge," says Mr. Tourneur. "Perhaps we should make it even broader in scope, a sort of movie hall of fame. Here we could pay our tribute to Muybridge, Edison, Eastman and the other men whose investigations have been milestones in the progress of the motion picture."

Metro Gets New Leading Man

Harry Hilliard, one of the screen's most versatile leading men, has been engaged to play opposite May Allison in her third Metro starring vehicle, "The Way to a Man's Heart," a story with a Southern setting, written by June Mathis. Harry Franklin is directing.

Hilliard has been a picture player for several years and has attained a wide popularity. His first picture was "The Strength of the Weak," with Mary Fuller. For two years he was leading man under the Fox banner for Vivian Martin, Theda Bara, June Caprice and Valeska Suratt.

May Stop Censorship

There are indications in Kansas City that Mayor Cowgill and his administration intend repealing the ordinance regarding censorship. The mayor has dismissed Fred F. McClure, who has been the film censor, and appointed Sidney J. Baker, a friend, in his place. Newspaper accounts of the affair regard this as a step in the discontinuance of the present system of censorship at least.

Mary Garden Safe in France

Her friendly relations with Goldwyn by no means at an end with her appearance in "The Splendid Sinner," Mary Garden has cabled news of her safe arrival in Paris after what she describes as "the most gorgeous winter in my life."

Now she will go down to the Riviera pictures being shown children.

U. S. to Call Halt in Production, Rumor

INVESTIGATION REPORTED TO BE UNDER WAY

THAT the government may suspend the production of pictures for a year as a step in its campaign to eliminate non-essentials is a rumor which reached MOTOGRAPHY this week from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The rumor was contained in an announcement that Universal had sent a check to the government for $45,600, representing its initial remittance for the footage tax. The $45,600 is the amount of tax due for the ten weeks ending December 12, and is the first footage tax, it is believed, to be remitted by any producer.

Larger Returns Predicted

The announcement emphasizes that this sum does not represent collections for the future, stating that production in the period covered was the smallest for a long time, and predicts a much larger return for the following ten weeks.

But the present check will awaken the government to the importance of the industry as a revenue producer, the statement points out.

Inquiry Now On?

"It has been persistently rumored that government officials are prepared to admit that for its entertainment value the motion picture industry is very essential, but that an investigation now is under way to ascertain if the producing end of the business is of equal importance," the statement continues.

"In questioning the immediate importance of the producing end government officials have been quoted as declaring that all production could be stopped for a period of at least a year without especial harm to the exhibiting end of the business.

"They have called attention to the fact, it is said, that the average feature plays to less than 20 per cent of its possibilities. Figures in their possession, they say, prove that the great majority of features are presented in less than 2,500 theatres.

"While their figures may be correct, men best acquainted with the statistics of the industry declare the deductions of the government officials are wrong. They are basing their deductions on the gross number of motion picture theatres, whereas they should base them on the gross number of theatre districts.

Fallacy of Reasoning Shown

"It is admitted that there are approximately 14,100 motion picture theatres in the United States. But it is not a possibility, as the government officials would seek to show, that a picture could play every one of those houses. Too many of them are competing houses.

"The possibilities of presentation of a feature in the United States is about 8,200 houses, all non-competing theatres.

"These facts will be presented to the government along with a financial statement based upon the Universal payment, showing what the government will lose in actual cash should production be curtailed. All of the companies will have to release old pictures upon which there could be no negative tax and very little positive tax as the rehabilitating departments would simply tinker with the old prints until they were presentable."

Efforts to obtain official information failed.

Petrova Starts Country-Wide Tour June 1

Famous Artist Will Visit Many Cities in Thrift Stamp Drive — Government to Co-operate

MADAME OLGA PETROVA, who recently completed her fifth special starring vehicle, "Patience Sparhawk," by Gertrude Atherton, under the direction of Ralph Ince, is now winding up the affairs at her studio prior to her departure June 1 on a country-wide tour in behalf of the Thrift Stamp movement. Advance arrangements for Madame Petrova's trip were made by Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis several weeks ago.

Beulah Livingstone, personal representative of Madame Petrova, left New York Thursday for the purpose of conferring with Frank A. Vanderlip and William H. McAdoo at Washington regarding the co-operation which the United States government will give the star. Mr. Vanderlip is at the head of the National Saving Stamps Commission and it is believed that arrangements will be completed through the courtesy of Messrs. Vanderlip and McAdoo whereby complete assistance will be received from Washington.

Many requests have been received at the Petrova studios from the heads of the various War Saving Stamps Commissions for Madame Petrova to work in conjunction with their efforts. D. S. Culver, state director of the Minneapolis War Saving Stamps Commission, wired Bert Ennis Saturday as follows:

"Understand you start nation wide tour next Monday to promote war saving stamp purchases. Please register this as most urgent request that you be sent to Minnesota between now and May 30 for week in this state. Need you badly as we have drive scheduled first week June. Appreciate wire answer."

While in Washington Miss Livingstone will endeavor to arrange for the use of a special train in order that no time may be lost in making the jumps from one territory to another. The itinerary to be covered will embrace Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Butte, Laramie, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Phoenix, Tucson, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and New York.

The trip will be handled exactly as a traveling theatrical enterprise, with a complete staff of advance agents, twenty-four sheet billing, newspaper stories, etc. It is also planned to carry an expert news camera man, who will film all scenes of interest along the way, in addition to making a celluloid record of Petrova's complete tour.

Pearl White Called to Capital

Pearl White, Pathe star, has been called to Washington by the war department to participate in a government plan, the nature of which has not yet been made public.

Robert Thornby Joins Fox

Robert Thornby has been added to William Fox's directorial forces and will work in the Western studios at Hollywood. Mr. Thornby has already taken active charge of a new vehicle starring Jewel Carmen, the story of which is based on Gouveneur Morris' dissection of metropolitan life and character, "You Can't Get Away With It."

A Fox statement says that this production will be by far the most pretentious starring film Miss Carmen has had and will be one of the most expensive photodramas ever released as a Fox Special Feature. Scores of scenes will be taken in Arizona and on the Catalina Islands. Because of the nature of the play, the indoor settings, it is said, will also be more costly and ornate than usual.

Orpheum in Seattle Goes to Pictures

Vaudeville Abandoned in Million Dollar House Because Consistently Strong Film Programs Are Assured

THE biggest event in the motion picture business of Seattle since the opening of the Coliseum in February, 1916, took place recently when the Orpheum theatre opened as a motion picture house.

Before being taken over by Eugene Levy this theatre was the prize house of the Orpheum Circuit on the Pacific Coast. The building and finishing of the house brought the entire cost up close to $1,000,000. The walls of the foyer are lined with big mirrors and panels of plain marble and of marble inlay. The auditorium is decorated with fresco painting and rich scroll work. The theatre has a seating capacity of 2,100.

The inspiration to enter the field of motion pictures was given Mr. Levy by the success of the big Jewel production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which he put on as an experiment.

"After having had proved to me the drawing power of a good motion picture," said Mr. Levy, "and considering how vaudeville is going back, because of the draft and other forces which have been undermining it for some time, and realizing that, owing to the peculiar condition of the film market I could be assured of enough of the best productions to run my house as a first class theatre, I decided to turn to motion pictures exclusively, instead of showing big productions only occasionally, as I had first thought of doing if this picture should be a success."

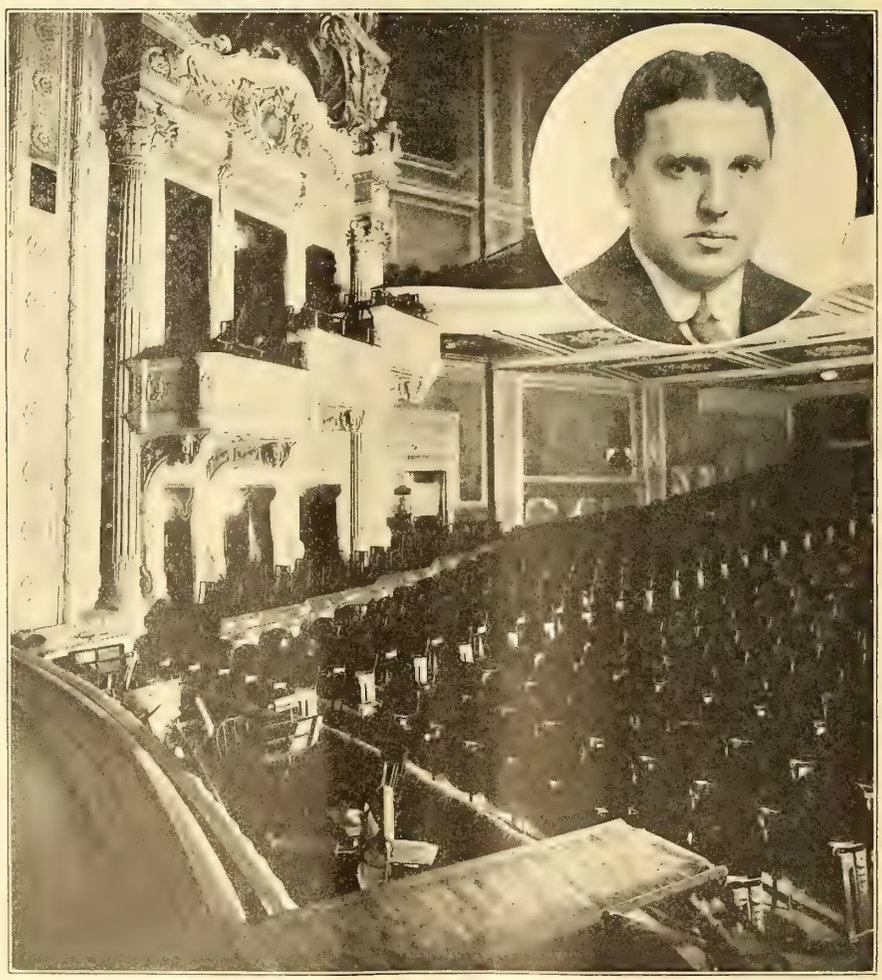
The list of productions which Mr. Levy has already booked leaves no doubt as to the quality of shows that will be given. They are the Fox Standard Pictures, Fox Sunshine Comedies, Select Pictures, Paralta Plays, Pathe specials, the Pathe Weekly, Pathe scenics, the Lonesome Luke Comedies and several state right features, such as "The Crisis," and "The Warrior." The program will consist of a feature, a news picture and a comedy, with special musical numbers by an orchestra of fifteen pieces led by La Grande Carter, who has been conductor of the Orpheum Orchestra for the past year.

The admission price for the matinee is less than for any other first class house in Seattle, 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children. The evening price is the same as at the other downtown houses, 20 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

That there may be no confusion with this theatre and The Moore, which now has the Orpheum Circuit vaudeville, the motion picture house is being advertised as "Levy's Orpheum Theatre, Seattle's Million Dollar Photoplay House."

Mr. Levy has been showing motion pictures longer in Seattle than any other exhibitor, and he has also operated theatres showing combined picture and vaudeville shows in other cities of the Northwest. In all instances he has proved himself a real showman, and he has the confidence and good wishes of all the motion picture fraternity of the Pacific Coast, where he is known by everybody in the amusement business.

Quits Fight on Sunday Shows



The fight against Sunday picture shows in Sandusky, Ohio, is apparently at an end. In the municipal court City Commissioner Charles H. Stubig withdrew the charge of operating on Sundays which he had preferred against another city commissioner, John A. Himmelein, owner and manager of the Sandusky Theatre, and two of his operators.

Triangle Starts New Features

Two new feature pictures are now under way at the Triangle Culver City studios, temporarily titled, "Everywoman's Husband" and "The Painted Lily."

The last is a drama of London's gay night life, showing how Alma Rubens as a beautiful flower girl fell into the hands of a gambler. Francis MacDonald, who has won honors in many character leads, will have an opportunity of portraying the sympathetic role of Tom Burton, a refined gambler, who is instrumental in leading the "The Painted Lily's" footsteps back to the right path after an unhappy entanglement with Jack Richardson, better known as the king of the gamblers.

"Everywoman's Husband" is the story of a woman who rules her husband with an iron hand, depending upon him only to supply the funds, by means of which she may climb the social ladder. She influences her daughter, Gloria Swanson, who marries Joe King. How her mother's instructions nearly cost Miss Swanson her husband and how she wins back his love furnishes the high points.

$750,000 Involved in Paralta Deal

ORGANIZERS GET THIS SUM FOR NINE MONTHS' WORK

THREE-QUARTERS of a million dollars to three men for nine months' work—that is the sum said to have been received for their interest in Paralta Plays, Inc., by Carl Anderson, Nat. I. Brown and Robert T. Kane from John E. DeWolf and Herman Katz. Mr. De Wolf is president and Mr. Katz treasurer of the company now.

When the idea of Paralta Plays, Inc., was conceived by Messrs. Anderson, Brown and Kane, their project was financed by Mr. De Wolf and Mr. Katz. The evolution of the concern is at once both interesting and constructive as an exemplification of good business organization. The idea of a corporation controlling a large studio, wherein pictures would be made for other concerns as well as for itself, was the thought of Mr. Kane, and was the basis of the original Anderson, Brown and Kane plan.

Growth Is Rapid

From this developed the Paralta Studios, Inc., one of the best producing organizations in California, and when this grew to proportions that warranted success, the releasing factor, Paralta Plays, Inc., was formed in New York with contracts for placing the pictures into the hands of the exhibitors through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

With the company so far established, Mr. Anderson conceived one of the biggest ideas which was ever introduced into the business, and which has since been adopted by a great many of the most prominent producers. This was the plan to form separate organizations for each of the important stars and to give the stars themselves an actual financial interest in the company without any monetary investment on the player's part.

Eight Companies in Project

From this plan birth was given to the Louise Glaum, Henry B. Walthall, J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale companies, and finally by the formation of the Paralta Productions, Inc., and the Selexart Pictures Corporation, the latter of which made state rights features, eight companies were welded into one project.

The success of the scheme has reached such proportions that W. W. Hodkinson, who has released Paralta plays and will continue to do so, is now in possession of contracts with the foremost exhibitors throughout the country that aggregate a sum of $1,500,000.

Messrs. Anderson, Brown and Kane have probably set a record for accomplishment by building up such a concern within the space of a few months. Certainly a profit of $750,000 from an investment that represents no financial outlay even at the inception of the company, is proof of a remarkable knowledge of the film industry and executive powers to use that knowledge to the best possible advantage.

The transfer of stock, which has just been consummated in Los Angeles, provides for the release of the Anderson, Brown and Kane interests in all of the eight corporations of which they have been officers and directors. Mr. Anderson was, prior to his sale of stock, president of these eight companies, and Mr. Brown was general manager.

The principal reason which prompted the transfer of stock was the practical disorganization of the Anderson, Brown and Kane faction, due to both Mr. Kane and Mr. Brown being called to the colors. Mr. Kane has just been commissioned an officer at American Lake, Washington, while Mr. Brown will report at camp this month. This left only Mr. Anderson to represent the original group of organizers, and, consequently, when the others found it necessary to dispose of their interests, Mr. Anderson decided to release his own holdings as well.

Anderson Remains for While

In the terms of the agreement of purchase, however, Mr. Anderson has consented to remain with the company temporarily in order to allow Mr. Katz and Mr. De Wolf ample time to effect a reorganization competent of carrying on the business successfully.

In an interview this week it was pointed out to Mr. Anderson that his success with Paralta should be of benefit to the entire world of pictures, inasmuch as it will inject assurance and confidence into many men who have been fearful regarding the reported financial depression in the business. In reply Mr. Anderson stated:

"Motion pictures are now an industry —they are no longer an enterprise. That means that every man connected with films today must be a business man; he cannot be a money-mad prospector. The only reason that there has been a lot of calamity-howling is that the incompetents are being forced out by the men who belong in the amusement field by right of knowledge, and it is these, the incompetents, who are doing the shouting, and it is really a good sign and not a bad one. It is a sign that the industry is finding itself and is becoming established upon solid foundation.

Money in Business Still

"It is said that the poor will always be with us. It is a fact that as long as we have the poor we shall have motion pictures, and there is just as much money in them now as there ever was, and the secret of success is really not a secret at all. It is merely business acumen.

"Our success with the Paralta Company is gratifying, but it is not astonishing. It simply verifies what I have said—that there is money in the industry for those who understand the business. It makes me feel that I know my business.

"I do not say it with conceit, for any man who does not know his business has no right to be in it. The longer he stays in it, the more money he will lose, and, if he stays long enough he is going to get out of it. A lot of men have stayed too long already and they are just getting out. That's why we hear of so much failure now, and that's why, very soon, the industry will be a great deal better off than it ever has been."

Goldwyn to Move Studios to California

President Goldfish Reveals News in Los Angeles, Where He Is Now Making the Necessary Arrangements

GOLDWYN will move its studios to California. Impressed by the wonderful advantages of the West Coast state, President Samuel Goldfish is now making the necessary arrangements in Los Angeles. In fact this is the principal object of his western trip.

News that Goldwyn plans to move was revealed in the Los Angeles Morning Tribune by Monroe Lathrop, a special writer. Mr. Lathrop's story follows:

"Samuel Goldfish, head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, arrived at the Alexandria hotel bubbling over with enthusiasm for California, which he said he purposed to put into concrete form. The mission of this executive head of the largest eastern motion picture producing concern is to arrange for the purchase or erection of a great studio in Los Angeles and the removal of all the company's stars and producing activities to this coast.

"Goldwyn is the last picture plant of the first magnitude left in the east. Its capitulation—for such it is—to the superior advantages of California, is expected to be followed by the few remaining holdouts until practically all the movies of America are California made. In confirming the reports of the early advent of the Goldwyn forces, Mr. Goldwyn said:

"'You will recall that when I formed and conducted the Lasky Company my first move after its organization was to send Cecil de Mille here with $20,000, which constituted a larger percentage of our available capital than I care to think about at this late date.

"'From the day that I organized Goldwyn I have intended to come out here to attain our fullest expansion and to bring with me many of the able and brilliant men and women associated with Goldwyn.

"'You will soon have with you in Los Angeles, for example, Rex Beach, one of our country's most popular authors. Where the previous policy has been to make one or perhaps two Rex Beach productions annually, there will be hereafter a series of Rex Beach productions a year—four to six of them.

"'During the coming year Goldwyn will make six productions with Geraldine Farrar, whose first entry into pictures marked a new epoch in the elevation of the screen art. It was my pleasure to persuade this brilliant artist to enter pictures.

"'Still another star of nation-wide popularity has linked her destinies with our own and we shall have eight of her productions annually. She is Pauline Frederick, whom I consider the ablest emotional actress of the screen.

"'Mabel Normand in the coming year will be starred in eight Goldwyn productions even more striking in character than those with which she has scored such fine successes since becoming one of our stars.

"'Madge Kennedy, a native California girl, who has relatives and many friends in Los Angeles, will also make eight Goldwyn productions. Through her refreshing personality she has become a national favorite.

"'We shall also make eight pictures in the next twelve months with the wonderful little artist, Mae Marsh.

"'And I have a man star whom I am not now at liberty to name.

"'So you see from this that Goldwyn can forecast more than forty productions next year of its own making; and there are likely to be still more in addition to worthy independent productions which we will distribute for other concerns, as we are equipped to distribute any productions of a high standard.

"'I am sure that the majority of our pictures will reflect the wonderful California sunlight and the beauties of the California scenery and environment.'"

Giant Airdome Opened

At the new government powder works, located in the suburbs of Nashville, Tennessee, one of the largest open-air theatres ever erected in the South is now in operation for the showing of motion pictures.

The seating capacity is 5,000, with standing room for additional thousands. A monster screen has been erected and pictures are shown every night to a great army of workers.

A record was made in building this theatre, the entire structure, including seats, stage, screen and other facilities, being put in complete working order in the short period of two days. The rapidity of the work resulted from the employment of a big force of men.

First-class pictures are shown, both comedies and dramas, with the comedy films having the preference.

Star Finishes "The Soap Girl"

Gladys Leslie, most diminutive of Vitagraph stars, last week finished work on "The Soap Girl," under direction of Martin Justice, the fifth Blue Ribbon feature in which she has been featured since joining Vitagraph. This week she will start on another feature, the title of which is to be "The Rebel."

Honor for Virginia Pearson

Rumor has it that Virginia Pearson, Fox star, is to be associate head of the Boy Scouts division being organized in Italy in recognition of her material aid in the recent Liberty Bond drive. Miss Pearson was responsible for the sale of $6,000,000 worth of bonds.

New Chicago House "A Dream Come True"

WOODLAWN A THEATRE OF MANY REFINEMENTS

THE WOODLAWN THEATRE, on Sixty-third street, near Drexel avenue, Chicago, one of the newest and most beautiful picture theatres in the city, is the "dream come true" of its manager, Andrew Karzas.

This theatre, which opened its doors only a few weeks ago, is already attracting attention from picture patrons all over the city, as well as in its own neighborhood, where a high-class clientele appreciates the excellence of the entertainment offered. It is a tribute to the worth of modern pictures whenever so beautiful a house is devoted to them.

Has Many Good Features

The Woodlawn sums up in many ways its manager's idea of what a picture theatre should be. Mr. Karzas has been connected with the film business for many years and has exhibited pictures for a long time.

As far back as 1915 he was collecting data for the creation and management of a neighborhood house which should be of real artistic and inspirational value to the community. He visited celebrated houses in other large cities from coast to coast and picked up ideas here and there for innovations and improvements.

When the Woodlawn Theatre Company was formed to build this theatre and Mr. Karzas elected manager, he enthusiastically set to work to put into reality his many ideas.

House Cost $250,000

The building itself, which represents $250,000 investment, was erected by H. L. Newhouse, and is magnificent. The front is well designed and has a beautiful display lighting system which advertises the house for many blocks.

The lobbies invite the passers-by with their beauty, spaciousness and air of refinement. The idea kept in mind in designing this feature was that it be in harmony with the interior and as inviting as possible to the class of people the house wished to attract.

There are two lobbies. The outer one, containing the box-office, is surmounted by a great dome into which from a massive vase a stream of light is thrown with a most pleasing effect. The inner lobby is made beautiful by marble panels, a tiled floor and a richly colored ceiling. At the left is a rest room for women, furnished attractively and containing a public telephone.

Seats 2,000 Persons

The theatre itself will seat 2,000 persons. The auditorium is an octagon in form, and approximately 120 feet long by 120 feet wide. In a semi-circle, opening off the foyer, runs a wide promenade connecting the aisles. Around the room about midway of the walls runs a lattice work in ornamental design through which is forced washed air which makes the ventilating system excellent.

The house is planned so that from each of the 2,000 seats the picture on the screen is clear and distinct. The projection, timing of the pictures, and other details of presentation are all given due attention. The proscenium opening is fifty feet in width and the rich velvet drapery and curtains add to the beauty of the house.

The orchestra is placed in a balcony instead of in the usual orchestra pit. The house is equipped with one of the largest organs built by the Kimball Company. The music is a feature of the programs.

The lighting system is noteworthy. An elaborate system of dimmers makes possible the working out of many succesful effects with colored lights. The lights are also used to call attention to the beautiful paintings which adorn the walls of the auditorium.

Opening off the auditorium are sixteen exits directly into the street level, by which the entire house can be emptied in three minutes. A novel feature is that the doors cannot be locked from the inner side. They are thus proof against accident, for at the slightest pressure from within, the doors are automatically unlocked and opened.

Mr. Karzas personally sees every picture to be shown at the theatre, whenever this is possible, and books only those he can be proud to show. His thought is ever for his patrons' pleasure and this fact is impressed upon the ushers and other attendants, who are taught to place "courtesy first."

Lynch Men Changed About

Several changes in the line-up of managers of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises have been announced recently.

E. J. Sparks, formerly the special representative of the company in Jacksonville, Florida, has been transferred to Atlanta. His place in Jacksonville will be taken by C. R. Bamford, who has been with the Lynch Enterprises in Asheville, N. C., for the past seven years. Mr. Bamford is originally from Philadelphia and is well-known throughout the trade.

J. H. Hughes, recently with the company's offices in Omaha, will be Mr. Bamford's assistant and office manager. Jess Clark will remain as the manager of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville.

Paper Canvasses City on Sunday Shows

Nashville Tennessean Seeks to Show That People Favor Opening Theatres for Benefit of War Workers

AS A RESULT of the continued demand for Sunday pictures in Nashville by hundreds of persons interested in the city's welfare, the Tennessean and American, Nashville's morning daily, is conducting a voting contest to sound out public opinion.

Ballots are printed daily in a conspicuous place in the paper, with a full explanation of the situation. It is pointed out that pictures are needed on Sunday for the entertainment of thousands of munition workers who recently came into the city with their wives and families. Several pastors have expressed opinions publicly that Sunday pictures should be permitted, and from outward appearances the city seems to be largely in favor of letting down the bars.

The newspaper is advocating Sunday shows from every angle, and there has been no outward show of opposition thus far. With Sunday baseball in effect, the general opinion prevails that Sunday pictures will follow, especially if the voting contest registers approval.

The contest will run a week, after which time the votes will be counted and the public sentiment expressed therein made public. The contest is open only to those more than 21 years of age and is being carried out with fairness and care.

In commenting on the situation in Nashville, the Tennessean handles the matter editorially as follows:

"One of the questions that require a revision of opinions with each new age is that of Sunday amusements. It will not down. Today Nashville is faced with conditions which must have their weight in determining whether we shall enlarge the possibilities or shall make new laws for stricter enforcement of certain amusements now allowed.

"The city parks are a general place of amusement, and when the band concerts begin there is every reason to believe that they will be as popular as they have been for past years where thousands of people have not only enjoyed the open air, but also the music. There are few places outside of the parks where the average man may go for amusement. The Glendale cars are crowded to capacity every Sunday. Certainly the way people visit these parks is proof of the desire for some place to go. We have had considerable controversy as to baseball, but at present we find the games largely attended.

"In many Eastern cities the movies are open. In many there are free movies conducted in the parks by the city authorities, where tens of thousands spend an hour or two on Sunday evenings with no feeling of harm done, but rather one of real enjoyment. Besides these free amusements, the motion pictures houses are also open. There is a growing demand that the latter be allowed in Nashville. Officials of the powder plant have urged that their men be allowed to see the movies on Sunday, as it is the only day that they can well get away from their work, and this demand for the shows is one that must be seriously considered.

"No one would favor a strictly continental Sunday. There must be limits and will be. The question that is uppermost now is, shall we allow pictures of educational, patriotic and amusing character to be shown? With limited restrictions we favor them. In cities where we have seen them, there seems to be very little more lack of Sunday observance than here. We know that there will be strong opposition to any movement along this line, but has not the time come to change our general attitude on Sunday amusements?"

Kennedy Turns Producer

Aubrey M. Kennedy, president of Kennedy Theatres, Inc., whose new Symphony Theatre, at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, New York, is scheduled for an early opening, is sponsor for the story that Nat C. Goodwin has again capitulated to the lure of the screen, despite his recent much discussed experiences with a cinema company.

Mr. Kennedy has engaged the comedian for a series of two-reel comedies which will be shown on pre-releases at the Symphony. The first of the series is to be "Married Again," a farce adapted for the screen by Roy Somerville.

The series will mark Aubrey Kennedy's debut as a producer, and according to his present plans they are merely the beginning of his activities in that field.

Miss Minter to Aid Red Cross

A beautiful cream colored Pinto pony was presented to Mary Miles Minter recently by an admirer who met the charming American star while she was campaigning for the Third Liberty loan in Los Angeles.

The donor suggested that if Miss Minter did not care to keep the pony, she might dispose of him for the benefit of some war relief society.

Miss Minter has already been offered $500 for the animal, but has decided to auction him off and donate the proceeds to the Red Cross.

Lynch Holds Bond Record

It is reported that the largest Liberty Bond holder in the theatrical and picture world is S. A. Lynch of Triangle. According to the report, Mr. Lynch has purchased a total of $650,000 in the bonds of the three Loans. No announcement of any individual purchases made by show people approaches this amount.

Newspapers Defend Stand on Pictures

EXPLAIN WHY THEY DO NOT GRANT MORE SPACE

Desirous of obtaining some expression on the failure of the daily press to accord motion pictures the space public interest really demands, MOTOGRAPHY recently addressed executives of a number of leading newspapers. MOTOGRAPHY'S letter and the first replies appear below.

THE LETTER

The editors of MOTOGRAPHY have often wondered why there is not better co-operation between newspapers and the motion picture industry, particularly exhibitors, whom MOTOGRAPHY represents.

Nine out of ten persons, not less and probably more, may be classed as motion picture fans. Most of the remainder occasionally go to picture shows also, the result being that interest in the silent drama is universal.

But how much publicity do the motion picture theatre and the the daily motion picture programs receive in the news columns? In metropolitan papers there generally is a motion picture column, which, however, is seldom more than one-half column in length. In other papers the amount of space is no greater, if as great. What there is, is generally the work of press agents instead of regular members of the newspaper staff.

Yet here are baseball and other commercialized sports getting one or two pages in every newspaper in the land every day of the year. Public demand? We will be liberal and concede that 75 per cent of the men readers look at the sporting page. Yet where 75 per cent of the men readers are interested in sports, 99 per cent of the men readers and 99 PER CENT OF THE WOMEN READERS are interested in pictures.

Another point—while it is the proud boast of newspaper men that the editorial columns are not influenced by the advertising clientele, we submit that there are exceptions to this rule. The consistent advertisers are entitled to more consideration than persons who do not advertise. Motion picture theatres advertise every day in the year. Let us ask you: How much advertising do you get from the promoters of commercialized sports?

The object of this letter is to obtain your view in 100, 200 or 300 words—possibly more—as to why the condition exists whereby motion picture fans fail to receive anything like the amount of newspaper attention they are entitled to, and the sport fans receive so much more than they are entitled to.

This letter is being sent to a number of other managing editors also. The result will be a symposium which we hope will prove valuable to our readers and to the motion picture industry as a whole.

Incidentally, the motion picture business is the FOURTH LARGEST INDUSTRY in the United States, leaping to its present position in a score of years, making a place for itself as the most spectacularly successful business in the history of the world.

We await your reply with keen interest. May we ask that this receive your most serious attention?

THE REPLIES

Ernest H. Gruening, managing editor of The New York Tribune, writes:

"Your criticism of the small amount of space given to motion pictures does not apply to the Tribune.

"We have a daily column which is not the work of motion picture press agents, but is the review and criticism of a trained expert. We accord motion pictures practically the same prominence that we do to the drama. On Sunday at least two pages, and sometimes more, are given over to motion pictures, and the material is written entirely with the interest of the reader in mind.

"One reason why baseball gets more attention from the newspapers than the motion picture industry is that the motion picture lends itself less to description than do most sports. You have to see a motion picture to really enjoy it. Reading about it is a pale substitute at best.

"Many of the most ardent baseball fans, however, are the daily occupants of the cross-roads grocery store in our rural districts, men who have never seen a game, and yet know the weaknesses of every pitcher and the batting averages of every player, almost as well as their A, B, Cs.

"We agree, however, that there is a great interest among newspaper readers in the cinema, and the amount of space and attention which we give to this field is the evidence of our recognition of this interest."

George Goldsmith, advertising manager of The Philadelphia Public Ledger and the Evening Ledger, writes:

"I am sure that you did not have the Ledger especially in mind in writing this, because it has been a pioneer in boosting the moving picture, and in providing the adequate co-operation, both from a news standpoint, and by the advertising department.

"Space is given to the latest developments in the film world every day in the Evening Public Ledger. Extensive reviews of local attractions appear every Tuesday, while much space is devoted to the industry, with cuts and special stories on Saturday. A chart showing the attractions for the week is printed in the Saturday and Sunday Ledgers, this service being gratis to the advertisers, and of course it has a news, as well as a circulation value.

"I am sure that the Ledgers realize the value of the 'movies,' and that you will find nowhere a heartier support of the industry than is afforded by the Ledger."

E. S. Beck, managing editor of The Chicago Tribune, writes:

"I was under the impression that there is on the part of our paper an appreciation of the almost universal public interest in motion pictures.

"We employ a motion picture editor and critic of proved capacity and skill exclusively for this work, and we print every week day of the year matter and pictures occuping altogether, I would say, an average of three quarters of a column of our space, with much more extensive space in our Sunday issue.

"In this way we undertake to keep the reading public informed of the new films and of news of consequence in this art and industry, and we aim to treat it from the theatre patron's (the public's) point of view.

"It is my impression that The Tribune was the first metropolitan paper in America to recognize the newspaper

"Man Who Woke Up" Heads Triangle Bill

"The Red Haired Cupid" with Roy Stewart and Keystone Comedy, "The Poor Fish," Complete Program

"THE MAN WHO WOKE UP," the first release on Triangle's June 2 program, is a picturesque story of the South.

William Oglesby (William V. Mong), an old-fashioned southerner who runs the Oglesburg Clarion, is very much opposed to accepting favors from a northerner, for he is one of those to whom the Civil War remains a picture in scarlet. Against his wishes, but as the editor of the local newspaper, he attends a meeting in the town hall, where Thomas Foster (George Hernandez), a kindly New York philanthropist, lays forth his plans to aid the community in building industrial schools and improving their lands.

Foster speaks of the money of the North coming to the aid of the South. This Oglesby takes as an insult and he rushes off to edit a scathing edition of the Clarion. Oglesby's best friend, Judge Campbell, Foster, his daughter Dorothy, and Edith (Pauline Starke), Olgesby's daughter, follow the old man to his office to attempt a reconciliation, but a worse quarrel ensues.

As Foster, in his kindly way, adopts the town, everything thrives, and the town folks realize that the future of Oglesby is assured. They will no longer read The Clarion because of Oglesby's attacks on Foster and Oglesby soon faces ruin.

It is then that the southerner is compelled to borrow money for a trip whereby he hopes to regain his health. This he procures from G. Waldo Campbell, the town's promoter and "best little failure." Campbell, who is perpetually broke, obtains the money from Foster. But Foster exacts a promise of "no interest" and "secrecy."

At the resort Oglesby overhears a conversataion between his daughter and a young writer called "Kip" (Darrell Foss), in which he learns that he is ridiculed for his old-fashioned clothes. After a struggle he decides to change to "up-to-date" attire and acting on "Kip's" advice he presents himself in what he terms "actor's raiment," with the explanation that "the old South is dead."

After promising to "Kip" his daughter's hand he finds that "Kip" is really Foster's son. In a violent rage he rushes home with his wife and daughter only to find upon his arrival that the money borrowed from G. Waldo was Foster's money. Mrs. Oglesby, realizing the sincerity of their northern friend, asserts herself and finally the pride of the old southerner is broken.

"The Red-haired Cupid," featuring Roy Stewart, is the second release for the week. It is the first of a series of the screen adaptations of the famous "Red Saunders" stories by Henry Wallace Phillips.

The misguided eastern directors of the Chanta Seeche cattle ranch in Oklahoma, being dissatisfied with the capable management of their foreman, "Red" Saunders (Stewart), decide to send out Albert Jones (Ray Griffith) as superintendent, to put "eastern business methods" into effect.

When "Red" receives a wire telling him of the advent of "Jonsey," as the boys later dub the tenderfoot, they are all for resigning, but remain at "Red's" request. Then along comes Jones and everything they do for him is wrong. Their dislike is nourished and hazing is making life rough for him, when word comes that his niece, Loys Andres, of Boston, will visit him.

The punchers, led by "Red," plan a rousing welcome for the woman, who they think will be a ringer for "Jonsey," only to find her the prettiest bit of femininity ever seen in Oklahoma.

With the meeting between Loys and "Red's" right bower, Kyle Lambert, a prime favorite with the boys, it is a case of love at first sight, but "Jonsey," who thinks east and west can never meet on an equal footing, can't see the match and decides to break it off by sending Loys home and firing her suitor.

He tells his plan to "Red," and the foreman, who has been disappointed in love when a much touted Lily from the east proves to be a Jersey cow, at once sympathizes with the lovers. He arranges an elopement. A suspicious character, "Squint-eye" Lucas, who has been forced on the cow outfit by "Jonsey," overhears the plans and intercepts the pair. He shoots Kyle.

In a thrilling race, Loys beats a band of Mexicans to the ranch, Lucas is slain by "Red" and Kyle rescued. While "Jonsey" is hunting for a cow in the cane-brake, a parson and doctor are rushed to the ranch and Loys is married to Kyle before "Jonsey" returns. Realizing that it is too late to interfere, "Jonsey" ungraciously gives his tardy congratulations and awakes to the fact that he still has much to learn of the west and its men.

The concluding release of the week is a Keystone comedy, "The Poor Fish," featuring Ed Brady and Claire Anderson.

Starts "Mandarin's Gold"

After several weeks' preliminary work Director Oscar Apfel has "Mandarin's Gold" under way at the World studio. Kitty Gordon is the star and Irving Cummings is her leading man. The other members of the cast include George MacQuarrie, Warner Oland, Anthony Merlo, Marguerite Gale, Veronica Lee, Joseph Lee, Marion Barney, Charles Fang and Alice Lee.

The picture has an Oriental locale and requires a large number of Chinese. Because of this fact an interpreter had to be engaged. Mr. Apfel located as many scenes as possible in New York's Chinatown.

Important scenes from the new Triangle production, "The Man Who Woke Up."

Strong scenes from the new Screen Classic super-feature, "To Hell with the Kaiser."

1,200 Players in "To Hell with the Kaiser"

John Sunderland, the Hero, a Veteran Aviator From the Belgian Front—Aeroplane Flights a Feature of the Picture

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER," a seven-act super-feature built around the obsessions of Germany's mad war lord, is the latest offering of Screen Classics, Inc., following "My Own United States," "Lest We Forget," "The Slacker," "Draft 258," "The Legion of Death" and "Blue Jeans."

The final scenes of this new picture, which has been produced with an all star cast and a company of twelve hundred persons, will be finished and assembled within the next few days. Metro Pictures Corporation will distribute it.

Based largely on facts which Screen Classics had access to, the story is one of the most dramatic and sensational dramas ever screened.

In a startling and highly original manner, it reveals the machinations of Europe's military monster before and during the war, his contempt for Americans and their ideals, his elaborate plans to crush France and destroy Russia and partition the world, including the United States, among his sons and his court favorites, his indorsement of and order to Germany's chemists to employ deadly gases in the war, the true circumstances under which he ordered the sinking of the Lusitania, the raiding of hospitals, his plans for the disintegration of Russia, and other intimate glimpses into the character of Germany's ruler never accurately and fully revealed before.

Throughout the drama runs a gripping and appealing story. The scenario is by June Mathis and the direction was under George Irving and a staff of capable assistants.

Through the co-operation of the government a fleet of aeroplanes is shown to give a faithful idea of what real air fighting at the front is like. These scenes are doubly interesting because the heroine—played by Olive Tell—and the hero—John Sunderland, a real aviator who has seen much service at the front—take part in these flights.

Miss Tell is a former Frohman star, and only recently left Broadway to appear especially in this production. She was co-starred at the time with Henry Miller in Mr. Miller's production of "The Fountain of Youth," and before that with William Courtney and Thomas A. Wise in "General Post." She is one of the most talented and beautiful women on the American stage and in "To Hell With the Kaiser" she is said to do the most brilliant work of her career.

Mr. Sunderland as well as being an aviator, is an actor of exceptional talents. The son of a wealthy Belgian, who turned his fortune over to his country when Germany's hordes poured into its cities and towns, Mr. Sunderland immediately gave up his profession and entered the airplane service. He was wounded and came to America after engaging in more than one hundred duels.

The producers have made a happy selection in choosing the player to portray the Kaiser. He is Lawrence Grant, an Englishman, who has made a study of the man, if he may be so called. Years before the war, Mr. Grant's physical likeness to the German ruler was noted by a high official of the Kaiser's court and a proposition was made for Grant to play the Kaiser in a dramatization of a book of this diplomat.

The declaration of war by the Allies caused Grant to refuse and he played the character in vaudeville instead. He wrote an act called "The Final Arbiter," which after a long run he followed with a dramatic sketch called "Efficiency." He was playing this when engaged for "To Hell With the Kaiser."

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is a commingling of fact and imagination, showing how Wilhelm signs a pact with Satan for the mastery of the world. This is followed by the wilful destruction of Belgium, as a preliminary to the most ghastly crimes the world has ever known.

An American girl, Alice Munroe, played by Miss Tell, sets out to avenge the death of her sister, who has trustingly sought the sanctuary of a Belgian convent, and is responsible for the dramatic climax in which the Kaiser meets the fate he richly deserves.

Mary Pickford at Work Again

Returning from her Liberty Loan tour in even better physical condition than she started, Mary Pickford immediately plunged into her studio activities, which consisted of helping Director Taylor cut "How Could You, Jean?" and beginning the new production, "Captain Kidd, Jr."

"The trip across the continent and back for Uncle Sam was actually a rest for me," declared the little star. "At any rate it had all the beneficial effect of a long vacation and I feel better physically and mentally than I have for months."

Miss Pickford broke all Liberty Bond records for individual sales in Pittsburgh when she sold approximately $14,000,000 worth of bonds at one meeting.

Fire Causes Heavy Loss

Fire wrecked the interior of the Columbia Theatre, Erie, Pa., recently, resulting in a loss of $65,000, of which insurance covers $32,000.

The fire started early in the morning from an unknown cause. A large pipe organ, installed three years ago at a cost of $9,000, was ruined. Orchestral instruments were destroyed and the boxes, stage and decorations damaged.

A. C. Potter of the Columbia Amusement Company, owners of the building, states that the theatre will be rebuilt. For the present its program will be transferred to the Majestic.

Six States Subscribe for Affiliated Quota

Pettijohn Says One Reason for Progress Is That Proposition Is Presented by Exhibitors Only

ANNOUNCEMENT that six more states—Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming—have subscribed their quota for membership in the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, brought forth the statement from Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel, that one of the reasons for the remarkable progress of the new unit is the fact that it is being presented solely by exhibitors.

"The affiliated is a case of exhibitors only, even to the organization of the booking units comprising it," said Mr. Pettijohn. "There are no stock salesmen on the payroll of the organization. Our feeling is that groups of exhibitors prefer having an exhibitors' proposition presented to them by exhibitors.

"The exhibitors doing this organization work are giving their time and energy to the movement because they believe in it. Outside of the fairness such organization methods assure, they represent an enormous saving to the exhibiting branch of the industry. A large staff of high-salaried stock salesmen runs into several thousand dollars a week. As usual, the exhibitors pay the freight, either in an out and out assessment on their stock for promotion expenses or through a cut-in on the profits that the stock should earn.

"Under the Affiliated plan, every dollar invested by the exhibitor goes for the single purpose of obtaining better pictures at lower prices. Not a penny of it can be touched for organization or promotion expenses."

The Intermountain states which have just completed their quota were organized by Byron Park of Salt Lake City, the secretary of the exhibitors' committee which drafted the Affiliated plan of operation.

Following the election of officers of the booking association in these states, Mr. Park will go to Nebraska and Iowa to organize the association in those states. In the meantime, Fred Herrington, having gotten the Pittsburgh territory underway, is devoting his efforts to the organization of the Kansas City and St. Louis territories. Early in June he will go to Oklahoma.

Frank Rembusch has the Indiana interests so well lined up that this week he is helping Ohio exhibitors, Joseph Hopp and Lee Frank, of Chicago, in addition to completing the subscription of the association for Illinois are lending their efforts to the organization of the Wisconsin exhibitors.

In the East, John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is assisting in the organization of the New York state association, spending most of his time in Buffalo, while Sydney S. Cohen, the president of the state league, is working with the Philadelphia exhibitors.

Mr. Pettijohn left New York Thursday for a swing around the circle. He stated that twenty-six states were lined up to the extent of all or more than three-quarters of their quota. In some cases, as in Chicago, this quota had been voluntarily increased.

Merkyl Supports Emily Stevens

John Merkyl, a popular player of the stage and screen, has been signed by Metro as leading man for Emily Stevens in a forthcoming picturization of Rachel Crothers' powerful play, "A Man's World," which is now being produced under the direction of Herbert Blachet.

Mr. Merkyl has just terminated a vaudeville engagement with Bessie McCoy Davis, who has been headlined over the big time circuit. In this offering, the new Metro player both danced and sang, but his real forte is dramatic acting. In the "legitimate" and on the screen, he has appeared prominently in support of many of the best known stars.

He has previously appeared under the Metro standard opposite Mme. Petrova in "The Soul Market."

Margaret Clayton with Cohan

Margaret Clayton, the beautiful leading lady of the screen and stage, will be seen in the chief feminine role of George M. Cohan's newest Artcraft vehicle, "Hit the Trail Holliday." This picture will be released the middle of June.

The Cohan picture affords Miss Clayton an excellent opportunity to assert her exceptional talent and charm in the part of Edith Jason, the hotelkeeper's daughter who wins the ex-bartender over to the prohibition cause. According to advance reports, Miss Clayton makes an ideal lead for the famous Yankee Doodle Boy.

This is the first time that she has appeared in an Artcraft picture, although she has had wide experience in motion pictures covering six years, four of which she acted in important portrayals for Essanay, one with Paralto and the balance in special engagements. Among the films in which she met with particular favor are "The Great Divide," "Inside the Lines," "Prince of Graustark," "The Night Worker," with Taylor Holmes in "Two Bit Seats" and the series called "Is Marriage Sacred?"

McAdoo Honors Madge Evans

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has just conferred a high honor on Madge Evans, World's juvenile star. Little Madge has received an Honor Button in recognition of her efforts in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan. Madge made a great number of personal appearances during the campaign, selling more bonds, it is said, than any other child actress. Madge has also been made a Major in the Junior American Guard.

Four Artcraft Pictures This Month

"A Doll's House," "Say Young Fellow," "Hit the Trail Holliday" and "How Could You, Jean?" the Subjects

FOUR ARTCRAFT PICTURES are listed for June release by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in a schedule issued by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, presenting two men and two women stars in vehicles adapted to each individual. Two of the pictures were produced in the western coast studios and two in the east, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks offerings coming from Los Angeles and Elsie Ferguson and George M. Cohan photoplays from New York.

"The quartet of Artcraft pictures for the month of June is a notable example of modern production," says Mr. Greene, "in which four of the world's greatest stars are available for the picture houses in stories of exceptional merit, and which will unquestionably bring greater power to the Artcraft trademark as well as increased laurels to the stars.

"The first subject is Elsie Ferguson in 'A Doll's House,' adapted from the immortal play by Henrik Ibsen, the famous dramatist, who has provided vehicles for the best known actresses of Europe and America. 'A Doll's House' is perhaps the most striking psychological subject from his pen, with a story of absorbing interest and genuine heart appeal.

"The stellar role is that of Nora Helmar, who evolves from a doll-like character into a woman of strong emotions and convictions, and the artistic picturization of this part by Miss Ferguson should prove eminently satisfying to all patrons of the picture houses and lovers of the drama. It is a picture like this one that proves a powerful magnet in attracting that class of people who have not yet become followers of the photoplay.

"'A Doll's House' gives to Miss Ferguson an artistic and emotional role for which she is fitted both by reason of her talents and her pulchritude. It was produced by Maurice Tourneur and includes in the cast H. E. Herbert, Alex K. Shannon, Ethel Grey Terry, Warren Cook, Zelda Crosby, Mrs. R. S. Anderson and the juvenile players, Ivy Ward, Tula Belle, Douglas Redmond and Charles Crompton.

"On June 16 Douglas Fairbanks creates a new character as a newspaper reporter in 'Say Young Fellow,' and it is quite likely that the novelty of this picture will make it the most attractive of his screen successes. In the development of the theme, which teaches the moral that success in life seldom comes to the pessimistically inclined or to those who are easily discouraged, many thrilling incidents are depicted, and the star performs several novel feats along lines different from those shown in his previous pictures, which tend to make the picture extremely lively and enjoyable.

"The author and director of 'Say, Young Fellow,' is Joseph Henaberry, who had charge of the production of 'The Man From Painted Post.' A romantic love story runs through the sensational incidents in which the reporter 'gets the goods' on the high financial grafters. Marjorie Daw plays the leading feminine role. Others in the cast are Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman and James Neill.

"On the same day 'Hit the Trail Holliday,' starring George M. Cohan, is released. Many elements combine to make this an extraordinary picture. It was adapted to the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Cohan's play, which was one of the greatest successes in recent years, and directed by Marshall Neilan, who was in charge of the production of Mary Pickford's recent successes.

"Mary Pickford again makes her appearance on June 23, in 'How Could You, Jean?' a most appropriate photoplay to follow her recent successes, 'Stella Maris' and 'Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley.' It was adapted by Frances Marion from the novel by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, which has been widely circulated as a serial and in book form. It deals with an aristocratic young woman who is compelled through changing circumstances to work for her livelihood, and teems with heart interest and dramatic and sensational incidents. The production was staged by William D. Taylor."

Essanay June Schedule

Essanay's schedule of releases for the month of June includes nine pictures. Four of these are western pictures, the revivified Broncho Billy dramas, and five comedies, the Snakeville series.

On June 1 comes "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," followed each week by "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung," "Slippery Slim—Diplomat" and "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent."

Beginning June 7 is "Broncho Billy's Grit," followed each week by "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls" and "Broncho Billy Wins Out."

New Minter Feature Begun

Mary Miles Minter's next feature, "The Eyes of Julia Deep," is already under production with Lloyd Ingraham directing.

Edna Goodrich Starts "The Gadabout"

Picture Will Be First of a Series to Be Released Through Mutual, Beginning August 5

EDNA GOODRICH has begun work on "The Gadabout," the first of a new series of productions to be released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The pictures are to be made at the studios of the Biograph Company in New York. David Powell, celebrated among leading men in screen drama, has been specially engaged to support the star.

The first production is under the direction of Burton King, whose screen career covers a series of successful pictures, including "The Public Defenders," "The Flower of Faith" and "A Soul of a Magdalen."

The pictures will be released at intervals beginning August 5, following "Impossible Susan" in the schedule.

"The Gadabout" is the work of Maibelle Heikes Justice, whose status as a writer of picture plays has been amply established by important successes released by various distributors of quality dramas. She is the author of "The End of the Trail," starring William Farnum; "Durant of the Bad Lands," in which Dustin Farnum played; "The Glory of Yolanda," an Anita Stewart vehicle, and plays in which Mary Miles Minter and Peggy Hyland have starred.

"A very large collection of material, including all that we thought best in the New York play market, has been considered in selecting the coming vehicles for Miss Goodrich," remarked James M. Sheldon, Mutual's president, who is devoting a large share of personal attention to the matter of production as a preliminary to the execution of important distribution plans.

"There are few women of the stage and screen so well known to the followers of the drama as Miss Goodrich. She is famous most particularly as a woman of beauty and beautiful dress. 'Regal' seems to be the word that fits best and we are seeking to express that in the productions to come. We aim and expect to put into the productions the material which will make it possible for the exhibitor to realize to the maximum on the star's name and fame."

Miss Goodrich has had a period of several months' rest, spent at Palm Beach and her newly completed country home at Mamaroneck, near New York. She is entering the production of "The Gadabout" with special energy and fitness.

As might be expected, "The Gadabout" is a society tale, laid in New York, with some highlight splashes of color and lively action.

Berst Chooses More Advisors

President J. A. Berst last week added H. B. Kester of Pittsburgh and Frank J. Howard of Boston to the advisory board of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

"Over There" Jams Theatre

High praise is accorded the Select production, "Over There," in a letter addressed to C. W. Taylor, Omaha branch manager, by C. M. Peregrine, manager of the American Theatre at Corning, Iowa.

"'Over There,' your patriotic production, smashed our box-office record to smithereens," the letter says. "We played to more gross business on the last day of the run than was ever known before in our seven years' experience as an exhibitor. Ordinarily, by eleven o'clock people begin to grow restless and want to get to their homes, but not so with this picture. In fact, we were standing them up at one o'clock in the morning, and to my knowledge, not a person left the theatre until the last 'Good Night' was flashed on the screen at one thirty.

"The picture is simply immense and the trench scenes are the best I have ever seen—photography fine, dramatic interest just fine, and altogether a picture of which you should be mighty proud. At some future date I must repeat it."

J. W. Crouch, manager of the Elite Theatre, St. Paul, Neb., writes to Mr. Taylor concerning the same picture as follows:

"I must say that I put it on to a grand house; standing room only! My patrons were well pleased with this production and if you have any more to offer along the same line we will be pleased to book it."

Ready to Start "Love Watches"

Corinne Griffith, one of Vitagraph's most alluring young stars, will begin work this week in "Love Watches," which was one of Billie Burke's greatest stage successes. She will be surrounded by an exceptionally strong cast, it is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and will be under the direction of Henry Houry.

Mr. Houry is the latest addition to the Vitagraph staff of directors. He is a Frenchman who has been in this country about a year, during which time he has been connected with Vitagraph in the capacity of artistic and technical adviser.

Farnum Back From Arizona

After having spent three weeks in Arizona and the Grand Canyon working on outdoor scenes for "Riders of the Purple Sage," the William Farnum Standard Picture for June, the star and his company are back at the Fox studio in Hollywood to complete interiors.

World to Release Five Pictures in July

Titles Are "The Heart of a Girl," "Neighbors," "Tinsel," "The Golden Wall" and "The Judge"

FIVE World pictures are scheduled for release during July, in which Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans, Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge are starred. Extraordinary care has been exercised that these releases may bear favorable comparison with special features sold on the open market.

Miss Castleton in "The Heart of a Girl" is scheduled for July 1. John G. Adolfi, producer of the third Annette Kellerman feature, handled the direction of this picture, his first for World. Irving Cummings is the leading man and the remainder of the cast includes Kate Lester, Grace Stevens, Florence Coventry, Clay Clement, John Tansey, W. T. Carleton, Anthony Byrd, Charles Wellesley and Joe Smiley.

The second production, released July 8, is "Neighbors," featuring Madge Evans, the child star, and Johnny Hines, who makes his first appearance as a World star. Frank Crane, who staged "Thais" for Mary Garden, was responsible for the direction. The picture presents little Madge as a hoydenish youngster, who by her pranks effectively stirs up the ire of the aristocratic neighborhood in which she resides.

Violet Palmer, Maxine Elliott Hicks, Herbert Pattee, Katherine Johnson, Frank Beamish, Anthony Merlo and several others form the supporting cast.

Miss Gordon appears on July 15 in "Tinsel." Oscar Apfel directed the picture. The cast is almost entirely composed of principals, namely Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, Anthony Merlo, Bradley Barker and George de Carleton. The decorations are lavish. Miss Gordon wears a number of gowns in keeping with her reputation for sartorial beauty.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greely make their joint appearance in "The Golden Wall" on July 23, which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson. Besides Mr. Blackwell and Miss Greeley, two other World stars make their appearance in the picture, Madge Evans and Johnny Hines. George MacQuarrie, Jack Drumier, Kate Lester, Winifred Leighton, Florence Coventry and Louise Rigny form the assisting cast.

On July 29 June Elvidge in "The Judge" is released, making five productions for the month. Travers Vale directed this picture. John Bowers plays, as usual, opposite Miss Elvidge and among the large cast supporting the star are Albert Hart, George MacQuarrie, Marguerite Gale, Marie Pagano, George Morgan, Dore Davison and Henrietta Simpson.

Some One Bought a Soda

When a beautiful girl rushed up to Mary Miles Minter while she was selling Liberty Bonds in Los Angeles and told her how glad she was to meet her at last, etc., Mary graciously thanked her. There was a haunting familiarity about the stranger, however, and at the first opportunity, Miss Minter asked her if they had not met before.

The stranger smiled and said: "I think not, dear, but perhaps you have seen me in pictures. I am Fannie Ward."

Miss Minter registered consternation in most approved movie fashion and stared and stared, while Miss Ward laughed delightedly.

Mabel Normand Plans Novelty

Her popularity among natives of Japan has inspired Mabel Normand to do something special for them. Instead of sending ordinary photographs of herself, the sprightly Goldwyn star is having made an elaborate Japanese costume in which she will pose as a maid of Nippon.

Star Gets First Real Farce

Of all the various types of acting, by far the hardest and that which requires the most skill is farce. For this reason, therefore, the hardest working actor or actress, and the one who must pay the greatest attention to the fine points of the art is the farceur or his feminine coworker, the farceuse. For the aim of farce is, primarily, to make a series of unreal incidents seem convincing.

Constance Talmadge has achieved the zenith of her art in the characterization she has created in the heroine of "Good Night Paul," which will follow "The Lesson" in her series of Select Pictures in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick.

In "Good Night Paul," Miss Talmadge has her first real farce. The photoplay is adapted from the successful stage play of the same name, in which Ralph Herz and Elizabeth Murray recently toured the country, and was directed by Walter Edwards, whose forte is along these very lines.

World Hires Margaret McWade

Miss Margaret McWade, a member of one of America's most celebrated theatrical families and well-known among the fraternity as an actress of brilliant attainments, has joined World Pictures and at present is appearing in "Blood of the Trevors," a picture starring Barbara Castleton. Miss McWade plays the role of the mother of the principal character.

Miss McWade's father was a famous contemporary of Booth, Edwin Forest and Barrett, and was associated with these celebrities during the heyday of the Boston Museum Stock Company. It is related that Abraham Lincoln preferred him above any actor of his time.

World Engages Warner Oland

Warner Oland, the noted "heavy," has become affiliated with World Pictures and will play the principal Chinese role in "Mandarin's Gold," featuring Kitty Gordon and directed by Oscar Apfel.

Edith Storey to Work in East This Summer

Metro Star Will Return From Hollywood Immediately Upon Completion of "As the Sun Went Down"

EDITH STOREY, the Metro star, will return to New York soon from California, where she has been engaged in the production of Metro features and Screen Classics for the past year. As soon as she completes her work in "As the Sun Went Down," the screen version of George D. Baker's play of the same name, she will take the train for Metro's eastern studios, "chaperoned" by her dog, "Sooner."

Miss Storey will continue her screen productions in the east during the summer, returning to the Hollywood plant in the fall, where she will act under the direction of Mr. Baker. Mr. Baker has directed Miss Storey in some of her most representative pictures in previous affiliations.

Mrs. Storey, the star's mother and general adviser, returned some time ago to get everything in readiness for her daughter at their home at Northport, Long Island. Miss Storey will come into the city each working day by automobile, having the benefit of the fresh air and seclusion of her country home. The vegetables are already doing nicely, Mrs. Storey says, which should gratify her daughter, for she intends to supply all the "garden truck" used this summer on the coast patrol boat on which her brother, Dick Storey, is quartermaster.

The Storey country home has always been noted for its flowers, but flowers will be relegated into secondary importance this year, for the Metro star loses no opportunity to do her "bit" for the government, notwithstanding the fact that she has done a great many "bits" already.

Miss Storey is an enthusiastic aviator, and is at present bent on obtaining a pilot's license. She did brilliant work in the recent campaign in behalf of the Liberty Loan, besides investing heavily in Liberty Bonds herself, and has been active in work for the Red Cross. Most of her other patriotic work will be postponed for the present, as Miss Storey will give practically all of her spare time to watching how her "oats, peas, beans and barley grow."

Miss Storey will begin work at once after her return on a new play as yet unnamed, written for her by Lois Zellner. She will require no rest or vacation, since, as her mother says, "Edith thinks no more of taking a trip across the continent than she does of going to New Jersey in the Hudson tube."

Metro pictures in which Miss Storey has starred are "Treasure of the Sea," "The Legion of Death," "The Eyes of Mystery," "Revenge," "Hearts Steadfast," "The Claim," and "The Demon."

De Hoff Wallops Kaiser in Thrift Stamp Program

Few theatre managers are doing more to help the government to awaken the people to the realization of Uncle Sam's big task than Louis De Hoff of the New Theatre, Baltimore.

With the opening of the third Liberty Loan drive, Mr. De Hoff arranged with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to have Mae Marsh, one of its famous stars, appear in person and in a short Liberty Loan film appropriate for the occasion. Many of Baltimore's city ofcials and representative citizens were among the throng that greeted the star.

Mr. De Hoff is also active in the present Thrift Stamp drive. Last week, in connection with his presentation of Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark," Mr. De Hoff had a special Thrift Stamp Day, and again a big sum went into the nation's coffers.

Mr. De Hoff issued a special program for the engagement. It was featured by a foreword on "Faith," which reveals his spirit and enterprise. This reads:

"Faith is one of the beautiful things in life. The Kaiser has no faith. Even a trusted soldier dare not approach near him. And because he has no faith nor trust in life his nation has become black and sordid.

"Everything he touches becomes rank and foul. He has cast faith aside and has tried to obtain by stealth and trickery the fertile fields and rich treasures of others. But this has only served to make faith a stronger tie to bind in closer harmony the civilized nations of the earth.

"Remember that your faith today should be primarily in the government of the United States, her allies, and in the huge armies we now have in the fighting fields of France. But back up your faith with your dollars—for dollars are only good for one single thing today—to win the war!

"Every 25-cent piece counts in backing up your faith in your Government! Thrift Stamps sell for a quarter. Get some today!"

Big Ballroom Scene Planned

One of the most attractive scenes in Sessue Hayakawa's initial picture, which is being made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation for Mutual release, is an immense ball room in which the star has unusual opportunity to display his talent.

W. J. Connery, treasurer of the corporation, gave orders this week for the construction of the set, which will be one of the largest and most elaborate that ever has been erected. The work of construction will be begun in a few days.

Wilfrid North Directs on Crutches

Takes Charge of Anita Stewart Feature Despite Fact He Has Not Recovered From Accident

WILFRID NORTH, Vitagraph director, is directing "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl" on crutches. "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl" is the first of a series of pictures chosen by President Albert E. Smith in which to star Anita Stewart.

Mr. North, with Miss Stewart and members of her company, suffered severe injuries recently when an automobile in which they were returning to the studio in Brooklyn was struck by a trolley car. The star was painfully hurt and was under the care of physicians for several days, but the director suffered a broken foot and after a week it had only healed sufficiently to permit him to hobble around on crutches.

While he was laid up, however, he was not idle and by telephone directed the construction of several important sets which were ready for him when he got back to the plant. In this way very little time was lost.

Miss Stewart is working exceptionally hard on "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," but she still finds time for war endeavors and is an active member of a Staten Island organization which is "mothering" the boys who go from that section of New York into Uncle Sam's service. She is also actively at work in the War Savings Stamp campaign and last week, while on location, enlisted more than a thousand youngsters as thrift stamp salesmen.

President Smith says that plans for the pictures which are to follow "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl" in the Anita Stewart series are maturing rapidly and he expects soon to be in a position to announce the titles. He adds that a number of important stories and world famous plays are under consideration and he gives assurance that the plays finally selected for Miss Stewart will be eminently suitable to her and capable of high-class reproduction.

Mutual Gets Chester Series

James M. Sheldon, the new president of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces the acquisition of the Chester Outing Pictures for distribution through his company. Mr. Sheldon has signed a contract with C. L. Chester for a series of twelve of these camera adventure stories, to be issued one a week.

Essanay Makes Series of Doll Pictures

Marionettes Register All Human Emotions and Enact Plot as If They Were Regular Players

ESSANAY has nearly completed a series of ten pictures which it claims are the strangest ever produced. The chief characters are Mugsy, Mose and Mike, marionettes, although in some of the pictures human characters take minor parts.

These dolls are fourteen inches high and act before the camera just as human beings act. They run the gamut of facial expressions, depicting fright, grief, joy, anger, terror, jealousy, hate, love or any other emotion. They have been so perfected that there is scarcely any perceptible hesitancy in their movements.

Each film carries a distinct plot, just as any picture in which real players enact the roles.

The direction has been in the hands of Howard S. Moss and Charles B. Bennes. Frequently it is necessary for the men manipulating the dolls to hold one position for hours at a time, to time the action perfectly so that there will be no jerkiness.

Causing the dolls to make various facial expressions also entails long, tedious work. This is the first time in doll pictures in which the dolls are able to show a change of countenance.

Among the first releases will be "Cracked Ice," "Ups and Downs," "All Balled Up," "Drafted," "Angel's Food" and "Their Jonah Day."

The pictures run five hundred feet each. Their release dates will be announced shortly.

World Comedy Release Dates

The first four comedies by Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler for World have been completed and the release dates set.

Beginning with the week of May 27 World will release a comedy every two weeks, alternating the stars. The schedule follows:

May 27, Fay Tincher in "Main 1-2-3"; June 10, Marie Dressler in "Fired"; June 24, Fay Tincher in "Some Job"; July 8, Marie Dressler in "Agonies of Agnes."

Miss Tincher is busily engaged in making future releases at her studio in California and has the picturization of several other comedies under consideration.

Miss Dressler has just notified the officials of World from Los Angeles that she is resting from the effects of her Liberty Loan tour, but will return to New York soon to begin a series of new comedies.

Miss Dressler is said to have addressed more meetings during her Liberty Loan tour than any other star.

Pathe Announces "Darkhorse" Film

"For Sale," to Be Released June 9, a Story by Fred Jackson with a Plot of Big Interest

FOLLOWING close upon the big advance bookings for the new feature, "The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward, comes the announcement that Pathe has another strong box-office feature up its sleeve.

"For Sale," with the co-starring team of Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, is the "dark horse" that promises to make a big clean-up.

Fred Jackson, author of many stage and screen successes, to say nothing of half a dozen novels, a score of popular magazine serials and some six hundred published short stories, wrote "For Sale." From A. H. Woods it was bought by Pathe and the photoplay leaps 'way beyond the most optimistic expectations.

So, after viewing the first available print of "For Sale," the Pathe executives decided that it was a picture deserving of a special campaign and it is going to be handled with this object in mind.

"For Sale" tells a rather unusual story and goes over strong. Much of its power may be found in the clean-cut and straight-from-the-shoulder way Miss Hulette and Mr. Hale play the leading roles.

Miss Hulette has the part of a stenographer who is madly in love with a clerk employed in the same office. This clerk has stolen from his employer and has lost on the stock market all he has taken. Fearing detection, he feigns illness, hoping to make a get-away. He plays upon the sympathies of his young, innocent sweetheart and she, thinking to get him to Colorado, where the climate may restore his health, urges the employer to give the boy the money and a vacation.

The employer's answer is to give her the money and ask her to marry him. Appalled at the sacrifice of selling herself for money, the girl comforts her conscience with the thought that the money is to save the life of her sweetheart and she yields.

The clerk goes West and is not in Denver a day before he flirts with a siren in a hotel lobby, turns to poker playing and shamelessly urges his girl back East to borrow more and more money for him.

Then the rascal learns that she has married her employer and hurries back to force blackmail. He frightens the girl and threatens her with the love letters she has written him even after she was married. She sees her happiness gone, but the demands of the clerk open her eyes to his villainy and worthlessness. Then—

Well, there is a very unconventional finish. It may cause audiences to gasp at its frankness. It has punch and propriety combined.

The picture will be released June 9.

Arbuckle Players "Rest"

Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle has been working his company so hard in the filming of "Good Night, Nurse," his latest comedy for Paramount release, that he decided they needed a rest or a change of scenery.

Accordingly, the portly comedian and his supporting fun creators descended upon Arrowhead Hot Springs, which is just about the most famous health resort in Southern California.

Instead of resting, Fatty immediately plunged into the finishing touches of the picture. With the hundreds of health seekers as "extras," the sanitarium and the mud baths for atmosphere, and the wild mountain scenery for the beauty eye of George Peters, the cameraman, Arbuckle promises to get so much fun out of a sanitarium that you may have to go to a sanitarium after seeing the film.

"While the jovial comedian and his comic associates are enjoying a rest (?) at Arrowhead Hot Springs a village street is being constructed at the Arbuckle studios, Long Beach. When they return the street will enter all the throes of a county fair.

Two New Goldwyn Directors

Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, announces the signing of new contracts with two directors. Reginald Barker has been engaged to produce Geraldine Farrar's forthcoming Goldwyn specials. The other is Charles Giblyn, who is already at work on the Goldwyn lot in Fort Lee, directing a production which is being kept a mystery for the present. Both Barker and Giblyn were at one time identified with Ince-Triangle features. Barker has recently been in charge of Paralta productions, while Giblyn has directed a number of the late Select features.

Two strong scenes from the new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "A Game with Fate," starring Harry Morey and Betty Blythe.

"A Game with Fate" Deals with Vital Theme

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Shows Peril of Circumstantial Evidence in Criminal Cases

"A GAME WITH FATE," starring Harry Morey with Betty Blythe, is scheduled as the Blue Ribbon feature for the week of June 3 by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. The story was written by Tom Terriss, director of Alice Joyce in Vitagraph features, and was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon. A strong cast, including Percy Standing, Denton Vane and Robert Gaillard, appears in support of the featured players.

The play is a powerful exposition of the danger of circumstantial evidence in criminal cases and reveals an amazing gamble with love and death in which a young millionaire comes perilously close to the electric chair. Harry Morey believes the role he has in this play is one of the most satisfactory he has had since his portrayal of Joe Garson in "Within the Law."

Incidentally, "A Game with Fate" marks Miss Blythe's first appearance as a Vitagraph leading woman. She has already attracted attention by her performances in "Over the Top," with Sergeant Empey, "The Business of Life," with Alice Joyce, and other Vitagraph features. As the statuesque "Mme. Arnot," she gave one of the outstanding delineations of "Over the Top" and this, combined with her extraordinary beauty, prompted President Smith to cast her for feature roles.

"A Game with Fate," it is declared, is one of the most finished productions from the standpoint of settings, which has appeared on the screen this season. Many of the interior and exterior scenes were made at the handsome Long Island estate of Captain Joseph R. De Lamar, millionaire mine owner and clubman.

A synopsis of "A Game with Fate" shows that it is an absorbing detective drama, as thrilling as it is different. Henry Dawson (Denton Vane), a wealthy young broker and club member, disappears while a guest at a garden party at the home of Elaine Huntington (Miss Blythe). He is last seen entering the car of Robert Harwell (Mr. Morey), who is in love with her, as is Richard Shields (Percy Standing).

Investigation by detectives shows that Dawson and Harwell had quarreled the day of the party about money matters and the missing man's butler declared that Harwell, in Dawson's absence, had robbed his master's desk of a large sum of money and tried to bribe him to silence. In the investigation, Shields is all sympathy for Elaine, but makes no attempt to protect Harwell.

Harwell offers no defense, denies nothing, and is tried for the murder and sentenced to the death chair. Not until he receives in his cell a newspaper telling of the torpedoing of a returning steamship and the death of "Herbert Wesley," does Harwell rouse to action. He summons Shields and it is then disclosed for the first time that the "murder" was a frame-up on a wager between himself, Shields and Dawson and that the latter had sailed from the country to give him (Harwell) a chance to win by getting himself convicted of a murder he did not commit. He sends Shields for an affidavit signed by Dawson and which paper alone, now he is dead, can stay the death sentence.

Shields gets the papers and summons Elaine. He explains the predicament of Harwell and threatens to destroy the affidavit unless she agrees to marry him at once. She refuses and goes to the district attorney with the story. Meantime, Shields has been mortally hurt by an automobile and the prosecutor tells Elaine that since the paper has been destroyed, only a statement by the dying man can save Harwell.

Elaine pleads with Shields, who promises to write a statement and does so in his dying efforts. Overjoyed that she has saved Harwell, the girl rushes to the district attorney, who opens the paper, which reads: "Harwell is guilty. He killed Dawson."

Shields dead and the affidavit destroyed, Harwell is about to be taken to the chair when Dawson returns. He had miraculously escaped the U-boat attack, although reported among the victims. The two bettors have a bad half hour with the district attorney and leave convinced that a man may very easily be sent to his death on circumstantial evidence, although innocent of the crime.

Paramount Gets Truex

According to a statement from Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Ernest Truex, the famous juvenile actor, has been engaged to play opposite, and to be featured with, Shirley Mason in the John Emerson-Anita Loos productions which will be released under the Paramount trademark.

Truex is the youngest comedy star on the speaking stage. One of the biggest hits of his career was scored in "The Very Idea," which closed recently at the Astor Theatre after a long run. He is now on tour with a new comedy, "What Could the Poor Girl Do?" Other vehicles in which Truex added notably to his prestige were "Very Good Eddie," "The Dummy" and "The Good Little Devil."

Select Star Makes Picture History

Norma Talmadge Feature Appears Simultaneously at Two Houses on Times Square in New York

FOR the first time in the history of the film industry in New York a star's feature production has been shown simultaneously in two prominent photoplay houses on Times Square.

"De Luxe Annie," the latest Select picture made by Norma Talmadge, in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck, was the feature attraction at the Rialto during the week commencing May 19, and also at Loew's New York Theatre across the street on Wednesday and Thursday of the same week.

Eighteen months ago one of Mary Pickford's pictures was shown simultaneously at the Strand Theatre and at the Academy of Music, but these theatres are more than two miles apart. It has also happened that a special picture being shown at a legitimate theatre was introduced into the program of a photoplay house in the last week of the recent Liberty Loan drive.

This is the first time, however, that S. L. Rothapfel has ever consented to play a star's feature production day and date with any other theatre, and this is the first time also that two photoplay houses which show first runs exclusively, and which are practically across the street from one another, have played the same attraction on the same day.

Accordingly, this performance stands unique in film history, a star's multiple-reel feature photoplay being shown simultaneously at two leading Broadway playhouses. It is a wonderful tribute to the popular recognition and approval which meet every production made by this Select star.

This was ably expressed in the words of a prominent film reviewer on one of New York's leading dailies who said:

"We hope Miss Talmadge will go on and make many more 'De Luxe Annies.'"

New Metro Comedy Drama Begun

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have placed in production at the Metro studio a new comedy-drama by Corporal Luther A. Reed, at present entitled "Both Members." Charles J. Brabin is directing the feature, which will be produced in five acts. George A. McGuire is assistant director and R. J. Bergquist is responsible for the photography. "Both Members" will have the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, manager of productions.

Fox "Standards" Celebrate Birthday

More Than a Score of Subjects Made in First Year—Elaborate Plans for Future

FOX FILMS call attention to the fact that it is just a year since work was started on "The Spy," the first issue under Standard Pictures, in a review of what these photoplays have meant and accomplished.

"Director Richard Stanton commenced on that drama in the latter part of May," the review says, "and since then we have made twenty other films for release as Standard Pictures. The mere mention of their names is almost sufficient to indicate the tremendous scope and power and remarkable variety of the subjects.

"Here are the pictures and the order in which they have been issued: 'The Spy,' 'The Honor System,' 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' 'The Conqueror,' 'Camille,' 'When a Man Sees Red,' 'Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp,' 'The Rose of Blood,' 'Treasure Island,' 'A Daughter of the Gods,' 'Troublemakers,' 'Du Barry,' 'Cheating the Public,' 'The Forbidden Path,' 'Les Miserables,' 'Woman and the Law,' 'Rough and Ready,' 'The Blindness of Divorce,' 'The Soul of Buddah' and 'True Blue.'

"We have many more exceptionally attractive productions for Standard Pictures that are to be released within the next few months. These include 'The Caillaux Case,' 'Queen of the Sea,' 'Under the Yoke' and 'Riders of the Purple Sage.'

"When we made our preliminary announcement about the forthcoming dramas last year, we promised that Standard Pictures would be all that their name implies—films worthy to be a standard of comparison. We have been careful, as the list shows so clearly, to cover a very wide range of subjects.

"We have made historical plays and have had impersonated historical characters of first importance; we have screened propaganda films such as 'Woman and the Law' and 'The Blindness of Divorce' and we were responsible for the innovation that was introduced by such productions as 'Jack and the Beanstalk' and others in that series.

"Our next year of Standard Pictures will be even more notable, if the plans which we are now rapidly completing are carried through to success."

Fire Sweeps Two Theatres

The Hidalgo and Eureka theatres, El Paso, were both damaged by the same fire recently. There was a crowd in each house, but panics were averted by requests from the managers to pass out in orderly fashion.

The Eureka, owned by R. S. Davis and W. H. Rattenbury, was damaged to the extent of $2,000. The Hidalgo, owned by Simon Turk, was damaged only slightly. Repairs are being made now.

J. A. Berst Talks of Proposed Combine

Declares Rumored Merger Would Be Welcomed Except That United Pictures Offers the Same and More

IN a supplementary statement issued by President J. A. Berst with his announcement to the exhibitor-members of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., that the enrollment of exhibitors to date has exceeded the minimum schedule by so wide a margin that the success of the project is assured, attention was called to the current rumors of a gigantic combination of producing and distributing interests.

"Many such reorganizations and mergers have been attempted and actually accomplished in the past, without visibly improving adverse conditions in the industry," the statement says.

"They have been mere shifting of the cards in the deck. But if reports are to be credited, the present proposed organization is revolutionary in character, designed to eliminate the terrific expense and waste involved in competitive distribution—in short, a tremendous compliment to the United plan.

"It would have been a thing to be welcomed with open arms by the exhibitor did not the United offer him the same benefits and more.

"The main question at issue between the United plan and one such as that which is now proposed is one of control. Under the innovation, those who have waxed fat at the exhibitors' expense, and who have begun to realize that they have outlived their usefulness, are making an effort to secure a strangle-hold on the industry and to declare themselves in on the new and better game.

"Under the United plan, the exhibitor is top-dog. And he will profit by his supremacy in the matter of prices, service, and in the quality of the goods to be exploited."

Simultaneously with the issuance of this statement, the second edition of the booklet containing the details of the United plan was published. The booklet shows the modifications and improvements in the method of operation that have been determined upon since Mr. Berst assumed charge.

The new booklet contains a list of the branch offices and the names of the representative exhibitors that have been appointed to the advisory board to date.

Hart Completes "Shark Monroe"

"Shark Monroe," William S. Hart's latest Ince-Artcraft picture, is at last completed after numerous delays occasioned by the star's governmental service for the Third Liberty loan. The star will shortly begin work on a new one, as yet unnamed and regarding which no immediate information is advanced. It is known, however, that Katherine MacDonald, who appeared as his leading woman in "Shark Monroe," will again fill that important place in the new film.

Hart has been considerably perturbed over newspaper announcements of his prospective engagement to a young woman of Butte, Montana, and though he makes no statements regarding the matter it is understood that all is well. There has, however, been no formal announcement.

Bara to Lead "Big Six"

"A Fool There Was," Theda Bara's famous vampire production, is to head the list of the Bara and William Farnum subjects that William Fox will release in re-edited and revised form beginning next month. A statement from the Fox offices says that the pictures, to be called "The Bix Six of 1918," will be issued in the following order:

"A Fool There Was," "The Bondman," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Plunderer," "The Two Orphans" and "A Soldier's Oath."

"As is apparent from the list," the statement continues, "the Bara and Farnum dramas are alternated. We have not yet decided definitely just when the first of these Bara super-productions is to go out.

value of such a department and to establish such a daily column. At any rate, I know that our interest in the subject as one of news and critical value has never relaxed."

C. H. Dennis, managing editor of The Chicago Daily News, writes:

"I appreciate what you say in regard to the interest attaching to motion picture news.

"The Daily News has on its staff a capable motion picture editor whose daily articles, in my opinion, give adequate publicity to the great element in modern life and popular instruction, high quality films.

"It is the intention of The Daily News to continue to deal with motion pictures in an equally effective manner."

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

"Men" to Be Shown in Leading Fox Houses

Exhibitors Who Have Seen Picture Say They Are Impressed Because of Well Handled Story and Good Cast

"MEN," the new Bacon-Backer six-part special, which is being distributed by Foursquare Pictures, is to be used in some of the leading Fox theatres.

Contracts were closed a few days ago for the presentation of this picture in the Terminal Theatre, the Academy of Music and other Fox houses in New York.

Exhibitors who have viewed "Men" express themselves as impressed with the picture, because it has a well handled story and a particularly well chosen cast. The settings really form a feature and were made after designs approved by George Backer.

"Those who know Mr. Backer's skill as a builder are aware that he is no less expert in the matter of interior furnishings," said P. V. R. Key of Foursquare. "To 'Men' he gave the closest attention possible with respect to the design of the settings and the selection and arrangement of the furniture, hangings and decorations.

"From every office the verdict of exhibitors is that from a production standpoint 'Men' is exceptional. And the start that has been made in the bookings would appear to indicate that they meant what they said."

Insures Ford for $100,000

Recognizing the extraordinary value of the services of Francis Ford and as a precautionary measure, the board of directors of the Francis Ford Producing Company (Inc.) has taken out a policy of $100,000 upon the life of the star and director general.

The negotiations were conducted through Charles J. McFadden, general agent for the Equitable Life Assurance Society in New York City, and the policy was delivered on May 18.

Mr. Ford and his company are now on the coast and well advanced in the production of the second of a series of six big features, entitled "Men of Today."

Title New Jester Comedy

After much discussion as to what the fifth of the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, "the International Mirth Maker," was to be named, "It's a Great Life," was finally decided on.

Giving a picture a proper name today is as big a problem as it is to get the right kind of material. A name can hardly be suggested that has not in some way been used before.

Mr. Steiner has impressed upon his entire production staff that under no circumstances are they to use a name similar to one already on the market and in no way to trade on what has gone before, claiming that there is still enough originality left in the world of pictures to be able to create new ideas.

Twede-Dan Resumes Work

Twede-Dan, "the International Mirth Maker," has returned to New York from a brief vacation and will start work on the tenth, eleventh and twelfth of the Jester Comedies, which will complete the work of the first year's output. This will bring the releases up to January.

With the completion of the three pictures, Twede-Dan intends to make a trip to France, his adapted country, and will return in time to take up his work on the second year's output.

Clever Methods of Advertising

PUBLICITY THAT MAKES FOR PROFITS

Go Easy on Poor Films—Harold B. Franklin

Buffalo Exhibitor Says Wait Until Picture Is Excellent, Then Tell the Public So Emphatically

IN AN amusement business comprised of 16,000 show places, a man has attained an honorable estate when, offhand, well-informed persons elect to name him as being one of the ten most distinctive and resourceful managers in the country.

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, takes this rank in the opinion of men who are watching the continuous development and improvement of motion picture presentation.

Mr. Franklin is the unhampered employe of a Big Boss named Mike Shea —amusement man and magnate of widespread theatrical and amusement interests and a fortune with which almost anyone would be quite content. Like most big men, Mike Shea works long hours, watches the details of his many interests and loves his job. And he has followed the wise precedent of leaders in other businesses and professions by surrounding himself with able, fighting, imaginative lieutenants.

Franklin passed his novitiate as manager of a theatre in an outlying district of Detroit. His enterprise soon won him advancement, and for two years he was solely responsible for the success attained by one of Detroit's largest downtown theatres. Later Franklin answered a call from the Lyric Theatre, Buffalo, at that time one of the city's most prosperous vaudeville and picture houses. It was his achievements at the Lyric that prompted Mr. Shea to obtain his services for the Hippodrome.

Readers of the motion picture journals know him best perhaps through the frequent reproductions of distinctive stage sets and by hearsay that he understands showmanship, publicity exploitation and newspaper advertising. These things that have made him talked about in the industry at large have likewise made him known to virtually everyone in Buffalo and an influence for good in his community.

A great believer in paid advertising in newspapers, Franklin does not ask the dailies to shoulder a burden alone. He knows that his basic product, the amusement he has to sell to the public, must be sound, must be clean, entertaining and challenging.

"If I have a strong, well-balanced show, that is the time I call upon the big siege guns of paid newspaper advertising and publicity," says Franklin. "And I lay off to a minimum on a show that does not come up to our own expectations. I know that if I sell a poor show or just an average show I am doing Mr. Shea harm for his big institution. I would be destroying confidence and injuring our standing. The people of Buffalo know that when we say we have a good show at the Hippodrome it IS a good show. Naturally, we try to do this every week.

"I think that one of the greatest errors showmen make is the misuse of newspapers. They are the great mediums for instant communication with the public and the exhibitor who promotes bad shows knowingly is doing himself harm. The boomerang always comes back.

"At the Hippodrome, having brought the public inside our house, we take pride in what we give them. We think we have found visual relief for our audiences in our frequent resort to most unusual stage sets—sets created for the purpose of inducing relaxation, for relieving tension and strain; sets lighted so as to be visible and effective."

Mr. Franklin has just evolved a new plan for the presentation of comedies and will introduce it with "Smiling Bill" Parsons' Capitol Comedies, that Goldwyn releases, and with the occasional farce comedies or melodramatic comedies in which Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand are seen—for the Hippodrome is the first run home of Goldwyn Pictures in Buffalo.

"Laughter is contagious," explains Franklin. "If you see a man, woman or child begin to smile or laugh heartily you yourself relax. But how can you see whether someone near to you is going to laugh in darkened motion picture theatres? The answer is, lighten your house a bit when a comedy is being run; use a three-quarter light; maybe more light than that—get as much light as you can without hurting your screen values. Immediately everyone will be able to see others nearby and people will no longer keep laughs exclusively to themselves. They will share their amusement with others."

Fairbanks Back on the Job

Douglas Fairbanks returned to his Hollywood studio last week after spending five days of "roughing it" with the cowboys on a large ranch in Montana.

The star was a nervous wreck when he returned to Los Angeles after his four weeks of Liberty Loan work, and upon the advice of his doctor departed for "the great outdoors."

CURRENT AND COMING RELEASES

WITH THE STORY OF THE PICTURE

Artcraft

A Doll's House—(Five Reels)—June 3—Featuring Elsie Ferguson. An interesting feature for houses with high-class audiences.

Story—"A Doll's House" is taken from Ibsen's play. Many years before the story opens, Nora Helmer had forged the endorsement of her dying father to a note upon which she raised money to take her husband on a trip that saved his life. Helmer becomes manager of a bank where Krogstad, the man Nora borrowed the money from, works. Nora has kept her debt a secret from her husband, paying it off in installments saved from housekeeping money, as he has an inflexible rule against borrowing. Helmer decides to discharge Krogstad because he had once been in disgrace as a confessed forger, and Krogstad threatens Nora to reveal her forgery and disgrace her, unless she gets Helmer to reinstate him. Nora is unable to do so and Helmer learns the truth. He storms bitterly at Nora, and then receives word from Krogstad that he has decided not to make public Nora's offence. Helmer is ready to forgive his wife, but she insists he has kept her too ignorant of life and leaves him, saying she will not live with him until they can be one in spirit as well as in name.

Director, Maurice Tourneur. Cameraman, John Vanderbrock. General effect—This is a story which it is hard to make logical upon the screen, as few will be able to sympathize with Nora's desertion of her children, without the explanation afforded by Ibsen's elaborate argument, which also, many have found inadequate. Star—Always attractive, and too intelligent to play such a stupid woman as Nora Helmer. Support—Excellent, especially Alexander K. Sahnnon as Krogstad. Photography—Excellent. Production—Artcraft standard.

This is, frankly, a highbrow picture, and it is a question whether Mr. Tourneur has made the argument clear. The people are interesting, however, and the whole thing well done, so far as the actual screening is concerned.

De Luxe

The Street of Seven Stars—(Six Reels)—No release date—Featuring Doris Kenyon. A pretty story, long drawn out and loosely told.

Story—Harmony Wells, an American girl studying violin in Paris, is befriended by Dr. Peter Byrne and Dr. Anna Gates. Peter falls in love with her, but she is too ambitious to listen, though she is very fond of him. The three of them take into their home a little invalid boy, whose father is dead and whose mother, a famous dancer, has deserted him. Harmony finally achieves success as a violinist, and a manager wants to put her under a long contract. Before she agrees, the little invalid is found to be dying, and Harmony goes to the theatre and brings his mother to him. The mother is heart-broken, and tells Harmony that she would willingly give up all her success for the joys of home and motherhood. Harmony realizes at last that she loves Peter, and turns her back on her career to marry him and return to America. The original story was a novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Director, John B. O'Brien. Cameraman, William S. Crolly. General effect—A story with a good theme that could have been told in four reels, padded out to six, with a lot of incidents, interesting in themselves, but clogging the story. Star—Miss Kenyon is charming in her lighter work, but her serious moments are not convincing. Support—Excellent, specially Hugh Thompson as Peter, Carey Hastings as the woman doctor, and Stephen Carr as the invalid boy. Photography—Fine.

If this picture is cut extensively before it is offered for release, it can still be made into a good, average production, but it lacks punch, though it is very pretty.

Fox

Blue-Eyed Mary—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring June Caprice. A good story of the ingenue heroine who straightens all tangles.

Story—Mary DuBois, a simple village maiden, sets out to reconcile her father and her grandmother, the latter a fashionable old lady living in New York. The grandmother likes Mary, but a scheming nephew who lives with her, does his best to put the little girl in wrong, as he wants to get the grandmother's money when she dies. At last the grandmother gets wise to the nephew's ways, and refuses to give him any more money to waste, so he robs the family safe. Mary, who has been rebuked by grandma for entertaining her country sweetheart in the fashionable home, is about to sneak home without notice, and sees the robbery. The nephew accuses her, but an unexpected turn of affairs shows him up, and every little thing comes out all right.

Director, Harry Millarde. Cameraman, Al Leach. General effect—This is a typical June Caprice offering, with a lot of cuteness and enough melodrama to give it the punch. Star—Miss Caprice is developing constantly and is about at her best in this. Support—Good. Photography—Fine. Production—Good.

This kind of picture is needed as variation from the heavy thrillers and the more serious dramas. It has charm and is easy to look at, and while it will not raise the roof, it will please most people.

Graphic Film Corporation

Cecelia of the Pink Roses—(Seven reels)—June 3—Featuring Marion Davies. A heart interest story with a slow beginning but a good ending.

Story—Jeremiah Madden, a bricklayer, has an invalid wife and two children, Cecelia and Johnny. He invents a new kind of brick that brings him a fortune, but his wife dies before she can share it. Conforming to her wish, the father sends the daughter to a fashionable school and tries to make a gentleman of the son. The daughter becomes polished, and a love affair develops between her and Harry Twombly, the son of a banker. She is afraid her father's uncouthness and her brother's dissipation will estrange her lover, but he proves the salvation of the little family at last.

Director, Julius Steger. Cameraman, Andre Barlatier. General effect. A story that could easily have been told in five reels, though the sympathies of the audience are kept alive even when the story lags. Star—Marion Davies is pretty and graceful, but has not yet become an accomplished screen actress. Support—Excellent, especially Edward O'Connor as the father and George LeGuere as the brother; Photography—Beautiful; Barlatier at his best.

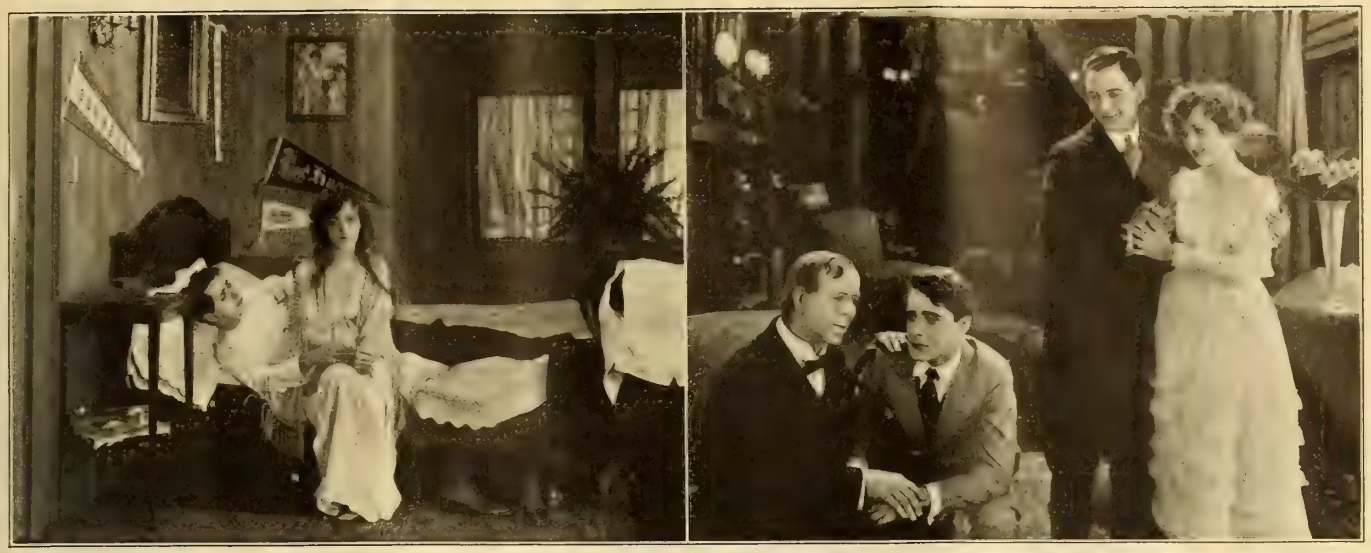
This is the sort of picture that goes well in houses in residential sections, where there is not so much a demand for thrills and tense dramatic action as for the kindlier emotions.

Goldwyn

All Woman—(Five reels)—June 2—Featuring Mae Marsh. Best Mae Marsh picture since "The Cinderella Man."

Story—Susan Sweeney, a poor factory girl, unexpectedly inherits a half interest in a hotel in a small town, the other half interest being the saloon interest, owned by Kibby, a rough customer. By her industry, Susan builds up her part of the business, aided by Austin Strong, the county attorney, who takes a personal interest in her welfare. Susan persuades a drunkard to reform, which so enrages Kibby that a fight is staged in the saloon which assumes such violent proportions that Kibby loses his license for disturbing the peace. One of Kibby's friends is a crooked county treasurer, Tupper, who learns that Strong has the goods on him, and at the same time discovers Strong's sister registered, though innocently, at the hotel as the wife of Dick Wellman, whom she was eloping with. Tupper tears the page out of the register to have a weapon against Strong. Susan and the girl's sweetheart go to Tupper's house to get the paper and in a struggle Tupper is killed. At the inquest a witness tells of seeing Wellman in compromising circumstances, but Susan explains he was her guest at the hotel. Strong's suspicions are aroused, but after the coroner's jury has brought in a verdict of suicide, everything is explained.

Director, Hobart Henley. Cameraman, Oliver T. Marsh. General effect—A rather complicated story, that shifts around too much to be very strong. Star—Miss Marsh, more active and more herself than in some previous work. Support—Good character types for small town stuff. Photography—Good, with interesting trick night stuff.



This is a good average picture for nearly any kind of audience, but not what it might have been if the scenario had been tightened up.

Harry McRae Webster Productions

Reclaimed—(Seven reels)—No date—Featuring Mabel Julienne Scott and Niles Welch. A good five-reeler teased into seven reels, weakening a good old-fashioned melodrama.

Story—Mark Sinister kills a Mexican bandit and his wife, leaving their little daughter, Amorita, alone in the world. Years later Amorita is in New York, struggling to make a virtuous living. A scheming couple get hold of her and try to sell her to Sinister, the murderer of her parents, but she escapes. Meanwhile Sinister and his tool, Jasper Creature, have been blackmailing Truman because of a forgery which Truman committed. Truman dies of heart failure and the pair blackmail his son, who pays to save his father's name, and is so robbed of all he has in the world. Later they fasten a burglary upon him. Fleeing from the police he comes upon Amorita, who is about to jump off a bridge in despair. He stops a passing automobile and bundles her in upon the occupants, and then gives himself up to the police. Truman serves his term. In the car with Amorita happened to be the sister of Creature, who befriended the girl, and thus Sinister comes across her again. After a complicated series of events and coincidences, everything is settled as usual.

Director, Harry McRae Webster; Cameraman, Harry Forbes. General effect—An impossible story, with a good many thrilling episodes, drawn out entirely too long, and with titles that sound as if they had been written by the author of Diamond Dick. Stars—Miss Scott is one of the most pleasing young stars on the screen, and will make a big hit; Welch is a satisfying juvenile lead. Support—Average. Photography—Very good indeed. Production—Sets too crowded with gew-gaws and truck, but exteriors fine.

If this picture is trimmed, and the titles rewritten, and the silly names of the characters changed to human sounding ones, it ought to be a big winner at houses where the audiences are not too critical of the reasonableness of a story. The one question of how the Mexican waif becomes a castaway in New York is a poser, and there are others.

Metro

Pay Day—(Five reels)—May 27—Featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Here is the greatest jazz melodrama ever produced.

Story—"Pay Day" begins with an argument between the Drews, Mrs. Drew and President Rowland of Metro urging Sydney to do a five-reel drama, while he wants to stick to one-reel comedies. This introduces the melodrama itself, which is a hummer. Kirke Brentwood, a typical society villain, dress suit and all, gets Doris Fenton to steal for him, and then lets her go to prison while he marries another. When the girl has served her sentence she confronts Brentwood, but he has just murdered his wife, and he frames the crime upon her. Doris is sent up for life, but escapes, and finds Brentwood married again. She tricks his wife into suspecting an affair between her and Brentwood, and then inoculates him with leprosy germs.

Director, Sidney Drew. Cameraman, A. Martinelli. General effect—If the audience has a sense of humor, it will roar all through this; if it is stupid, it will take it straight and have a lot of thrills; it simply can't miss fire. Stars—A new departure for the Drews; Sidney as the debonnair rascal and Mrs. Drew as the persecuted heroine are immense. Support—Adequate. Photography—Good. Production—Satisfactory.

It is well to remember that this is the first time the Drews have been seen in a five-reel feature. It is an opportunity to clean up among their admirers. Their drawing power has not often been appreciated, though it is probable that many fans have paid to see their little comedies when the five-reeler that took up most of the show got the credit for the business. This should be good for the maximum run of the first-class houses in particular, if properly advertised.

Paramount

Missing—(Five reels)—June 3—J. Stuart Blackton Production. A peach of a war picture with a message to women to sing and smile.

Story—From the novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward. Nell and Hester, two sisters, are comparatively poor. Hester, the elder, is anxious to have Nell make a wealthy marriage, but Nell falls in love with George Surratt, a young lieutenant of modest means and marries him. Surratt goes to the front and is reported wounded and missing. A neighbor of the sisters is Sir William Farrell, who is barred from military duty by lameness. He is wealthy and Hester tries to convince Nell that her husband is dead and urges her to marry Sir William. Nell remains true to her husband's memory, however. Hester intercepts a telegram from a doctor at an army hospital, telling them that a man he believes to be Surratt has been brought in, but is suffering from shell shock, and his mind is a blank. Hester makes an excuse and goes to the hospital, but denies that the man is her sister's husband. She says nothing about this to Nell, and later a telegram comes informing Nell that the man is her husband. The sister confesses, and Nell goes to her wounded husband, restoring his memory by singing his favorite song.

Director, J. Stuart Blackton. Cameraman, William O'Connell. General effect—This is one of the best war pictures possible for the folks at home, for everyone will enjoy its philosophy of hoping for the best even when there is bad news. Cast—Thomas Meighan, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon have the leading roles, and are all fully in the spirit of the picture; Gordon is a comer. Photography—Brilliant, with some of the best visions and double exposures ever seen. Production—Beautifully done from beginning to end.

This is, to the writer's notion, the best work J. Stuart Blackton has ever done, and by all odds the finest thing he has turned out since he joined Paramount. It ought to go big everywhere, as there is love interest, war interest, tension, and everything that goes to make a success.

Pathe

The Yellow Ticket—(Five reels)—June 2.—Featuring Fannie Ward. A big melodramatic sex story with cast worth advertising.

Story—"The Yellow Ticket" is taken from the successful play of the same name, and follows the original story exactly. Anna Mirrel, a young Jewess, anxious to go to her dying father in Petrograd, learns that the only way a Jewess can get a passport is to take out a "yellow ticket," the Russian badge of shame. To escape the unearned disgrace, she later assumes the name of a young woman who has been killed. Her ruse is discovered by the police, the head of which, Baron Andrey, offers her immunity from persecution at the price of virtue. In a struggle she kills him with a hatpin. She is arrested, but through the efforts of a young American, who has fallen in love with her, she is freed, with the provision that they both leave the country.

Director, William Parke. Cameraman, Percy Hillburn. General effect—A story that holds the interest constantly, the disagreeable features being handled with extreme care. Star—Miss Ward's best dramatic effort. Support—Remarkable, cast being really all-star, including Warner Oland, Milton Sills, Helene Chadwick, Armand Kalicz, J. H. Gilmour and Anna Lehr. Photography—Good. Production—Exteriors and sets entirely adequate, but the action is so absorbing that little attention is paid to the scenery.

This picture should be good for the maximum run of any house, as its appeal is universal, except for children. The play is well known, Russian stuff is good now, and the supporting cast, no less than the star, has real drawing power.

Paramount

Prunella—(Five reels)—May 27—Featuring Marguerite Clark. The greatest attraction of the month for a high-class house.

Story—"Prunella" is a fanciful story, taken from the play by Laurence Houseman and Granville Barker. It has a fairy atmosphere and is done in the most imaginative style. Prunella lives with three aunts, who keep her in ignorance of the world, and especially of men and love. A strolling band of players invades the retreat, and Prunella falls in love with Pierrot. She runs away with him and becomes a member of his troupe, but he thinks marriage is silly, and after they have been married two years he tires of her and deserts her. She had become known as Pierette, and so she makes a little grave and puts a headstone on it, saying, "Here lies Pierrette." Pierrot comes back to find her, and believes her dead, so he goes to the house where she used to live, hoping there "either to forget or remember." Prunella goes back to the place as well, and they finally "live happily ever after."

Director, Maurice Tourneur. Cameraman, John Vanderbroeck. General effect—This is an exquisite love story, and as such will have a wide appeal, but it needs an intelligent audience to appreciate its artistic qualities. Star—Miss Clark is prettier than ever as the sad little heroine. Support—The other characters are like a lot of charming marionettes. Photography—Exquisite. Production—This is done something in the fashion of "The Bluebird," with painted drops which emphasize the unreality of the story, and are wonderfully decorative.

This is the kind of picture that will make new friends for the movies among people who often sneer at them. It will not make much of a hit with the sort of movie fans who dote on serials and vampire pictures, but as a step forward in moving picture art it ranks with "The Bluebird" and deserves the highest success.

Select

De Luxe Annie—(Six reels)—May—Featuring Norma Talmadge. A novelty crook play; best acting this star has done since "Poppy."

Story—Julie Kendal's husband, Walter, is a criminologist. He attempts to trap a pair of crooks but they escape, and one of them, in a struggle with Julie, strikes her a blow that deprives her of her memory, and she wanders away. She enters a partnership, for business only, with one of the crooks, Jimmy Fitzpatrick, who does not know she is the wife of the man he had tried to victimize. Through detectives, Kendal finally locates his wife, and after many thrilling adventures, and with the aid of a brain specialist, the family is reunited.

Director, Roland West. Cameramen, Albert Moses and Ed. Wynard. General effect—A story that is so original that while the end is fairly easy to foresee, the question of how it is to be accomplished holds the interest. Star—Miss Talmadge is looking better than in some of her recent pictures, and has never been more on tiptoe. Support—Eugene O'Brien as the crook, who comes through clean at last, and Frank Mills as the husband, both parts ideally cast. Photography—Beautiful. Production—Satisfactory.

Here is another of those pictures that can be offered to any audience with perfect assurance that they will like it. The crime element is kept well subdued, because the drama is strong enough to carry the tension. Wherever Norma Talmadge is liked this should be a triple winner, as it presents her in an entirely new guise.

Triangle

High Stakes—(Five reels)—May 26—Featuring J. Barney Sherry. A Raffles story with an original heart punch at the end.

Story—Ralph Stanning is a gentleman burglar who steals famous pieces of jewelry, not for profit, but for the game. Inspector Culvert of Scotland Yard swears he will get the goods on this clever cracksman, for while convinced of Stanning's guilt he cannot prove a single offence. Stanning, in a strange adventure, rescues a despondent young woman, and, being lonely, he marries her. The match turns out very happily for both, and with this new interest in life Stanning reforms and sends back all his loot to Culvert. Five years later a string of pearls is missing from a home where Stanning is a guest. Culvert comes to him with a story that he has left the service, and his son, a guest at the house where the pearls were stolen, is suspected. He pleads with Stanning to help him. Stanning, at the end of a week, turns over the pearls to Culvert, who thereupon declares him under arrest. Then comes an original twist that is too good to tell.

Director, Arthur Hoyt. Cameraman, Elgin Leslie. General effect—A high-class story of its kind, lacking only the romantic interest that it would have if the crook-hero were a younger man, but a younger man could not play the part half so well as Sherry. Star—The kind of a part that suits Sherry to the ground, well groomed and dignified. Support—Fair. Photography—Good. Production—Thorough.

This is a fine piece of story-telling. It has none of what are usually called "big scenes," but runs smoothly from beginning to end, and should please almost any audience.

Vanco Films Company

Jim's Folks—(Short subject)—A picturization of one of Bill Stinger's patriotic poems.

Story—How Mary, after Jim enlists, comforts her sweetheart's Dad and Mother, and how, when Dad is sorely worsted in a fight with a Teutonic millionaire and his chauffeur, Mary puts the twain to rout, forms a theme which both thrills and amuses.

Director, Bert Van Tuyle. General effect—Good. A pleasing patriotic picture running between one and two reels.

Vitagraph

Baree, Son of Kazan—(Five reels)—May 27.—Featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. An A1 thrilling melodrama of the frozen North.

Story—Baree, the dog from which the picture gets its title, is half dog and half wolf, and has been tamed by Nepeese, the daughter of Perriot, a trapper, after she rescued him from a brutal trader, McTaggart. The trader tires of the Indian woman he has been living with, and wants to marry Nepeese, but she repulses him. Trying to force his attention on the girl, McTaggart has a fight with her father and kills him. He pursues the girl, who throws herself into a stream, and she is believed dead. Jim Carvel, a stranger, rescues Nepeese's dog, Baree, from the trader, and the animal leads him to Nepeese's hiding place, where Carvel falls in love with the girl. McTaggart again finds the girl, but when he again tries to force himself on her, the dog kills him. It is from a novel by James Oliver Curwood.

Director, David Smith. Cameraman, Charles Seeling. General effect—A tense story of desperate adventures, all done in so logical a manner that it has not the ridiculous inconsistencies of most melodramas. Star—Miss Shipman has never done better work. Support—Not much of a part for Whitman, but Al Garcia as McTaggart and Joe Rickson as the girl's father are fine types. Photography—Beautiful, especially the snow scenes. Production—Interesting because it gets away from the usual line of stuff.

This is a fine attraction for a house where what is usually known as "red-blooded" pictures are popular; the dog is a "bear."

Prominent scenes from "Missing," J. Stuart Blackton's latest production for Paramount release.

Artcraft

A Doll's House—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring Elsie Ferguson.

Reared by a kind and indulgent father, Nora Helmar, portrayed by Miss Ferguson, became in truth what he affectionately called her—his doll child, and whenever she had an idea he promptly arrested its development. So when she married her lawyer husband she became his bride mechanically, and when the struggle for existence almost overwhelms them Nora meets the emergency with her usual listlessness and apathy.

Helmar falls ill from worry, and Nora, for the first time in her life, conceives an original idea with the sole thought of saving her husband's life. She negotiates a loan with Krogstadt, a cold-blooded, avaricious money-lender, signing a note and forging her father's name as an endorser without realizing the gravity of her procedure.

For eight years she lives under the dread of exposure, and when disgrace impends, her husband, fanatic in his honesty, is about to discard her when Krogstadt, the blackmailer, evinces a change of heart and sends the husband the incriminating evidence against his wife. With the fear of disgrace gone, the husband's manner changes and he seeks to reinstate his doll wife to her lost place in his household, but her troubles have transformed her sentiments and ideas, and she leaves her husband, convinced that they are mismated, and that happiness for both lies in their separation.

Bluebird

A Broadway Scandal—(Five Reels)—June 1—Featuring Carmel Myers.

David Kendall and his father run a private sanitarium and hospital, to which in the dead of night a young French girl, Nenette Bisson, is brought with a bullet wound in the shoulder. The circumstance is suspicious, but young Kendall does not report the matter to the police. As she recovers, Nenette falls in love with him, and he would have fallen in love with her except that he had a notion that all French women were shallow, unconventional and not to be taken seriously.

When Nenette discovers that Kendall's attentions have no matrimonial intent she is heartbroken, and returns to her father's home and continues dancing in his cafe in spite of the offers of several theatrical managers who have seen her dance. But Kendall pursues her to the cafe just as she has consented very reluctantly to marry a man for whom she does not care. She is arrested but not sentenced. The disgrace causes her father to drive her from home and she goes on the stage.

Kendall volunteers for medical service at the front and there amid scenes of valor and wonderful devotion of French women he learns the respect the lack of which had caused bitterness in two lives.

Fox

Blue-eyed Mary—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring June Caprice.

The father of "Blue Eyed Mary" Du Bois has been disowned by his wealthy mother because of his marriage. Mary goes to New York to reconcile them. The grandmother has a nephew who is planning to inherit her fortune. When Mary arrives the grandmother refuses to give the nephew more money and calls him a spendthrift. The nephew robs the safe and accuses Mary. At this point comes a peculiar twist in the story that brings happiness to Mary and her parents.

Goldwyn

All Woman—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring Mae Marsh.

Susan Sweeney, a New York factory girl, inherits a hotel in an Adirondack town which proves to be a very much run-down, ramshackle, old building. She is urged by Austin Strong, a young lawyer and politician of the town, to abandon it and content herself with the profits. There are many forlorn, neglected children in the neighborhood and Susan decides to remain and "mother" them, and to rehabilitate the town. Strong's sister and her fiance elope and seek lodging in Susan's hotel, intending to be married the following day.

Susan urges them to reconsider, and they decide to return to their homes, but not before they have registered as man and wife. A political rival of Strong's plans to use this evidence, but before he can put it into effect Dick, the fiance, tries to buy him off. There is a violent quarrel and the guilty man is killed. Susan shields Dick and helps him to escape in her anxiety to save Strong's political prospects.

Evidence points toward her as the murderess. At this point Dick and Strong's sister confess the truth. The townspeople, acquainted with the true facts, elect Strong. He pleads for Susan's forgiveness and she tells him that everything she has done was for love of him. Their future starts out very happily.

Slippery Slim's Inheritance—(One Reel)—Essanay—June 1—With Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd.

Mustang Pete and Slippery Slim are in love with the fair Sophie. Slim borrows money from his sister so he may lavish gifts on the woman of his heart. Slim's sister is in love with Mustang, but he spurns her love. One fine morning Slim receives a letter from an attorney to the effect that he has been left $10,000. This he shows to Sophie, but she is afraid to marry him for fear Mustang will do something desperate. Slim conceives the idea of leaving a note for Sophie, in which he states that he is about to commit suicide and wants her to marry him before he dies, thereby gaining his fortune. Sophie rushes to Slim's bedside, where the marriage ceremony is performed. The queen of Snakeville becomes furious when she discovers that her husband is very much alive and that the money was left to his sister. Mustang rushes to Slim's home only to discover that the deceitful one's sister has been married to another man.

Sophie's Legacy—(One Reel)—Essanay—June 8—With Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt.

Sophie receives a letter telling her that she has fallen heir to her uncle's vast estate. Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete hear of her good fortune. Then cames the struggle to see who will marry her. Mustang is making great progress, but not without Slim taking notice. One day as Mustang is telling Sophie of his love for her a beautiful blonde enters and exclaims, "My darling husband." Sophie is broken-hearted until Slim arrives and comforts her, but Mustang sends an old Indian squaw to claim Slim as her husband. His plan fails and Slim marries Sophie right before his eyes.

Broncho Billy's Grit—(One Reel)—Essanay—June 7.

Broncho Billy, intoxicated, enters Brown's general store and knocks over a barrel of brooms when the grocer interferes. Brown finally shoots Broncho Billy in the wrist. Mary Water enters and discovering Billy suffering from the wound, washes and bandges it for him. The following day Broncho Billy calls on Mary to thank her for her kindness. Mr. Walker, overhearing the conversation, intrudes and orders the cow-puncher off his premises. That afternoon the sheriff tells Broncho Billy to leave town immediately or take the consequences. The following day Mary's brother takes several horses to the nearby town to sell. The sale is made in good order and everything goes smoothly enough until the weak son meets a gambler. The gambler has no trouble getting the son intoxicated and taking his money from him by a clever gambling scheme. Broncho Billy enters the saloon and is nonplussed when he sees Mary's brother gambling the watch with the fair face of his sister in it. Broncho Billy holds up the gambling joint, restores the money to its owner and takes the half paralyzed form to his home.

Metro

Lend Me Your Name—(Five Reels)—May 27—Featuring Harold Lockwood.

The Earl of Gilleigh, dyspeptic and henpecked, is about to commit suicide because his wife is coming home, when a noise rouses him, and he finds a burglar in his dining room. To his amazement, when unmasked, the burglar is his double, and they exchange identities, Ellis, the intruder, becoming the earl and the earl seeking the free life of the road.

He establishes himself upon one of his estates, to which Ellis presently comes. He falls in love with Rosalind, pupil at a nearby boarding school, and wins her affection, but the wife follows, and charges the girl with flirting with a married man. Ellis, as the best way out, proceeds to break the wife of her nagging tricks, and with the earl once more in his rightful position he is free to win Rosalind all over again.

The Demon—(Five Reels)—June 3—Featuring Edith Storey.

Perdita is an American girl, sold in childhood in an Algerian slave market and reared in the bandit-ridden hills of Corsica. Her parents having been assassinated by order of the Sultan of Morocco, the child was rescued by her nurse, Aissa. Jim Lassells, a young New Yorker, unexpectedly learns that by the death of Harold Brooks, his cousin, he inherits his fortune. Brooks had married a Greek woman and Perdita is their daughter.

When Jim and his tutor, Tom Reardon, visited a slave market, they buy a Christian child, which is offered for sale, in order to keep her out of the hands of a Moslem. Jim places Perdita, the name given the girl by Aissa, in a private school in Corsica. She grows to maturity, meanwhile developing a fiery disposition, which wins her the name of "The Demon."

Before the end of the story Jim learns that Perdita is the daughter of Brooks and is therefore the rightful heir to the money. However, after scenes of stirring adventure, Perdita and Jim find mutual attraction in each other, which removes any need of dividing the fortune.

Paralta

Shackled—(Five Reels)—May 27—Featuring Louise Glaum.

The play deals with the life of Lola Dexter, a young girl alone in the world, whose life is apparently wrecked through her love for Walter Cosgrove, a man with the veneer of a gentleman, but through whose nature there runs an undercurrent of baseness. On the eve of his wedding to Edith Danfield, he tells Lola that his funds are exhausted and that he is going to marry this girl, whose father is a man of wealth.

Grief-stricken, Lola goes away from the little town and arrives in Palm Beach, Florida, where she becomes the companion of a man who is paralyzed and who is spending the Winter months in that resort. Lola's sunny disposition awakens new interest in life for the man. He falls in love with her, and she consents to marry him. They return to his estate, where she finds that he is the father of the girl Cosgrove married. Terror-stricken, she decided not to let any one know her past.

After a brief honeymoon Cosgrove and his bride return. He soon neglects her and becomes notorious in his affairs with women. Lola dares not intercede for fear he will denounce her to her husband, whom she has been nursing back to health and who is now able to walk. The thread of the story becomes further tangled when Lola discovers that Edith is about to desert her worthless husband to elope with her former sweetheart. The unexpected happens, and the final smashing climax sweeps aside the veils of intrigue and deceit with a single stroke which brings happiness as its reward.

Paramount

Love's Conquest—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring Lina Cavalieri.

Gismonda, a duchess of Athens at the beginning of the sixteenth century, is courted in vain by several powerful barons, but she devotes her time to affairs of state and to her little son.

Prince Zaccaria, an unsuccessful suitor, believes the child his chief rival and has him put into a cage with a lion. Gismonda offers to marry the man who will save the boy. Almerio, a peasant, is the hero, but the proud duchess refuses to fulfill her vow. Later Almerio, spurred by his love for the lady, wins a high place in the army and in the hearts of the people, who are angry at Gismonda for breaking her word. Still refusing to marry a peasant, she retires to a convent. There she learns that Prince Zaccaria placed her child in danger and, seeking him out one night, stabs him. To save Gismonda's reputation, Almerio announces himself the murderer. This last act of devotion awakens Gismonda's love and she confesses her crime and the reason and states that she will now marry Almerio.

Pathe

A Daughter of the West—(Five Reels)—May 26—Featuring Baby Marie Osborne.

June is the daughter of Stella and Ralph Gordon, a mismated couple. When Ralph discovers Stella at a fashionable seaside resort in the arms of Allan Standish he leaves her and takes June out west to Hell's Gulch, where he has extensive mining interests. The inhabitants of Hell's Gulch are being terrified by bandits and Gordon is elected sheriff. Standish arrives in town, buys the toughest dance hall in the place and openly defies Gordon. Gordon is in love with Sarah Malcomb, the pretty little governess who has charge of June, but after a terrific fight, in which the bandit chief, "Rawhide Peter," is captured and Standish makes his escape, Gordon discovers Sarali taking food to Standish, and feels that once again he has lost in the game of love to this worthless cur. As he is about to leave the town, however, Sarah confesses that she was merely moved by a sense of pity to help Standish, as she falls into Gordon's arms.

The Yellow Ticket—(Five Reels)—June 2—Featuring Fannie Ward.

The story deals with adventures of Anna Mirrel, a young Jewish girl, whom the Secret Service of Russia attempt to force into the life of an outcast because of her race.

Baron Andrey, head of the Okrana (Secret Police), sends Petrov Paviak to the small town of Tasepevka to stir up the Moujiks against the Jews in that district. The storm of violence breaks shortly after Anna Mirrel sends her father on his way to St. Petersburg. The Mojiks massacre the Jews, among them Anna's mother.

Anna receives word from St. Petersburg that her father is dying. Unable to leave "the pale of the settlement" without a passport from the Secret Police, Anna throws herself upon their mercy. Insolently they tell her there is only one passport which she may have. She eagerly requests it and is handed the Yellow Ticket, the badge of dishonor which is carried by the unfortunate outcasts of society.

Believing that she may accept the ticket in the crisis and still remain virtuous, Anna takes it. She is subjected to the jibes and coarse jokes of every official she encounters. She finds her father being cared for in the home of Marya Varenka, whose little sister becomes a victim of the Okrahna, and throws herself from the window of Baron Andrey's house. Although torn by anguish and hatred, Marya aids Anna. Father Mirrel dies shortly after Anna's arrival and Marya is killed.

Anna, after burying her father, seeks employment by using Marya's name. She is engaged as a tutor by Mr. Seaton, an American diplomat, whose daughter desires to learn the Russian language. In the Seaton home she meets and gives material to Julian Rolfe, an American journalist, who is writing a series of articles exposing Russia.

As she is leaving the Seaton home, Baron Andrey invites her to call at his apartment. She is followed to her boarding house by a Secret Agent of the Okrahna and driven into the street.

Rolfe arrives a few moments later and searches everywhere for her in vain. In desperation, Anna goes to the apartment of Baron Andrey. He attacks her and she is forced to kill him to save her honor. Anna gives herself up to the police, but is saved by Rolfe, who takes her to America as his wife.

High Stakes—(Five Reels)—May 26—With J. Barney Sherry.

Famous jewels are stolen from a safe in the Kensington Museum in London. Ralph Stanning, the thief, calls on Inspector Culvert of Scotland Yard, who has been detailed to run down the cracksman. Lacking evidence, Culvert tells Stanning, nevertheless, that he suspects him of the theft and vows that he will get him. Stanning smilingly accepts his challenge.

Stanning falls in love with a young woman, who has attempted to end her life. They both agree to end their past lives and start anew. Among a number of their acquaintances is Lady Alice, a devoted friend of Mrs. Stanning. Stanning's determination to go "straight" is made still stronger by his love for his little son. Several years later Culvert meets Stanning and informs him that he is no longer with Scotland Yard. He also tells him that his (Culvert's) son is suspected of the theft of the pearl necklace.

Stanning offers to get the boy out of his trouble. A few days later he turns a necklace over to Culvert. The latter arrests Stanning, saying that he knew his day would come. Just then Lady Alice appears and announces that her necklace had been found. After being ordered from the house, Culvert is detained long enough to witness Stanning tossing a necklace into the fire and exclaiming that the beads are made of paste. "I made them," says Stanning "to save your boy."

The Oldest Law—(Five Reels)—May 27—Featuring June Elvidge.

Jennie Fox lives in the Maine woods with her father, an old mountaineer. Professor Rolfe, seeking a rest in the hills, slips on a rock and hurts his leg. Jennie helps him to her home, where he recuperates. Shortly afterward Jennie's father dies and Rolfe, who has promised him to look out for Jennie, takes the young girl to the city. She secures employment as a typist, but because of some mistake loses her position. On her return from the office that night, tired and discouraged, she picks up the evening paper only to find that Professor Rolfe died suddenly of a heart attack.

The disheartened girl sees but one way out of her trouble. With the $3 she has left she treats herself to a modest dinner at a luxurious hotel, and at another table sees Billy West, a man whom she had seen fishing one day near her home in the mountains. Billy is settling up some matrimonial difficulties with his wife and her lawyer. When Jennie leaves the restaurant, Billy, who has been attracted to her, follows and introduces himself. After a brief conversation he offers her a job as housekeeper in his home. She accepts the position. Some time after Billy gives a card party, in which he is the victim of Henry Walker, a notorious crook and cheat. Billy's ex-wife, being a friend of Walker's, discovers that he has cheated Billy out of $3,000. She demands the I O Us from Walker and returns them to Billy, warning him not to gamble, but to be "good to Jennie, who loves him." He, too, decides that Jennie loves him and asks her to be his wife.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

THE showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," at the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, is creating a new record in the annals of motion pictures in that city. The picture is being shown under the management of McMahan & Jackson, who have figured prominently in the past in putting over big pictures. On the first day the picture was shown, 5,000 persons are said to have been turned away.

McMahan & Jackson have left no stone unturned to put the picture over in a big way. They have arranged an excellent lobby decoration of American flags and Red Cross flags, while a battery of the allied flags adorns the ticket office. They have also introduced an innovation in regard to ushers, for which purpose seven Cuban girls, attired in Red Cross costume, were hired.

Eight advertising men and three press agents, among whom are Al Brandt of New York were hired to assist in the publicity. Many advertising novelties were employed, one of them being an elaborate electric sign on which the Kaiser's head is shown.

Hundreds of posters displaying the hated features of "the Beast of Berlin" were shown in different parts of the city. As an evidence of their hatred for the arch-demon of democracy, almost all of these posters were defaced by children and citizens.

Captain Robert Warwick, who recently returned from the fighting front in France, and whose last film production, "The Accidental Honeymoon," is now scoring a big hit all over the country, told the other day in a graphic way the effect various forms of entertainment—especially pictures—have on the boys "over there."

"The war," he said, "has created a new type of audience and the privilege of watching our soldier boys enthuse over the entertainment provided them has afforded me the keenest pleasure. I had thought that I was acquainted with audiences of all sorts, but these soldier-audiences are distinctly different, and that is why I say the war has created a new type of audience.

"In the first place the soldiers, without any exceptions, go to these shows with a determination to be pleased. They are less critical than audiences are wont to be, for the hardships of war have taught them to appreciate. They magnify the fine points of a picture and they minimize the occasional flaws if they notice them at all. But whether it is romance, tragedy or comedy, they follow it all with an interest that is intense."

The wage schedule presented by the Cincinnati Musicians' Protective Association was considered at a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce recently, but it was thought that this question was for the individual members of the league and not a matter on which the organization as a whole could act. The schedule provided for a salary of $17.50 per week for one man, with $4 extra for the leader. This applied for seven nights per week, three and one-half hours per night. For each additional performance the exhibitors were to pay $2.50, the old scale providing for $2.

Larry Semon keeps his dinner clothes in his dressing room at the Vitagraph Hollywood plant. Not that Larry wears them in Vitagraph Big V Comedies. Not at all—as his get-up is as much the reverse as is possible. But in the evening, when the day's toil is over, and the Vitagraph developing room has a thousand or more feet of film depicting the capers of the Semon Big V Comedy, then is Larry to be found—and always dress-suited—the central figure in the night light of Los Angeles. He is the Beau Brummel of the Vitagraph Studio and all members accord him this distinction. From his comedy make-up into his evening clothes is his final activity nightly.

At a meeting of representatives of practically every factory in the Cincinnati district manufacturing war essentials for the navy department and emergency fleet corporation, the manufacturers voted to have uncensored moving pictures supplied by the government either in their plants or at a suitable hall once every sixty days.

The idea is that the workmen may see the sights of war first hand and be encouraged to "damn the Hun with production and not by the mouth." The manufacturers agreed to pay the workmen the regular scale for the hour they spend at the show. There was not one dissenting voice.

The illness of his mother, however, gave him the needed impetus, and so he left the busy whirl of New York for the quiet confines of Sumter, S. C., his old home town. Hatch was presented with a black leather valise in which was a handy traveling kit. H. Serkowitch, secretary of the Associated Film Exchanges, made the presentation speech.

For the showing of "Carmen of the Klondyke," the front of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, was camouflaged to represent an Alaska cabin in a snowstorm. The Frank A. Keeney Picture Corporation has issued an emphatic denial of a statement recently printed in a daily publication, which conveyed the impression that this concern has gone out of the producing business.

According to the denial, the facts are that a three months' lease was taken by Mr. Keeney on studios at Park avenue and 134th street, New York, to produce two pictures, "Marriage" and a play tentatively entitled "Out of the Night." Both pictures have been completed, except for the cutting and titling, and Mr. Keeney has given up the studio, in accordance with his original intention. He had previously used the Biograph studios under a short term lease for the production of "A Romance of the Underworld," his first production.

The work of production is to be resumed, says Mr. Keeney, after the first of the pictures referred to is placed on the market.

Considerable interest has been aroused in Toronto over the decision of the Allen Theatre, a large downtown house, to adopt the policy of making its weekly change in programs on Saturdays instead of Mondays. The change was made on Saturday, May 25, when the new attraction was Mary Pickford's "M'liss." The Allen has also decided upon a new schedule of admission prices which means a raise in evening prices. For the evening the charge for the lower portion of the house is now 35 cents and for the upper seats 25 cents. The boxes and loges will be 50 cents. Only the latter are reserved.

Three young women members of the Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy companies were injured recently at Englewood, a suburb of Los Angeles, when a locomotive struck a wagon in which they were riding during the filming of a picture. Sylvia Day suffered bruises on the arms, and Betty Carpenter and Mary Rooleston were bruised about the body and legs. All three were hurled from the wagon.

Frederick Palmer, who wrote nearly fifty comedies for Lyons and Moran under the Nestor brand, has taken full charge of the Star Comedies scenario department. Mr. Palmer is one of the best known writers in the Los Angeles motion picture colony, having been a feature writer for Sennett-Keystone, Triangle, Fox and Universal, as well as being a prolific free lance in newspaper and magazine work.

The Ontario provincial government in Canada, through the provincial treasurer, T. W. McGarry, has decided upon several new license details which affect operators. The new fee for operators has been raised from $5 to $8 per year, but renewals will cost only $3 as in the past. The fee for apprentices has been raised from $1 to $2 and the minimum age for apprentices has been lowered from 18 to 16 years.

The war news comes home sharply to film folk at the Universal City studios. Of the score of Universal employes in the service two are in the thick of the fighting. James O'Shea, formerly an assistant director at Universal City, is in the camouflage section of the Expeditionary force, while Joseph Waddell, cameraman, is flying over the German lines in a large-type airplane.

Employes of the Universal, when called for the draft, will stand good chances of picking off noncommissioned officers' jobs. Harry Harvey, director of "The Lion's Claws," was formerly an officer in the United States Marine Corps, and holds drill for all who care to attend twice a week at Universal City.

When "The Birth of a Nation" concludes its engagement at the Grand Theatre, Cincinnati, it will have been performed one hundred and sixty-eight times in that city. This does not mean that it has been here that number of times consecutively, but in all the production has been in the city twelve weeks. Popular prices prevailed at its last showing.

Daniel M. Henderson of New York has resigned from the staff of McClure's Magazine to become a member of the Ruthrauff & Ryan advertising agency. Mr. Henderson, in addition to his duties as promotion manager for McClure publications, was also advertising director for McClure and Petrova Pictures.

Bernard McConville, the author, who achieved fame through his photoplays written for D. W. Griffith and William Fox productions, has been added to the staff of scenario writers at the Bluebird studios.

Ralph Ince, Sawyer and Lubin to Produce

of the Kinemacolor Company which produced the initial films in natural colors in this country. He sponsored many of the first feature films to appear in Broadway theatres and was one of the pioneers in the matter of engaging stars of the legitimate stage and vaudeville.

Mr. Sawyer is regarded as an expert in studio management and production matters. He possesses a thorough knowledge of laboratory details and the innumerable other angles which enter into the making of pictures. He also is a member of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., and more recently has been responsible for the erection in Washington, D. C., of the Mather Building, devoted exclusively to the uses of film exchanges.

Mr. Lubin announces that a special department of publicity and exploitation has been created, to be administered under the direction of Bert Ennis.

The latter has had a varied career in the theatrical and motion picture business. He began his film activities with the Vitagraph Company of America, afterwards becoming the first press agent to be connected with Messrs. Kessel and Baumann during the days of the New York Motion Picture Company, exploiting such present day celebrities as Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennet, Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Charlie Chaplin and William S. Hart. He afterwards became publicity and sales manager for the Eclair Film Company.

Ennis has been director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company during the past year and McClure Pictures, Inc. He is also handling the exploitation matter for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." He also has to his credit the management of "The Japanese Gardens," the most beautiful house on the William Fox Circuit. Combined with his experience in the matter of film publicity, his intimate knowledge of the various angles of the industry should make his services invaluable in connection with Ralph Ince Film Attractions.

Further details as to the plans of the new company will be forthcoming next week.

"Two-Gun Men" Live Up to Name

It has been announced that the officers of William S. Hart's famous "Two Gun men"—the 159th California Infantry—wear two revolvers now instead of one to live up to the name. This was in accord with a request and a special dispensation.

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

FRANK J. KROULIK announces the completion and formal opening of the new studio building of the Camel Film Company of Chicago, where the Mode Art comedies will be made. The new studio is located at 950-954 Edgecomb place, Chicago, Illinois.

With the completion of the Mode'Art studio, actual work on the producing of the first of the Mode'Art Comedies has commenced.

Miss Alice Mann, the young comedienne, will take her place as leading lady in the comedies. In a statement made by Frank J. Kroulik, under whose personal direction the comedies will be made, the first release will be ready for the market early in June.

Mr. Kroulik states that the comedies will not be of the slapstick nature. He says, "It is our intention to make a line of comedies that will be distinct in themselves, and far different than those that have gone before. We feel that we have the right kind of players and stories and with these two essentials are confident that the Mode'Art Comedies will take their place in the front ranks of the short subjects."

Phil Solomon, recently back from a trip through Indiana for the George Kleine Company, states that H. H. Johnson, general manager of the Luna Theatre, LaFayette, Indiana, has the finest equipped picture house in the state, outside of Indianapolis. The Luna, formerly a 600-seat house, has been enlarged and redecorated and a balcony added, which brings its seating capacity to 1,200. A beautiful new organ has been installed. The ventilating is through the washed air system. Ladies' rest-rooms have been provided, and the house brought up-to-date in every particular.

Other theatres Mr. Solomon commented upon were the Isis, Victoria and Wallace, at Peru, managed by Dale Loomis; the Eagle at Wabash, managed by the Dickson Brothers, and the Arc Theatre at Crawfordsville, a very beautiful 330-seat house with modern equipment, managed by C. W. Stroh.

W. L. Hill of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has his plans all completed for the presentation of "Prunella," starring Marguerite Clark, which will open at Orchestra Hall, June 3, and now is turning his attention to the picture which will follow that, the J. Stuart Blackton production of "Missing," Mrs. Humphrey Ward's latest book, which presents the war from the women's point of view. Mr. Hill has made arrangements with the McClurg Book Company to co-operate, for the book is just off the press and the picture will undoubtedly aid its sale as much as the printed version will aid the picture. This campaign will increase interest in the picture throughout the entire Chicago territory.

The Bee Hive Exchange, 220 South State street, is as busy as its name denotes. At present it is attending to the wants of over 1,000 theatres. The novelty offering, "Song Hits in Photoplays," which it controls, is attracting special attention. A telegram recently received from Baton and Olson, Indianapolis, is an example of the reception it is having. It reads: "Song Hits in Photoplay a tremendous hit. Received an ovation at first show. The best novelty yet offered the exhibitor. You are to be congratulated for your enterprise."

Phil Solomon of the Kleine exchange has returned from a trip through Indiana in the interest of "The Unbeliever." Among the runs he arranged for this patriotic feature were: Four days at the Colonial Theatre, Logansport, Indiana; three days at the Wallace, Peru; three days at the Blinn, Frankfort, and three days at the Luna, La Fayette. The picture drew such business that it was held over two days longer after a week's run at the American, Terre Haute. The Orpheum, Fort Wayne, reports an unusually good week.

A judgment of $44,290 with interest, against the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation in favor of Leonce Perrett, the French motion picture director, was recorded in New York the other day in a suit brought to recover for alleged breach of contract. Perrett asserted that he was brought from Paris and engaged for two years, beginning January 1, 1917, at a salary of $750 a week, and that the contract was broken without cause on November 24 of the same year.

Cliff Smith's wild and woolly Triangle western company which appears with the cowboy favorite, Roy Stewart, is in the grip of a mysterious epidemic. Some declare it is a new form of La Grippe, brought to the Pacific Coast by the Japanese. Other suggest that it might be caused by water. Among the victims are Director Smith himself, Walter Perry and a flock of cowboys, including Curley Baldwin, Billy Smith, Tuck Reynolds and Billy Patton.

C. W. McGowan, general manager of Universal, spent last week at local Universal headquarters, supervising the work of putting the exchange in line with the new policy by which all Universal products are sold under one head. Six auditors are traveling with Mr. McGowan. The entire bookkeeping system is changed, which means a great deal of work for some time, but greater efficiency in the future.

"Pay Day," the five-reel Drew comedy which was run last week at the Playhouse in connection with the Dolly Sisters feature, "The Million Dollar Dollies," made a great hit. The comedy is different and more elaborate than the usual Drew feature and greatly pleased the admirers of Mr. and Mrs. Drew. It is being featured at a large number of neighborhood houses this week.

"The Wrong Flat," the latest release of the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, "the International Mirth Maker," is having a phenomenal run in New York. It has been booked by all the Loew houses, and other first run theatres. Since the day of its release six prints have been kept busy in New York alone. From all other points in the country reports show that the same percentage is being maintained.

Jack McKenzie, Triangle cameraman, has joined the list of recent and proud papas at the Culver City studio. The stork visited McKenzie's home last week, leaving an eight-pound boy. Jack and those other fathers of recent date, W. Ivan St. Johns and William Beaudine, now hold daily sessions to sing the praises of the latest contributions to the "armed" forces of the United States.

The regular season of the Princess Theater, Montreal, a new vaudeville and moving picture theatre, came to a close on Sunday, May 26. Immediately after the close, a start was made on a number of improvements. The Princess is the only theatre in Canada which boasts of an escalator to carry patrons to the upper balconies.

Announcement is made that the commissioner of internal revenue has ruled that admissions to exhibitions of films given by the Committee on Public Information are not taxable, as the committee is an authorized governmental agency. The first of the United States official war films are "Pershing's Crusaders" and "Following the Flag to France."

A strong scene from the new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "A Game with Fate," starring Harry Morey and Betty Blythe.

The Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago is making a series of doll comedies which General Film is about to release. The pictures are one-reel subjects in which the players are all marionettes, cleverly manipulated by capable and experienced directors. Titles and distribution plans will soon be announced.

Carl Laemmle was in the city last week, conferring with the managers of the various departments at the Universal offices. Harry Berman, general manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., came to Chicago to meet Mr. Laemmle. Mr. Laemmle reports that work is going on at top speed at Universal City.

His Majesty's Theatre, Montreal, a "legitimate" theatre, became a moving picture house, for an indefinite season, starting with the week of May 20, when the first attraction was "Hearts of the World." This was followed during the week of May 27 with "Ramona."

"Over the Top," the Vitagraph feature, with Sergt. Arthur Guy Empey, opened at the Auditorium, May 26. It is being presented in fine style. The musical effects especially are in keeping with the spirit of the play. Chicago newspaper critics give it highly complimentary reviews.

Joe Roderick has been appointed manager of the Milwaukee Universal exchange. Mr. Roderick has been connected with Universal for several years in various capacities and is widely and favorably known. In Milwaukee he succeeds Fred Myers, who resigned on account of ill-health.

In line with its efficiency policy, the local Universal office has obtained fourteen Ford cars for the use of its salesmen. Irving Mack, through whom this information comes, hastens to add that they are for business use and not for the purpose of taking exhibitors joy-riding.

The news has just reached the Chicago office that H. F. Lefholtz, manager of the Jewel exchange in Omaha, was recently way-laid and beaten by a pro-German, who objected to the showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

C. W. Phillips is back with the World exchange and feels very much at home. He says he is back to stay. Mr. Phillips was traveling representative for Paralta for some time, but prefers the position of a city salesman.

The second Metro-Nazimova feature, "Toys of Fate," is playing at the Playhouse this week. It opened to unusually good business. "Revelation" is playing in Loop and neighborhood houses to enthusiastic audiences.

M. J. Weil, manager of the Castle Theatre, gave a special children's performance of "M'liss," Mary Pickford's latest feature, last Saturday morning. From nine o'clock in the morning until eleven he admitted free all children accompanied by an adult.

"Cleopatra," the Fox production which has been held up for some time by the local censor board, at last begins its Chicago run, opening May 27 at the Colonial at regular theatre prices.

H. L. Mueller, manager of the Leland Theatre, has bought the Broadway Theatre from Louis Brecker and will manage both houses. Mr. Brecker has been called to the colors.

A feature of the opening performance of "Pershing's Crusaders," the government's revue of the war, was the appearance as soloist of Claudia Muzio, Metropolitan grand opera star.

As a feature of its Saturday matinees for children, the Lane Court Theatre, owned by Ascher Brothers, serves a luncheon to the youngsters at 3:45, between the two afternoon shows.

H. E. McDorman is the new manager of the Dearborn Theatre, Division and Dearborn streets. Mr. McDorman recently sold his Francis Theatre, Twelfth street and Crawford avenue.

Joe Brandt arrived in Chicago last week on the first stop in his new tour of the country in the interests of Universal.

C. E. Bostwick of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, called at several Chicago exchanges last week.

W. E. Oubridge of the Cort Theatre, Sycamore, Ill., was a caller at the various exchanges this week.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Goldwyn Pictures

Another Splendid Mae Marsh Picture.

MAE MARSH in ALL WOMAN

by E. Lloyd Sheldon
Directed by Hobart Henley

The authoritative critics of the important trade newspapers are more enthusiastic about Mae Marsh in "All Woman" than they have ever been about any Goldwyn Picture, including "Polly of the Circus," "The Cinderella Man," and "Thais." Exhibitors everywhere will recognize the ear-marks of a sure screen winner in these whole hearted criticisms:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Hanford C. Judson: There is a pull at the heart strings in Mae Marsh's characterization in "All Woman." The humanness of this story and the character that Mae Marsh pictures for us makes the offering valuable. It has a specially pleasing pull at the sympathetic emotions of spectators.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: George T. Pardy: Mae Marsh from the beginning to end carries insistent and sympathetic appeal . . "All Woman" is a valuable picture.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: P. S. Harrison: This is about the best feature Mae Marsh has ever been in. It will please everybody. The story is full of human touches that appeal to the emotions.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Helen Pollock: "All Woman" is the type of story that has a general appeal . . it is true to life and thoroughly human.

VARIETY: Ibee: Goldwyn has turned out an excellent production with Mae Marsh in "All Woman." It is as interesting as if presented in printed form which appears to be a capital test of its worth. Hobart Henley, as the director, has had considerable to do with the good result obtained.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Joseph L. Kelley: This Goldwyn offering is a smashing good picture a little ahead of anything Mae Marsh has done for Goldwyn.

A War Tax of Four Cents a Positive Foot!

WORD comes from Washington that framers of the new war tax bill propose to charge the motion picture industry four cents a positive foot for all the film they issue.

In a sentence this would mean annihilation of the motion picture industry. The warning has been sounded and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has called a meeting of the producer and distributor branches to arrange ways and means for the battle for business life.

THERE is no doubt about the urgency of the case. There is no doubt about the necessity for battle. There is no doubt that the leaders should join hands but:

Is the same group that went to sleep while the present footage tax was slipped over on the industry to conduct the campaign?

You who have memories may recall that William A. Brady, the retiring president of the association, assured the industry at the time the tax was up for discussion that all was proceeding nicely.

YOU may also recall that the committee of the National Association, and headed by Mr. Brady, accepted the assurances of certain promising members of the Senate committee that no tax would be levied, went to bed and slumbered peacefully—awaked to find the present footage tax a fact.

The National Association has never attempted any explanation of this colossal blunder and neglect of opportunity, nor has it in its appeals for funds advised its members that the biggest problem it ever had to deal with was so stupidly handled that the cost to manufacturers has mounted already into the millions.

WE bring these things up at this time because it is our plain duty to do so. We have no wish to wound or to be impolite, but this is no time for balking at frank talk.

We believe the men who will pay the tax, or be unable to pay it because of financial ruin, should forget the men who slept before and organize a committee from which they can hope for results.

"Work or Fight"

QUITE a few people with an insufficient supply of occupational ego are wondering about the effect on their persons of the "Work or Fight" order.

It is well, therefore, to impress once more upon the occasional timorous employee of this industry that he is doing a useful and important work.

Motion pictures, like publications, are classified as absolutely essential.

Chicago Censor Plan "Bumps the Bumps"

Council Returns Maypole Ordinance to Committee and Meanwhile Funkhouser Case Awaits Investigation

WITH the case of Major Funkhouser still awaiting investigation and the Maypole ordinance ordered back to the judiciary committee, the censorship question in Chicago is still an undecided one. Public interest in the outcome is keen. Meetings of various societies throughout the city have been called, some to urge the passage of the Maypole ordinance, others to protest the suspending of Major Funkhouser and to defend his regime.

The statement has been made repeatedly that the question of censorship is not involved in the suspension of the major. Definite charges have not yet been made public against Funkhouser but rumors mention everything from financial dishonesty to promoting a new kind of "movie talking machine" company. On the other hand, a great many individuals and organizations who opposed the one-man censorship system are defending Major Funkhouser in the present instance, charging that politics and secret agreements played too large a part in his overthrow, that the man had fulfilled his duty and that the people should know the charges against him. The newspapers nearly all take this attitude.

William H. Luthardt, acting second deputy of police, has declared himself in favor of retaining the strict standards of censorship and seeks to assure the reform forces in this way. The censoring of pictures is now in the hands of the board of censorship and there is no evidence of greater leniency toward productions.

At the meeting of the city council, June 3, the Maypole ordinance was returned to the judiciary committee by a vote of 54 yeas and 16 nays.

Ald. George M. Maypole, sponsor for the measure, wanted the council to vote on the ordinance without further delay and would not consent to its being returned to the committee.

Ald. A. A. McCormick, leader in the fight to prevent a change in the censorship methods, declared falsehoods had been stated regarding the new ordinance. He declared that some of the things charged up against the major by Ald. Maypole were actions of the head of the police department and taken over the major's protest.

Here's a Clever Stunt

A clever stunt in connection with a presentation of "The Unbeliever" is reported by J. F. Brett, Cincinnati branch manager for George Kleine.

Mark Gates, manager of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, is the originator. The store next to his box office was vacant; so he took his extra machine from the screen room, set it up in the store and hung a sheet across the store window and ran the "trailer," on "The Unbeliever" on it, with a slide, "A few views of the feature now being shown inside," with the result that the sidewalk and street were crowded. Immediately after the trailer finished, about eighty per cent of the people immediately turned to the box office and went into the theatre.

Vancouver Patrons to Pay Tax

After an experience of seven months, the exhibitors of Vancouver, British Columbia, have decided to ask the public to pay its own Provincial war tax when attending a theatre. This step was taken as a result of the Dominion Government to impose a reel tax and to increase the import duty on films. In making the change in policy, the Vancouver exhibitors pointed out that they were the only theatre men in Canada to assume the responsibility of the Provincial war tax and that the burden had been heavy.

Caillaux Film Out Soon

Cable dispatches from France to the effect that former Premier Joseph Caillaux will probably be placed on trial for treason either in June or early July is taken as an indication that William Fox will release his film, "The Caillaux Case," at about the time that the "evil genius of France" begins his fight for life.

The picture shows the spread and aims of the "defeatist" propaganda, which resulted in the execution of Bolo Pasha, the arrest and conviction of men connected with the newspaper Bonnet Rouge, and the arrest and incarceration on a charge of treason of Caillaux.

Honor for Rothacker

Watterson R. Rothacker, President of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, has been appointed by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as chairman of a membership Committee which will have under its jurisdiction all of the middlewest territory. Mr. Rothacker was one of the founders of the National Association when it was organized at Chicago in July, 1916. His appointment by President Brady is a well deserved recognition of his sincere devotion to the welfare and success of the National Association.

Maryland Censors Upheld

The first appeal to the courts from a decision of the Maryland State Board of Censors was decided May 28, when Judge Duffy of Baltimore sustained the action of the board in barring "War Brides," starring Nazimova.

Two years ago "War Brides" was shown at one of the best Baltimore theatres and created a profound sensation. It portrays in vivid manner the horrors of war. Then it was officially "passed by the board of censors." But that was before Uncle Sam declared war.

When Lewis J. Selznick of New York, promoter of the film, billed the picture for two weeks ago, there was a protest on the ground that the subject was unpatriotic, immoral and had a tendency to hamper recruiting. The board disapproved of it and Mr. Selznick promptly appealed to the courts.

The decision was that "War Brides" was "not immoral in the narrower sense," but that it might "obstruct the recruiting and enlisting service of the United States."

Before giving his decision, the judge saw the picture filmed in the courtroom.

Aids Red Cross in New Way

The Rothacker Film Company has taken out a Red Cross membership for each member of its organization, and provided them with subscriptions to the Red Cross Magazine. This is in addition to other gifts to the Red Cross and is for the purpose of increasing patriotism among their employes. The Rothacker Company passes along this good suggestion to other companies, especially those who employ people of foreign parentage.

Audience Entertains Self

The electric power was cut off from the Plymouth Theatre, of Rochester, N. Y., one night last week. As the theatre filled and the audience waited in the darkness, many became restless and Manager Stoffel hit on an idea. He called for volunteer singers. At first only a few responded, but, after the first song a number caught the spirit. Although it was after 9 o'clock before the lights came on, not a person left the theater, most of them having remained through two hours of this impromptu performance.

No Cuts in Gerard Film

Mrs. Grace Brooks, censor of Evanston, emphasized that her censorship is not based upon the opinions of Maj. Funkhouser, deposed censor in Chicago, by passing uncensored the reels of "My Four Years in Germany," into which had been inserted the eight "cuts" made by Funkhouser.

Exhibitors Put Women in Place of Men

"WORK OR FIGHT" ORDER IS REASON

GIVING further proof of their patriotism and the desire to do everything they can to help win the war, exhibitors from coast to coast are reported to be replacing men employes of the draft age with older men and women in compliance with the "work or fight" order from Washington.

With the remainder of the month in which to effect the necessary changes, theatre men are taking it slowly, however, being careful that new employes are carefully drilled in their duties by the young men whom they relieve.

Exhibitors Taking No Chances

Much doubt exists over the order, but theatre men, according to all reports, are taking it literally and are supplanting every man of draft age, with the possible exception of operators. Operators, it is generally believed, will be exempted the same as actors.

All branches of the industry are awaiting an official interpretation of the regulation with eagerness. While the order has teeth and might hold dangerous possibilities for production, distribution and exhibition alike, it is not believed that the government will ever work any hardships on the men who have meant so much toward bringing the country to a full appreciation of the war.

Ushers Undoubtedly Affected

But one thing all are agreed upon and that is that the man usher who is not engaged in some other business also, belongs to the past and that girls can perform his duties without inconvenience to the house. The only indispensable man employe is the operator, and the question of his fate is the one which is troubling most exhibitors.

The exchanges are anxious about their office employes and salesmen. Some of the managers foresee a day when women will be sent on the road selling film as they have invaded traveling salesmanship in other industries.

Pictures Deserve Good Treatment

Recognition given the industry by President Wilson and other officials is the basis of the belief that nothing will be done to injure it seriously.

The picture theatre reaches almost every individual in the country and it gives him not only amusement but valuable information and inspiration, which he must have at this time.

Through the picture houses the "four-minute" men can reach every family in the land. It seems impossible therefore that the men indispensable to the running of a picture theatre will be called away for other work.

Exchanges Hiring Girls Too

The Chicago theatre men are not alarmed over the situation, although they are putting girls into the places of men whenever this is possible. This applies also to the film exchanges.

Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, stated that he does not expect any difficulty. He said that the question of operators was the only serious one and that he believed girls could take the place of the men ushers, but could not become operators. However, if there was a great shortage of operators, the managers of the theatres could sometimes run their own machines.

Operators Surely Exempt, Belief

The suggestion has been made that the operators will be classed as exempt electricians, engaged in a useful industry, the showing of pictures, and that therefore there is no need to worry about the government calling them.

However, the theatre men are awaiting the action of the government and are ready to do their share as always to aid their country.

What Do YOU Think?

CHARLIE HUNDT, right hand man to George D. Baker, production manager at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, was talking about film censors in general and one Chicago censor in particular.

"I see that he even tried to throw a moth on 'Revelation,' said Charlie to Clifford Butler, studio manager. Charlie's feelings were ruffled because as Mr. Baker's assistant he had a hand in making the Nazimova picture.

"If they did the right thing," Hundt went on, "they'd take that bird when he was starving and lock him in a restaurant, surrounded by all kinds of delicious, tempting food. And then ——"

"Yes, and then ——"

"Pull out all of his teeth," snapped Charlie. "And what's more, they shouldn't hire a painless dentist to do the job, either!"

World Gets Forman Novel

World Pictures has just acquired the rights to the late Justus Miles Forman's best-known novel, "Buchanan's Wife," and under the supervision of Charles Sarver, the World scenario chief, the continuity is being prepared for filming.

"Buchanan's Wife" was written in 1906 and deals with the developments arising from the peculiar disappearance of a famous figure in business, leaving no trace behind, and the manner in which his ambitious wife solves the way out of the predicament.

A new picture of Gladys Brockwell, Fox star.

Artcraft

The Tiger Man, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—The usual Hart offering with Hart as the bad man. The title is good. If previous Hart pictures drew for you, so will this. People are tiring a little more of this star than of some of the others, but this can best be judged by your box-office receipts.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Man From Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—S. R. O. sign out both nights at an advanced price.—R. B. Riggs, Liberty Theatre, Cheboygan, Mich.

The Silent Man, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—Not quite up to Hart's standard. I can't see where Hart's new pictures have anything on his old ones.—R. W. Hickman, Dixie Theatre, Vaudalia, Ill.

Wild and Woolly, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—A good picture and it drew a big crowd. Everybody pleased.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Fox

When a Man Sees Red, with William Farnum (Fox)—A wonderful picture. Most everyone was pleased. Business very satisfactory.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High-class audience.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—A splendid picture. Farnum's acting is simply wonderful. Book this.—R. W. Hickman, Dixie Theatre, Vaudalia, Ill.

Jack and the Beanstalk, with the Fox Kiddies (Fox)—Wonderful drawing power, but the picture is somewhat over-rated.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

The Rose of Blood, with Theda Bara (Fox)—The picture is fair but does not justify advance prices and did not draw here.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Mutt and Jeff Cartoons (Fox)—The grown-ups as well as the kids like these very much. I don't see how anyone can go wrong by adding them to a program. They run about 500 feet.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Goldwyn

The Face in the Dark, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—This production did not register with our patrons. Story seemed unsuitable for Mae Marsh, although an Irving Cobb detective story. The comments by patrons was that it was the poorest Goldwyn released.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Floor Below, with Mabel Normand (Goldwyn)—A good play but it did not draw good business. The star does not draw. She is better in comedies.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Cal.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Good. We like pictures of this class. This is the kind that brings them back.—Isis Theatre, Marion, Ill.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Good. Audience delighted. Mae's best. Title is poor.—Star Theatre, Middleport, N. Y.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Excellent. Pleased both us and patrons.—Odeon Theatre, Bonne Terre, Mo.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Excellent. Many compliments on this.—Gem Theatre, Frederick, S. D.

Fields of Honor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Excellent. Mae Marsh is refreshingly clever. Her facial expressions are wonderful. She gets away from the stereotyped mannerisms of the usual photoplay star. But we would prefer the sob stuff eliminated in these times. The demand is for more joyous plays.—Rex Theatre, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

Dodging a Million, with Mabel Normand (Goldwyn)—Excellent.—Star Theatre, Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—A very fine show to good business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—The worst business-killer I ever had. Mary Garden seemed to be absolutely unknown to our patrons. W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—Excellent. Audience well pleased.—Lyric Theatre, Salisbury, Mo.

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—A massive, gorgeous production, good for a high-class neighborhood. I raised admission prices and did a big business.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wisconsin.

The Auction Block (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—A wonderful picture, high class, strictly for adults. Worth raising the admission price.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wis.

The Auction Block (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—Excellent. Have seen nothing to equal it. A big hit.—Dixie Theatre, Caruthersville, Mo.

Douglas Fairbanks as he appears in his latest Artcraft feature, "Say, Young Fellow," to be released June 9.

The Auction Block (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—An excellent picture, with good photography and a good cast. Worth featuring.—B. M. Van Dyke, Pictureland Theatre, Livonia, N. Y.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—Fair business. A good comedy but not up to Baby Mine. The star is well liked.—B. M. Van Dyke, Pictureland Theatre, Livonia, N. Y.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—My first Goldwyn picture and well advertised. Big business and everybody pleased.—Happy Hour Theatre, Groton, N. Y.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Excellent.—Palace Theatre, Antigo, Wis.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Film in good condition. Patrons pleased. Excellent business.—Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Good picture. Pleased audiences; good business.—Elite Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Fighting Odds, with Maxine Elliott (Goldwyn)—A good story but the production has many weak spots.—A. Giacoma, Crystal Theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—This is the kind of comedy our patrons like.—A. Giacoma, Crystal Theatre Tombstone, Ariz.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—Excellent.—Rex Theatre, Hartley, Iowa.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—Fair.—Palace Theatre, Antigo, Wis.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn) Comedy dramas go best here. This picture was pronounced fine by practically all who saw it.—Grand Theatre, Searcy, Ark.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—This picture sent them away with a smile. A clever farce-comedy.—R. W. Hickman, Dixie Theatre, Vaudalia, Ill.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A laugh producer. The title does not pull. Everyone was satisfied.—B. M. Van Dyke, Pictureland Theatre, Livonia, N. Y.

For the Freedom of the World, with E. K. Lincoln (Goldwyn)—A timely picture that is bound to please any audience.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Jewel

Pay Me, with Dorothy Phillips (Jewel)—Film in very bad condition. This print was cut to four reels. Business very good and patrons badly disappointed. A special feature was advertised and a very poor program picture shown. Don't book this as a special.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

The Price of a Good Time, with Mildred Harris (Jewel)—A great picture. Full of youth, but sad in its truthfulness. Turned them away at twenty cents.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wis.

Kleine

The Dream Doll, with Marguerite Clayton (Essanay-Kleine)—This is a joke. Even the kids left before it was finished.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Metro

Treasures of the Sea, with Edith Storey (Metro)—Different. A screen melodrama. It is a satisfying picture and fits Edith Storey.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wis.

Riders of the Night, with Viola Dana (Metro)—A Kentucky "night riders" story. We had no complaints although we have had more pleasing pictures with this star.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Winding Trail, with Viola Dana (Metro)—A good story, well acted. Miss Dana plays the part of a dancing girl who seeks revenge upon the man who caused her sister's death. The scenes are laid in the west.—T. F. Ware, Star Theatre, Talladega, Ala.

Mutual

The Girl and the Judge, with Olive Tell (Mutual)—A picture with a new situation well handled. It is a good society drama.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wis.

Beauty and the Rogue, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—This is one of the little star's best. Business good.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High class patronage.

The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up, with Margarita Fisher (Mutual)—The best picture we have had for some time.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

Paralta

Humdrum Brown, with H. B. Walthall (Paralta)—The first five-reel Paralta play we had and I for one am glad. Seven reels is too long. The title of this does not seem to attract the average movie fan. The picture is O. K. and all seemed pleased with it. Business only fair.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Paramount

Resurrection, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—Miss Frederick does some wonderful work in this. The picture is good but rather depressing and because of its costume nature does not draw well. These costume pictures are hurting the star's popularity.—M. J. Weil, Castle Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The House of Silence, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—Drew well and was well liked. The star is popular here.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The House of Silence, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—Not for children. Contains a murder. The star is well liked. Business was good and although the critics did not like the picture I heard no complaints and had a few compliments on it.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

His Majesty, Bunker Bean, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—Not a business puller. Story was liked but was not up to the Tom Sawyer pictures for box-office value. The title is a little against this.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Let's Get a Divorce, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—A very pleasing picture to a very good crowd. This is the best this star has done for Paramount.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Bell Boy, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—The best comedy Arbuckle has ever made. It's a riot.—R. B. Riggs, Liberty Theatre, Cheboygan, Mich.

Nan of Music Mountain, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—Reid is popular here and always pleases my audiences.—R. B. Riggs, Liberty Theatre, Cheboygan, Mich.

Love Letters, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—A beautiful picture. Business exceptionally fine for the middle of the week. Miss Dalton pleased more in this better type of picture.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Antics of Ann, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—This little girl is a sure winner. Just let her producers give her the material. She'll do the rest.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The Petticoat Pilot, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—A very good picture. This little star has quite a following.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

Rich Man, Poor Man, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—Excellent business and an excellent picture, well liked by all.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

Madame Jealousy, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—Business poor. Picture well produced but this type of story does not appeal to movie goers.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

The White Man's Law, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—A good production but it has not the drawing power some others have had. Business fair.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High class patronage.

Snow White, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A good children's play but does not please the older folks.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Amazons, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A good picture to good business on a warm night. Print in poor condition.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

His Hidden Purpose, with Charles Murray (Sennett-Paramount)—Some comedy. One of the best I ever looked at. Big business.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

Rough House, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—The best Arbuckle received here so far.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Pathe

Twenty-one, with Bryant Washburn (Pathe)—Women did not care as much for this as the men did. The star plays a dual role. Business average.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Select

The Honeymoon, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—A pretty picture, full of humor and laughable situations. High class comedy drama. A pleasure to show.—Flossie A. Jones, Auditorium Theatre, Waukesha, Wis.

Triangle

Her American Husband, with Darrell Foss (Triangle)—Film in good condition. Picture, story and actors of the best. Patrons well pleased. business average.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Master of His Home, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A good gold mining story. Triangle surely have the best of pictures.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Paddy O'Hara, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A war feature. Fine production and film good.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—A good western feature. Film in good condition.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Madame Bo-peep, with Seena Owen (Triangle)—A fine feature. Scenes laid in the east and out west.—Loeffelholz Bros., Cuba City, Wis.

Hell's Hinges, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—Some picture. Drew a capacity house, though a re-issue. Film in excellent condition.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

The Captive God, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—A good picture to good business.—George E. Schmidt, Alamo Theatre No. 2, Atlanta, Ga.

Faith Endurin', with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—Stewart always pleases here and this picture went well.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.—Mixed class of patronage.

The Answer, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—Seven reels and almost too long but it seemed to please our patrons. No laughs in this but a true picture of frailties of human nature.—House and Justice, Grand Theatre, Marion, N. C.—Mixed class of patronage.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—The best of Miss Glaum's pictures. A real western.—Leoffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Wooden Shoes, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—A fine Dutch picture. Scenery fine. Scenes laid in Holland.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Americano, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—The best of Fairbanks' Triangle pictures. Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the famous Fox Baby Grands, whose latest picture is "We Should Worry."

The Little Yank, with Dorothy Gish (Triangle)—A good picture.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Back of the Man, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—A good moral play.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Princess of the Dark, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—The poorest of Miss Bennett's features. —Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Square Deal Man, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—A fine western feature. It pleased best of any of Hart's Triangle pictures.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Iced Bullet, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A good mystery picture.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Girl Glory, with Enid Bennett (Triangle) —A good picture. If you want good crowds, use Triangle features.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Universal

Fear Not, with Brownie Vernon (Universal Special)—Picture and acting above the average. Story excellent. A play that holds the interest from start to finish. Film in poor condition. Business above the average.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena Mich.

Vitagraph

Clover's Rebellion, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—This star draws well. Picture and photography good.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

World

The Little Volunteer, with Madge Evans (World)—One of the best kid pictures I have ever seen. Patrons are still talking about it. —R. W. Hickman, Dixie Theatre, Vaudalia, Ill.

State Rights and Specials

Carmen of the Klnodyke, with Clara Williams (Selexart)—A great picture. Business fair owing to too much local competition in the schools.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

On Trial (Essanay-State Rights)—A good picture of its kind, but the kind appeals only to a few. Murder stories are not elevating.— A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Warrior, with Maciste (State Rights)— Truly a novelty of the very best order. Any exhibitor whose box-office needs a tonic will find here one he can't go wrong on. The giant is some strong man and does wonderful acting. The wonderful scenes in the Alps are bound to please.—M. W. Zimmermann, Unique Theatre, Cumberland, Wis.

The Whip, with Irving Cummings (State Rights)—Received more favorable comments than any state right picture I have ever shown. —R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

The Spirit of the Red Cross (American Red Cross)—The best picture of its kind we have shown. Two reels are not enough for a picture like this.—Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Dumb Girl of Portici, with Pavlova (Supreme)—Look out for this. It's very poor. —Loeffelholz Bros., Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Zeppelin's Last Raid (Ince-State Rights) —A good title for drawing power. Picture played to capacity business. Film in fair condition.— B. M. Van Dyke, Pictureland Theatre, Livonia, N. Y.

Serials and Series

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—Nothing extra. Of fair interest to children but of no interest to adults. Business average.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

The Mystery Ship, with Ben Wilson (Universal)—Full house for the first time in many moons, "glory be."—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Son of Democracy, with Benjamin Chapin (Paramount)—"My Mother." A Lincoln story which is surely fine. Excellently acted and well produced. Everybody liked it.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual) Chapter 8.—Business holding even with last week.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Neb.

The Marrying of Dad (Judge Brown Series—General)—A splendid, true to life comedy-drama. A good filler for any program.—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Nashville Demands Sunday Shows

STRAW VOTE WINS, BUT MAYOR DEFIES SENTIMENT

THE straw vote on Sunday shows taken by The Nashville Tennesseean and American has been terminated. It reveals that the city is overwhelmingly in favor of them. More than 9,000 ballots were cast, exceeding the size of the vote in both the city and county elections of recent date. Of this number 8,237 voted "yes" and 844 voted "no."

Despite this fact, however, Mayor William Gupton has suddenly become hostile to the exhibitors and declares no Sunday shows will be permitted so long as he is in office unless so ordered by the courts.

Puzzled by Mayor's Action

Observers are at a loss to understand Mayor Gupton's attitude, inasmuch as the majority that put him in office expressed themselves in favor of Sunday shows. It is possible, however, that the "reform" forces have led him to believe that the straw vote was not fairly conducted or did not truly represent the attitude of the city. But to unbiased persons the integrity of the newspaper is sufficient to guarantee that the vote was conducted as carefully as possible.

The reform forces began working on the mayor as quickly as the vote was announced. Committees from various churches visited the city hall. Then the mayor announced his attitude. He said that Sunday pictures would not be permitted under any circumstances. He added that he would enforce the order if it took the entire police force to do it and that the only thing which would prevent him carrying out his plans would be a court injunction.

Silent on Sunday Baseball

The mayor contended that there are both city and state laws against Sunday amusements, and if the city commission failed to stand by him on the question he would invoke the aid of the state law. Just how he considered the question of Sunday baseball was not explained.

About seventy-five men comprised the committees which called on the mayor, headed by Dr. James I. Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian church.

After talks and appeals by various ministers and church-goers against Sunday pictures, the Rev. A. S. Allen of the Second Presbyterian church, North Nashville, took the floor and said he resented the spacious plea to unload the move for the Sunday shows on the laboring man, declaring that the seventh day was the only time the laboring man had for recreation and that Sunday shows meant more work.

This point had previously been argued in various quarters and clearly shown that the few employes who would be forced to work on Sunday to entertain thousands would do so cheerfully and be well paid for their efforts.

Ballots Passed in Churches

Ballots in the newspaper contests had been passed around in various churches and the various congregations voted. The pastor of McKendree church, in presenting his side of the case, declared that the mayor and two other city commissioners voted against Sunday pictures.

Among the ballots that came into the newspaper office by mail was one that bore a suggestion more eloquent than spoken words could bear. It was a copy of the song "America," surmounted by a picture of the Stars and Stripes, representing the land of liberty. It was pointed out that right embraces all matters that do not injure others, and that wrong is a summary of things that hurt and injure other people.

Many men, when casting their votes, remarked that they had little time for moving pictures, but favored seven-day pictures for the betterment of their employes.

Newspaper Insists on Sunday Shows

Following the action of the mayor in declaring that Sunday pictures would not be permitted, the newspaper said editorially:

"The vote on the Sunday movie question was fairly decisive in two ways at least. The size of the vote showed the real interest taken in the issue, and the overwhelming majority for the Sunday movies was proof conclusive of the popular sympathy with the proposition. So much those who oppose the change must concede.

"Still the opposition exists and is putting forth arguments to strengthen its position. One of those advanced which seems to us worthy of the most consideration is the plea made for the home versus the place of amusement. Undoubtedly there is growing among us a neglect—we might say, an abandonment—of the home as a place for the gathering together of the family, and we would not advocate anything that would increase that real danger to American life.

"Sunday afternoon with a large number of busy people is the only favorable time for the different members of the family to meet and for the father to become acquainted with his children. Given a home and a family, it might well be argued that an informal 'at home' for them all might be the best thing for Sunday afternoons.

Opposition Theory Upset

"As a matter of fact, however, is it not true that without the movies, there is a general scattering of the family on Sunday afternoons and nights? Would the establishment of the amusements on that day change the situation? We think not, and would like to hear the opinions of those who oppose the Sunday amusement on that ground, when they have considered the matter fully.

"And what of those who have no homes—the single men and women in cheerless rooms? In Nashville, as it is and as it will be, this class is a large one, and it would seem that it deserves some consideration in the city's provisions. The members of this class walk the streets or go to the parks Sunday after Sunday, and very naturally they want a change.

"If occasionally they prefer something more stimulating, more amusing, than the shop windows or the restful green of trees and grass, it is an entirely human and modern craving, and one which a progressive and beneficent municipality will seek to satisfy as best it may. Nothing fills the need in every way as the Sunday movie—that is sufficiently plain."

Since it has been proved that the majority of Nashville's residents want Sunday pictures, the fight will be continued by the paper.

To Re-issue Keystones

The Triangle Distributing Corporation will re-issue sixteen of the Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies, featuring Roscoe Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Sid Chaplin and many other well known celebrities who first gained fame in these productions. The first of these re-issues, all of which are two-reel and several, three-reel comedies; will be released on June 9, and one each week thereafter.

Work Out Details of Big Convention

Film Men Have Luncheon in New York— "Away from the Beaten Track," Is the Slogan

AT a get-together luncheon in the City Club, New York, the other day, managers of the coming Boston July exposition and representatives of the trade papers formulated plans with which they aim to blaze a new trail of achievement in convention history.

The meeting was in charge of Frederick H. Elliott, New York manager of the exposition program, with two able Bostonians—Sam Grant, manager of the Boston office, and Dennis Shea, publicity director—as guests of honor.

Both Mr. Elliott and Mr. Grant outlined the work that has been accomplished and what remains to be done in the intervening week before July 3. Emphasis was laid on the fact that the forthcoming meet is not to follow the beaten track of bygone expositions with their preponderance of posters and souvenirs, but will offer to the exhibitor and producer an array of material and a careful summary of the industry's activities.

Among other things a completely appointed laboratory will be established in the Mechanics Building, at which every process of photographic work will be presented. Two model theatres are planned for the showing of pre-release subjects, and it will be possible for visitors to pose for their own motion pictures, which will later be run off for their benefit.

With the promised co-operation of the government, a full exhibition of war films covering every division of the military service will be shown and it is also planned to assemble a complete collection of projection machines from the earliest invention up to the present time.

Boston women have banded themselves together in a voluntary welcome committee for the purpose of entertaining women visitors, and luncheons, teas and sightseeing tours are already being scheduled.

Seattle House Gives Film a Fine Setting

Strand Shows Select War Drama, "Over There," to S. R. O. Every Day of the Run as a Result

WHAT might be regarded as an ideal of presentation was established at the Strand Theatre in Seattle recently by Messrs. Jensen and von Herberg, when they put on Select's patriotic photodrama, "Over There."

As exhibitors throughout the country are always alive to new methods of presentation for prominent pictures, interest should attach to an account of the showing.

"Over There" was put on at the Strand beginning Sunday morning for a four days' run. The piece had been advertised properly in local papers for several days. The Seattle Times carried a large and finely illustrated advertisement, showing Charles Richman together with Anna Q. Nilsson, the principal players. Miss Nilsson was shown in the Red Cross costume which she wore in the play. Emphasis was given to the fact that the picture embodied the war spirit of the times and also the spirit of the Red Cross, the drive for which was then on.

But this was only the beginning. Some of the many things which the management did to attract attention were the following:

1. They obtained, through Major Boutelle, an army officer, the establishment of a recruiting station in the lobby with two shifts of twenty soldiers each, on duty during both afternoon and evening performances.
2. They obtained an exhibition of the new Browning machine guns at the theatre entrance, with an expert to explain the working of this newest piece of American ordnance.
3. An exhibition infantry and machine gun drill was held twice daily in front of the theatre—during which two hundred rounds of ammunition were fired.
4. The theatre employed a fife and drum corps, all of whose members were veterans of the Civil War, to play twice daily at the theatre.
5. Speeches to the audience were made by Master Raymond Foy, an eight year old Boy Scout, who has proved to be a sensation as a Red Cross speaker.
6. George M. Cohan's song, "Over There," was sung at each performance. This was cleverly arranged in such a manner that when the title "All Aboard for Berlin" was flashed upon the screen, the singer started Mr. Cohan's masterpiece, ending at the same moment that the picture ended upon the screen—making a thrilling finish.
7. The girl ushers wore Red Cross uniforms and the house was especially decorated in a beautiful manner.

Messrs. Jensen & von Herberg reaped the reward which their brains and ingenuity deserved. By three o'clock on the first day the street in front of the theatre held a crowd a block long, and at no time after that was there not a line in front of the house. During the entire period that the attraction played it did a standing-room business and the audiences were wildly enthusiastic.

Two Plays by the Same Author on Metro's June Bill

To Katharine Kavanaugh goes the honor of being the author of two of Metro's four June releases, "Social Quicksands," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which makes its appearance June 10, and "The House of Gold," with Emmy Wehlen as the star, to be released June 17.

The two pictures are dissimilar in style, the Bushman-Bayne feature being a clever society comedy, and Miss Whelen's vehicle being a vital, gripping drama.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle as he appears in "Good Night, Nurse," the new Paramount-Arbuckle comedy.

Radical Change in F. P. L. Policy

ONLY CHEERFUL AND MODERN THEMES TO BE FILMED

By Jesse L. Lasky

Vice President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in Charge of Production

THE present world conditions have, it is scarcely necessary to observe, resulted in a pronounced revulsion of feeling and a decided alteration of the public thought, which in turn have had a marked influence upon the character of amusements provided for public entertainment and edification to-day.

America is finally involved to virtually the fullest extent in the World War, and each day brings closer to the people of this country the actual meaning of the struggle for Democracy.

Cheerfulness is Big Need

At such a time it is obvious that the duty of those engaged in manufacturing motion pictures or producing stage plays is to inculcate the spirit of cheerfulness, striving invariably to lift the thought of the people above their troubles, or by the tone of the entertainment offered, to relieve their minds if only temporarily from the tragedy now at our very doors.

At all times the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been actuated by a desire to give the public and the exhibitors the kind of pictures they demanded and has welcomed advice, suggestions and even censure, if merited, from film showmen or the patrons of the photoplay. And in this connection I wish personally to say that such comment and suggestion that has come to me has been a source of real satisfaction and has been thoroughly appreciated.

Jesse L. Lasky.

From the exhibitors and the public, then, we have received assurances over and over again that cheerful pictures are what are needed and must be produced. The morbid, tragic or depressing element in screen entertainment must be eliminated. This is more than a mere matter of good business sense; it is a National duty. Wars are as much the concern of the people at home as of the men in the trenches, and without the spirit of optimism, cheerfulness and confidence at home no battle is likely to be won.

In addition, we have become convinced that photoplays dealing with religious subjects, fairy tales, allegories, costume plays and the like are neither desired nor accepted to-day by exhibitors or public. This conviction is the result of a thorough canvass of the situation, a campaign of extensive character in which showmen in all parts of the country have been interrogated as to their experience with motion pictures. The consensus of opinion has been decidedly against pictures of the character named.

Therefore, in pursuance of the foregoing, I desire to say emphatically that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will hereafter eliminate from its productions all photo-dramatic offerings of a morbid, depressing or tragic character, as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales, costume plays, allegories, etc.

Cheerful Pictures Only

Wholesome dramas, uplifting in charater; clean comedies, comedy-dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production.

Finally, I wish again to thank personally the public and the exhibitors who have time and again indicated their loyalty to our pictures and evinced an interest that has prompted them to offer sincere suggestions for improvement or change which have proved invaluable in our efforts to give them what they want.

San Francisco Gets Studios

San Francisco is to be the home of a $6,000,000 motion picture concern, the Society Players Film Company, thus scoring a point over its rival, Los Angeles. The new company, it is reported, has been offered substantial inducements to make San Francisco its home. Carl Anderson and Miss A. Blackburn, directors, have already begun arrangements for the establishment of studios near the city.

Carl Anderson recently sold his holdings in Paralta to become executive manager of the new corporation. Other persons interested in the organization are Dudley Field Malone, former collector of the port of New York, F. Eugene Farnsworth, president; Thomas Dixon and H. Grattan Donnelly, authors; D. R. Sherburne, vice-president and treasurer, who was formerly with the American Sugar Company, and W. W. Hodkinson.

Observe Flag Day June 14

The National Security League, in asking for a nation-wide celebration of Flag Day, June 14, has turned to the picture theatres for aid. It is making an effort to have the audiences in every theatre in the land sing "The Star Spangled Banner" and at least one of the war songs on that day.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, will carry out the plan with a big program. The Paramount Pictures Corporation has endorsed the Security League's idea and is recommending it to all the theatres in the country which show Paramount pictures.

Escapes Stares by "Disguise"

Mary Miles Minter has the reputation of being the best dressed of the younger stars in filmland and yet she cherishes a fondness for her old clothes.

Mary possesses a hat and coat of ancient vintage, which she loves to don and go shopping all by her lonesome in Santa Barbara. Few who pass the little girl enveloped in the old coat and hidden by the drooping brim of the old hat would ever dream that it was Mary Miles Minter.

But that is just what Mary likes. She hates to be "pointed out."

Selznick, Jr., Promoted

Myron Selznick, son of Lewis J. Selznick, is climbing up rapidly in the film world. He is now general manager of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation.

Buhler to Manage Stanley Theatres

Jules E. Mastbaum Announces That He Will Guide Destinies of Every House in the Chain

FRANK W. BUHLER, one of the best-known theatrical men in the east, has been appointed managing director of all theatres under the control of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, it is announced by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company.

Throughout amusement circles Mr. Buhler's appointment has elicited expressions of approval.

Mr. Buhler was born in Savanna, Missouri, in October, 1881, and will be thirty-seven years old this fall. From early years he displayed an aptitude for the theatrical business combined with a genuine talent for music. In early manhood he was at the head of a dramatic stock company. Later he became engaged in the motion picture business with Harry Davis of Pittsburgh and in 1908 was transferred by Mr. Davis to Buffalo as manager of the Davis house in that city.

In December of the same year Mr. Buhler came to Philadelphia and was associated with Alexander R. Boyd in the Bijou Dream and later the Regent theatres. From here he became managing director of the Central Market Street Company, operating a chain of houses on Market street, every one of which under his supervision became successful motion picture theatres.

In his new position as managing director of the Stanley Company, Mr. Buhler's ability as an executive and organizer will have a wider scope. And there are few men besides himself possessed of the necessary requisites to handle the work of this corporation, which includes in its lists many theatres in Philadelphia, New York, Atlantic City and other cities and towns in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and other states.

That he is equipped mentally to undertake the task is conceded by all who know him. In popular parlance Mr. Buhler is "on the job," early and late, working, planning, conceiving those things that are best for the public and for those who work under his direction.

He is one of the best critics, or rather judges of pictures, the industry knows. Whether he possesses uncanny second sight in this respect is a matter for conjecture. The fact is that when he condemns a picture and someone else shows it it has been condemned by the public who refuse to pay their money at the box office, and when he approves of a picture standing room only is the result at the theatres presenting it.

The case of the Victoria Theatre, Philadelphia, is one illustration of his discernment and also shows his remarkable knowledge of just what the public wants. It was predicted that when he put on big feature films at the Victoria that he had not sized up the public right. Mr. Buhler, however, had the conviction that the public wanted to see these big pictures, that they were willing to see them at popular prices and believing in a liberal use of printers' ink, after advertising the various films, put them on with the result that every week at the Victoria it is hard to obtain admittance.

In a less degree, the same condition prevails at all the other Central Market Street houses, every one of which Mr. Buhler has been booking personally, seeing the pictures before they were shown to the public.

Billie Rhodes meditates in the latest Mutual-Strand comedy, "By Fowl Means." "Yum, yum" probably tells her thoughts.

Red Cross Results Surprise

The motion picture industry has won further honors and again shown its thorough patriotism by the wonderful results attained in its Red Cross work during the recent drive. The exact amount the industry raised throughout the country cannot be estimated, but in New York City the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, under William Fox's leadership, jumped into the million-dollar class, with $1,026,887 to its credit.

A big surprise was furnished by the large amount turned in by the Industrial Committee, which collected subscriptions from vaudeville artists, music publishers and the employes of theatres, film exchanges, wig makers, costumers and the various picture circuits in Greater New York. In four days the committee had raised $8,023.69. The largest sum came from the picture employes, a total of $63,938.69. In turn followed the National Vaudeville Artists and the film exchanges of New York.

Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was chairman of this Industrial Committee.

New Way to Swat the Kaiser

Billie Rhodes is an ardent patriot and Herbert C. Hoover is her particular hero. Whenever the question of food conservation is brought up Billie is there with some emphatic remarks.

The complications in her latest Strand comedy, "By Fowl Means," brought three real roasted turkeys into a dinner scene. It was physically impossible for the six members of the cast to consume the three turkeys in one reel, so Billie insisted that the left-overs be served for the stage hands' lunch. As a result the lunch was so realistic that the director decided to use it as an epilogue to the comedy, where it stands as an example of effective food-conservation.

Needless to say the stage hands are strong for Billie.

Goldfish Assails State Censorship

PRAISES NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEW

By Samuel Goldfish

President Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

A MOST harmful proposal with relation to motion pictures and to the cause of nation-wide amusement has just been under discussion by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at its biennial meeting in Hot Springs, Arkansas.

The proposal took the form of seeking to extend motion picture censorship across the country through the medium of individual censor boards for each state and during the debate occasion was taken by several speakers to deride or deprecate the value of the long-established National Board of Review.

Praises Work of Board

Against this effort to minimize the value of the national board I make vigorous personal protest. In behalf of the sincere and earnest men and women who give their efforts to the work of viewing and passing upon pictures I, as a producer of pictures, desire to indorse the benefits this body has brought and is bringing to the cause of film cleanliness and healthfulness.

I had thought that the old political question of states' rights, a source of frequent bitter quarrels between the states and the nation since the Civil war, had been eliminated in the turmoil of world war. The recurrent efforts to foist individual state censorship upon the film industry proves, however, that the states' rights agitation hangs on tenaciously in this one direction.

Attack Laid to Politics

Always it is the custom of reformers who seek to introduce a new mechanism to attack the existing one they wish to supplant, and this accounts for the slurs directed at the National Board of Review in the Arkansas conference. It was notable that the women members of this big and powerful organization did not personally engage in or encourage these attacks, which came from imported censors from other states, who hold positions created for them by state political machines.

The National Board of Review has elevated the tone of motion pictures 100 per cent. It has been the mainstay and backbone of those producers whose inclination is to make clean, wholesome pictures. It has been the deterring mechanism that blocked the way of evil-minded speculators who would have brought ruin to the industry by rushing in and making one or two foul pictures for the quick profits that such productions occasionally earn. I know of no body of men and women more sincere in their purposes or more self-sacrificing in their work than the National Board of Review.

Uses Wilson in Comparison

There is today in America, for the first time in the history of our nation, a centralized authority. State lines have been wiped out or forgotten; no state is today questioning the national viewpoint or the national authority in any manner.

A president who is the most remarkable figure in our country's history has, with the backing the public, become the most powerful authority and master any country has ever had. His food administrator is a final authority. His railroad administrator is a national instrument who cannot be halted by petty individual claims. His munitions administrator is unhampered in authority. His purchasing department centralizes the buying of supplies and no one other than petty politicians and evicted managements stands to question the wisdom and authority of these men.

Present System Upheld

I mean by these examples to show our complete nationalization in every respect and to urge the nationalization of motion picture inspection and reviewing through the existing National Board of Review.

No one can be more in harmony with the aims of the women's clubs and with all women in the desire for and insistence upon upholding cleanliness. I have always stood firmly for wholesomeness and cleanliness in pictures.

But I wish to point out that the efforts that are being made to induce women's organizations to support individual state censorships all tend to the creation of thirty or forty individual and varying standards of judgment with regard to pictures and that this lack of harmony would do more to undermine picture cleanliness and wholesomeness than anything that has come up in the industry in the last five years.

Harold Lockwood, Metro star, who has just begun work on "A King in Khaki."

Start "A King in Khaki"

The production of "A King in Khaki," Harold Lockwood's newly chosen Metro vehicle, has been started under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer at Monterey, California, where the Lockwood company has journeyed from its studio in Hollywood to get appropriate background.

Henry Kitchell Webster wrote "A King in Khaki" in novel form and Mr. Balshofer made the adaptation. It is a romantic drama of a battle between the "king in khaki" and a group of Wall Street financiers. The "king in khaki" is a former New York newspaper reporter named Smith, who gains his picturesque title because of his achievements and his habitual dress of the soldier cloth.

Smith is engaged in developing the resources of an island in the semi-tropics for a syndicate of promoters and makes remarkable progress, but the syndicate wishes to keep the true facts of Smith's accomplishments from the stockholders and by means of false reports to cause a decline in the value of the stock and thus ultimately freeze out the small stockholders.

Smith learns of this and wages a battle of wits with Beaumont, the president of the company, gaining a double victory over him when he wins not only the fight on behalf of the small stockholders, but also the battle for the hand of Beaumont's daughter.

Harold Lockwood plays the "king in khaki," of course, while Stanton Heck appears as Beaumont and Bessie Eyton portrays his daughter, Christobel.

What Becomes of the Star's Clothes?

Madge Kennedy Supplies One Answer—
She Keeps Some and Gives the Rest Away

PEOPLE are forever asking what becomes of the clothes worn by motion picture stars who are noted for their lavish costuming.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn star, supplies one answer:

"I do a number of things with my clothes," she said. "If I like a dress awfully—and some of them I do—I keep it to wear during the season. This doesn't happen often, however, because my clothes are chosen to express the character of the roles I assume rather than reflect my individuality.

"Then I give away a few to some of my stage friends who need a costume in order to be engaged for a part. One acquires many friends, you know, during a career in the 'legitimate'—girls who are striving to get on, but who aren't able to buy the costly frocks so often demanded by modern productions.

"Some of my plainer clothes I have given to the Stage Women's War Relief, being careful not to send clothes that wouldn't be suitable for girls in dire need. There is something dreadful in the thought of a war refugee decked out in worn finery, don't you think?

"Other garments I find use for in various ways. Special needs arise which I try to satisfy. For instance, all my old shoes—and I enjoy ancient footgear—I sent to the Halifax sufferers last winter. Never do I wear the same dress in two Goldwyn plays. An actress is careful to sustain her reputation for careful dressing, and it would never do to repeat.

"Besides, as I said before, when one chooses her clothes to express a mood it does not happen often that in two plays the role is quite the same sort. It is not a question of buying pretty clothes merely, but buying clothes that have a meaning.

"So you see there's nothing mysterious in the ultimate end of my dresses and coats. They accumulate faster than I can wear them out, of course, but now of all times I think that every woman should guard against waste in clothes as well as food. I assure you if I were not acting in plays I should not buy more than two dresses a season. But the public demands that we be seen in expensive and varied apparel, so what is one to do?"

Emile Chautard, the director, who has just signed up with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Kaiser Driven Down Broadway in a Cage

But It's Lawrence Grant Acting for Metro Film Instead of Wilhelm—Crowds Make Camera Work Difficult

THE Kaiser driven down Broadway in an iron cage was the strange sight that met the eyes of New Yorkers the other day. Unfortunately, it was not the real Kaiser, but Lawrence Grant, who plays the role of the Berlin beast in the forthcoming Screen Classics production, "To Hell with the Kaiser," which will be distributed by Metro.

The cage in which the impersonator of the kaiser was driven was a real, old-fashioned circus cage, and the circus man who owned the cage drove it. Throngs followed the cage down Broadway curiously and got their first inkling of what the incident meant when the horses were stopped opposite Rector's and Cameraman George Hollister began grinding. So closely did the crowd press about that it was impossible to complete taking the scenes and the Kaiser was driven around the block, so that the crowd, supposing all was over, would disperse. Hollister succeeded in getting some more pictures before a second crowd gathered.

The cage was then opened and Baby Ivy Ward was lifted inside. Some of the bystanders, knowing Wilhelm's reputation, gasped for the safety of the child, but she proceeded to call out in clear tones, "Now that I've captured the Kaiser, what are you going to give me for the Red Cross?"

Both the baby and the Kaiser then walked up Broadway, the child on the Kaiser's shoulder, collecting money. Lawrence Grant came out of his character sufficiently to explain that he hated playing the monster of Europe, but considered it a patriotic duty to interpret his baseness. He made a speech in behalf of the Red Cross, and Baby Ward succeeded in collecting so much money that she had to have help in carrying it to headquarters.

Traffic was demoralized while the child and the Kaiser made their patriotic march back up Broadway. Aubrey Lowell, dressed as an American captain of infantry, walked beside the cage on both trips, downtown and back to the Metro studio. The party then left for Coney Island, where the Kaiser was placed behind a sheet with only his face showing, to take the place of the "nigger baby" for hitting which the reward is a cigar.

The final scenes, which will be kept a secret until the appearance of the production, were made in the Metro studio.

New K. C. Censor Expensive

The new censor of pictures for Kansas City, Sidney J. Baker, who succeeds Fred F. McClure, recently deposed, announces that he wants a bigger salary than his predecessor. McClure was paid $125 a month. Baker demands almost twice as much.

"The film censor in Chicago gets $6,000 a year," said Baker. "I guess it is worth $3,000 to Kansas City."

The rumor that the censorship ordinance of Kansas City might be abolished is denied. Mr. Baker announces that the same rulings will apply as heretofore.

Men "Over There" Laud Theatres Over Here

Alhambra, Milwaukee, Praised in Particular for Collecting Smokes for the Soldiers

IN the lobby of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, a large glass bowl, with a card attached to it, "Drop a Smoke For the Soldiers," has a prominent position. Hardly a patron passes without dropping a cigarette, cigar or a small amount of change into it.

The bowl has been filled many times and the contents have been sent to different camps and abroad. Once Manager George Fischer sent the smokes over to France to an ambulance company composed of local boys. The following letter was received in reply:

AMBULANCE COMPANY No. 125
A. E. F.

May 6, 1918.

Mr. George Fischer,
The Alhambra Theatre,
Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Sir:

Stationed in what is surely the very least of all France, a village hidden away beyond the reach of even the Y. M. C. A. screen, the men of Milwaukee's National Guard Motor Ambulance Company are enjoying the movies. No, they don't see Vivian Martin or Fairbanks—they'd give a handful of francs for a dime ticket any day—but they are sharing the delights of Alhambra's programs with the thoughtful patrons who think of them when they pass a certain little box you tell us of.

Your shipment of old-time smokes has reached us, the familiar humps, cigars with regular bands and all. We're all admiration for the way these French fight, but their notion of what is tobacco is awful. So your boxes occasioned a roll call as complete as a visit to the paymaster. Remember how the fans used to crowd the Alhambra lobby to the Avenue car tracks on a Saturday night? It's the way the fellows flocked around our top sergeant when he began the dishing.

They used to get full of work and French dirt and cussedness. At such times, denied even a nickle movie, out of grim envy and the influence of a French smoke they probably should have wished every theatre out of existence. Now, it is safe to say, they are glad that there are movies, or more particularly that there is an Alhambra. A hundred men are taking an appreciative drag tonight.

Yours truly,
A. A. MITTEN,
Captain M. C. N. G.

This letter hangs above the bowl and it has made a distinct impression on all who have read it. The bowl is filled to the top now in half of the time it required previously.

It might be a good idea for every theatre manager to follow. It is so little trouble to the theatre and so appreciated by the boys.

United to Open New Offices

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., will add two more branch offices to its list next week, located respectively in Cleveland and Indianapolis.

Both of these will come under the newly formed central division, of which C. W. Bunn, erstwhile manager of the Chicago branch office, has been put in charge.

Besides the cities mentioned, Mr. Bunn's division will subsequently have branch offices in Cincinnati and Milwaukee.

C. W. Perry, traveling representative for United, formerly with Pathe, is temporarily taking charge in Cincinnati.

Very shortly a far-western division will be formed with branches in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Butte. A Philadelphia branch will also be opened within a short time.

There have been several changes recently in the United sales force. S. M. Spedon, formerly with Goldwyn, has been made manager for the borough of Manhattan, New York. Hoyt G. Morrow, until recently with the Dallas office of United, has been made manager of the New Orleans branch. Messrs. Mayberry and Gregg have been added to the St. Louis force.

Oregon Branch Elects

The Oregon branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held its annual election of officers last week. The following exhibitors, all of Portland, were elected:

President, Ralph Ruffner, Columbia Theatre; vice-president, W. E. Tibbett, Alhambra; J. J. Parker, Majestic; J. Washtock, Victoria; treasurer, J. Brand, Echo; secretary, W. A. Ayres, Sunnyside; chairman executive committee, W. A. Graeper, Union Avenue; executive committee, J. C. Stille, People's; J. J. Parker, Majestic; W. E. Tebbett, Alhambra; J. B. Washtock, Victoria; chairman of house committee, Hugh McCredie, Multnomah; chairman of membership committee, H. C. Phillips, Tivoli; chairman entertainment committee, J. A. Jennings, Sunset.

To Show Film War Work

The theatre owners of Los Angeles and the producers held a meeting recently and decided to launch an extensive advertising campaign to show people the good work the pictures are doing to win the war. This is an effort to eliminate the idea that pictures are a luxury and to bring the box office receipts back to normal. Among those present at the meeting were Samuel Goldfish, Thomas Ince, J. A. Quinn, Harry Caulfield, Mike Gore, T. L. Tally, Fred Miller, Sid Grauman, Frank MacDonald and Emil Kehrlein.

"Mutt and Jeff" for Shea's

Shea's Hippodrome of Buffalo is one of the big theatres that has contracted for all of Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons that William Fox is releasing. The booking for Shea's was made by Manager Harold B. Franklin.

Four Fox Pictures to be Released in July

Peggy Hyland, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice and Tom Mix Are the Stars

FOUR Fox pictures are to be released during July — Peggy Hyland in "Other Men's Daughters," Virginia Pearson in "Her Price," June Caprice in "Miss Innocence" and Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune."

"Other Men's Daughters," which is said to be particularly suited to Peggy Hyland's beauty and personality, was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and staged by Carl Harbaugh. It is the story of a girl who seeks to save her father from social parasites, and who in turn is endangered by the father of a girl who has gone the easiest way.

Virginia Pearson's play, "Her Price," was written by George Scarborough, author of "Under the Yoke" and other screen successes, as well as stage pieces. It is said to be based on the career of a well-known opera singer and reveals the pitfalls which lurk in the paths of young girls who would seek fame by their voice.

Craving for pleasure is the basis of "Miss Innocence," a vehicle declared to afford June Caprice unusual opportunities for displaying her versatility. "Miss Innocence" relates the romance and adventures of the young daughter of two gay Parisian artists, who is a prey to the love of gaiety which is her only legacy when they die.

Opportunities for hard riding and quick shooting are given in plenty in "Fame and Fortune," in which Tom Mix will be the star.

Patron Sues Theatre

Preliminary guns have been fired in a damage action that James D. Harris, a prominent lawyer of Rochester, N. Y., is bringing against the Regorson Corporation, which controls three of the largest moving picture houses of the city. Harris was arrested by the management of the theater one evening last winter on a charge of annoying a young woman in the audience, and the lawyer promptly brought a suit against the theater for false arrest, declaring that he was merely explaining the picture to the young woman.

Ushers Wear Garb of Nurses

During the presentation of "Over There," the select war drama, at the Strand Theatre, Seattle, during the week of the Red Cross Drive, the girl ushers and cashier were dressed as Red Cross nurses.

Edith Storey Plays a Joke

Edith Storey led a seven-mile "hike" along a winding mountain trail the other day which tested the endurance of a score of the members of the cast of her newest Metro picture, "As the Sun Went Down."

The company had gone to location in several automobiles, which were parked 300 yards from where carpenters had built a complete mining village of the vintage of 1849. The star and everybody else worked hard as long as there was good "shooting" light. Then Director Hopper called it a day and all prepared to leave.

When they looked for the cars, however, there were none. They had vanished.

"Nothing to do but walk," said Miss Storey, nonchalantly. On the way down Lew Cody, who plays opposite Miss Storey, picked up a stone in his shoe. Director Hopper developed a sore toe. "Bill" Thompson, camera man, who carries considerable excess weight, lost a great part of it. After the third mile Za Su Pitts and Frances Burnham, both in their teens and fragile creatures, begged to be carried.

The sun had gone down when the party, Miss Storey still fresh and swinging along at a rapid pace, reached the foot of the trail. And there stood the flotilla of automobiles.

"You scoundrels," shouted Hopper to the drivers, as he favored his aching foot.

"Don't blame them," said Miss Storey, soothingly, "I told them to do it."

Whereupon the star explained that there was nothing like a good hike, and besides, after their walk they would appreciate the luxury of a machine.

The next day the studio dressing rooms reeked of liniment.

Fine Cast in Bara Play

"A Fool There Was," the Theda Bara super production that heads the list of the new versions of big William Fox successes that are soon to be released, has a cast worth noting. Miss Bara is, of course, supreme in this sensational production, but she has the aid of a wonderful cast of prominent players.

Edward Jose, who is seen as the fool, is a distinguished director and actor with a brilliant record on both screen and stage.

Clifford Bruce, leading man for Charles Frohman companies, and equally well-known on the screen; May Allison, a favorite of picturegoers everywhere; and Victor Benoit, who has achieved a reputation for his excellent characterizations in musical comedy with Lillian Russell and Eddie Foy, are others who have important roles in "A Fool There Was."

Strong scenes from Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft vehicle, "A Doll's House."

Los Angeles Film Folk Show Loyalty

Big Meeting in Clune's Auditorium Starts War Service Organization on Way in Blaze of Glory

THE mass meeting of motion picture people held at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, on Sunday, May 26, was an enthusiastic gathering and should put to shame all those who have ever suggested that photoplay folk were wanting in either charity or patriotism. It was an epoch-making event, the memory of which will never die for those who were present.

The Auditorium was filled with managers, directors, artists, agents, writers and extra people and practically every person present became a member of the newly formed Motion Picture War Service Association.

Telegrams were read from Douglas Fairbanks, Allan Dwan, Marguerite Clark, Jesse L. Lasky, Lee Ochs, several exhibitors and exchange men and others.

A constitution was adopted and David W. Griffith was unanimously elected chairman, Mack Sennett, treasurer, and S. E. V. Taylor, secretary, while others, elected to the governing board, were Cecil B. DeMille, Lois Weber, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Marguerite Clark, Maurice Tourneur, J. S. Dawley, S. M. Rothapfel, Lee Ochs, J. Gordon Edwards, Henry McRae, Frank Woods, G. W. Bitzer, W. F. Adler and William D. Taylor.

Mr. Griffith made a vigorous speech and had a big reception. Lois Weber followed with a characteristic speech on behalf of her sex, telling of woman's wonderful work for the war. Cecil DeMille, in the uniform of captain of the Lasky Home Guards, gave a practical talk and virtually obtained promises for the erection of a hospital with one thousand beds, to be presented to the nation on behalf of the motion picture industry, a monument which will cost in the neighborhood of $185,000.

Mary Pickford had a rousing reception and gave a humorous talk in which she recalled the old Biograph days. There were many clever little touches to her speech. She said that so many young fellows had gone to war that she could not get an experienced leading man under sixty now! She autographed membership ticket No. 1, and it sold, amid cheers, to Dustin Farnum for $2,500.

Mr. Griffith and William D. Taylor were on the stage at the time and Mary cried out: "That is going some, my first director and my last one both cheering me!"

Other autographed membership tickets were sold as follows: Mr. Griffith's to Mary Pickford for $2,500, Clara Kimball Young's to Mack Sennett for $2,400, Mae Murray's to Mr. Griffith for $2,500, Cecil DeMille's to Sessue Hayakawa for $2,000, Lois Weber's to Phillips Smalley for $2,000, Mack Sennett's to Henry McRae for $1,000, William S. Hart's to George Melford for $2,000, Marguerite Clark's to Douglas Fairbanks for $2,500, Frank Keenan's to Fannie Ward for $2,500, Miss Ward's to Keenan for $2,000, Dustin Farnum's to Harry Sherman for $2,750 and Douglas Fairbanks' to Lois Weber for $2,600.

In addition Charlie Chaplin bought his own for $2,600 and Mae Murray donated $1,500.

The total was $32,750. The ordinary membership tickets raised the amount to $37,150.

Charlie Murray acted as auctioneer and kept the big audience in one long laugh; in fact he and Chaplin provided the humor of the meeting.

At the conclusion of the ticket selling Cecil DeMille drilled the Lasky Home Guards and a series of tableaux, showing the nations and their flags, was participated in by Bob Leonard, Mae Murray, Robert Harron, J. Warren Kerrigan, Lois Wilson, Sessue Hayakawa, Tsuri Aoki, Clara Kimball Young, Mildred Harris, Francis McDonald, Wallace Reid and others.

The idea originated with the directors' association and it is safe to say that the Motion Picture War Service Association will be an important factor in raising money, providing money and in general assistance to the government to help win the war.

New Writer for Fairbanks

Ted Reed, who accompanied Douglas Fairbanks on his recent patriotic tour, has been engaged by the star as a scenario writer. Reed was at the head of an automobile machine-shop in Detroit and was discovered by Fairbanks when he visited that city. Impressed by the young man's original ideas, he asked the government to add him to the party, with the result that he became a regular member of the Fairbanks staff.

Students Insist on Spectacular Films

Canvass of High Schools in Two Iowa Towns Reveals That Boys and Girls See Pictures Twice Weekly

IN selecting your programs and in advertising to fill your house, don't forget the fans of high school age.

That is advice to be obtained from a canvass of the students in the high schools of Des Moines and Onawa, Iowa, by Miss Irene Farrell, instructor in Latin and English in the high school of the latter town.

The canvass revealed that the students are nearly all fans and go to the theatre on an average of twice a week. Their tastes are high, but they insist on spectacular productions above all.

Miss Farrell sums up as follows:

"The kind of picture given first choice was 'spectacular,' which claimed its rank by a single vote over 'travel' and 'western,' which tied for second place, which likewise by a single vote ranked above 'romantic,' 'comedy,' and 'educational,' all of which peculiarly were given third place. 'Thrillers' and 'tragedy' were relegated to the background, the former receiving three votes, the latter but one.

"As regards 'thrillers,' we conclude that the pupils' taste must be refined and literary, but in respect to tragedy, when we consider that in school much study is made of the classic tragedians, Shakespeare especially, we conclude that we are teaching something naturally disliked or possibly, we conclude, that the tragic appreciation needs stronger cultivation. Perhaps the pupils have in mind the overworked tragedy—as one boy says, 'I dislike the tragedy in which the hero's manly breast heaves with suppressed emotion.'

"'Educational' and 'travel' proved to be the kind remembered the longest, while 'comedy,' which ranked third by choice of subject, received one vote for being longest remembered.

"As a result two points stand out as important and valuable. First, the children are as a whole appreciative of the best in pictures, and are vitally impressed by the best, and second, motion pictures may be used to supplement class room instruction with positive and effective results. It is advisable to encourage the best pictures; it is sound educational doctrine to use this additional method of instruction."

Olive Thomas, Triangle star, having a lark in the studio lot.

"Big V" Remains in West

The Big V Comedy companies, headed respectively by Lawrence Semon and Montgomery and Rock, will remain in the West permanently, according to a statement from Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. Smith says that the grade of comedies which the two companies have been making since they went West last Fall has been such that he is satisfied the players are in the right place.

Sunday Shows Periled in Ohio

The supreme court of Ohio made a ruling which may stop Sunday shows when it refused to hear the appeal of an exhibitor convicted by a lower court for holding Sunday shows at Wadsworth. City authorities throughout the state are awaiting an interpretation of the ruling.

Farnum Scenes Filmed in Wild Canyon

Location Represents Where Hero of Zane Grey Novel Bottled Up Pursuers by Dropping Rock in Gorge

A CANYON never before traversed by civilized man was the location for the dramatic climax of William Farnum's screen version of Zane Grey's famous novel, "Riders of the Purple Sage," according to an announcement from the Fox offices.

In the book the story reaches a tremendous climax when Lassiter and his friends, pursued by a Mormon band, drop a huge rock into a narrow gorge, thus bottling up the canyon in which the pursuers are traveling.

Zane Grey in his travels through the West had seen the canyon which formed the setting for his story, but could not remember just where it was. Accordingly, Director Frank Lloyd had to find a canyon that was exactly like the one described.

Assistant Director Scotty Dunlap and a party were sent out on a hunt. At Flagstaff, Arizona, they were told of a surveyor who had traveled over every inch of the country thereabouts. When the canyon desired was described, the surveyor said he knew of one and led the party into one of the wildest sections of the great Southwest.

The canyon he pointed out was an exact duplicate of the one in the book. There was only one entrance, and that was the narrowest of gorges, through sheer cliffs that rose more than a thousand feet.

Inside were found evidences of the habitation of the cliff-dwellers of centuries ago. Game, animals and fruit were found in abundance, but there was not a sign of any civilized human being ever having been there before.

Several days later Farnum and his company were taken to the canyon and filmed the climax. They were gone four weeks, lost to all communication from the outside world.

Norma Talmadge in New Role

Norma Talmadge's next play is a screen version of the highly successful novel by Ethel M. Dell, "The Safety Curtain."

The star's role is that of a little specialty dancer of a London music hall. Eugene O'Brien plays opposite.

S. A. Franklin, who is directing, prepared its scenario with the assistance of Paul West, who recently left for France.

First Griffith-Artcraft Ready in July

Title Is "The Great Love" and Theme Is the War's Awakening of the Social Butterflies of England

AN announcement by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, conveys the information that the first D. W. Griffith-Artcraft picture has been given the title of "The Great Love," and will be released in the middle of July.

This is the subject on which the famous producer has been engaged since his return from Europe, where some of the scenes were taken. Its release will mark the first time in several years that a D. W. Griffith picture has been available to picture theatres immediately instead of being presented at two dollar prices.

"We are advised by Mr. Griffith that this picture meets with his greatest expectations," says Mr. Greene, "and it will undoubtedly be a revelation and a sensation to the public and the film industry. We anticipate that it will duplicate at least, if not exceed, the popularity of 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Hearts of the World,' and that exhibitors will get the cream of this success by playing it at once should prove highly interesting from a financial point of view, and give every theatre that runs it considerable distinction in its community.

"The theme, 'The Great Love,' is a story of the awakening of the social butterflies of England after the declaration of war, the loss of the young manhood in the early days of the struggle and the consequent marshalling of the nation's forces in which all ranks were levelled and the aroused country worked with a unity of purpose.

"In his undertaking Mr. Griffith had the support of the British government and the personal assistance of Queen Alexandria, Sir Frederick Treeves, head of the British Red Cross, the Baroness Rothschild and Sir Henry Stanley, especially assigned by the British war office to assist the producer.

Other noted personages who appear in the film are the Princess of Monaco, Countess of Masserene, Lady John Lavery, Miss Bettina Stuart-Wortley, Miss Violet Keppel, Countess of Droghda, Lady Diana Manners, Hon. Mrs. Montagu, Miss Elizabeth Asquith and Miss Lilly Elsie. Lady Diana Manners is the daughter of the Duke of Rutland and is the most famous beauty in English society. Miss Asquith is the daughter of the famous ex-prime minister.

"In addition to these celebrities, 'The Great Love' offers the most notable cast ever assembled in one picture, including practically all of the important players who appeared in 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Hearts of the World,' prominent parts being portrayed by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, George Fawcett, Robert Harron, George Siegmann, Mansfield Stanley and Rosemary Theby. The two previous Griffith pictures in which these actors appeared were admittedly the greatest successes ever launched in motion pictures, having played throughout the United States at $2 admission."

Serial Proves Money-Maker

"The Lost Express," starring Helen Holmes in a sensational railroad mystery serial, has proved a consistent money-getter. M. M. Pennell, manager of the New Theatre, Everett, Pennsylvania, writes Mutual, the distributors, as follows:

"Am certainly sorry 'The Lost Express' is finished, as I made more money on this serial than any serial I ever ran. I must say it certainly did bring the people out. My people could hardly wait to see the finish."

"The Lost Express" is in fifteen chapters, each an exciting episode. Miss Holmes, known as the most daring woman in photo-drama, is called upon to perform many reckless feats.

Brunet Denies United Rumor

A statement from Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange, sets at rest the rumor linking Pathe and United Picture Theatres. Mr. Brunet says:

"There is absolutely no truth in the report that Pathe is in any way affiliated with or behind United Picture Theatres of America. Pathe has no connection of any sort whatever with the United concern."

New Picture for Miss Martin

With the announcement of the renewal of Vivian Martin's contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for another year, comes the statement that she will begin work immediately after the completion of "Viviette," in which she is now engaged, on a new picture under the direction of James Young.

Marion Davies Signs Up With Select

Noted Stage Star Will Make Six Pictures a Year—"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" Counted as First

SELECT announces the acquisition of Marion Davies. Miss Davies has signed a contract calling for the production of six pictures in which she is to be starred during the first year. The first is "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," a superb screen presentation of Katharine Haviland Taylor's popular novel of the same name.

This picture was produced under the direction of Julius Steger. Adroit director that he is, Mr. Steger has accomplished wonders in the screening of "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" and has at one stroke created a new idol for the the fans.

An intense publicity campaign preceded the release of "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" and has made the name of Miss Davies—already famous as a stage beauty—known from coast to coast as a star of the screen.

This avalanche of publicity, coupled with the reception given the picture at its first showing in New York to an invited audience last week, resulted in the immediate booking of the picture for the week of June 2 by the Rivoli theatre, and its bookings for simultaneous showing during the same week, starting June 3, in all of the Loew theatres in Greater New York.

The presentation of the picture over the Loew circuit, at the same time that it is playing at the Rivoli, is said to be the first instance of such duplicate presentation.

Under the new banner, it is predicted, Miss Davies will add greatly to her reputation. Still in her teens, Miss Davies appeared before the public first in the chorus of a Broadway musical comedy. Her wonderful beauty, the fresh charm of her face and the piquancy of her manner at once attracted the attention of first-nighters, critics and casual theatre-goers alike. Soon her picture was reproduced in all of the magazines and newspapers. She became known in this way to thousands who will be eager to see her in film plays.

Afterwards she was given speaking parts and these were followed by leading roles. She has been prominently featured in "Chin Chin," "Ziegfeld's Follies," "Oh, Boy" and "The Century Girl." Her name has blazoned forth in electric lights up and down the white path of Broadway. And the most beautiful electric sign ever hung in that thoroughfare now presents her face on a background of lettering and floral garlands which proclaims her appearance in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses."

Clever Theme in "The Gadabout"

Oriental strategy as opposed to the cleverness of an American woman furnishes the plot for "The Gadabout," the story selected as the first vehicle for Edna Goodrich in a new series of Mutual productions.

"The Gadabout" is now in the course of production at the Biograph studios in New York under the direction of Burton King. David Powell, who scored heavily with Olive Tell in "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," and with Ann Murdock in "The Beautiful Adventure" and "The Richest Girl," Empire-Mutual pictures, has been chosen to support Miss Goodrich.

"The Gadabout" is a drama, laid in New York, and deals with high finance, secret diplomacy and exclusive society. Dishonest business is thwarted by means of oriental intrigue and both are beaten by the cleverness of the heroine, supposedly a butterfly, who, goaded by the threat of her husband's ruin, manipulates a cold blooded financier and a wily diplomat to her own ends.

U. S. Film to Have Wide Showing

So that "The Re-Making of a Nation," the official United States war film, may be exhibited in every theatre in the state, United Film Exchanges of California has guaranteed to obtain five bookings per salesman. Most of the bookings will be made through the exchanges of San Francisco, of which there are twenty-four.

That it will be possible to book every theatre is due to the fact that exhibitors will regard it as a patriotic duty to show the film. Besides the government is not distributing the pictures as a money-making venture, but instead so everyone may get a better idea of how vigorously the war is being carried on.

Metro Players Work Nights

Daylight saving is being practiced in earnest at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, where production of "No Man's Land," Bert Lytell's second picture as a star under the Parrot brand, is making substantial progress.

The young star, his director and supporting cast are saving daylight, but it is mostly for sleeping time, as all of them are putting in their nights on the stage in the studio lot working before the camera under a formidable battery of lights, often until 2 and 3 a. m.

The script calls for many night scenes, with elaborate lighting effects. It is to obtain these effects best that the director elected to work such late hours.

How "Over the Top," the Vitagraph picture, went over the top in Philadelphia. The picture shows a typical crowd waiting for the doors to open at the Academy of Music.

President Invited to See "Over the Top"

Picture Has Washington Premiere in Tom Moore's Strand Theatre with Extraordinary Setting

PRESIDENT WILSON, the secretaries of the army and navy, with other members of the president's cabinet, leading military and naval officers and members of Congress were invited to attend the Washington premiere of "Over the Top," Vitagraph's war special, in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey plays the leading role. The invitations were sent out last week by Tom Moore, who presented the picture at his Strand Theatre beginning June 3.

In addition to the distinguished audience invited, Mr. Moore made arrangements to give 'Over the Top" a special presentation. He had scenery painted, a section of trench built on the stage and a company of soldiers, together with a magnificent orchestration, to give the picture a fine setting.

After making these arrangements, Mr. Moore notified Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, that the handling of "Over the Top" would be made one of the biggest events in the history of theatrical presentations at the capital.

"Over the Top" continues its sensational career in leading theatres all over the country, according to reports reaching Mr. Irwin, and last week witnessed the inauguration of an indefinite run at the Auditorium Theatre in Chicago, which promises to be one of the big events of the theatrical year in the Windy City. The opening night was a "sell-out," according to reports, and the audience was roused to great heights of patriotic enthusiasm.

Here, as in Washington, Detroit and other big centers, extraordinary arrangements were made for the presentation. A naval guard of honor was on duty during the first week of the run and on Wednesday night the theatre was turned over to the Blue Devils of France. The combination of the living heroes with the thrilling scenes of Empey and the American troops in action proved an event of magnitude. The newspapers devoted much space to the picture and were loud in their praise of it.

Vitagraph reports that as a result of the successful Chicago opening there has been a stampede of exhibitors in the city and the entire Chicago territory to book the picture, with the result that many extra prints are already in demand.

Following the principle adopted in New York, the picture was not released for general exhibition in Chicago or its vicinity until after it had had a showing at the Auditorium, where exhibitors and public alike were given an opportunity to see what a magnificent production had been wrought from Empey's world-famous book.

As in the case of Philadelphia, where "Over the Top" broke all records at the Academy of Music, the picture is proving a great asset to exhibitors, it would seem. Runs continue in Detroit, Los Angeles, Minneapolis and other cities in addition to that in Chicago.

In the south it appears to have taken a particularly strong grip on the hearts of the people. Among the telegrams received by Vitagraph was one from J. A. Johnson, manager of the New American Theatre at Columbus, Ga., who wired as follows:

"'Over the Top' went big here all week. It is the greatest picture that has ever been here and the only picture that ever played the town for one week."

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, after seeing this and similar messages, said that the success of the picture is one of the most gratifying things of his career because he feels that Vitagraph has lent a powerful auxiliary to the patriotic work of the government.

Film Message Adrift at Sea

Adrift somewhere in the Pacific is a sealed tin can containing a slip of paper bearing these words:

NO MAN'S LAND

Photographed on and around Catalina Island, May, 1918.

If the person finding this message from players of the screen to those who brave the perils of the deep will return it to the Metro studios, Hollywood, California., he will receive an autographed picture of Bert Lytell, the star.

Robert B. Kurrle, camera man, dropped the can overboard from a launch as he finished taking some marine scenes.

Screen Telegram Gets Scoop

What are said to be the first pictures of the destruction caused by the tornado which recently swept Iowa, killing ten persons, injuring scores of others and causing a loss of more than $500,000, appear in Screen Telegram No. 27, released by Mutual June 2.

The recent fire at San Francisco, which destroyed several government plants, including the Fowler aeroplane factory, is also shown in this issue.

"Hands Up" Is Title for Next Pathe Serial

Story Has Western Setting and Deals with Legend of Ancient Incas, a New Field for the Screen

PATHE'S new serial, it has been learned, will be an Astra production called "Hands Up." The story was written by Gilson Willets, scenarioized by Jack Cunningham and stars Ruth Roland with George Chesebro.

"Hands Up" is a western story dealing with a field not yet touched for the screen, the traditions and legends of the Inca Indians with a modern story of romance and adventure.

It is stated that "Hands Up" will be the most elaborately and expensively produced western serial yet seen, and that it will be further characterized by a story of real literary value.

Gilson Willets is the author of more than twenty books. In preparing the story of "Hands Up" he made the minutest investigation of the material with which he worked and his ability as a builder of fiction assures a good story.

Ruth Roland, the star, won the hearts of screen enthusiasts by her work in "Who Pays," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife," also in several five-reel features released by Pathe. Miss Roland has been on the stage thirteen years and yet is only 22. She made her debut as a child on the Pacific coast and was regarded as a phenomenon. When playing "Little Lord Fauntleroy" at the age of 6, she attracted the attention of David Belasco, who did not hesitate to state that she was the best child actress he had ever seen.

She first appeared in motion pictures in western and Indian plays and later was seen in comedies and then followed "Who Pays," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife." "Hands Up" probably is the first western picture since the old days.

George Chesebro will be remembered for his work in "Broadway Arizona," in which Olive Thomas was recently starred. He has been in the show business since a boy, having played in stock all over the country as well as in musical comedies not only in America, but in China, Japan and the Philippine Islands. He played leads with Olive Thomas for many months; also with Mae Murray. Before his present engagement he was leading man with Viola Dana.

Magazine Story Filmed

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, has begun work on another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, a thrilling play made from the story, "Fiddler's Green." This ran not long ago in The Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Morey and Miss Blythe will be under the direction of Paul Scardon, who directed them in "Tangled Lives," a play by James Oliver Curwood which was completed about ten days ago.

Mae Marsh in her latest Goldwyn picture, "All Woman."

Ince Denies Report

Following publication in the newspapers of Los Angeles and other cities that he would shortly assume the supervision of productions for other than Paramount and Artcraft release, Thomas H. Ince issued the following announcement:

"My attention has been called to a statement that I am moving my companies to the Paralta studios and that the Paralta-Brunton productions will be supervised by Ince under an arrangement similar to that between this producer and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"In order to correct this impression I wish explicitly to state that any arrangement I might make for moving my companies to the Paralta studios would be solely for the purpose of acquiring additional space and facilities for my productions and would not in any manner whatsoever affect my very cordial relations with Famous Players-Lasky, through which all pictures in which William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett appear, will continue to be released; and therefore, I will confine my personal supervision to the productions of the above named stars only."

Good Cast Supports Hayakawa

A really notable cast supports Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, in his next Paramount picture, "The Bravest Way," which follows "The White Man's Law." Pretty little Tsuru Aoki, wife of Hayakawa, and Florence Vidor have the leading feminine roles—the latter as a Japanese-American girl, and the former as a real Oriental. Winter Hall, one of the most talented of character actors, has a heavy role as does Tom Kurahara. Jane Wolff, Clarence Geldart, Guy Oliver, Goro Kino, U. Aoyama, Josephine Crowell and others appear in the supporting cast, and half a dozen Nipponese babies contribute to the charm of the picture.

Jewel Gets "The Yellow Dog"

Jewel Productions has obtained the screen rights to "The Yellow Dog" and the production will be released as a companion picture or sequel to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

In acquiring the rights President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Company outbid the heads of six other companies.

"The Yellow Dog" first appeared in The Saturday Evening Post of May 4. It is the work of Henry Irving Dodge. It will appear in book form soon.

The theme deals with scandal mongers who spread untrue and malicious war rumors.

Characteristic scenes from Margarita Fisher's new American-Mutual picture, "A Square Deal."

New Margarita Fisher Picture June 10

"A Square Deal" Portrays Adventures of Girl Who Succumbs to High-Brow Theory of Marital Freedom

MARGARITA FISHER is announced by Mutual in "A Square Deal," set for release June 10. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc. The director was Lloyd Ingraham, who has produced many of Miss Fisher's successes.

The play is from a story by Albert Payson Terhune which appeared in the Red Book and was scenarioized by Elizabeth Mahoney. The role assigned to Miss Fisher is different from anything she has done and calls on the star's emotional ability as an actress, while utilizing her talents as a comedienne which have made her so popular.

A girl who is the idol of old-fashioned parents becomes tangled up with a radical "higher-thought" clique and adopts their theory of "a square deal" when she marries a conservative young lawyer, the "square deal" meaning the absolute freedom of each party to the contract, the arrangement to be terminated when either one tires of the shackles.

The theme is one that has become very much discussed recently and the play is said to follow closely the dramatic construction which made the story so widely read.

Supporting Miss Fisher in the leading male role is Jack Mower, who plays the young husband. The cast is an excellent one, including Louis M. Wells, a noted character actor, while the photography and settings are said to be superb.

The Strand comedy, released June 11, stars Billie Rhodes in a hilarious comedy in which a young wife is suddenly called on to prove her culinary ability by roasting a turkey for her admiring husband's friends. She solves the difficulty by borrowing her neighbor's turkey, already cooked, without the neighbor's consent, and a scene occurs when the neighbor appears and demands her bird.

Screen Telegram Nos. 30 and 31 are released June 12 and 16. The official French war pictures shown in this newsserial are remarkably graphic. American troops being rushed across the plains to stem the advance of the Huns in Picardy, in the world's greatest battle, was a striking scene in the last issue.

"Smiling Bill" Denies He's Forty

"Smiling Bill" Parsons may be bald and he may be fat, but he'll be darned if he's forty.

Bill is pretty mad at Lottie Lee, who writes pieces about the "movies" for the Cleveland News. Lottie doesn't know him, mind you—she's only heard about him—but she comes right out in print to accuse the millionaire comedian of being forty years old—maybe more.

"I don't like to say cruel things about a lady," observes Bill, "but if this Lottie person thinks she's going to damn me in the eyes of a public I'm just in the midst of getting she's got another think coming. I'm a romantic feller, I am; and whoever heard of romance at forty? Women will tell you that's possible, but I'll answer that it isn't."

Metro Stars Nearly Killed

All the thrills that screen players undergo are not recorded by the camera, because these exciting moments often happen "off scene," so to speak.

Such was the case the other day when Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, together with their Metro company were working on "Social Quicksands" on the spacious Clifford B. Harmon estate near Croton, N. Y.

The company was working along the banks of a river at the foot of a high cliff. Just above this picturesque location a gang of men were clearing land to build a tennis court. During the morning the troupe worked regardless of blasting overhead and without accident.

At noon the players prepared to enjoy a picnic lunch and had just spread a tablecloth on the ground and distributed the eatables, when a terriffic explosion occurred above them.

A shower of boulders rained down on the actors, many of the missiles narrowly missing them. One of the largest rocks landed in the middle of the tablecloth very near the stars.

Film Boosts War Fund

Motion pictures were used in Seattle on May 18 to collect a large sum for the Fund for the Fatherless Children of France.

H. C. Henry, a leading business man, who is treasurer of the local fund, obtained the use of the skating arena for two showings of "The Modern Mother Goose," one show being given in the morning and one in the afternoon.

Parents were asked to bring or send their children and the management had as its guests one hundred children from institutions.

Plans to Uplift China Through Films

Young Oriental Girl Who Has Part in World Picture Sees Way to Make Countrymen Respect Her Sex

ASKING a million questions a minute and carefully storing away in her keen mind all the information she absorbs for future use in elevating womankind in her native country, Alice Lee, a bright young Chinese girl, is the busiest person about the World studio in West Fort Lee these days.

Miss Lee realizes that motion pictures are the greatest propaganda force in the world today and it is for that reason that she has chosen the movies as the mode of bringing her countrywomen to higher things.

Miss Lee is appearing as one of the leading characters in a new World Picture, "Mandarin's Gold," in which Kitty Gordon is starred, and she is utilizing every moment she has at the studio in studying the making of pictures, from the staging of the plays to the developing of the negatives and the making of the prints.

"Everyone knows," said Miss Lee, "how the Chinese father considers a son a blessing, and a daughter a curse. Everyone knows how different things are here—how American women are looked up to and respected and what an important place they take in the daily life, especially in these war times.

"There is no reason why the Chinese women should not also be looked up to and respected by the Chinese men and with the aid of the knowledge I have gained in the World studio I hope to be successful in bringing this change about, or at least starting the change.

"I am going back to China soon and with me I will take several thousands of feet of film showing the way that American men treat American women—with the utmost respect. Then, when I am in China, I will take pictures showing the way that Chinese men treat our womenfolk. After this I will show both pictures, one after the other, and in this way forcibly bring home to my countrymen the difference in the standing of women in America and China.

"It is so that I may be able to have success in taking the pictures back home in China that I am studying so hard here and asking so many questions which the World people so kindly answer for me."

Louis Joseph Vance Joins Ralph Ince

Author Will Occupy Position of "Production Analyst" with New Concern in Addition to Writing Stories

FOLLOWING the announcement of the formation of a company to produce Ralph Ince Film Attractions, with Ralph Ince, Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin as the principal executives, an important statement was issued by Mr. Sawyer relative to the acquisition of a famous American novelist who will be added to the personnel.

Louis Joseph Vance is the author. As a result of contracts closed between Mr. Vance and the Ince-Sawyer-Lubin combination, the famous American writer will play a prominent part in the preparation of all of the special vehicles to be released under the name of Ralph Ince Film Attractions.

A special executive capacity has been created for Mr. Vance whereby he will not only furnish original stories, but will occupy the position of "production analyst." In the latter capacity the author will bring all his constructive knowledge of story-writing and the drama to bear on each film before it is placed in production.

Inasmuch as Louis Joseph Vance is a past master in the art of injecting punch and thrills into situations, the executives of the newly formed organization feel that the success of their initial production will be assured.

In addition to "The Lone Wolf," the picturized version of which has scored an unusual success, Mr. Vance is also responsible for such notable American novels as "The Brass Bowl," "The Black Bag," "Secret Kingdom," "Destroying Angel," "The Outsider" and "Terence O'Rourke."

Woman Manager Gets Crowds

Enterprise and originality have combined to make Mrs. Anna N. Dwight, manager of the 1,600-seat Laughlin Theatre, Long Beach, California, one of the foremost exhibitors on the Pacific Coast.

An instance of Mrs. Dwight's enterprise is the success she achieved with a four-day run of the big Goldwyn special, "For the Freedom of the World."

Two weeks before the screening date Mrs. Dwight, by clever advertising, made all Long Beach know that one of the greatest screen attractions of the year was to be presented at the Laughlin.

With "teaser" ads and such apt catchlines as "Hun Savagery, Glorified Soldiery, and A Wife's Devotion shown in 'For the Freedom of the World'" and "Buy Liberty Bonds, Conserve Food and Buy War Stamps For the Freedom of the World," Mrs. Dwight had the film fans agog for the production.

Scenes from the Triangle version of "The Servant in the House." In the first picture Zenaida Williams is seen as the wife, Earl Piel as the rector and Jean Hersholt as Manson. In the second picture Clara Horton is seen as Mary and Jack Curtis as the drain man.

Liquor Money Now Goes for Pictures.

So Says Carl Laemmle, Who Asserts Economy in All Expenditures Is Reason for Prosperity

THERE is plenty of money in the country despite the fact that wages have not gone up in proportion to the increase in the cost of living. Why?

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, just back in New York from a swing around the country, says it is because men and women have cut out non-essentials to help win the war and find themselves with a bigger surplus.

And where money used to go for liquor, tobacco and foibles of dress the money is now pouring into the box offices of theatres, according to Mr. Laemmle. This theory would not only account for the present wave of good business, but would augur well for the future.

"I attribute the plentiful supply of money to the fact that the great majority of people have learned to economize in living expenses by cutting waste to an irreducable minimum," said the Universal president. "The people seem to believe, however, that the elimination of expenditures for entertainment is not economy, but foolhardy and dangerous.

"In my talks with numerous men who have made a study of the question, they take the stand that the people are following the proper procedure. In spending money for entertainment during their hours of play they are safeguarding their hours of work. They are going to their labors in a happy frame of mind in which they can accomplish the most with the least effort."

That thousands of dollars heretofore spent for liquor now is finding its way into the box offices of theatres does not apply only in prohibition centers, but is apparent in the cities where the saloons still flourish, according to Mr. Laemmle. His explanation and the explanations of others who have made a study of the question is that the saloon keepers in some localities have raised their prices to such an extent as to be charged with openly profiteering. Mr. Laemmle says:

"Men who one year ago spent two and three dollars daily over the bar have become teetotalers, not because they wanted to cut off their supply of liquor, but because they refuse to pay prices they consider exorbitant. The result is that this money goes largely for other forms of entertainment."

During his trip Mr. Laemmle remained at Universal City for two weeks, during which time he went very thoroughly into the production end of his big company.

After leaving Universal City, Mr. Laemmle visited several of the Universal branch exchanges in the Northwest, beginning at Portland and swinging around home by way of Minneapolis and Chicago. In every city he met numerous of the prominent exhibitors and in every case he was greeted with the same news —business is good.

"It is extraordinary," said Mr. Laemmle, "to have so many exhibitors acknowledge that they are satisfied with business conditions. Usually in speaking with the executive of a producing and distributing company they are inclined to belittle their box office receipts.

"They seem to fear that an acknowledgement that they are pleased with business conditions will be followed by an increase in rental prices. I am sorry to see this, as every producer in the business is anxious to see favorable exhibiting conditions and will not take undue advantage of the prosperity of an exhibitor."

Mr. Laemmle said that it was apparent that the exhibitors of the country had managed to adjust themselves to war conditions and they all expressed the hope that no changes would be made by the authorities at Washington to cause another readjustment, which will mean another period of uncertainty.

Louise Huff Joins World

Louise Huff has started to work for World in "T'other Dear Charmer." The picture is from a story by Charles Sarver, World scenario editor.

Miss Huff's most recent work has been with J. Stuart Blackton and Paramount. In Mr. Blackton's picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "Wild Youth," she played the leading role. She appeared with much success with Jack Pickford in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," "Jack and Jill," "Great Expectations" and the picturization of some of Charles Dickens' stories.

She also played the lead in a number of other Paramount productions.

Metro Gets Rights to "Kildare of Storm"

Picture Will Be a Vehicle for Emily Stevens and Is to Be Started When She Finishes "A Man's World"

METRO has acquired the rights to "Kildare of Storm," the novel by Eleanor Mercein Kelly, for the use of the emotional star, Emily Stevens.

The screen version is now being prepared by Jere Looney and work on the production will be begun by Miss Stevens as soon as she completes her present picture, "A Man's World," which June Mathis has adapted from the successful play by Rachel Crothers.

"Kildare of Storm" contains a superb role—Kate Kildare—which will call into use Miss Stevens' full histrionic powers. The scene is laid in the South, on an ancestral estate called "Storm," where pride of family is the strongest asset, the tendency being to let the place run to seed. Its great possibilities are undeveloped until Kate, a girl with a wide-awake mind, marries the "master" and comes to Storm to live. Then she sets about making it pay, using up-to-date scientific and businesslike methods. Against this background is acted a drama that for sheer gripping power is unsurpassed, in the belief of some observers, in the entire field of modern story-writing.

Kate soon discovers that the man she has married is not only weak, but vicious as well, and that she must take upon her young shoulders the burden, not only of the estate, but also of her husband's follies. His sins find him out and events of great dramatic value follow. This would be the end of any ordinary story, but with "Kildare of Storm" it is practically the beginning, and from this point is developed a master-drama of love and loyalty.

It is probable that Edwin Carewe will direct Miss Stevens. This combination of star and director has not worked together since "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman" and "The House of Tears."

"Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," by the way, one of the strongest of photodramas, is to be re-released, owing to the incessant demand for it. "Kildare of Storm" contains the same compelling quality that has made "Destiny" one of the screen stories that cannot die.

After the completion of "Kildare of Storm" Miss Stevens will leave for a vacation in the Adirondacks, where she is the possessor of fifty acres of wild forest land upon which she is building an estate.

Plays Opposite Wife

Fred Niblo, erstwhile Broadway star of the "legitimate" and husband of Enid Bennett, dainty Ince star in Paramount pictures, is now an actor for the screen, supporting his pretty, young wife in a picture being produced under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

It was by accident that Mr. Niblo was cast for the role. For some reason the man originally chosen to play the part did not prove suitable and at the last moment Niblo was substituted. But already he has demonstrated that the camera has no terrors for him and that he is as much at home before the lens as behind the footlights.

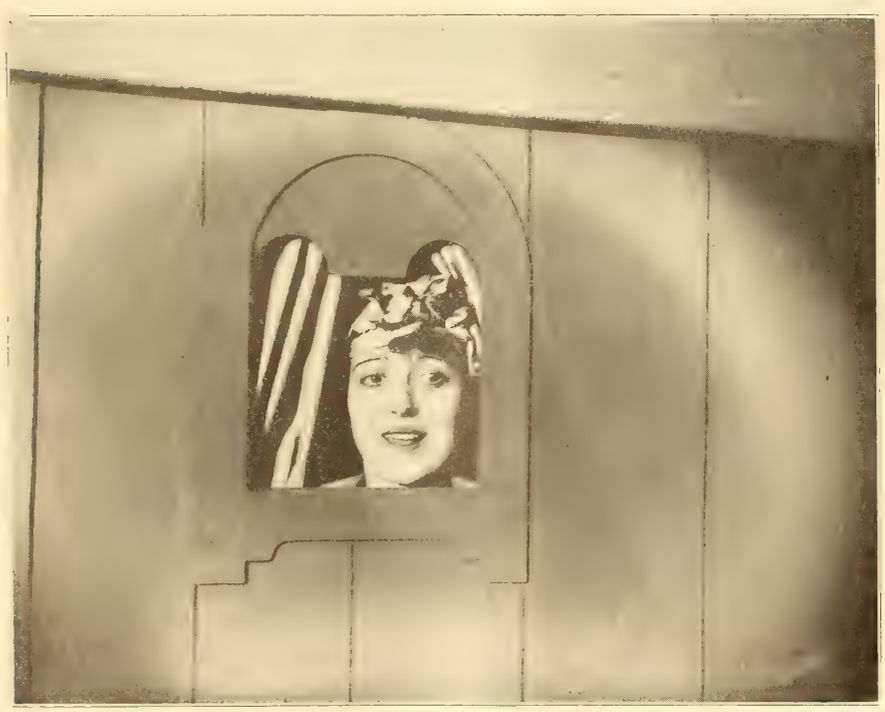
Meanwhile Charles Ray is back in Los Angeles after a few weeks' rest at Coronado and is reading script for his next Paramount picture.

Thos. H. Ince looked at Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture, "The Triple Cross," the other day and while it pleased him generally and would doubtless have been passed by some producers as perfect, he felt there was something lacking. So he called for pencil and paper and in the projection room, in about five minutes, wrote in a prologue which sets off the story perfectly, it is claimed, and heightens the mystery immensely. He also changed the title to "The Kaiser's Shadow."

Realism Frightens Soldier

"It's too much like the real thing—it recalls too vividly the awfulness of the months I spent in Northern France, and I simply can't work in that scene. You'll have to excuse me, don't you know."

Thus spoke Private Henry Woodside, a Canadian soldier who had been invalided home and is now on the Pacific coast recuperating from shell shock. Woodside had been engaged by J. Stuart Blackton with several other Canadian officers and men to take part in "Missing," his new picture for Paramount release.



When the actors were taken to the location and viewed preparations for the battle scenes the soldiers were visibly impressed by the realism. Woodside was most affected and begged to be excused. So his request was granted and his place filled by another.

Speaking of the War

George Irving, director of the Screen Classics spectacle, "To Hell with the Kaiser," released by Metro, is one of the best known directors of de luxe productions in the business.

He began his theatrical career as an actor on the dramatic stage and rapidly reached the zenith in this line. He was associated with Charles Frohman for thirteen years and played with such noted persons as William Gillette, Maude Adams and Francis Wilson.

Like most successful actors he was attracted to the screen. He made his debut as Jimsey, in a version of Eugene Walters' "Paid In Full."

12,000 Billboards to Announce Film

Vitagraph Prepares to Open Great Publicity Campaign for New Serial, "A Fight for Millions"

TWELVE THOUSAND boards, located in cities and towns of 25,000 or more population in all parts of the United States, will be covered early in July with twenty-four sheets announcing "A Fight for Millions," the new Vitagraph serial which will feature William Duncan.

This, according to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, will be the opening gun in a nation-wide advance advertising and publicity campaign. The first episode of the serial is scheduled for release July 15.

Mr. Irwin is authority for the prophecy that this serial will outdo in story, action and thrill any of the other Vitagraph serial successes, three of which have been put out since Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announced his policy of a serial episode for each week in the year.

"A Fight for Millions" is the fourth chapter photoplay in which Mr. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady have collaborated and is the third in which Duncan has appeared as director and star. In "The Fighting Trail," his first, Duncan leaped to the forefront of serial favorites, and he followed this quickly with "Vengeance—and the Woman," which is said to have exceeded its predecessor in popularity and box-office power. "A Fight for Millions," it is now predicted, will be even better than these.

According to advices from the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, Duncan is now in the latter stages of production, ten episodes of the serial being practically complete.

Mr. Irwin has informed branch offices that prints on the first six episodes will be sent to them about June 10 and the entire serial will be in the branches well in advance of release date so that exhibitors may see the serial before they book it. He adds, however, that hundreds of exhibitors already have booked the serial sight unseen, many contracts having been made even before the title was announced.

Several of the earlier episodes were screened at the Vitagraph New York office last week and have been declared even above the standard established with "The Fighting Trail" and since maintained in "Vengeance—and the Woman" and "The Woman in the Web."

A forty-eight page campaign book, containing press matter, program material, advertising cuts, star cuts, stunts and other exhibitor helps, will be issued as part of the Vitagraph service in connection with "A Fight for Millions" and will be mailed to exhibitors about June 15, one month in advance of the release date.

These service books have come to be a part of the exhibitor's campaign in the promotion of Vitagraph serials and the fact that they are in the theatres so far in advance of release date gives the exhibitors plenty of time to lay out their publicity and advertising campaigns.

Mae Tinee Praises New Select

Mae Tinee, the reviewer of the Chicago Tribune, is highly enthusiastic over Constance Talmadge, the young Select star.

"Going 'Up the Road with Sallie,'" says Miss Tinee, "makes a breezy, refreshing little trip, which I am sure you will enjoy. One of the cleanest, cheeriest, best acted and photographed pictures that has been screened in a long time."

New Camera Effects Obtained

The fourth special vehicle in which Madame Olga Petrova will shortly be seen, "Tempered Steel," contains what are said to be innovations in the matter of photographic effects.

"Tempered Steel" was written especially for the Polish actress by George Middleton, author of the Broadway play, "Polly with a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince. The picture is an exciting melodrama, dealing with theatrical life in New York.

The climax of the fourth reel calls for a terrific storm and the death of one of the leading characters from a stroke of lightning. The electrical display on the film is most vivid and impressive. Lightning is seen to play up and down the woodwork of a window, finally striking. The alternate periods of light and darkness have been very cleverly managed so as to bring out a startling clearness in every detail of the scene and its tragic episode.

Following the storm, the moon is seen to rise above the clouds. The effect of having the moonlight creep inch by inch across the floor, lighting up the darkened apartment, has been vividly recorded.

In addition, a realistic rain-storm has been photographed.

Harry Harris was the photographer.

Katterjohn Story for Reid

"The Source," by Clarence Buddington Kelland, will be Wallace Reid's next starring vehicle following "Less Than Kin." George Melford will direct the picture, which will be largely filmed in the mountains—a lumber camp being the locale for the most impressive scenes. Ann Little will again appear in support of Mr. Reid. Monte Katterjohn has been specially engaged to do the scenario.

Donald Crisp, who has been directing Reid, will handle Fred Stone on the latter's arrival in Hollywood next month.

Ebony "Slapstick" Comedies a Real Novelty

Negroes Natural Pantomime Artists and Have Way of Doing Humorous Things That Is Inimitable

THE two companies of Ebony Film players which are at work at the Ebony studios in Chicago are arousing as much interest while they are making their pictures as the pictures themselves are expected to arouse on the screen.

The novelty of seeing colored players enacting slap-stick comedies will appeal to the average picture audience, always eager for something new, something they have not seen before. Added to this is the real humor of the black comedians, and the managers of the Ebony Film Company believe they have a series of offerings worth the attention of exhibitors.

According to President L. J. Pollard, there is nothing more humorous than the colored man when he is really funny and his talk is only a part of his humor. He is a natural pantomime artist and has ways of his own of doing humorous things which are inimitable.

"When we first began producing," says Mr. Pollard, "our object was to get to the slap stick comedies because we believe that negro players are capable of producing slap-stick pictures that will be unsurpassed as laugh producers. That we are realizing our idea is to be seen in some of our recent productions, releases which the General Film Company will soon announce, such as 'The Bully,' 'The Janitor,' 'Mercy the Mummy Mumbled,' 'The Reckless Rover' in which the antics of the colored comedian in a Chinese laundry are portrayed, 'Are Working Girls Safe' and 'A Millionaire Piker.'

"All of these will be slap stick comedies which should find ready bookings among exhibitors of all classes and which are sure to meet with popular approval."

"Recent reports received from the General Film Company satisfied us," continued Mr. Pollard, "that the exhibitor, like the vaudeville manager, is beginning to appreciate that Ebony Comedies like the colored act meet with popular approval, and it should not be long before exhibitors will find these comedies indispensable features."

"The Kaiser" Opposed in Cuba

Effective presentation of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," in Havana will come only after a determined fight against pro-Germanism, according to information that has reached New York.

It is apparent that the pro-Germans have a very strong organization there, which reaches, possibly through devious channels, into high official circles. So strong are the pro-Germans that they have forced the removal of an electric sign in front of a theatre.

The sign read: "Biggest attraction ever presented. Coming—'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.'"

The sign had been ordered erected by B. Lichtig, Havana manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is handling the film there. It was illuminated for only a few moments when Mr. Lichtig received notice that it would have to come down.

An Actress Who Never Looks the Part!

That's Mae Marsh, and That Accounts Largely for Her Success, in the Belief of Close Observers

QUIETLY Mae Marsh goes on her way, achieving results which make other players despair and which make Mae Marsh herself wonder what it is that enables her to exercise so strong an appeal. She cannot fathom the mystery, so it remains for detached observers to do so.

Her ability to grip the heartstrings of people is perhaps her strongest asset. She has a curious appeal, unlike that of any other star before the public today, and she exercises that appeal in any part she chooses to assume, unconsciously and without effort.

By no means is she a weeping heroine, nor does she necessarily make her admirers cry. She reaches a higher degree of art. Mae Marsh has the rare ability of making her audience waver between smiles and tears. It is because she typifies the wholesome, natural, home-loving girl seen in thousands of American towns.

Mae Marsh is a "mother's girl," and as such contributes a unique figure to the heroines of the screen. Her tremendous appeal to women and children is traceable to this fact. Her joys and sorrows are never those of an actress; they are the emotions of a girl everyone knows.

She reminds you of somebody's sister and the girl on the magazine cover. She is every girl you have never met. She is the girl without a twin. She is a piquant paradox. Mae Marsh startles with her passion and charms with her innocence. And always she exerts what might be called a tender sorcery.

Simplicity is of course the basis of Mae Marsh's art—effortless simplicity in which artifice has no part. She attains results with that ease which comes only from experience with the camera's exactions and complete forgetfulness of self. She conceives the character she is playing in broad, general outlines and then depends on her emotions to make it live in the minds and hearts of her audience.

Her wealth of feeling when portraying mimic woes and happiness causes her to forget herself completely and assume the burdens and the delights of her heroines to a degree not possible were Mae Marsh herself not a girl of tender feelings and surging impulses.

J. A. Koerpel, Seattle manager for World Pictures, who was on the local publicity committee for the Second War Fund Drive of the Red Cross, used motion pictures both to advertise the drive and as a means of raising money.

He supervised the taking of a short length picture suggested by the war poster entitled, "He Gave His All," and had it shown in all theatres of the city on Mercy Monday, while on the Saturday preceding he arranged children's shows at five downtown theatres at which there was no admission charge, but an exit charge. At the doors Red Cross helpers collected a silver piece from each member of the audience.

Films were donated by the exchanges and they were selected to appeal to the youthful audiences.

Scenes from the latest Triangle features, "Madame Sphinx," and "The Last Rebel."

Mystery Play Heads Triangle Program

"Madame Sphinx" Is First Release of the Week— Southern Drama, "The Last Rebel," Is the Second

A MYSTERY PLAY, "Madame Sphinx," is the first release on the Triangle June 9 program, featuring Alma Rubens and Wallace MacDonald. A play with a historic background, dealing with three generations, "The Last Rebel," is scheduled for release the latter part of the week. "The Last Rebel" features Belle Bennett.

"Madame Sphinx" is the story of an amateur detective who profits by her mistakes. After causing the arrest of an innocent suspect she falls in love with her victim and through a woman's natural intuition, intensified by her love, she is finally successful in fixing the crime on the guilty one.

Henri DuBois, a wealthy Frenchman, who has disinherited his artistic but wayward son, Andre (Wallace MacDonald), and made his ward, Celeste (Alma Rubens), the sole heir of his fortune, is found slain in his home. It is evident that the crime was committed by some one whose motive was robbery.

Celeste finds a cuff button on which a sphinx has been carved. She retains it and decides to play the role of a detective. She visits a cafe frequented by habitues of the Latin Quarter of Paris and there sees a young artist in whose tie is a pin on which has been carved a sphinx identical with the one on the cuff button.

She believes the artist to be the slayer of Henri DuBois and she cleverly leads him on until the elaborate trap she has set is ready to be sprung. Then, accusing him of the crime, she turns him over to the police.

The young prisoner protests his innocence and the girl begins to doubt whether the right man has been caught, when the faithful servant of the dead DuBois recognizes and identifies the young captive as the long missing son of the murdered Frenchman.

Celeste then resumes her quest for additional evidence to run down the real slayer and by tracing the cuff buttons through the various hands into which they had passed, she finally fixes the crime on Raoul LaVerne, bank cashier, whose love she had rejected. LaVerne breaks down as the girl confronts him with the evidence of his crime, and Celeste secures the release of the artist. The artist again becomes Andre DuBois and gains happiness and riches by winning the love of Celeste.

The story is by Raymond L. Shrock and was scenarioized by Lanier Bartlett. Thomas N. Heffron directed.

The happiness that has been denied their grandparents shall be enjoyed by the children of the second generation is the theme of the second release. The play opens in the South on the eve of the Civil War. Belle Bennett appears as Cora Batesford and later as Cora's granddaughter, Floribel. Joe King is her leading man, portraying first Harry Apperson, a graduate of West Point, who joins the North to fight for the Union, and afterwards appearing as "Lucky" Jim Apperson, who returns to the South from the West, where he was born, to restore the old Apperson mansion for his grandfather. Walt Whitman has the part of Colonel Batesford.

"The Last Rebel" was written by Hapsburg Liebe and scenarioized by G. E. Jenks. Gilbert P. Hamilton directed.

Sailors Praise World Film

A high testimonial of the correct oriental atmosphere in the World picture, "Vengeance," has just been sent to the home office of World by the members of the quartermaster's force on the U. S. S. Des Moines.

"We have served on board this ship in the Far East for a period of about two and a half years and therefore feel qualified to pass on anything oriental," the letter says. "We are taking it upon ourselves to let you know that your picture, 'Vengeance,' was wonderful in all respects, especially so in regard to the street scenes, the people and their actions.

"As we watched the picture our minds to a man wandered back to the 'spick countries' where once we were. The details were perfect. We have a fine moving picture machine on board and show films nightly when we are in port. We are looking forward to seeing World pictures again soon."

The letter is signed by N. C. Bierce, V. J. Abbott, M. C. Jorgensen, R. R. Mathes and C. L. Nebel.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

F. P. L. Grows Strong In South America

South Pacific Paramount Company to Be Formed for Distribution in Chile, Peru and Bolivia

A FEW days ago John Cecil Graham, general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed from an American port bound for Chile to complete the organization of a corporation which will be known as the South Pacific Paramount Company, which will handle the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft films in Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

The headquarters of the corporation will be located at Santiago, Chile, and associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the enterprise will be a coterie of prominent local capitalists and business men, headed by Eduardo Suarez, formerly Chilean ambassador to the United States. The completion of this corporation will be the result of negotiations started months ago between Mr. Suarez and E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

In an interview before he sailed Mr. Graham said:

"The business will be launched by about 125 productions featuring the most prominent stars. These subjects have been most carefully selected under expert advice as suitable for the theatrical requirements of the countries in which they will be exhibited.

"The business will be inaugurated along advanced lines, similar to those now in vogue in the United States which have made Paramount and Artcraft household words. This will include publicity drives and exceptional service to exhibitors, which will no doubt command wide attention as such methods are entirely unheard of in South America.

"Following the 125 subjects already selected we will continue to supply the market on the basis of at least two new features per week.

"The world-war has aroused the interest of South American countries in other parts of the globe and we are sending a considerable quantity of scenics. The welding of closer business relations with the United States will no doubt make pictures of this country particularly desirable, and we anticipate a big demand for such subjects. For other short subjects, including comedy films, arrangements will be made after my arrival in Chile. I am convinced that a ready market can be established for the extraordinary comedy productions being produced by Mack Sennett and Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle.

"This project is inaugurated under most favorable conditions, as our pictures have been so thoroughly protected at home that only a few have fallen into the hands of improper parties, and the pictures shown there will be absolutely first run.

"With this additional distribution point established, we will be represented throughout South America."

"Cinema-Symphony" Ready

With the story written around Sir Arthur Sullivan's famous song, "The Lost Chord," the production introducing "Cinema-Symphony," which Hopp Hadley claims is something entirely new to motion pictures, is now ready for the screen and will be launched immediately through the Foursquare exchanges.

Mr. Hadley's idea has attracted unusual attention in musical as well as picture circles and through an error in the comment of one of the musical magazines caused him to be confused with Henry Hadley, the well-known American composer.

Hopp Hadley, who has been in the theatrical and motion picture business since 1898, when he exhibited pictures in a tent, does not claim any distinction as a musician and states that "The Lost Chord," although introducing several novel effects and allowing for a closer combination of music and the drama, is essentially a motion picture proposition.

World Contracts Renewed

Important deals affecting the foreign distribution of World pictures have just been negotiated between World and the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

The Inter-Ocean Company has renewed contracts for rights in Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, Chile, Uruguay, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Norway, France and Switzerland.

In addition the Inter-Ocean contracted to distribute pictures from the World library in Egypt.

Renewal of the contracts, it is said, followed exhibition of two World pictures just finished and scheduled for release in August.

Pictures Beat Diplomacy

A LENGTHY United States dispatch from Rio de Janeiro last week, in which it was said that picture dramas were succeeding in the Latin-American republics where diplomats had failed, calls forth a statement of approval and commendation from the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation.

Although films from the United States had always been quite popular in South America, it was the war—when it was merely a European war two or three years ago—that gave the great impetus to the photo-dramatic product of this country, the Fox offices say, and opened the eyes of Brazilians and others to the real state and mode of life in the United States.

It is pointed out that Fox was a pioneer in the development of the South American film trade. Although the corporation has exchanges in more than a score of centers abroad, the first branch that was opened outside the United States was the Rio de Janeiro office.

The statement says the basic reason for the remarkable success of American-made pictures in Latin-America is the insistence of the United States film producers upon action. To quote the dispatch, George Walsh, the Fox star, is extremely high in the favor of Brazilian "fans" "because he is always doing something."

The Fox foreign department predicts that European-made photo-dramas will never regain the hold they once had in South America, now that American productions have displayed their merit.

Jester Comedy Sales

Rights to the Jester Comedies recently sold are announced as follows: United Film Service of St. Louis for the territory of Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri; Chester Beecroft for Norway, Sweden and Denmark; Arrow Film Corporation for Japan; Independent Film Exchange of Omaha, Nebraska, for Nebraska and Iowa.

"Shorty Hamilton" Rights Sold

E. F. Lampman, central states representative of the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, announces the franchise purchase for the state of Illinois for the "Shorty Hamilton" series of twelve five-reelers by Frank Zambreno of the Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago.

Many Rights to Film Are Sold

"Mothers of Liberty" has been sold to the Western Feature Film Company of San Francisco for California, Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho.

Other rights have been disposed of as follows:

To the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Denver, for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico; Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, Minneapolis, for Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska; Greiver & Herz, Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana; Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, for Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan; Quality Film Company, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Electric Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; Camp-Bell Company, Kansas City, for Missouri and Kansas; Boston Photoplay Company, for the New England states; Harry Crandall, Washington, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia; "Mothers of Liberty" Picture Company, Inc., New York, for Greater New York.

All foreign rights are being handled by Charles A. Thompson, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

Sells Petrova Rights Abroad

The success attendant upon Petrova productions in this country and Canada have been more than equalled by their sales-showing in foreign territories. Touching upon this point in a statement, David P. Howells, foreign representative of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has the following to say:

"The special productions in which Madame Olga Petrova is now appearing are exceedingly popular in the foreign market. Her so-called 'continental' mannerisms and the technical qualities of her various screen interpretations appeal principally to the movie-going public of Latin speaking countries.

"She is one of the most popular stars on our foreign program and contracts have recently been negotiated whereby Messrs. Bidwell & Larrain have secured Petrova Productions for Chile, Peru and Bolivia, while A. G. Kent of Havana, Cuba, representing the Central American Film Company, will present these pictures in Cuba, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Venezuela, Columbia and Central America.

"Contracts have also been made whereby John Olson & Company will distribute the productions in Norway, Sweden and Denmark."

Australia Seeks New Nell Shipman Film

Star Agrees to Take on Contract If Work Will Permit— Two of Her Latest Pictures to Be Put on Open Market

FROM far Australia an order for another screen story has come to Nell Shipman, Vitagraph star and author.

Miss Shipman states that if the strenuous work now being done under the direction of David Smith, permits, she will take on the contract.

This will not, by any means, be the first story Miss Shipman has constructed to order for Australian producers, as she wrote the first scenario ever produced by an Australian company and her form of continuity was used for a time by the Sydney Morning Herald to illustrate the methods of construction of the plot of play to stimulate a local interest in the film department.

Nell Shipman, star in two dramas which will be exploited shortly in the open market, "The Tiger of the Sea" and "The Coast Guard Patrol."

A Sydney firm has also purchased the rights to her first book, "Under the Crescent." Millard Johnson, the New York representative of the Australasian Film Association, states that her screen successes are in considerable vogue south of the equator.

Miss Shipman has recently constructed two strong screen-dramas which will be exploited in the open market. The first, "The Tiger of the Sea," is now in course of manufacture and the second, "The Coast Guard Patrol," has been passed on favorably by one of the strongest distributing organizations in the field.

Miss Shipman's latest screen success, "Baree, Son of Kazan," has just been released upon the Vitagraph program and is credited with equalling, if not surpassing "God's Country and The Woman," in which she made her bow under the Vitagraph management two years ago.

"Reclaimed" Is Sold

Harry McRae Webster, President and Director General of the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., has turned over to Chester Beecroft all rights to market the big seven reel feature "Reclaimed: The Struggle for a Soul Between Love and Hate," written by Richard Field Varroll and co-starring Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch.

Off in the wilds of New Jersey, Harry Webster is now putting the finishing touches to the scenario for his next production.

Films Make Hit in Cafe

That pictures offer a feature of great drawing power to high-class restaurants is proved by the successful exhibition of films in the great dining room of the exclusive Arrowhead Hotel, Arrowhead Springs, California.

"It is surprising how quickly the innovation caught on with my patrons," Mr. Marshall, the manager, wrote the Goldwyn Los Angeles exchange. "I had 900 guests at my first showing of 'Polly of the Circus' and more than 1,000 at four performances on Saturday. 'Baby Mine' proved even a greater attraction, which gives me the impression that pictures of a lighter vein will give diners more amusement. The attendance at the 'Baby Mine' performances leads me to believe my venture will be a marked success."

With the pictures Mr. Marshall has a twenty-piece orchestra and his settings would be a credit to a first-class playhouse in the large cities.

The Arrowhead has contracted to show twenty-six Goldwyn pictures, with a weekly change of program.

Hard to Get Harpist

In putting over Nazimova in "Toys of Fate," Manager Leo Landau of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, insisted upon having a harp in his orchestra. The orchestra was minus a harp and according to Mr. Landau the musical effects for this particular picture could not be brought out without one. Finally he obtained one in Cincinnati. "Toys of Fate" is being shown to capacity houses daily.

CURRENT AND COMING RELEASES
Viewed for the Box Office
WITH THE STORY OF THE PICTURE

Bluebird

A Broadway Scandal.—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Carmel Myers. Three snappy first reels with two more that hang upon a too obvious patriotic appeal.

Nenette, daughter of a French restaurant keeper, is about to be married against her will. On an impulse she goes for a ride with a youth who has stolen the car they are in. They are chased by motorcycle police and the auto thief shoots and kills a policeman. He hurries Nenette to a hospital, where she is taken care of by a young doctor who falls in love with her. Unwittingly he betrays her to the police, but she is released on suspended sentence. The doctor goes to war, the girl goes on the stage, but they get together for the final fadeout.

Director, Joseph DeGrasse. Cameraman, Edward Ullman. General effect—A fine, lively picture while the plot is developing, but weak in the final reels. Star—Getting better every picture, having beauty and real talent. Support—Adequate. Photography—Great; by the same "cranker" that did "The Kaiser." Production—Ranks among the best of the recent Bluebirds.

This picture will go well in the cheaper and middle grade houses, but just barely misses fire from being a top-notcher. The patriotic stuff was well meant, doubtless, but it gives no thrill. There has been so much good war material on the screen lately.

Metro

Lend Me Your Name.—(Five Reels)—May 27.—Featuring Harold Lockwood. Good farce with lots of "nut stuff."

The Earl of Gilleigh, bored with his wife, comes to America to escape her and encounters his twin brother, who is his double, and who is leading a free, roving life. They trade places. The earl's wife comes to America and the bogus earl tries to make her think he is insane, so that she will not suspect his identity. This cures her of her up stage ideas and she is trying to win back his love when the real earl turns up. Meanwhile a love affair for the twin brother has developed, making everything all right.

Director, Fred J. Balshofer. Cameraman, Antonio Gaudio. General effect—A happy go lucky farce, so ridiculous as to be practically a travesty on the double personality stories. Star—Pleasing as usual, but not surrounded by as much romance as some of the matinee girls will want. Support—Remarkably good, with Pauline Curley and Bessie Eyton supplying the star with two sweethearts, and good farce comedy types supplying the laughs. Photography—Some remarkable double exposure stunts, showing Lockwood talking to himself and all but shaking hands with himself. Production—Well mounted and with a lot of beautiful exteriors.

Harold Lockwood getting desperate in his new Metro picture, "Lend Me Your Name."

Any audience that likes to laugh will like this picture, and as Lockwood's success has been built largely on comedy drama this ought to please his following. Ought to go well in best and middle class houses, but may be a little over the heads of the cheaper crowd.

Graphic

When Men Betray.—(Seven Reels)—No release date—Featuring Ivan Abramson, the producer, and Gail Kane. A lurid sex picture.

This is a typical Ivan story, told largely by suggestion. A married man is supporting another woman and an intimate friend takes advantage of the situation to make love to the other man's wife. Meanwhile the first man's younger sister is ruined by the fiance of another sister. There is a killing, a reconciliation and a marriage of the ruined girl to the brother of the man who had betrayed her.

Director, Ivan Abramson. Cameraman, Marcel Le Picard. General effect—This is dangerous stuff if you live anywhere that they have censors, for while there is nothing in the acting of the scenes themselves that could arouse objections, there is no doubt what the story means. It is sensational to the limit. Star—Miss Kane does a lot of emotional work very well. Support—Excellent, Sally Crute and Stuart Holmes having important roles. Production—Rather cheap, but it is not important in this case. Photography—Good.

Whether or not you will want to play this picture is a question of policy which you can decide upon reading the synopsis. That it will make money is unquestionable, as a name like "When Men Betray" will draw the sensation hunters out of their graves.

Fox

Ace High.—(Five Reels)—June 9.—Featuring Tom Mix. A sizzling melodrama of the Canadian Northwest.

Jean Rivard, when a boy, finds Baby Annette Dupre and her dead mother in the snow and turns the girl over to Jack Keefe and his wife, who live in a settlement near by. Mrs. Keefe dies and Keefe sends the girl to school to be educated, but not until she and Jean have become childhood sweethearts. Years later Jean joins the Mounted Police and learns that Keefe is bringing Annette to his notorious saloon to force her to entertain as a dance hall girl. He rescues her after two tremendous fights and marries her.

Director, Lynn Reynolds. General effect—A snappy picture of the usual Fox-Mix kind, the star's stunts being quite up to his standard. Star—Always on the job and seeming to improve right along. Support—Good, including the popular child, Virginia Lee Corbin, and a new leading woman, Kathleen Connors, who may be a comer. Production—Good wild north stuff. Photography—Excellent.

Mix's name is beginning to have a definite meaning among stars and he is developing quite a following among the crowd that likes westerns, so this picture should be a good bet where they want thrillers without too much love stuff.

Goldwyn

The Fair Pretender.—(Five Reels)—May 26.—Featuring Madge Kennedy. A snappy little light comedy.

A little typist tries to break into society by posing as the wife of an army officer supposed to have been killed in the war. She is carrying on a flirtation with a playwright when the officer turns up, threatens to take the place as her husband to which she has nominated him. She escapes at last and becomes leading woman in the playwright's masterpiece, presumably marrying him later. A secondary plot has to do with a German spy.

Director, Charles Miller. Cameraman, William Fildew. General effect—The usual Madge Kennedy comedy, bright and lively. Star—As in her other pictures, Madge Kennedy is the whole show, and again she carried her whole bag of tricks with her. Support—Tom Moore as the playwright makes his usual fine impression and is soon to be starred independently. Production and photography—Of the usual Goldwyn thoroughness.

This is a good picture for the better class of houses, where Madge Kennedy seems to have made a hit and is one of the finds of the year.

Mutual

A Square Deal.—(Five Reels)—June 10.—Featuring Margarita Fisher. A light comedy of a domestic misunderstanding.

Alice Gilson, a small town girl, gets the "new thought" bug, and goes to the city where she mixes with a lot of art colony freaks. She devotes her time to writing articles about the necessity for women being free from encumbrances and having careers of their own. She falls in love with and marries Thurston Bruce, but continues her association with her freak friends, so that the husband does not have the home he craves. As he had agreed before they married that in the event either fell in love with another they should speak out frankly, he cures his wife by showing up a sneaking fellow that had been hanging around her and then telling her he loves another woman. All ends well.

Director, Lloyd Ingraham. General effect—A mildly amusing story, very sentimental, but without any big feature, the main situation being familiar to all fans. Star—Less hoydenish than usual and looking her best. Support—Average. Production—So good that it almost gives the oft told tale a new flavor. Photography—Good.

This star needs livelier stories and a production of this sort will hardly go big with the people who like Miss Fisher, as her reputation is built upon a little snappier kind of action and this picture is not strong enough to make new friends in another line.

Pathe

For Sale.—(Five Reels)—June 9.—Featuring Gladys Hulette. An old melodrama but very well handled.

Dorothy Daniels, stenographer for the wealthy Waverly Hamilton, loves Jim Reynolds, cashier in the same office. Reynolds steals money to gamble on the races and gets Dorothy to borrow money from Hamilton to help him escape, telling her he has to go west to take a consumption cure. When Hamilton learns of Reynolds' theft he keeps the news from Dorothy, whom he loves. Reynolds keeps writing to Dorothy for money. Dorothy's little brother meets with an accident necessitating a great deal of money for treatment. She finally consents to marry Hamilton, though she tells him she does not love him, and still writes to Reynolds and sends him money. Reynolds learns of her marriage and returns to the city to try to blackmail her, but when she discovers his real nature she discovers that she really loves her husband and the rascal is sent to jail.

Director, Fred Wright. Cameraman, Albert Ortlieb. General effect—A story that is so old it is surprising to find a down to date concern like Astra producing it, the plot being so familiar that everyone knows how it is going to come out. Star—Gladys Hulette has never been so attractive as she is in this picture, both in prettiness and acting. Support—Creighton Hale as the husband is very dignified and a fine foil for the star. Production—Good direction saves this picture from being dull. Photography—Good.

If your audiences are not too critical of familiar plots, this picture will go well, as it has been thoroughly done in every respect, but for the better class house it is lacking in the necessary element of novelty.

More Trouble—Five Reels—July 14.—Featuring Frank Keenan. A lively comedy with a melodrama of finance.

Lemuel Deering is a captain of industry. His son, Harvey, comes back from college with class honors and no bad habits. His father takes him into partnership and trouble begins. Bills for cigarettes and booze begin to come in and Harvey says he never got the stuff and doesn't drink or smoke. Finally a note with his endorsement for $25,000 turns up and Harvey disowns this as well. His father believes him, assaults a rough collector, and precipitates a strike at his own mills. A rival manufacturer seizes the opportunity to try to grab the Deering mill cheap, when, just as everything looks blackest, it turns out that this rival's son was Harvey's room mate at college and had forged Harvey's name, Harvey refusing to betray him because they were members of the same fraternity. Deering gets his business straightened out, dissolves the partnership, and sends the two fraternity brothers to work in his plant with pick and shovel to make men out of them.

Director, Ernest C. Warde. Cameraman, Charles Kaufman. General effect—This ought to make any audience happy, because the plot is rather original, and Keenan is even better as a comedian than as a tragedian and his troubles come thick and fast. Production—Excellent, the beautiful settings making the fun all the more hilarious. Photography—Fine.

This looks like a winner for almost any house, as the laughs cannot help but go over. Rothapfel booked it for a pre-release showing at the Rivoli.

Triangle

A Red-Haired Cupid.—(Five Reels)—June 3.—Featuring Roy Stewart. This is another "Red Saunders" story, full of pep and fun, with some shootin'.

Red Saunders, foreman of the Chanta Cheechee ranch, is deposed to make room for an unpopular successor, Albert Jones, who brings his pretty niece from the east. Saunders' chum, Lambert, falls in love with the girl, but Jones decides to break off the match by sending the girl home. Aided by Saunders, the couple decide to elope, but a treacherous Mexican shoots and severely wounds Lambert. Saunders comes to the rescue again and the marriage is held in defiance of Jones.

Director, Cliff Smith. Cameraman, Steve Rounds. General effect—A new kind of western picture in which the hero is not the center of the romance, this being the first of a series of pictures built around this character, taken from the magazine stories of Henry Wallace Phillips. Star—Roy Stewart in a role which is mostly comedy, but has some hot cowboy stuff in it as well. Support—Usual. Production—The Roy Stewart pictures are well enough known so that when you say this is up to the standard you have said everything about production and photography.

Good wherever westerns are liked, with the added attraction of having a lot of laughs that will not be over the heads of anybody.

Paramount

Love's Conquest.—(Five Reels)—June 2.—Featuring Lina Cavalieri. This is a costume picture, but has a heart story and swift action that ought to take the curse off, even among houses where there is a prejudice against this class of productions.

The story is from the opera "Gismonda." The Duchess of Athens is courted by an ambitious prince, but repulses him. Believing she will marry him if her son is out of the way, the prince has the boy thrown into a lion's den. In her despair the duchess offers herself and her duchy to any man who will save the boy. He is rescued by Almerio, but as he is a mere huntsman, the duchess refuses to carry out her promise. Later Almerio wins a dukedom by killing a notorious pirate, but still

Gismonda refuses to make good. By his persistence, however, and the revelation of the plots of the prince who has been suing for Gismonda's hand, Almerio wins his lady.

Director, Edward Jose. Cameraman, Harry Young. General effect—A beautiful picture of a sixteenth century court, with spectacular scenes and several thrilling episodes. Star—Cavalieri is beautiful, wears her gowns magnificently and gives a dignified performance as the duchess. Support—Good. Production—The best handled of any costume play in a long time, as it moves along without stalling. Photography—Excellent.

Unless you have found that your patrons simply will not have a costume play on any terms, this is a good attraction for the better class houses, especially where Cavalieri's fame as a beauty and operatic star will help.

Viviette. — (Five Reels) — June 9. — Featuring Vivian Martin. A high tension love story with big dramatic moments.

Viviette is the adopted daughter of Mrs. Ware, who has two sons, Dick, an impulsive but unpolished youth, and Austin, who is successful and polished. Viviette really loves Dick, but she is mischievous, and while scheming with Austin to do Dick a great favor she innocently flirts with him. Dick becomes insane with jealousy and in his blind rage for a moment plots to murder his brother, but soon discovers it is really he whom Viviette loves. Austin then convinces Dick that a man with an unruly temper is not a safe husband for any woman, and Dick tells Viviette he cannot marry her, but a sudden turn in events makes him change his mind.

Director, Walter Edwards. Cameraman, Hames C. Van Trees. General effect—A luxuriously equipped drama of British aristocracy, full of red-blooded emotions, and with tremendous tension. Star—Vivian Martin is pretty and charming, but the punch is given to the story by the powerful acting of Eugene Pallette as the turbulent lover. Production—De Luxe in every way. Photography—Remarkably fine.

This story ought to go big anywhere, because the story is not only simple, but unusual, can be understood by the youngest people and will thrill the wisest ones.

An amusing moment from "Viviette," the Paramount picture starring Vivian Martin.

Vitagraph

A Game With Fate.—(Five Reels)—June 10.—Featuring Harry Morey and Betty Blythe. Straight melodrama with nerve-racking suspense.

Harry Dawson, a wealthy young man, disappears after having been seen with Robert Harwell. Dawson's butler has heard a quarrel, which gives color to the charge that Harwell has murdered Dawson. Harwell is tried and sentenced to the chair, making no defense in spite of the pleas of Elaine Huntington, whom he loves. A ship returning to America is torpedoed and all the passengers lost. Harwell then breaks his silence, says Dawson was on this ship and they had had a wager that a man could not be sentenced to death on circumstantial evidence. Only one man can save Harwell, and he is also in love with Elaine. He destroys the saving affidavit and makes a lying death bed confession, which seals Harwell's doom. He gets out of it finally, however, and marries the girl.

Director, Paul Scardon. Cameraman, Robert Stuart. General effect—A melodrama as full of holes as a Swiss cheese and as unreasonable as a jealous wife, but full of thrills that will hold any audience that doesn't stop to think. Star—Morey is so substantial he nearly saves this screamer and Betty Blythe is coming to the front fast. Support—Percy Standing, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard. Production—Average. Photography—Good.

This is such an unreal story that it would not be safe to try it on too high class an audience, but if you are catering to the people who take their movies straight, this story will lift them out of their seats, for the hero certainly gets himself in an awful hole.

World

The Cabaret.—(Five Reels)—June 10.—Featuring Carlyle Blackwell. An interesting story of artists' studios that keeps you guessing.

Helene, a poor orphan, comes to live in a studio building where four artists live and work. She cares for their rooms and poses for their pictures and statues. One of the artists, Ned Lorimer, becomes furiously jealous of one of the others and makes a scene which results in Helene deciding to leave them, despite the fact that Jaffrey Darrel forces Lorrimer to apologize. Helene goes on the stage and makes a big hit. An art exhibition is held and the painters succeed in having work accepted, except Darrell, but Helene refuses to attend a celebration the successful ones are giving and it is to Darrel she goes to give her sympathy, and to the surprise of the others her love.

Director, Harvey Knoles. Cameraman, Rene Guissart. General effect—A very pleasing story the interest in which is sustained by the fact that there are four leading men, any one of whom the girl might logically choose for her husband at the end. Star—While Carlyle Blackwell is featured, June Elvidge steals the picture from him with her beauty and charm, and Montague Love, John Bowers and George McQuarrie in prominent roles make this really an all-star cast. Photography — Beautiful. Production — Handsomely staged and directed with unusual skill from an unusually logical scenario.

This is a high class picture, far in advance of the general run of World offerings, and free from rough melodrama. By advertising the fine cast it should have a big pull in any house except where they want to see the blood fly.

Later she marries one of them, but the old friendship is resumed.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

LAST week there was a strike at the studio of World Pictures in West Fort Lee. New Jersey. Without warning and without any previous intimation of their intention, the scene shifters, carpenters and other workman quit cold. Utterly astounded at this unexpected action, Studio Manager McIntyre made an investigation and upon asking the "props" for their reason, was directed to several large boxes reposing near the entrance to the studio. On these boxes appeared this inscription: "Artificial Flowers—Made in Germany."

"We won't work if you're going to use any German made stuff here," declared one of the "props."

Of course, the World management had no intention of asking its employes to work with German made goods, the presence of the offending case being due to the effort of a dealer to palm off a portion of an old stock. The flowers were returned to him and World obtained American-Made posies. Now all is well.

An injunction restraining the lessees of the old Pantages Theatre building from using the name "Pantages" in their advertising was granted in Vancouver, B. C., on May 20. The injunction, from which the lessees announced their intention of appealing, is to be made as wide as possible and will prohibit the use of the electric sign and leaded lights in the canopy, which bear the forbidden name.

A. H. Casey, the counsel for the leases, quoted a case in the Seattle courts, where the Appellate Court had ruled that the Orpheum management in that city could not take the name "Orpheum Theatre" when it removed to a new theatre.

"'Orpheum' is a common name for theatres; 'Pantages' is a man's name," replied the judge. "I do not see any similarity between the two cases." He added that it looked to him "like a barefaced attempt to use a man's name" by his business rivals.

Director Paul Hurst tells about a dance which his serial company attended while on location recently in Antelope Valley on the Mojave Desert. They came into the little town of Lancaster on Saturday night to attend a regular Saturday night dance. When it was learned that the pretty dark girl in the Hurst party was Hedda Nova, the Russian actress, requests for a dance with her were many. Mr. Hurst announced that Miss Nova would sell one of her dances and give the proceeds to the Red Cross and immediately the bidding started. The dance finally went to a young man whose bid was $50. It later developed that this young man was a drug-store clerk earning $12 a week and that he went around the hall and borrowed money enough from his friends to pay for the dance.

A delegation of picture show managers called on Mayor A. E. Amerman and the city commissioners of Houston, Texas, the other day to protest against the proposal to charge them a fee when the board of censors issues a permit. The plan of charging a fee was suggested by Finance Commissioner Dan M. Moody and was advanced after some of the managers had demanded that members of the censor board pay the war tax at all times except when they were present on business. According to Mr. Moody's plan the small fee that would be charged could be used by the board of censors to pay the war tax and other small expenses.

By a turn of Fortune's wheel, the man whose mad act started the world war now finds himself charged with helping put an end to it. Richard Nelson has been drafted and is on his way to a training camp in the South. Hadn't heard Richard blamed for the war, had you? Well, he's responsible for it. He started it at Fort Lee, New Jersey, one warm day last summer when he aimed an automatic pistol at the Archduke of Austria and let fly a movie bullet that took that worthy's life. Nelson played the part of Gabriel Princeps, the Serbian student, in Goldwyn's production of Irvin Cobb's story, "Fields of Honor."

With total contributions running into thousands of dollars, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is among the motion picture companies 100 per cent subscribed to the second war fund of the Red Cross. Every one in the organization, from Samuel Goldfiish, the president, to Tommy Brennan, the kewpie office boy, who sits at the outer gate of the home office and tells aspiring actors and actresses that the casting department has moved to Fort Lee, has pledged himself or herself to contribute a stated sum each month to this greatest of war charities.

Due to the generosity of Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, Metro pictures are being shown free of charge every Saturday night to the soldiers at Fort Hancock, which is one of the most important heavy artillery posts in the country.

Metro pictures are now the only regular feature of entertainment at the naval hospital in Brooklyn. From time to time entertainers have been sent out by persons philanthropically inclined, but the pictures have never failed to appear, being independent of weather conditions, or any other considerations.

Imposing ceremonies were held at Fort Lee, New Jersey, studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week at the raising of two flags, one the national banner and the other an emblem of honor given by the United States government for exceeding by sixty per cent the quota placed by local officials for subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan. The event was a gala occasion in Fort Lee and its surrounding community. Thousands gathered from nearby points and cheered Elsie Ferguson and Lina Cavalieri who raised the flags to the breeze.

James Young is to alternate with William Worthington in producing The Hayakawa pictures. U. J. Connery, treasurer of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, made the foregoing announcement last week. Worthington is completing the first Hayakawa production and the finished film will require his attention for at least two weeks while it goes through the process of cutting, titling, etc. While Worthington is thus engaged Young will be occupied with the second picture.

Joe Bennett, who played opposite Alma Rubens in the recent Triangle production, "The Answer," has deserted drama for a whirl at comedy. He has been cast for a leading part in the two-reel laugh maker, "Isn't It Warm?" under the direction of William Beaudine.

Jean Hershelt, noted character actor, who played the role of Manson in "The Servant in the House," has reported for duty at the Triangle studio again after an illness which almost proved fatal. He was stricken with appendicitis and underwent an operation.

The Cincinnati Triangle Film Exchange is now under the management of Jack Stewart, who succeeds Mr. Hickey. Mr. Stewart was formerly manager of the Triangle exchange in New Orleans, and was never connected with any other exchange besides Triangle.

The picturization of Ambassador Gerard's story, "My Four Years in Germany," has been drawing such big crowds at the Coliseum in Seattle that it has been held over for a second week. Prices were raised to 25 cents in the afternoon and 50 cents in the evening.

Wallace MacDonald will finish his Triangle contract at the conclusion of his present picture, "Marked Cards," and leave at once for his home in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where he will become a private in the 10th siege battery of the Royal Canadian Artillery.

Oscar C. Binder, assistant auditor of the Universal Film Company, left last Sunday for Camp Upham in answer to his call in the draft. Before leaving he was presented with a Masonic ring and a purse by fellow employes.

An Omaha Universal salesman, Harry F. Lefholz, was mysteriously shot on the road near Fort Crook one night last week. Lefholz's activities in connection with "The Kaiser" are believed to have invited the wrath of the German spy system.

M. H. Hoffman, president of the Foursquare Pictures Corporation, spent two days in Seattle last week, during which he established an office with Leon Bories in charge. The new office is on Film Row, at 2016 Third avenue.

Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer and in charge of exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has started on a trip which will include a visit to every exchange owned or controlled by the Laemmle organization.

Alma Rubens, Triangle beauty, who has been in a Los Angeles hospital, is again at the Culver City studios and work is going ahead on her latest vehicle, "The Painted Lily," which had been held up by her illness.

Another star has been added to the giant service flag of the motion picture industry. Carlyle Raleigh Robinson, director of publicity for the Charlie Chaplin studios, answered the call to the colors May 20.

Protests have been raised in Toronto against the playing of German music in the theatres. One newspaper, the Star, has taken up the matter editorially and citizens have been writing letters on the subject.

Gus Peterson, veteran cameraman of the Triangle Culver City studio, has made application to enlist in the photographic department of the army and hopes soon to be "shooting" Germans in France.

Montagu Love, World star, has almost recovered from his recent severe illness and is spending a few days with Director Travers Vale and Mrs. Vale before beginning work on an important feature.

Frank Reicher, Metro director, has arrived in New York after having spent several months at Metro's Hollywood studios, where he directed Edith Storey in two pictures and Viola Dana in one.

C. R. Evans, who has been with the General Film Company for some time, has been engaged by the Universal Minneapolis exchange to take charge of the features of Jewel Productions.

William S. Hart, the Artcraft star, denied emphatically last week that he contemplated removing his producing activities from his present studio in Hollywood to any other location.

Allan Dwan, chief director of the Douglas Fairbanks studio, who was taken sick last week with the grippe, is doing nicely and is expected to return to work in a few days.

Director Dell Henderson of World is in the midst of "Hitting the Trail," the Roy Somerville story co-starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley.

And still the list of Triangle papas grows. Earl Frary of the art department reports the stork has visited his home, leaving a ten pound son.

P. J. Hurn, head of the Triangle reading department, resigned June 1. Hurn expects to join either the navy or the merchant marine.

Get True African Conditions

In the picture which Clara Kimball Young and her company are now making for Select Pictures, the story is located in the outlying desert regions of South Africa.

Miss Young and her director, Robert G. Vignola, have found a location within the confines of her Hollywood Studio lots, whose topography is identical with the dreary plains and low lying hills of the Kaffir country in South Africa. Prof. Frank Daggett, Curator of the Museum at Exposition Park in Los Angeles, states that this was once the home of hundreds of tropical animals and related species which were to be found in Southern California in the ages before the Great Ice Push.

This scientific corroboration of the appropriateness of the location selected by Miss Young and her director is but one of many interesting incidents in the production of "The Claw." The story concerns the romantic and exciting adventures of a young London bred girl after she comes to live with her brother who is stationed at an outlying British garrison post in "the land of tooth and claw."

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

PHIL SOLOMON has added oratory to his other accomplishments. In his work with the Kleine feature, "The Unbeliever," Mr. Solomon addressed the audiences in a number of theatres. "The Unbeliever," which was made with the assistance of the United States Marine Corps, is being presented in Chicago with the aid of a gun crew under the command of Recruiting Sergeants Daleiden, Anderson and Lang. The boys are having a merry time in this work. Mr. Solomon, in his "four-minute speech," calls the attention of his hearers to the patriotic work pictures are accomplishing and also to the fact that attending them adds to the government revenue through the tax.

Mr. Solomon advances the idea that many exhibitors can aid the industry by asking the co-operation of the regular "four-minute men" in saying a good word for the influence of the pictures, which perform a two-fold mission of keeping the morale of the citizens high and bringing thousands of dollars to the government.

The managers of the western and middle western Fox exchange met in Chicago and advanced on New York in a body to attend the convention of Fox managers held June 3 at the Biltmore Hotel. Among those from other cities who met here were Al. Eden of Seattle, Bill Citron of San Francisco, A. Walsh of Los Angeles, Robert Churchill of Denver, E. Flynn of Minneapolis, Sydney Myers of Omaha, Charles Young of Kansas City and his assistant manager, C. Edwards, and J. Roden of Salt Lake City

From Chicago went William Jenner, manager of the local exchange, and his assistant, Harry Willard; Ben Garretson, publicity director; C. W. Eckhardt, special representative, and Jay Grainer, who is managing "Cleopatra" here.

An observing patron reports that the ushers of the Adelphi Theatre, of which A. Koppel is manager, deserve special mention for their courtesy. He cited this instance: A party of five visited the theatre recently and as the house was crowded, could not be given seats together. The usher did not forget them as soon as they were seated, but came back to them a little later when some other patrons had left and arranged seats in one row. Little attentions such as these are not as easily forgotten as some managers think. A patron receiving thoughtful consideration such as this will not only come back, but he will bring and send his friends.

"Over the Top" continues to please large audiences at the Auditorium. A presentation was given under interesting conditions on the day the French "Blue Devils" visited the city. The French soldiers and the Vitagraph office shared the expense and gave a free showing of the picture to the public, the "Blue Devils" being there in person. Before 7 o'clock the huge theatre was filled. On the next day, Decoration Day, the picture played to unusually large audiences at regular admission prices.

T. W. Chatburn, manager of the Vitagraph office, is sticking closely to the Vitagraph policy of caring for regular customers first in handling "Over the Top." Requests for bookings are flooding the office, due to the worth of the picture, the advertising it received as a book, and its success at the Auditorium Theatre, but in every case the regular Vitagraph customer is given the refusal of the picture before it is booked for a rival house. All Vitagraph specials will be handled under this plan.

An injunction granted the Homan Photoplay Company, operating the Twentieth Century Theatre on Twelfth street, to prevent Metro from leasing "Revelation" first to the Central Park Theatre, in the same vicinity, was dissolved in Judge Windes' court May 27. The Homan Company alleged that a Metro employe had promised the picture to the Twentieth Century first. The court, however, held that the promise, if there was one made, was not binding as it was not in writing.

The Michigan Theatre, a Lubliner and Trinz house at Michigan avenue and Garfield boulevard, is co-operating with the neighborhood school in giving a benefit performance for a school fund through the showing of "M'liss," Mary Pickford's latest play.

"The Unchastened Woman," starring Grace Valentine, is the next big feature on the Kleine program, following "The Unbeliever," and is in line with George Kleine's policy of handling the biggest and best in pictures. The production, in which Frank Mills plays opposite the star, is said to be unusually fine. It is taken from the stage play of the same name which had a long run both in New York and Chicago.

A weekly trade showing of Paramount and Artcraft features will be held hereafter every Thursday morning at 10:30 sharp, in Orchestra Hall. At the first review, June 6, the Paramount play, "Viviette," starring Vivian Martin, will be screened, and probably "Old Wives for New," the latest De Mille production. "Viviette" is said to be the best Vivian Martin play yet produced, and Miss Martin has many pleasing pictures to her credit.

"Prunella" began a week's run at Orchestra Hall, Monday, June 3. Hereafter the pictures will begin their week on Sunday, for W. L. Hill, who is managing the house for Paramount, believes that the word of mouth advertising given the plays by the Sunday patrons will increase attendance all week. "Missing," the J. Stuart Blackton feature, therefore will have its premiere June 9.

Paul G. Smith, who became well-known in film circles through his clever reviewing service, "Screen Opinions," and who lately left the little magazine to join the marines, is now established in his new quarters in South Carolina. He is still interested in picture affairs, in spite of the exciting incidents of a rookie's life, and wishes his friends to write him, in care of the United States Marine Corps, Paris Island, S. C.

Jesse M. Shieldman, a veteran in the film game, with which he has been connected for the past thirteen years, is now in the bigger game of war. He left last week for Jefferson Barracks, Missouri. Mr. Shieldman was recently a special representative for Unity Films. He is well-known throughout the trade and many friends are wishing him the best of luck.

C. W. Bunn, hitherto manager of the Chicago branch office of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has been put in charge of the newly formed central division and will have supervision over new branch offices to be established in Cleveland and Indianapolis. Besides these, Mr. Bunn's division will later have branch offices in Cincinnati and Milwaukee.

The Allied Amusement Corporation is now turning its attention to the censorship problem. A meeting was held last week to consider ways of aiding the Maypole ordinance, putting the censorship into the hands of a board. An attempt was made to elect officers at this meeting, but Attorney Jacobson ruled that this was out of order since the meeting was not called for that purpose.

William Heaney of the Crawford, Madison Square and Virginia Theatres, has his houses all prepared to keep his patrons cool during the hot season. A new cooling system at the Crawford proved its merit on a recent hot Sunday when the temperature within the house was eighteen degrees below that of the street.

"Toys of Fate," the Metro feature starring Nazimova, is held over for a second week at the Playhouse. Mme. Nazimova has taken her place among the foremost favorites of the screen with Chicago fans. "Revelation" is playing to packed houses throughout the city.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, spent a few days in Chicago on his way back from the Pacific Coast. While in the west, he began preparations for the transferring of Goldwyn studio activities to California.

"A Soul for Sale," the newest Jewel offering, starring Dorothy Phillips, will have its first presentation in Chicago at the Rose Theatre, a Loop house managed by H. C. Miller. It has been booked for a week's run.

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince star, was a visitor to Chicago this week. A reception for her was held at Orchestra Hall, Tuesday afternoon, June 4, under the management of the local Paramount officials.

A. Koppelberger, manager of the Majestic and La Crosse Theatres, La Crosse, Wisconsin, was in the city last week, arranging for new decorations for his houses and also calling at the various exchanges.

Ralph Bradford, manager of the Chicago Triangle exchange, reports that business is in a thriving condition and that the past week was the busiest and best since he has been in charge of the office.

E. Auger, district manager for Vitagraph, was in Chicago last week, conferring with T. C. Chatburn, manager of the Vitagraph exchange. He reports that "Over the Top" is going big everywhere.

The beautiful Central Park Theatre, owned by Balaban and Katz, will have an equal in a new Balaban and Katz theatre now in the course of construction at Broadway and Lawrence avenue.

The Vitagraph offices lost three men to Uncle Sam. George M. Meyers is now in the navy and Martin Neiberger and Harry Pape are at Camp Grant, Rockford, Illinois.

"Cleopatra" is playing to capacity houses at the Colonial Theatre, to the delight of the Fox offices and Jones, Linick and Schaefer, who control the theatre.

The Gold Theatre, West Twelfth street, booked "The Unbeliever" for five days, then played to such good business that it held the picture for a sixth day.

Harold Bolster, vice-president of Goldwyn, was a caller in the city last week. He is completing a tour of the middle west and reports conditions as good.

Two young men from the Triangle offices have left to take up war service. Carrol Hofferkamp has joined the army and Charles Fanning the navy.

H. E. Lotz, western district manager for Triangle, was in the city last week.

Ernest Truex, who has been engaged to play opposite Shirley Mason in Paramount pictures.

Cinema a New Art, Says Petrova

In a recent address before a prominent Southern club on the art of the motion picture, Madame Petrova spoke interestingly on the drama, literature and the cinema story.

"The cinema is not like the drama, nor yet is it literature," she said, "but in my opinion it stands equally with the drama and with literature. For this reason the silent drama has improved, because the audience has gradually improved, and the directors have been forced to give better and better pictures, with more attention to details than in the past to meet the more discriminating taste of the educated audience."

View of the ball given by William S. Hart for the officers of the 159th California Infantry at the Hotel Coronado in San Diego. Hart is dancing with the wife of Col. Leonard M. Farrell at the extreme right. Hart is godfather of this regiment, the members of which call themselves the "Bill Hart Two Gun Men."

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Goldwyn Pictures

THE GIRL WHO FOUND A FORTUNE in a BATHING SUIT

HERE you have the liveliest and the best of all the Goldwyn Mabel Normand screen productions—charming, fascinating, appealing and filled with fun, romance and the doctrine of "business with pleasure."

You can advertise this as "the perfect 36" of screen dramas, or as "the romance of a perfect fit" and the crowds will flock in to see one of the screen's greatest favorites

MABEL NORMAND

in The Venus Model

by H.R Durant Directed by C.D. Badger

Better than "Dodging a Million;" snappier than "The Floor Below;" more appealing than the patriotic "Joan of Plattsburg;" by all odds the best thing Mabel Normand has done in the past five years. Released everywhere June 16.

"THE SOAP GIRL"

A Whimsical Love Drama of High Society Life

by Louis Allen Browne

Directed by Martin Justice

Her father was a millionaire. Yet she had never been admitted to Society's inmost circle.

For her father, with all his millions, was just a soap manufacturer.

And then—just as she was "breaking in" to the charmed circle, just before the announcement of her engagement to Richard Van Ruhl, nephew of Society's dominating dowager—then—

Father Soap Manufacturer exploded a bombshell.

He launched a national advertising campaign for his famous Sanford Soap. And the face of the bathing model on the posters that screamed from thousands of billboards all over the continent, was the face of the daughter whom he had meant to boost into fame.

Nice for the girl, wasn't it? Was her woman's wit sharp enough to cut through all the ridicule that her well-meaning father had created?

"The Soap Girl" tells a real story. It's human—it's intimate—it's appealing. And you'll find it a box-office picture.

Steadying the War Communities

AMONG the complexities which involve the industrial side of war, most prominent has been the housing problem of every shipyard town and every munition-making community.

The so-called "housing problem" is more than its name implies. It is really a city-building problem. Providing more or less complete dwelling places for a sudden large increase of local population is only the first step. For every thousand workers, which means possibly for every three or four hundred new dwellings, there must be so many new facilities for getting food and clothing and religious worship and entertainment.

The Washington Times mentions the sudden disappearance of three thousand workmen from Charlestown, W. Va., because a few days of enforced idleness demonstrated their lack of means of entertainment. The all important community steadying influence was lacking.

It is of little avail to provide merely walls and roofs for shelter, or meat and bread for sustenance, for these may be had anywhere. Even men fired by the most intense patriotism cannot labor at one task all of their waking hours. Eight hours sleep will not restore the burned up tissue of sixteen hours work. There must be other recuperative occupations.

Of the ten or fifteen thousand or more workers who may be engaged on a single war task in a community strange to them, only a few have the happy faculty of self-entertainment.

Because figures are available upon the number of new inhabitants of war supply manufacturing districts, it is a simple matter to calculate the proper provision of entertainment facilities. It is merely a matter of supplying housing for such entertainment in proper proportion to the new population.

This project should receive the encouragement and support of the boards responsible for the housing of the workers themselves. The mere fact that new patronage is there is not sufficient, in these times, to attract capital—and capital must be attracted to furnish entertainment. The establishment of a "camp" of fifteen thousand workers and their families means that it is necessary to establish entertainment facilities of fifteen thousand seats at least.

The whole entertainment requirement of the situation points so unerringly and exclusively at the motion picture that argument as to the variety of entertainment is quite unnecessary. The well-conducted picture show is the vital steadying influence that makes life in these new communities livable and sufficient.

Exhibitors' Advertising in Newspapers

AMONG the direct and indirect results of MOTOGRAPHY's inquiry about newspaper treatment of the film business is an editorial in the New Orleans Picayune. After arguing to show that picture exhibition is a daily business, and so dependent upon the daily papers, this light is thrown upon a local event:

A case in point is that of the current program at the Strand Theater. A well made motion picture with an accredited star was offered as the feature production and on the same program was a Charlie Chaplin comedy of the new sort. As a matter of fact the Strand clientele demands assurance beyond the mere announcement that Chaplin was to appear in a new comedy to awaken especial interest. The Nazimova picture, "Revelation," is a good picture but outside of the faultless character delineation of the star it is not a picture with "punch" or "thrill" in the usual acceptation of the motion picture vernacular. Nevertheless because of a liberal and persistent newspaper advertising campaign, the Strand program went over big. So big in fact that the management found it to be desirable to continue the showing of the program far beyond the usual time of showing even the most pretentious former programs. It is also a remarkable fact that suburban theaters whose managers properly exploit their pictures are enjoying remarkably fine business and the constant increase is marked. The time is fast approaching when the motion picture theater will avail itself of the logical means of reaching the people who give it support in a manner that is not an insult to the intelligence of those people.

The editor of the Picayune appears to think he has made a point against us. As a matter of fact, he is supporting our contention. The newspaper is a logical and essential advertising medium for all picture theatre advertising, because the readers of newspapers are practically all picture fans. That same reason applies just as strongly to the reading pages of the paper, whose effort may reasonably be assumed to aim at the major interests of the public. The industry whose legitimate advertising brings large response is an object of popular interest; therefore it is the best of all subjects for popular news service.

It is a public responsibility of the newspaper to supply motion picture news to its readers. It is a private responsibility of the efficient and ambitious exhibitor to carry a reasonable amount of newspaper advertising.

Chicago Amusement Men Elect Officers

Peter J. Schaefer Chosen President and Sidney C. Smith Secretary of Allied Body

THE Allied Amusement Association, recently organized to include every legitimate, vaudeville and picture theatre in Chicago and its suburbs, held its first election last week and unanimously elected Peter J. Schaefer as its president. Other officials are Maurice Choynski, first vice-president; Samuel Gold, second vice-president; Sidney C. Smith, secretary; Robert R. Levy, treasurer, and William Rohe, sergeant-at-arms.

Peter J. Schaefer.

The association is to be congratulated on having at its head a man such as Mr. Schaefer, whose experience, popularity and zeal for the good of the industry is widely known.

"The amusement business is the third greatest American industry," says Mr. Schaefer. "Incidentally, there is more money represented in the amusement business of this country than in Standard Oil and Bethlehem Steel combined. President Wilson is the greatest friend the amusement business can boast of, and in several of his recent addresses, President Wilson has stated that the theatres of America are doing more to preserve the morale of this country than anything else. The screens of every motion picture theatre in America have been turned over to government propaganda gladly and gratuitously. Motion picture weeklies are continually spreading the doctrine of our government. In every legitimate first-class theatre, as well as vaudeville and picture house, four-minute men have preached American patriotism. This alone places the amusement business at the very front of all other means of winning the war.

"Since the tax on theatres was instituted the theatres of America have contributed to the national treasury in excess of five billion dollars. In excess profits and income tax theatre owners and managers have patriotically and gladly given to the government over three billion dollars.

"It is time that this great industry organized itself, and from our beginning in Chicago, it is hoped that the organization idea will spread to every big city, town and hamlet in this great country. For as an organization we can do more to help our country to win the war than as mere individuals."

In addition to a representation from legitimate, vaudeville and picture houses, the membership of the Allied Amusement Association comprises every burlesque theatre, amusement park, carnival company, film exchange, accessory to the trade and film producer in Chicago. The headquarters of the new association will be located at 336 South State street.

Virginia Convention Scheduled

Exhibitors of Virginia were to gather in Richmond this week for a three-day convention in Gray's Armory. The dates were June 13, 14 and 15.

Several stars were scheduled to be present, among them June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, Lillian Walker, Madge Evans, Madame Olga Petrova, Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Clark.

Twenty-six booths were erected in the armory, each housing a separate exhibit. There were to be pictures in the making, cabarets and jazz music. All the proceeds go to a fund to provide milk for babies. Saturday night—the last night—was reserved for a movie star ball.

E. R. Pearson Makes Change

E. R. Pearson announces his resignation from the managership of the Universal exchange in Minneapolis to devote all his time to the interest of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He will have an office at 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, where he will conduct the business of the northwestern branch of the First National.

Pacific Coast Thrives

The motion picture business in Pacific coast cities is now better than it has been in the history of the industry, according to both exhibitors and exchange men.

The big shipbuilding plants are putting a lot of money into circulation in these cities and all branches of business are profiting by it, but none more than the motion picture trade.

Many of the men employed in the yards are from small inland towns or the country where they and their families have had very little opportunity to see really first-class shows, and they are now making the best of their opportunity and their prosperity.

At the same time, however, and for the same reason that the theatres of the coast towns are flourishing, the small inland towns are reported to be "dead."

Many Rothacker Men in Army

Twenty employes of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company have been called to service and are now with the colors: Fred Nieman, George Gibson, Carl Lorang, Brace Grinnell, Frony Reckhow, Robert Zoncada, J. Rockwell Barnes, E. F. Lessner, Joe Steines, W. H. Kremer, Frank Koch, I. Tickton, W. Whiting, C. J. Bonnevier, W. J. Prims, Paul Serotzke, John Hahn, Joseph Kurzer, Ernest Newman and H. M. Duff.

Donald Thompson, the famous cinematographer, received his first moving picture experience with the Rothacker Company; likewise Lieutenant E. F. Weigle and Lieutenant W. H. Durborough, who made European war films exploited by the Chicago Tribune.

I. G. Ries, who was associated with Lieutenant Durborough in foreign war photography, is an ex-camera man of the Rothacker camera division, and Merl La-Voy, who made "Heroic France" and "Heroic Serbia," and who is now abroad setting new war scenes, is an unofficial member of the organization.

Big Theatre Organ Dedicated

The largest theatre organ in the world was dedicated June 9 at the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon. It cost fifty thousand dollars. The Liberty Theatre is owned by Jensen and Von Herberg of Seattle.

Montreal Exhibitors Fined

Ten more exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, have been found guilty of permitting unaccompanied minors to enter their theatres. Fines ranging from $10 to $50 were imposed.

U. S. Chiefs Come to Aid of Industry

DEPLORE TALK OF PICTURES AS NON-ESSENTIAL

GOOD NEWS came from Washington last week, when four men, high in the affairs of the government, spoke up boldly and championed the exhibition of motion pictures in a way calculated to rout those misguided individuals who have striven—notably in Los Angeles—to have picture theatres designated as non-essentials and avoided on that account.

"I should look upon it as a misfortune if moving pictures or other clean forms of amusement should be abolished," said W. G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury and director of railroads.

"I believe in the motion picture just as I believe in the press, and in my work it plays just as powerful a part in the production and stimulation of an aroused and enlightened war sentiment," said George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

"I consider the motion picture as having distinct educational value," said H. A. Garfield, fuel administrator.

"They (pictures) are educational and have great value from a moral point of view," said Herbert Hoover, food administrator.

Sentiments Expressed in Letters

These remarks were couched in letters, which explain themselves. The first letter, directed to Charles Hart, director, Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is from George Creel, chairman of that committee. It follows:

My Dear Mr. Hart:

This is an acknowledgment of your letter, calling my attention to the growth of a movement against the continuance of the motion picture theatre on the theory that it is non-essential.

As you know, my own views are not only definite, but a matter of record. I believe in the motion picture just as I believe in the press, and in my work it plays just as powerful a part in the production and stimulation of an aroused and enlightened war sentiment.

The motion picture industry as a whole has put itself squarely behind the government and at the disposal of the government, and I cannot speak too highly of the importance and effectiveness of its service.

Because I do not wish to speak out of my own experience entirely, or in any manner, to run counter to the policies of other governmental divisions, I took the whole matter up at once with Secretary McAdoo, Dr. Garfield and Mr. Hoover, and I enclose you copies of their letters.

Believe me,

Very sincerely,
(Signed) GEORGE CREEL,
Chairman.

Letter From McAdoo

The letter from Mr. McAdoo follows:

My Dear Mr. Creel:

I have your letter of the 23rd of May, informing me that a movement is sweeping over the country to close moving picture theatres on the ground that they are non-essential.

I am amazed that such a movement should gain any headway. While there have undoubtedly been many harmful moving pictures displayed in the past, and while it is probable that some of this kind of pictures are still being displayed, I consider the influence of moving pictures, particularly during the war, a beneficial one.

The people of the country who are working at high pressure to win the war need some form of recreation, and to a vast number of our people moving pictures are the only form of recreation within their means.

The majority of the moving picture theatres of the country have placed themselves unreservedly at the disposal of the government for the furtherance of Liberty loans, war savings and other government movements, and deserve the thanks of the country for their patriotic attitude.

I should look upon it as a misfortune if moving pictures or other clean forms of amusement in America should be abolished.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) W. G. McADOO.

Letter From Garfield

H. A. Garfield wrote:

My Dear Mr. Creel:

So far as I have any personal conviction in the matter, I am frank to say that I consider the motion picture, properly controlled, as having distinct educational value, and as well being a legitimate amusement, which I see no present need of the government curtailing.

Yours very truly,
H. A. GARFIELD.

Letter From Hoover

Herbert Hoover said:

Dear Mr. Creel:

I would say that at the present moment there is no necessity to close the moving pictures as non-essentials. To me, non-essentials are all relative to our necessities.

I believe it is essential to get all of the labor in the United States who have mechanical or agricultural training back into these callings. This does not at all imply that the moving picture should be closed down; in fact, they are educational and they have great value from a moral point of view.

War does not imply the abolition of recreation—so long as it is not wasteful of national resources.

Long before the movies are closed they should be given ample opportunity to engage women for such of the work as is now carried on by men who can be replaced. That is, all such people as ushers, ticket-selling people and so on, can quite properly be replaced by women. So far as I know, none of the countries at war have found it necessary to go farther than this.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) HERBERT HOOVER.

Whereupon it may be assumed that Washington has not changed its original approval of the motion picture as a war aid, but rather is more convinced than ever of its rightful place in public favor.

Some Godfather!

Six thousand sacks of smoking tobacco were sent to the men of the 159th California infantry last week by their godfather, William S. Hart.

Artcraft

Selfish Yates, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—Personally I thought this a good picture, but my patrons want more action in a Hart play. Business fair.—M. J. Weil, Castle Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Man from Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—Fairbanks is a favorite and always brings good business. This is a good picture.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

Down to Earth, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—Not as good as some of the other Fairbanks plays, but Doug always pleases.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

Wolves of the Rail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—This is a splendid picture and went over big. Hart is always a favorite here.—R. S. Tucker, Orpheum Theatre, Moscow, Idaho.

M'liss, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—Pretty fair picture. Drew fair business. The star is not as popular as she was.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High-class neighborhood.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit

A Dog's Life, with Charlie Chaplin (First National)—Great. Drew well. Plenty of new stuff. Three reels. A laugh from start to finish.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

My Four Years in Germany (First National)—Went over big. A great picture and everyone liked it.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

My Four Years in Germany (First National)—This played for three days to capacity. It is the greatest pictorial expression upon the present crisis. The contrasts shown between a monarchy and a republic, autocracy and democracy, authoritarianism and liberty, are sure to appeal to any audience in this country. I introduced the picture simply, showing slides of a few former presidents, Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Roosevelt and Wilson. Brought the audience to their feet when the American flag was thrown on the screen. Sang the national anthem. Instructed my organist to furnish no music when the German characters were being shown. Received the Madman of Potsdam in absolute silence, but the moment Ambassador Gerard appeared the organist played "America" and the effect upon the audience was wonderful. I have never seen such enthusiasm. No exhibitor can make a mistake with this picture. It will make more money, with less expense in advertising, than any so-called war picture because it is based upon facts and the titles show the page in Gerard's book from which the incidents have been filmed. This makes the audience feel its reality.—Sam Atkinson, Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill.—High class clientele.

Fox

Treasure Island, with the Fox kiddies (Fox)—This is a children's picture. Older people pass it up. It is not worth the price charged and I lost money on it.—R. S. Tucker, Orpheum Theatre, Moscow, Ida.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—I think this is the best Fox play yet. Capacity business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High class patronage.

The Soul of Buddha, with Theda Bara (Fox)—Good, but entirely too strong. Business good.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High class patronage.

Goldwyn

The Face in the Dark, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—The star is not liked. A very weak story. Poor business.—Ludy Bostem, A Muse U Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—No drawing power. Film in poor condition. Audience disappointed.—Whitman & Grafort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—About on a par with the others. Film in poor condition. No drawing power. No business.—Whitman & Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Fields of Honor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—A very good production. The kind that satisfies, if nothing more.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—This is a good picture, especially pleasing to the women. The house was full of giggles. In my opinion a good production. Star made good impression. Why don't producers make more pictures of the light comedy type.—Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

For the Freedom of the World, with E. K. Lincoln (Goldwyn)—This is a splendid picture and pleased many of our patrons. They liked it better than The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin. R. S. Tucker, Orpheum Theatre, Moscow, Idaho.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A good production. Fair business.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.

All Woman, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—A poor picture. Did not take.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Kleine

Ruggles of Red Gap, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay-Kleine)—Seven reels. A little too long. Just average. A comedy-drama which will get over.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Unbeliever, with Ray McKee (Edison)—Went big because we got behind it and put it over. (Presentation described on another page.) We charged 22 cents for adults, ten for children, and everyone went away satisfied. The play itself is a little weak and needs some extra bolstering. I do not see why it should rent for so much.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Jewel

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—A clean-up here. Pleases almost everyone.—Ludy Bostem, A Muse U Theatre, Muscatine, Ia.

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—This is the greatest picture I ever ran, from a financial standpoint. It doubled my previous record. I advertised it big, spent as much in advertising as the picture cost, and I got results. The picture gave very good satisfaction. Don't be afraid to take it and advertise it.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

The Man Without a Country, with Florence La Badie (Jewel)—A good picture to good business at advanced prices.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

Come Through, with Herbert Rawlinson (Jewel)—Great. Played to capacity houses at advanced prices for two days. Was the talk of the town.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Pay Me, with Dorothy Phillips (Jewel)—Star good. Business fine.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Metro

Revelation, with Alla Nazimova (Metro)—A very good picture. Drew good business. The star is great and everyone liked her.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

More Truth Than Poetry, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—A good picture and well liked.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Under Handicap, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—A fine western. The star does good work. Everybody pleased.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—Patrons liked this picture but the film was in poor condition.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Trail to Yesterday, with Bert Lytell (Metro)—A new star. We will have to wait for his next picture to see if he takes well. This one did not draw. Six reels long.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2488 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Mutual

The Mate of the Sally Ann, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—One of the star's best. People like this clean comedy. Good for any house. Fair business.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Powers That Prey, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—One of the star's best. She is getting popular here.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

The Richest Girl, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—Star clever. No story, action slow. Poor business.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

The Fireman, with Charlie Chaplin (Mutual)—We always pack our house on these reissues. This is one of the best.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Paralta

An Alien Enemy, with Louise Glaum (Paralta)—Six reels. The story hinges on the war. The people expected to see the star in her usual vampire role but were disappointed.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

His Robe of Honor, with Henry B. Walthall (Paralta)—Fair. The acting is good but the play is not very striking.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Rose O' Paradise, with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—A good picture but it did not prove a good drawing card.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

With Hoops of Steel, with H. B. Walthall (Paralta)—This did not draw. Walthall seems to have been forgotten.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Paramount

The Kitchen Lady (Sennett-Paramount)—A very pleasing comedy, one that gets many laughs.—W. Wayne McCormick, Dreamland Theatre, Emden, Ill.

Moonshine, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—A sure cure for a sick box-office. Star very popular here.—Ludy Bostem, A Muse U, Muscatine, Iowa.

Unclaimed Goods, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—A pleasing picture, not serious. The star is only fair as a box-office attraction here.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A splendid picture. My house was packed two nights and a matinee.—R. S. Tucker, Orpheum Theatre, Moscow, Ida.

The White Man's Law, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—Good business as the star is popular here. The picture is pleasing and has a very good cast.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Unclaimed Goods, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—Business good. The picture is a good western thriller. The star is well liked here.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Sheriff Nell's Tussle, with Polly Moran (Sennett-Paramount)—Very good. These Sennett comedies are fine. Polly is some cow puncheress.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Tyrant Fear, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—Very good business. The star is popular here. The picture is good but not the style that takes here.—George H. Done, Gayety Theatre, Payson, Utah.

Playing the Game, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—A very good picture. Went over well.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Rich Man, Poor Man, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—A pretty good picture but the star is not very popular here as our patrons do not care for juvenile roles.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

The Mating of Marcella, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—An extra fine offering. Business good.—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theatre, Provo, Utah.—High class patronage.

Pathe

An Amateur Orphan, with Gladys Leslie (Pathe)—Fine picture. Everyone liked it. Business fair.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Iron Heart, with Edwin Arden (Pathe)—A very good picture and patrons were pleased.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Told at Twilight, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—A picture very well liked. Business good.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Bert Lytell company, engaged in making "No Man's Land," photographed on location in southern California. Next to the star is his leading woman, Anna Q. Nilsson. At the extreme left is the director, Will S. Davis.

Select

At the Mercy of Men, with Alice Brady (Select)—Pink permit for Chicago. A Russian story, not for children. The title should draw well in certain localities.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

Over There, with Charles Richman (Select)—Great. Best picture I ever ran. I am in a town of 1,800 and my theatre seats 350 and I could not accommodate the crowds in two shows. I had to turn them away, and I did not get through showing until two o'clock. They all liked it.—Carl A. Parker, Parker's New Theatre, Denton, Md.

The Ordeal of Rosetta, with Alice Brady (Select)—A pretty good picture.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Up the Road with Sallie, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—A very good offering.—A. J. Kaufman, Michigan Theatre, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Triangle

The Good Bad Man, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—A fair picture but the film is in very bad condition.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Little Yank, with Dorothy Gish (Triangle)—A picture of the Civil War. Pleased well.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Master of His Home, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A good mining camp story.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—The best of the Glaum pictures. A real live western feature.—Leoffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Wooden Shoes, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—A real Dutch picture. Scenes laid in Holland.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

They're Off, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—A good race track story. It's a pleasing picture.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

The Americano, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—The best Fairbanks-Triangle pictures. Drew a good crowd.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

The Gun Fighter, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—Not as good as Hell's Hinges and former pictures.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Back of the Man, with Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—A picture that gives Ray a chance to show his skill.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Jim Bludso, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—Lucas has good drawing power.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Paddy O'Hara, with William Desmond (Triangle)—A fine war picture.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

The Aryan, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—Not as good as some of Hart's but he is a good drawing card. The people like him in western plays best.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Broadway, Arizona, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—A great picture. Characters all good. Everyone well pleased.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Cassidy, with Dick Rosson (Triangle)—Action too slow and the star doesn't draw. Is not known here.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—Did the usual capacity business in spite of the first hot spell of the season.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Wild Sumac, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—A very good picture with a real fight. Had I known what it was in time to have advertised it, I would have raised the admission, as it will satisfy at advanced prices.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Vitagraph

The Price of Fame, with Mark MacDermott (Vitagraph)—A good picture to good business.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

Kittie McKay, with Lillian Walker (Vitagraph)—The star doesn't take well here. The title did not do justice to the picture either, but the play is good.—C. D. Thompson, Star Theatre, Veblen, S. D.

World

Journey's End, with Ethel Clayton (World)—A much better picture than the trade papers reported. It's a safe bet in any first-class house.—Ludy Bostem, A Muse U Theatre, Muscatine, Ia.

Betsy Ross, with Alice Brady (World)—Fine. Everyone was well pleased with it. Good business.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

The Corner Grocery, with Lew Fields (World)—Good. Patrons well pleased.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Vengeance, with Montague Love (World)—Our people do not care for these pictures containing oriental atmosphere.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago.—Middle class neighborhood.

The Man Hunt, with Ethel Clayton (World)—Miss Clayton's first appearance at the Castle. This is a very pleasing picture and satisfied our patrons very well. Business held up well for four days. I think Miss Clayton will be a drawing card for us.—M. J. Well, Castle Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

State Rights Specials

Raffles, with John Barrymore (State Rights)—Fine. Everyone liked this picture. Film good.—Whitman and Graffort, Princess Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

Civilization (Ince-State Rights)—A good picture but we would rather have a picture like The Slacker.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

The Dumb Girl of Portici, with Pavlowa (State Rights)—Very poor.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wisconsin.

Serials and Series

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—We have just finished this serial. It is a strong drawing card. Standing room only was the rule.—George O. Monroe, Jewel Theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.

Notice

Please be sure your name is signed to your box-office report. We have an unsigned report on "A Dog's Life," "The Eagle's Eye," the "Judge Brown" series, "Son of Democracy," and other pictures. Whose is it?

Talk "Cold Turkey" In Nashville Fight

SUNDAY SHOWS PUT SQUARELY UP TO CITY COMMISSION

THE fight in Nashville for Sunday moving pictures has narrowed to this — the majority against the churches.

The majority want seven-day pictures, and they want them bad, as forcibly demonstrated in the recent "straw" election held by the Nashville Tennessean and American, the leading morning newspaper.

The past two weeks have seen a renewal of the fight on both sides. The ministers have preached sermons denouncing the efforts to bring Sunday pictures to Nashville as a means of diversion to the thousands of new inhabitants coming into the city as a result of the great government powder plant's establishment here, while committees have waited upon the mayor and individual letters and phone calls by the score have poured into the mayor's office from advocates of the plan.

Paper Talks "Cold Turkey"

Following the mayor's assertion that he would not allow a picture house to open in Nashville on Sunday "under any circumstances, even if he had to use the entire police department to enforce the order," the Tennessean and American addressed an open letter to the Nashville city commission.

The letter was published three columns wide and running the full length of the editorial page, calling on the commission to take action and amend the statutes of the city to such an extent that Sunday pictures would be permitted, as a means of protection to the modern welfare conditions of the city.

Asks Legal Permission

The open letter pointed out that various labor unions had adopted resolutions approving Sunday pictures, that the people had voted in the newspaper "straw" election by a majority of 8,237 votes for Sunday pictures, and that only 844 voted against the move. It was shown that in a certain city statute a phrase existed which points out that it is unlawful for any place of business or amusement to remain open for profit on Sunday. The appeal asks that this section be so amended as to permit the shows to be run on Sunday without any violation of the law.

The baseball park is running, it is argued, which operates for both profit and amusement on Sunday, and the brand of amusement supplied is of a much noisier and objectionable character than the quiet operation of a moving picture show.

How Baseball Is Excepted

"In so suggesting," the letter reads, "we wish to call your honored attention to Section 1072, same page, same volume, laws of Nashville, which reads: 'It shall be unlawful and is hereby declared a misdemeanor to engage in, conduct, or permit any agent or employe to engage in or conduct any game, sport or device for profit on Sunday, except baseball.' In calling your attention to this section we do so because baseball is made an exception—an exception just as we suggest, and the people want moving pictures to be excepted in Section 1073.

"The United States government has approved of Sunday moving pictures by allowing the Liberty theatres in all army cantonments and the motion picture houses in the district of Columbia to be open on Sundays. It is evident that the United States government has felt that this was necessary for the welfare of its soldiers and its citizens, especially in these times of stress, when human nature tends toward morbidness.

"Nashville now has an army of many thousands of men, working from early morning to late at night making powder for the government, helping us to win in this struggle for world democracy. Those men deserve some recognition. They should be given an opportunity for clean recreation on Sunday, and nothing offers better recreation than moving pictures."

Churches Grow Bitter

Taking the question from a standpoint of the churches, there has been strong opposition since the "straw" election. Dr. James I. Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, has been one of the leaders in the movement to oppose Sunday pictures. He has been in conference with officials of the newspaper holding the election in an effort to show that the majority rule plan applies to closing the shows on Sunday rather than permitting them to open.

Dr. Vance also brought out that the results of Sunday moving pictures would be the same as that of Sunday baseball, and argued that Sunday baseball brought but little more patronage than six-day ball.

Wherein Dr. Vance is wrong, especially in the case of the Nashville Southern League team. It has been shown that in some cases there were practically as many persons at a Sunday ball game as attended during the entire week of six days. The people want entertainment on Sunday. There can be no doubt of that.

Baptists Are Active

The Baptists have likewise been active in opposing the Sunday opening plan. Resolutions were adopted at a Sunday meeting and presented to the mayor and city officials, calling on them to forbid the opening of Sunday shows.

At a meeting of the Pastors' Alliance on Monday morning, June 3, all members of the alliance, embracing various churches of the city, voted solidly against Sunday pictures.

One of the most convincing arguments yet presented to the city commission was the petition on Wednesday, June 5, by a large delegation of the powder plant workers themselves. The petition stated that the men had to go to work early and did not get off until late, and did not have time to attend theatres in the week, and that they were strongly in favor of Sunday pictures.

Edna Goodrich Well Cast

"The Gadabout," upon which Edna Goodrich is now working for Mutual at the Biograph studios in New York, gives the famous stage beauty the role of a frivolous, pampered young society matron—a part well adapted to Miss Goodrich's particular beauty and her faculty of wearing gorgeous clothes.

She portrays the type of woman found in all circles of ultra wealthy society, spoiled by worship and attention, living to the very limit of her husband's resources. The plot revolves around the situation which arises when the young husband's ruin threatens and the methods she adopts to avert his ruin.

Miss Goodrich has David Powell as leading man. Mr. Powell has appeared opposite the screen's most favored actresses in the last year, but this is his first appearance with Miss Goodrich.

Select Promotes C. R. Rogers

C. R. Rogers, Select branch manager at Buffalo, has been put in charge of the New England territory with headquarters in the Boston office. He is succeeded at Buffalo by Sherman S. Webster.

J. C. Ragland, Fox manager at Cincinnati, has joined Select to manage the branch office at St. Louis.

Hoffman Quits as Foursquare Chief

Sells Interest to George Backer, Who with Jacob Wildberg Will Direct Affairs in Wider Channels

A REALIGNMENT of financial interests in Foursquare Pictures, Inc., has taken place. The holdings of M. H. Hoffman, who has been vice-president and general manager, have been purchased by George Backer. Simultaneously, Mr. Hoffman resigned and withdrew from headquarters.

Mr. Backer, president of Foursquare Pictures, now assumes active control of the organization and with his business associates will proceed to extend its endeavors. In conjunction with Jacob Wildberg, treasurer, Mr. Backer will not only direct the operations of the entire Foursquare organization, but also select the pictures to be acquired for distribution.

From now on, Foursquare will acquire for distribution, through its completely-owned twenty-six exchanges and affiliated distributing companies, one feature photoplay each month—making twelve every year. Every picture, to qualify as Foursquare product, must conform to a given standard of pictorial and box-office excellence.

Eight of these "specials" will be produced by the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, which is confining its efforts solely to that number of unusually fine photoplays each year. Arrangements have been concluded with another high-class producing firm for four, possibly six, features of similar superiority.

It is the purpose of Mr. Backer and his associates to apply to the conduct of the enterprise the sort of constructive methods which have been and are now followed by large commercial institutions.

Establishing and maintaining quality of film merchandise and efficiency of distribution and service to exhibitors will be the principal aims of Foursquare Pictures, Inc., under its new management. Already a factor among the large independent national distributors, there is reason to believe that its fortunes will thrive to a degree that should be eminently satisfactory.

"Mr. Hoffman leaves us with every good wish for his success," said President Backer of Foursquare. "He has purchased from us the New York Foursquare exchange, and I am sure will endeavor to operate it upon a basis of serving the needs of exhibitors to the end of increasing the business and making it one of permanence and worthy of the good will of its patrons."

Select Stars Busy

Norma Talmadge has just completed the filming of "The Safety Curtain," and Alice Brady has got through with the camera work on one of her future Select pictures. Select's latest star, Marion Davies, is also enjoying a vacation.

Meantime, out on the coast, Clara Kimball Young and Constance Talmadge are both hard at work in their respective studios at Hollywood, California.

Part of a semi-tropical village built for "A King in Khaki," a forthcoming Metro picture starring Harold Lockwood.

5,000 Persons in World Picture

More than 5,000 persons will be seen in a new World picture written by Harry O. Hoyt of the World scenario department, in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley will be starred.

Both the story and scenario of this attraction, which bears the title of "Making Good," were written by Mr. Hoyt and the work may be said to be a combination of those elements which make educational pictures so interesting and a striking love story which gives it zest and a big appeal.

For the present the theme is being kept a secret, but it is revealed that the subject is one of tremendous popular interest and a topic that has not yet been treated upon in pictures.

So big is the picture considered by the World executives that it is expected that it will mark a distinct advance in direction, photography and entertainment value. "Making Good" promises to make good in a spectacular manner for those exhibitors who are so fortunate as to use the World program.

Build Tropical Village Set

An illustration of the technical man's art is afforded in the construction of a setting representing a native village on a tropical island, the locale of Metro's version of Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, "A King in Khaki," starring Harold Lockwood.

The setting was built on a point overlooking the Pacific ocean, at Pebble beach, near Monterey, California. In the foreground is a group of structures of varying sizes—the small huts of natives, the two-story offices of the company developing the island, and the long, squat lodging quarters of the men—substantial structures covered with tules, the roofing of the semi-tropics. In the background are warehouses, the wharf and the wireless station. Throughout the setting are different evidences of the semi-tropics in the cocoanut trees, the caldrons, and the rough replicas of the comforts of the more developed countries.

Hart Back from Mountains

William S. Hart and his company have just returned to Hollywood from a three weeks' expedition in the heart of the Santa Monica mountains, about a hundred miles from Los Angeles, where exteriors were taken for "Riddle Gawne."

The star's party camped out during the filming of the scenes. They lived in tents thrown up on the side of the hills and ate from tin dishes of food prepared on camp fires by a cowboy cook who is also a member of the company.

N. A. M. P. I. Plans to Grow With Trade

BIG MEETING IS HELD IN NEW YORK

FULLY awakened to the necessity for growing with the trade, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is preparing to extend its scope and activities in the next twelve months. Lines of endeavor not now represented will be co-ordinated until a perfectly functioning machine is organized.

This was revealed when the association met last week at the Hotel Astor, New York, in one of the most satisfactory conferences yet held.

It was brought out that a readjustment was necessary to carry on and finance the patriotic work which now forms two-thirds of the association program.

Brady Occupies Chair

President William A. Brady presided. He referred to the aid given by the industry in floating the Third Liberty loan and in the Second Red Cross drive. It was announced that individuals and companies identified with the industry bought $10,000,000 worth of Third Liberty loan bonds and that upwards of $100,000,000 in bonds were sold to the public through the co-operation of the theatres.

Many other accomplishments were referred to and an invitation extended to some of the companies which were represented and were not members to join at this time so as to participate actively in the counsels of the organization, which comprises forty-five producing companies, twelve distributing corporations and sixteen supply and equipment concerns.

President Brady announced that meetings of each of the five branches of the associaiton would be held during June to nominate directors to be elected at the annual meeting in Boston during the week of July 13-20. The directors elected at Boston will elect the officers for the ensuing year. This meeting will be held coincident with the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Motion Picture Exposition in Mechanics Hall.

Fox Takes Chair

William Fox was invited by President Brady, with the consent of all present, to take the chair, and after setting forth his own views in regard to the status of the industry, Mr. Fox called upon others to offer any suggestions or ideas with a view to obtaining unity of action in co-ordinating the various branches of the industry for government co-operation.

Among those participating in the discussion were President Brady, P. A. Powers, Walter W. Irwin, Samuel Goldfish, Arthur S. Friend, J. Robert Rubin, Lee A. Ochs, Ernest H. Horstman and Alfred S. Black.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, who recently had been appointed by President Brady as chairman of the membership committee for the middle west, announced that there were several companies represented which desired to join. Among these were the Mutual Film Corporation and the Essanay Film Company of Chicago, the Educational Film Corporation of America, Manner Films, Inc., Hayworth Pictures Corporation and the Art Film Laboratories of New York. President Brady stated he would appoint Mr. Rothacker as chairman of a national membership committee, which designation was promptly accepted.

This is the biggest membership gain by the association at any single meeting since its inception two years ago. Mr. Rothacker announced that he would remain in New York a few days to perfect plans for the national committee and upon his return to Chicago would leave at once for the Pacific coast for the purpose of lining up all the companies which are not identified with the association through eastern connections.

Committee Named for U. S. Aid

With a view to perfecting the plans for closer relationship with all government activities, a committee was appointed with one representative from each branch of the industry, which is to be known as the Committee on Ways and Means. The committee comprises the following: Producers, Arthur S. Friend; distributors, Walter W. Irwin; supply and equipment, Edward Earle; laboratories, W. R. Rothacker; exporters, David P. Howells; Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Lee A. Ochs; American Exhibitors' Association, H. B. Varner.

A plan was adopted for providing adequate funds to carry on the work of the association by the appointment of a finance committee composed of the following: P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; Ricord Gradwell, World Film Corporation; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films, and James M. Sheldon, Mutual Film Corporation.

The following were among those present: W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corporation; Ben Atwell, representing C. F. Zittel, International Film Corporation; William A. Brady, William A. Brady Picture Plays, Incorporated; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. A. Berst, United Picture Theatres of America, Incorporated; J. R. Bray, Bray Studios; B. N. Busch, World Film Corporation; Benjamin Burton, Art Films; A. S. Black of Maine, S. Brown, Charter Feature Films; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Willard Cook, Pathescope Company; Paul Cromelin, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation; C. D. Chapman, Art Films; Edward Earle, Nicholas Power Company; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the national association; Felix Feist, World Film Corporation; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; N. H. Friend, Bray Studios; William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; W. R. Greene, Artcraft Pictures Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Sam Grant, Boston; E. W. Hammons, Educational Film Corporation; David P. Howells, First National Exhibitors' Circuit; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston; F. J. Hawkins, Hayworth Pictures Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, Greater Vitagraph Company; L. L. Innerarity, Pathe Exchange, Incorporated; Albert Loew, Paragon Films, Incorporated; Gus Mohme, Biograph Company; Lee A. Ochs, M. P. E. L.; A. E. Roussea, Pathe Exchange, Incorporated; Harry Reichenbach, National Film Corporation; J. Robert Rubin, attorney, Metro Pictures Corporation; W. H. Sheehan, Fox Film Corporation; W. C. Smith, Nicholas Powers Company; James M. Sheldon, Mutual Film Corporation, Chicago; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; W. N. Selig, Selig Polyscope Company; Emil Shauer, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William Wright, Kalem Company, and Watterson R. Rothacker, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago.

Theatre Near Arctic Circle

A picture theatre is being constructed at Dime, Alaska, a new Seward Peninsula camp not far below the Arctic Circle. It is said that this theatre will be located farther north than any other playhouse in the world. It is being built of logs. Admission will be $1.

New $750,000 Theatre Opened at Omaha

A. H. Blank and Associates Give Pictures a Home That Has Few Equals in the Country

THE Rialto Theatre of Omaha, Nebraska, built at a cost of $750,000, was recently opened to the public.

It is one of the most beautiful playhouses devoted to pictures in America. The exterior was designed by John Latenser, Jr., and the interior by Frank Latenser, two Omaha architects. The structure is a composite of Venetian renaissance with modern adaptations. The building is 132x132 in dimensions. The dominant tones of the exterior trimming are of old ivory and blue terra cotta, with panels of tapestry brick in soft tones.

The interior gives the spectator the effect of overlooking an Italian formal garden. Mural paintings form a perspective in which Lombardy poplars and ornamental shrubs lead the eye away to far-off mountains. There are marble balustrades and balconies with alcoves containing cleverly lighted fountains.

The house is flooded with light from concealed electric globes and many beautiful color effects are gained.

The seating arrangement is in keeping with the perfection of the house. The seats in the pit are so located that a perfect view of the screen is given from any part of the floor. There are no columns or pillars to obstruct the view.

The draperies of the curtain and screen are of old rose silk velour, and all of the carpets are of soft-toned gray. Usherettes are costumed in gray, in keeping with the color scheme.

The ventilation and heating system is the best obtainable. The washed air system is used and the air is entirely changed in the theatre ten times in an hour.

One of the largest organs in the world has been installed. A prominent musician, Kenneth Widenor, is the organist. The orchestra is under the direction of Harry Silverman.

The Rialto is essentially an Omaha institution, owned by Charles Grotte, Walter Brandes, John Latenser, Sr., and A. H. Blank.

The opening play was John Barrymore in "Raffles." Paramount and Fox standard pictures are shown.

Handles Doris Kenyon Play

An agreement has been effected between William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, and Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., whereby Mr. Sherry will distribute all of the Doris Kenyon pictures. These pictures are being produced by Miss Kenyon's own company, De Luxe Pictures, of which Mr. Deitrich is president and general manager. The first release will be "The Street of Seven Stars," a six-reel photoplay, by Mary Roberts Rinehart. The wonderful popularity of this story is demonstrated by the fact that it already has had a sale of more than 250,000 copies in book form. John B. O'Brien directed the picture.

Unfurls Service Flag

The Victoria Theatre of Rochester, New York, recently unfurled a service flag with five stars. They are in honor of Lieutenant P. Harry Farren, aviator at Camp Dick, Dallas, Texas; Corporal Al. Florack, Jr., formerly operator, Camp Dix, New Jersey; Private Russell Fishbaugh, Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina; Private Harry Gardner, Camp Dix, New Jersey; Private Morris Spies, formerly drummer, Camp Dix, New Jersey.

Two Rochester theatrical managers are in the draft and one has already gone to camp, while the other expects to be summoned at any time. Clarence Stage, manager of the Princess Theatre, has left town, and has been succeeded by C. E. Stanford of Newark, New York, who intends to install a high grade of pictures at the Princess, which is a neighborhood house. Paul Fenyvessy, manager of the Strand Theatre, is awaiting the call to the colors.

War Nurse in World Picture

Mabel Banyea, who returned to New York six weeks ago after spending two years in nursing in France, has an effective role in Director Dell Henderson's current World production, "Hitting the Trail," the Roy Somerville story co-starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley.

Miss Banyea is of French and Danish descent and is well known in theatrical circles here and abroad. She played an engagement with David Belasco's "Years of Discretion," then formed a vaudeville company of twelve and toured Europe and the orient, where she was enthusiastically received. Returning to Paris, she played a short engagement before war was declared, after which she went into one of the base hospitals.

There she became engaged to a patient whose life she saved. Her fiance is now in New York, having been relieved of duty because of disability.

Sunday Shows for Red Cross

Representatives of the Huntsville, Ala., unit of the Red Cross recently asked the city council for permission to operate a moving picture theatre in Huntsville on Sunday afternoons for the purpose of raising funds for the Red Cross and other war charities.

It is pointed out that the soldiers in France are fighting on Sunday like any other day, and there is no real reason why a picture show should not be run for this purpose. It is estimated that at least $100 each Sunday will be netted the fund. The council has taken the question under advisement.

Patriotism Rife at Fox Convention

ANNUAL MEETING IS ATTENDED BY 150 MEN

WITH nine countries represented, the fourth annual convention of the managers and representatives of the Fox Film Corporation was held from June 3 to June 6, inclusive, at the Biltmore Hotel, New York. About 150 managers and other representatives of the corporation were in attendance at both the business sessions and entertainments at which the visitors were guests of William Fox, president of the corporation.

Speaking at the opening of the convention, Mr. Fox brought the assemblage to its feet when he stated that a greater business must be done this coming year so that the government will be able to take more money in war taxes.

Speech Rings with Patriotism

Close on the heels of his successful efforts as captain of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team in the New York Red Cross campaign, and his successes in the Knights of Columbus and Jewish War Relief drives, Mr. Fox enunciated the policy of the corporation in the following speech:

"The only job in the country today is the winning of the war. To bring this war to a successful conclusion the government needs money, and lots of it, and the only way the government can get this money is through taxation.

Up to Business Men Generally

"Therefore, it is up to the business men of the country to expand and push their businesses with greater energy and vigor, so that when the government comes to collect its war taxes—whether they be five per cent or ninety-five per cent—it will find more money to levy on.

"It doesn't matter a continental whether we, as a corporation, have a nickel left after these taxes are collected. The point is that we have got to make enough money so that the government can collect more money. That, gentlemen, is our job this coming year."

Sheehan Presides at Session

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, presided at all the business sessions. The countries represented, besides the United States, were Canada, Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Paraguay. After the opening business conference the first day—Monday—Mr. Fox was host to the visitors in the evening at the Winter Garden.

The second business session was held all day Tuesday, following which Mr. Fox entertained his managers and others at a beefsteak dinner at Murray's. Harry F. Campbell of Boston, New England district manager, was toastmaster, and the evening was enlivened with humorous speeches and anecdotes by the various guests. Several vaudeville acts also were given, under the direction of Jack Loeb, and a jazz band dispensed music throughout the dinner. Flashlight photographs were taken of the diners, who were garbed in aprons.

Take in Two Evening Shows

The program Wednesday was a screening in the morning at Wurlitzer Hall and another business conference in the afternoon. In the evening the visitors were again guests of Mr. Fox, this time at the Eltinge Theatre, where they saw "Business Before Pleasure." Later Mr. Fox took them to "The Midnight Revue" at the Century Grove.

Thursday morning saw another screening at Wurlitzer Hall and a conference was held in the afternoon at the Biltmore. The convention closed with final instructions by Mr. Sheehan at the home office, 130 West Forty-sixth street.

Patriotism Marks Meeting

Throughout the entire convention the sessions were marked with patriotism and a desire for national service. At the opening meeting Mr. Campbell of Boston, in a short speech, expressed the pride of the whole Fox organization in the war relief work Mr. Fox has been doing. In his response Mr. Fox announced that 312 employes of the Fox Film Corporation throughout the country are now in their government's service for the war.

On their arrival at the convention the managers were presented with small gold American flags, which were worn in their coat lapels.

Men in Attendance

Among those attending, besides Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan, were the following:

District managers—Harry F. Campbell, Clyde Eckhardt, George F. Mann, Vincent C. McCabe and Paul C. Mooney.

Managers—Sam Dembow, Jr., and G. Hoffman, Atlanta; W. D. Shapiro, Boston; Thomas Brady, Buffalo; William Jenner and Harry Willard, Chicago; Lester Sturm and Rudolph Knoepfle, Cincinnati; C. A. Browne, Cleveland; E. H. Wachter, Dallas; R. J. Churchill, Denver; Field Carmichael and Joe Kaliski, Detroit; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis; C. W. Young and B. E. Edwards, Kansas City; M. A. Walsh, Los Angeles; E. S. Flynn, Minneapolis; Maurice West, Montreal; A. S. Moritz, New Orleans; Louis Rosenbluh, Jack Levy and Isadore Schmertz, New York; Sidney Meyer, Omaha; George Dambow and L. Burnstine, Philadelphia; F. C. Burhans, Pittsburgh; W. J. Citron, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; Joseph Lieverman, St. John, New Brunswick; Joseph P. Roden, Salt Lake City; B. P. Rogers, Toronto; C. F. Senning, Washington, D. C., and D. M. Thomas, St. Louis.

Home office—Jack G. Leo; general manager's office, Herman Robbins, Lewis S. Levin, J. R. Grainger; advertising department, Lloyd Willis, Jerome Wilson; contract department, Leon J. Bamberger, Irving Maas and Henry Heitman; scenario department, Hamilton Thompson; auditing department, C. J. O'Donoghue and Edward Walzo; publicity department, Jay A. Gove, Russell Mitcheltree, David Morrissey, Stuart Acheson, Will T. Gentz, C. E. McCarthy, Benjamin Garetson of Chicago and Joseph di Pesa of Boston; requisition department, W. E. Sennett and A. P. MacIntyre; foreign department, A. Carlos, David J. Mountan, F. W. Lange; disbursement department, Maurice Goodman and Harry Reinhardt.

Three Webb Plays on Broadway

Kenneth Webb, Vitagraph director and a playwright of note, has the satisfaction this week of seeing three of his plays in Broadway theatres simultaneously. One of the big features of the Lambs Gambol at the Hudson Theatre, June 14, 15 and 16, is "A Japanese Garden," an operetta in one act written by Mr. Webb.

Beginning June 9, the Actors and Authors Theatre, Inc., now operating the Fulton Theatre, produced a bill of four one-act novelties and two of them were from the pen of Mr. Webb. They are "The Best Sellers," a fantasy in three scenes, featuring Edith Taliaferro, and "The Rejuvenation," a "baby grand" opera in one act.

Myrtle Reed Book to Be Filmed

Screen rights to Myrtle Reed's novel, "Flower of the Dusk," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, have been acquired by Metro for the use of Viola Dana. A five-act feature will be made under the direction of John H. Collins. Work will be begun on the completion of "Opportunity."

Gives "Unbeliever" Unusual Presentation

Charles H. Ryan of Chicago Uses Marines, Musicians and Effects to Fine Advantage

By Charles H. Ryan

IN presenting the Edison-Kleine feature, "The Unbeliever," we tried to make it as impressive as possible and to bring out all its patriotic appeal. This was our program at the Garfield Theatre, 2844 Madison Street, given with the aid of recruiting officers from the United States Marine Corps and a four-minute speaker.

The opening number was a xylophone solo by Henry Madaus, with Ruth Gehring at the organ. Then a four-minute man, a Grand Army man in uniform, addressed the audience. Next a singer, Walter King, gave "A Soldier's Rosary," accompanied by a film illustration.

For the prologue to the feature, the house was darkened. After about five seconds, the operator threw a blue flood light on a large United States flag on the stage. There was a cannon shot and a cry of "All's well" from behind the stage.

The organist played descriptive music heralding the break of day. Bird calls and a rooster's crow were heard. Then a bugler gave the reveille call from a distance. The blue light brightened. The bugler played the assembly bugle call. A trio sang the marines' hymn. Then came a trumpet blare.

Slides were then flashed, showing each of the flags of the allied nations, while the organ, accompanied by the drums, played the national anthem of each country as its flag appeared. This was finished by the audience joining in "The Star Spangled Banner." The blue spot light playing on the flag changed to red at the words, "The rocket's red glare."

Next came a flag raising. A salute with cannon and revolver was fired. As the flag reached the top, a white light was thrown on it, and the bugler played the "call to colors."

A short film cut from a Universal Weekly, showing the sailors forming the word "Victory," preceded the picture.

As a trailer after the picture, we used scenes of the president and of soldiers and sailors, finishing with the American flag. During the exit march, Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," our service flag with its two stars was flashed on the screen.

The audience was delighted with the presentation. The picture drew a big crowd and aroused all the enthusiasm we could wish.

Crowds See Kitty Gordon Work

Kitty Gordon attracted large crowds last week when she was photographed in the lobby of a downtown New York hotel and in a well-known place of amusement for scenes for her latest World feature, "The Scar." Frank Crane is the director.

Well, it's gone, that's all there is to it. That's what "Smiling Bill" Parsons infers. The incident is from his latest Capitol Comedy distributed by Goldwyn, "Matching Billy."

Portland Censorship Change

Portland, Oregon, may abolish the local censorship on films.

An ordinance providing for such eliminations will be recommended by exhibitors to the city commissioners in the near future with the understanding that if it is passed there shall be no viewing of films by Portland censors under the auspices of the Portland Board of Moving Picture Censors.

Under the arrangements it will not be necessary for the Portland board to maintain its army of viewers and will result in much saving of time and expense caused by the individual viewing of each film before being exhibited to the public of Portland. The secretary of the Portland board will check the productions in the theatres to see that the eliminations ordered by the National Board of Censors have been made. If it is found that the theatre men are not making the eliminations according to their agreement the films may be confiscated and the managers arrested.

Heretofore, Portland exhibitors and viewers have paid little attention to the recommendations for eliminations of the national board. Close observance of picture productions discloses the fact that Portland viewers for the most part censor the films in about the same degree as the national board and the theatre men and others interested believe that complying with the recommendations of the national body will be far more satisfactory than the manner of censorship now in effect in the metropolis of Oregon.

During his present trip in the east Mayor George L. Baker of Portland is making a thorough investigation into the moving picture theatre business and the work of the national board of censors, and on his return the proposed plan will be considered.

Plan $370,000 Theatre

A syndicate in Richmond, Virginia, headed by W. Greaner Neal of the Academy of Music, has bought a site upon which will be erected one of the largest theatres between Baltimore and New Orleans. Jake Wells, the leading promoter of theatrical enterprises in Richmond, is also in the deal.

Plans for the theatre were started several months ago, but have just been made public. The theatre is to have a seating capacity of 3,000. It will represent an outlay of $370,000. It will be T-shaped and have three entrances—on Broad street, Fourth and Fifth.

The promoters are eager to rush the construction, but owing to the uncertainty of materials and labor due to the war, progress may be slow.

DeMille Completes New Artcraft Special

"We Can't Have Everything" Stars No One, But Has Cast of Players with Whom All Fans Are Familiar

WORD comes from the Pacific coast studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Cecil B. DeMille has completed the work of photographing his latest Artcraft special, "We Can't Have Everything," and is now engaged in cutting and titling the production, which, from all reports, will surpass even "Old Wives for New" in point of novelty, interest and elaborateness.

The featured players are Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley and Theodore Roberts, though it is not a star production. Others prominent in the cast are Sylvia Breamer, Thurston Hall, Tully Marshall and Raymond Hatton.

There are many unusually effective scenes promised, including "the Cascades," the Biltmore (New York) roof garden, with a great company of fashionable guests and a specially engaged troup of ballet dancers affording entertainment; a big studio fire scene, wherein the actual blaze at the Lasky plant was employed; a harem scene when a supposed film company is making a picture; the roadhouse and the broken bridge, a night picture, said to be exceptionally good, and the convalescent ward in a base hospital in France.

Comedy will reign supreme, though there will be plenty of real drama as well. There are undoubtedly more laughs in this production than in any former film directed by Mr. DeMille and the burlesquing of a "movie" company at work is said to provide unparalleled amusement. In these scenes Tully Marshall as the "director" proves that as a comedian of the most unctuous type he is a past master.

Kathlyn Williams has a particularly striking role in the part of Charity Cheever, a society woman with sterling traits of character enmeshed in a regrettable marital mixup. Elliott Dexter is a young millionaire with a hopeless love staring him in the face. It is only at the end that he realizes that for which he has craved and meantime he has married a beautiful picture star and been divorced.

Wanda Hawley, petite, pretty, exquisitely adapted to the role of the film star, is said to give a remarkable performance, and Theodore Roberts as usual gets all that can be got from the role of the character actor in the film concern, playing the part of a "sultan" with a harem of beauties at his beck and call.

Sylvia Breamer is a "vamp"—a dancer with more beauty than scruples—and Thurston Hall is the weak husband of Charity, who "falls" for the "vamp." Raymond Hatton is an aviator.

The story was by Rupert Hughes, one of the most popular of contemporary novelists, while William C. DeMille wrote the photoplay.

Bessie Barriscale Returns

Bessie Barriscale, Paralta star, who has been in New York for some weeks on account of the illness of her sister, returned to Los Angeles last week to start work upon her next production.

Two surprises awaited her. One was a new suite of dressing rooms which have been fitted up for her in the new dressing room building, the furnishing of which had been supervised by her husband, Howard Hickman. The other surprise was the fact that her production has already been started, and most of the scenes not requiring her presence already taken. Howard Hickman is directing the picture, known under the working title of "The Rainbow."

Randolph Bartlett Starts New Business

Randolph Bartlett, who has been managing editor of Photoplay Magazine for a year, will sever his connections with that publication at the end of June, being succeeded by his predecessor in the same position, Julian Johnson.

Mr. Bartlett has been engaged in various activities in the film industry for three years, in both the producing and the advertising departments, and for the future intends developing a new enterprise. This is the salvaging of pictures which, owing to bad cutting and titling, have been shelved by their owners as not suitable for the market.

"There are scores of productions," says Mr. Bartlett, "which lack nothing but intelligent handling in the cutting and titling to make them, if not high class, at least sufficiently meritorious to be released at reasonable rentals. One picture, in particular, I have in mind, was given up as worthless by its owner. At my suggestion the entire story was thrown out and a new one written around the scenes, and the picture finally made money—not much, because it was pretty poor stuff, but at least it was not a red ink entry.

"Another point about this is that often the people who are connected with a corporation and who have seen the picture in the making, cannot get the necessary new angle. Take, for example, a certain big allegorical production, made about eight months ago. It looked impossible, until the producer was advised by outside parties to abandon the allegory and make the picture a straight story. This picture is now cleaning up in good shape."

Louise Glaum in "Marriage"

Having completed her second Paralta play, "Shackled," Louise Glaum has started work on her third Paralta production, "Marriage," at the Brunton studios in Hollywood.

Hodkinson Reports Conditions Good

Back From Trip of Four Months, He Says He Sees No Reason for Pessimism Expressed by Some

BACK in New York after four months, W. W. Hodkinson has instilled fresh enthusiasm into the industry by giving as the impression of his trip that conditions are remarkably good.

"I see no reason for the pessimism expressed by some of the industry," he said. "My observations and results obtained while in the field have brought to me a sense of optimism and confidence not only in our own success, but also in the future welfare of the entire industry.

W. W. Hodkinson.

"As everyone is already aware, the Hodkinson co-partnership plan has embraced practically the entire western half of the United States and the biggest and best exhibitors of that territory are with us heart and soul.

"While compared to the mushroom (so called) growth of some new schemes in the market this may not appear in its true perspective, but experience teaches us that any project of merit built on principle and right is slow rather than swift in its advance; yet with all its development, just as with our plan, is sure and steady.

"A sense of responsibility to the exhibitor led me to delay certain plans of my own in order to see that the product which at present forms the basis of Hodkinson Service was made sure and settled.

"I refer now to Paralta, and may say that the reorganization which has taken place in this company and which, to see consummated, I stayed some time in Los Angeles, has removed the elements that tended to decrease the efficiency of the organization, and which threatened the further quality of the product.

"The results obtained in this connection have made us all feel very pleased, reassured and entirely satisfied that in the future our plans will go ahead and we shall be able to supply the exhibitor with the standard quality of product that we have assured him.

"Probably but one thing that will be most evident to the exhibitor as an earnest of our good faith and desire to give him only the best lies in the institution of a new series featuring Louise Glaum, after her considerable success in "An Alien Enemy."

"And, moreover, as it was felt that two female stars would be of more value to the exhibitor than male, it was deemed best to allow Mr. Walthall to take up another proposition which he had before him.

"As it is not my policy or intention to make general statements, I don't wish to make the usual set of promises and predictions, but I am willing to let the immediate future be the judge of our sincerity of purpose and success of the execution."

Petrova Starts Tour

Arrangements having been completed between Madame Olga Petrova and the War Savings Stamp Committee of Washington, the star has started her eagerly awaited patriotic tour.

Accompanied by Beulah Livingstone, her personal representative, and Bobby North, manager of the Petrova studio, Madame Petrova left New York on Thursday, June 6, for Baltimore, in which town she was scheduled to make a personal appearance at the New Theatre. Following this, she was to visit Washington, speaking at the Strand Theatre, one of the city's most beautiful houses.

Due to the necessity of witnessing a screening of "Patience Sparhawk," the fifth special feature which she has recently finished, Madame Petrova intended to return to New York following her appearance in Washington. After she has taken up the details of cutting, editing and titling "Patience Sparhawk," the star plans to depart for Boston to resume her activities in behalf of the government.

Preliminary to the start of her tour, Madame Petrova visited Philadelphia, and was very successful, speaking from a specially erected Liberty booth in the public square.

Louise Huff Starts World Feature

Louise Huff, the "Dolly Varden" of the screen, began work at the World studio at Fort Lee the other day under the direction of William S. Earle in "T'Other Dear Charmer," a five-reel production written by Charles S. Sarver. The supporting company includes John Bowers, Charles Dungan, Eugenie Woodward, Jack Raymond and Frank Norcross.

Heretofore, World in making a picture has engaged a cast and the heads of the various departments have talked things over with the actors and directors. No special conference, where every department has been represented, was ever held. So anxious, however, was World that Miss Huff's first picture be a success that a meeting was called for everybody concerned.

The story was first discussed with the writers, both continuity and scenariorists. Then the costuming of each player was settled with the wardrobe department. The scenic and property departments received their orders and suggestions. The locations, photographs of which were taken from the files, were decided upon and the data furnished to the director and assistant directors.

This conference consumed five hours and will result in a saving of at least four working days in the making of the picture, reducing the cost of the production several thousand dollars.

Vitagraph Sales Chiefs Get Together

Report Exhibitor Conditions Better at This Time Than They Have Been for Years Past

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, called a special conference last week of the company's sales chiefs to discuss plans for the summer and fall work. The conference was attended by A. W. Goff, assistant general manager; E. Auger, eastern division manager; H. D. Naugle, western division manager, and J. Lawton Kendrick, sales promotion manager.

A number of important questions were discussed, but the chief business had to do with the completion of plans for a big campaign on "A Fight for Millions," the forthcoming Vitagraph serial featuring William Duncan, and the distribution of "Over the Top."

The division managers, who came to New York after tours which embraced the United States and Canada, reported exhibitor conditions generally better than they have been at this time for years past and were optimistic for one of the biggest summers in the history of the industry. Fewer houses will be closed during the summer, they believe, than has been the case in past years.

Mr. Irwin received reports that "Over the Top," which, with few exceptions, has been shown only in big cities of the country thus far, is exceeding expectations of exhibitors wherever it is shown and that every print in every branch of Vitagraph is booked up for weeks in advance.

Mr. Irwin announced that plans for "A Fight for Millions" have been perfected and assurance is given to every exhibitor that he will be able to see a major part of the serial before it is released. Prints on the first six episodes were shipped to Vitagraph branches last week, Mr. Irwin stated, and should be in all offices for viewing by exhibitors not later than June 15. The latter is thirty days ahead of release date, the serial being scheduled to start on July 15.

This latter date is the same as that on which the final episode of "The Woman in the Web" is to be released. The dual release date was decided upon, Mr. Irwin declared, to enable exhibitors to carry their serial crowds from one story into another without a let-up. This is a new departure in serial exhibition methods and should prove a profitable move.

A concentrated, quick-firing national advertising campaign for "A Fight for Millions" also was decided upon. Twelve thousand twenty-four sheets will be posted simultaneously all over the United States about July 10 and will remain up for a month, by which time the serial will be well on its way.

The twenty-four sheet, it is said, will be the most striking which Vitagraph has put out on any of its serials, the scene showing William Duncan falling into a mountain torrent after being shot from a speeding horse on a bridge hundreds of feet in the air.

The scene is an actual reproduction of one of the incidents in the first part of the serial and one which, seen on the screen by a theatre's patrons, is calculated to arouse great enthusiasm for the entire serial.

Celebrities See Picture

The debut of Marion Davies' first Select picture, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," drew many famous personages to the Rivoli. Enrico Caruso and August Belmont were in the audience, while Jack Pickford, wearing a natty naval uniform, was a conspicuous figure.

"No Man's Land" Completed

Bert Lytell has finished work in "No Man's Land," his second picture as a Metro star, which follows "The Trail to Yesterday." The work of cutting and titling is now in progress.

Completion of the film was accomplished after a stretch "drive" in which the company worked several nights until a late hour to get some unusual and strikingly beautiful light effects.

Showing of the daily results in the projecting room at the Hollywood studio have indicated that "No Man's Land" will shape up into a fast-moving drama, in which thrill follows thrill.

The story is one of love, adventure and deep intrigue. Its denouement is out of the beaten track, and introduces dramatic material entirely new to the screen.

Much of the action takes place on a lonely island in the Pacific ocean, known as "No Man's Land." These scenes were "shot" on Catalina Island, the beautiful resort of wealthy tourists to the West Coast.

Play Up News on Screen

The possibilities offered wide-awake exhibitors when big news stories "break" were forcibly illustrated the other day when the American people stood amazed at the first announcement flashed over the press wires, that German U-boats had invaded the waters of the western Atlantic and commenced their deadly warfare against American shipping. That many of the country's leading exhibitors were eager to grasp the opportunity to put over a "scoop" on this big story of the day's news was shown by requests received at the various exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the day the news was first flashed and on the succeeding day ,calling for clips from Paramount-Bray Pictographs touching on the general subjects of submarine warfare and coast defense.

Four Select Pictures Released in June

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses," "The Claw," "Good Night Paul" and "The Whirlpool" Are the Titles

SELECT announces that in addition to Marion Davies' picture, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," three Select Pictures will be released during the month of June. These are "The Claw," presented by Clara Kimball Young and her company, Constance Talmadge, presented by Lewis J. Selznick in "Good Night Paul," and Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool."

"The Claw" is a story of the African veldt, from the pen of Cynthia Stockley, the author of "Poppy," another African tale, the star of which happens to have been another of the Select luminaries, Norma Talmadge.

In the new picture, Miss Young is seen first in a desert wagon, which is being uncertainly guided across the veldt by a drunken driver. Later she appears on horseback and there are other glimpses of the star in novel and entrancing scenes.

It has been some time since Clara Kimball Young has been pictured in a drama, many of the moving scenes of which take place in the open country, and both Director Robert G. Vignola and Cameraman Louis J. Physioc have made the most of their opportunities.

It must not be induced from this that "The Claw" is an educational. On the contrary, it is a pulsing drama of love and intrigue in a frontier station of the African wilds, and happily there are moments when Miss Young is again seen in Lucile gowns.

Milton Sills is once more leading man and in the capable supporting cast are numbered the star's father, Edward Kimball, Marcia Manon and Jack Holt.

The scenario was prepared by Charles E. Whitaker and the picture is presented in five reels.

True to the prediction of those who have closely followed her work—that Constance Talmadge could play anything from high farce to tragedy and "get away with it"—Miss Talmadge appears for the first time in pure farce in "Good Night Paul," and she makes good just as convincingly, it is said, as she has done in "The Lesson" and "Up the Road with Sallie," recent among her Select productions, which are of a totally different type.

"Good Night Paul" is based on a stage success of the present season, but on the screen the fun is even more fast and furious than on the stage. A determined uncle from Canada, a scapegrace of a nephew who is unable to produce the wife and family which he is supposed to have, an alarmed partner and his cleverly obliging wife—these are the ingredients combined in this farce.

As the distinguished wife of Paul, Constance Talmadge is in the midst of the fray every moment, and by the end of the fourth reel, her real, honest-to-goodness hubby does not know where he is or anything! There are practically two leading men in "Good Night Paul"—Norman Kerry, who plays the husband, and Harrison Fords, who plays the counterpart. Then there is John Steppling, who, in the role of sprightly old M. Batiste Bordeaux, becomes wax in Matilda's clever fingers.

Walter Edwards directed the production and Julia Crawford Ivers made the adaptation from the libretto of Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson. There are five reels in "Good Night Paul," but they only seem like three!

"The Whirlpool," Select's June release starring Alice Brady, is a clean drama of the school of "Within the Law" and "The Witching Hour." Miss Brady is seen in the role of a girl with high ideals, who is unknowingly made to aid her guardian in his gambling pursuits. How this girl retrieves herself from the false position in which she is thus placed and works side by side with a judge on the bench to encompass the regeneration of one of her victims makes the photoplay which has been adapted by Eve Unsell from the unusually successful novel of the same name by Victoria Morton.

"The Whirlpool" was directed by Alan Crosland, this being the last production made by this promising young director before his call to the colors. The camera work is by William Marshall.

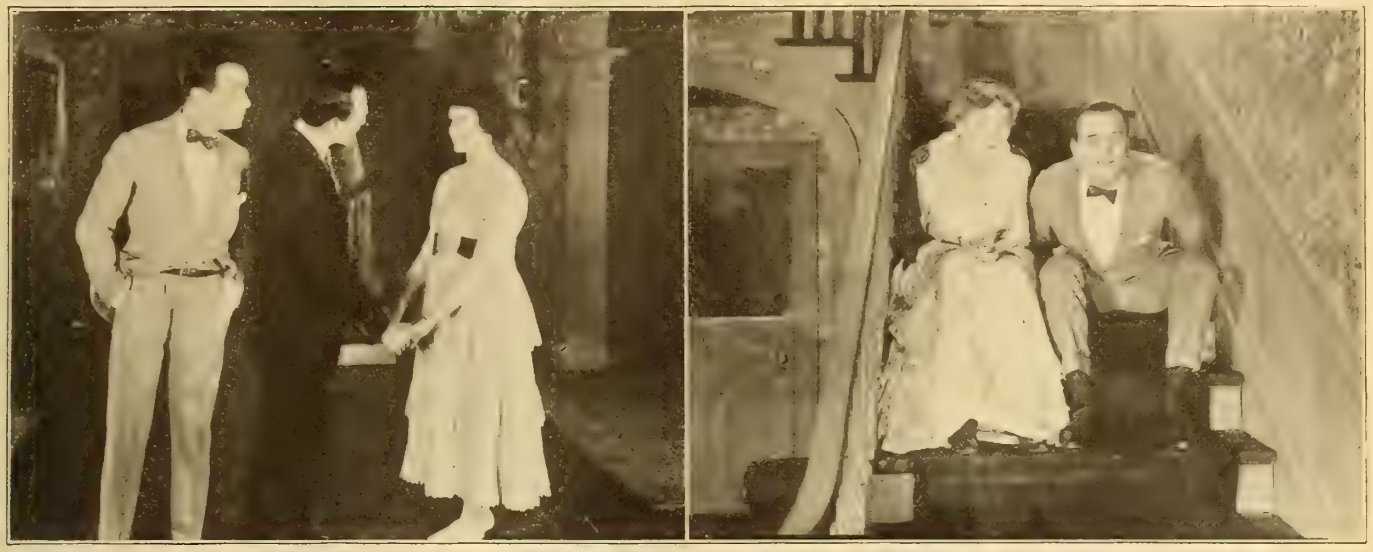
Chicago Censorship Situation



While things are at a standstill in the Chicago censorship affair, foes of the Maypole ordinance and friends of Major Funkhouser are making every effort to have the former censor chief reinstated with full control as before.

A large number of ministers are championing the major. A copy of resolutions was sent to all Methodist and Presbyterian pastors stating the old censorship plan had given great satisfaction from the standpoint of public morals and expressing doubt concerning the proposed plan and urging the pastors on this account to oppose the Maypole ordinance.

Action in the city council has been postponed to give the corporation counsel time to prepare an ordinance to place the power of censorship in the hands of a board and be more stringent in its restrictions than Ald. Maypole's ordinance.

Theatre Proceeds Aid Babies

The proceeds of the picture theatres of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, for one day recently were turned over to the Visiting Nurse Association to be used in maintaining baby welfare stations. Tickets were sold on the streets of the city.

Many Thrills in "To Hell with the Kaiser"

Air Battle Is Staged with Eighty Planes as Result of Government Co-operation with Producers

A THRILLING feature of the forthcoming Screen Classics patriotic production, "To Hell with the Kaiser," will be a battle royal of two air-armies.

Each of the opposing forces is represented by forty planes in close view in the fury of attack. The air is literally black with planes just previous to the engaging of the rival squadrons, and the actual bombardment is one of the greatest spectacles ever shown upon the screen.

Government aid and co-operation was necessary to obtain these scenes.

The picture is almost completed and will have an early release.

The story opens at the death of Frederick III of Prussia. His son, Wilhelm II, succeeds him. The decay of the Hohenzollern family is exemplified in the monarch's withered arm, as well as in the weak degeneracy of the crown prince. Bismarck, Frederick's adviser, shows the kaiser some secret plans for subjugating the different countries of the world.

In the spring of 1914 the kaiser and his war council decide to put these plans into execution. Zeppelin submits his plans for air supremacy, Von Tipritz makes known his scheme for submarine warfare, and Von Hindenburg discloses his military projects. Intending to perfect wireless operations, the kaiser sends for Professor Monroe, an American.

Professor Monroe and his daughter, Alice, are taking leave of Alice's younger sister, Ruth, who is being educated in a Belgian convent. Professor Monroe has discovered a wireless invention, by means of which messages can be sent direct without being intercepted.

Although Winslow Dodge, an attache of the American legation, holds first place in Alice Monroe's heart, one of her admirers is Rupert Graubel, an actor in the Royal Theatre. Graubel is ordered to impersonate the kaiser, so that Wilhelm may attend to more important things while Graubel is appearing in his stead before the populace. The actor boasts to Alice of the honor that has been conferred on him.

The kaiser having demanded Professor Monroe's discovery, the professor apparently complies by bringing a package to court. However, it contains nothing more secret than the American flag, which the kaiser in baffled rage unfolds. The scientist refuses to make known his secret, and with Alice leaves for Belgium.

In the meantime, scenes of horror have taken place in Belgium, and Ruth Monroe has fallen a victim of the crown prince. She is dying when her father and her sister reach her. As a party of German soldiers passes, with the crown prince at their head, Monroe rushes out and denounces him. He is shot down. Ruth dies and Alice swears vengeance. She returns to Berlin, in pursuance of her plan to wind Graubel around her little finger to reach the kaiser.

Wilhelm, consulting the war map, makes a partition of the countries of the world, giving one to each member of his council. To the crown prince he gives the United States.

A year later the Americans are in the front line trenches. Dodge, Alice's sweetheart, is in the aviation corps. Graubel has introduced Alice to the crown prince. She follows him to Belgium and notifies Dodge to come with an aerial force when she gives him the signal. She returns to her lodging to receive the crown prince.

The crown prince informs her that his father, the kaiser, is to meet him after midnight at a certain spot in the woods. He attempts to force his odious attentions on Alice, and avenging her sister, she kills him. She then gives Dodge the signal and he comes with an army of aeroplanes. Wilhelm is captured and imprisoned and then banished on a barren island. There his only associates are swine, since he is not fit to associate with human beings. He goes mad and leaps into the sea.

Arriving in hell, Wilhelm is greeted by Satan, who abdicates in his favor, saying that the kaiser's tortures are more fiendish than any he has ever been able to devise.

Hodkinson Denies Rumor

Although it is not his policy to pay attention to rumors that circulate in the industry, W. W. Hodkinson feels that a denial from him is necessary in reference to an article which appeared in some of the dailies on the West Coast and in some of the trade papers last week.

This article purported to have Mr. Hodkinson allied with other well known film men in a huge motion picture concern to be located in San Francisco.

In fairness to his associates and friends, both in and outside the industry, Mr. Hodkinson wishes to state most emphatically that there is no truth whatever in this report inasmuch as his connection with it is concerned.

Dual Role Feature on Triangle Bill

"His Enemy the Law" Deals with Romances of Two Generations —Drama of Theatrical Life and Comedy Complete Program

A ROMANCE of the west by Lillian Ducey, featuring Jack Richardson and Irene Hunt in dual roles, is the first release on the Triangle program for the week of June 16. A theatrical story is the second release, featuring Gloria Swanson and Lee Hill. The first picture is titled, "His Enemy, the Law"; the second, "Station Content."

In "His Enemy, the Law," Captain Jack Rogers (Jack Richardson) departs from his sweetheart, Sarah Catherwood (Irene Hunt), upon the objections of her father to their betrothal, and goes west to seek his fortune. Then Captain Jack meets a widow in a mining town near the Mexican border and marries her. They have a son, but their married life is unhappy. Jack finally deserts her, leaving behind his wealth, but taking his son with him.

The pair drift into the town of Ten Strike after long wanderings in which the father has made enough by gambling to keep them alive. Known as a prospector to the residents, Captain Jack becomes the head of a band of robbers that have been holding up stages. His last robbery occurs the day that Sarah Catherwood, now Mrs. Randolph, journeys into town with her daughter, Sally. Neither she nor Captain Jack recognizes each other. As a result of this robbery Captain Jack is killed and the sheriff takes his homeless boy, John, under his care.

Years later John Rogers (Jack Richardson), a lawyer whose chief delight is aiding criminals to cheat the law, is implored by Sally Randolph (Irene Hunt) to save her lover, accused of murder. He wins an acquittal, but soon after the freed slayer is murdered. It is then that John and Sally learn of the blighted romance in the lives of their parents, and they join together the broken threads of love.

Raymond Wells directed and C. G. Peterson photographed.

In "Station Content," Kitty Manning can no longer tolerate her lonesome existence after the death of her little child, so when chance offers the opportunity she joins a theatrical troupe.

When Jim Manning, her husband, discovers that she has gone, he condemns himself. He has always been contented with his position as telegraph operator at a small station in an isolated part of the country and his one thought has been his devotion to Kitty. But his life is now empty. To overcome his depression he is forced to apply himself energetically to his work with the result that he is soon advanced to an important executive position.

Meanwhile Kitty, now an operatic favorite, attracts the attention of Stephen Morton, a railroad president, when she stars in a New York production. She accepts Morton's attentions, since she has been introduced into his home. But she soon realizes that his sudden interest portends no good. When Morton tells her that he desires a real companion—that she need not pity his wife since she has all that she married him for—his name and money to buy everything she wants—she reluctantly accepts his proposition, arranging to meet him in San Francisco. She tells him, however, that she has deserted her husband, unable to stand her lonesomeness after the death of her baby.

But fate prevents their meeting. Her machine breaks down near a flag station, where she is forced to remain for a while with the kindly couple maintained there by the railroad. She is treated cordially and again pictures the happiness of domestic life which she once had, but could not appreciate. The husband is in poor health and Kitty urges him to go to San Francisco for attention while she attends to the telegraphy in his absence.

Several days later when the trestle bridge, which has been struck by lightning, is burning, Kitty receives the message that "Special Number 14 passed five minutes ago." She cannot forewarn them by wire, but after a thrilling ride succeeds in arriving at the bridge in time to flag the train, which was carrying both her husband and Morton.

The engineer and her husband find Kitty, who is now lying on the track. They take her to a Pullman and when she opens her eyes she finds Jim bending over her. Morton, who seeks the cause of the trouble, sends for Jim, and upon Jim's explanation that it was his wife who stopped the train, he requests to meet the lady. When Morton is introduced he shows no indication of having met her before. He hesitates a moment, then tells her that her husband is on his way to Kansas City as a new division superintendent. Husband and wife bury the past and are reunited.

The production was directed by Arthur Hoyt, and Elgin Leslie handled the camera.

The concluding release of the week is a Triangle-Keystone comedy, "Isn't It Warm?" featuring Harry Depp, William Dyer and Claire McDowell.

Nerve-itis!

WORLD executives last week received a decided jolt when the following letter was received from a man living near the studio in Fort Lee:

"What the h— do you mean by bildin a wall around your studio and putting loks on the doors. Last year I did not hav to by a stick of wood to bild my chicken koop. This year i got to by and lumber is hier than h—."

Despite this plaintive wail, World will not remove the wall.

F. P.-L. Announces New Star, Lila Lee

Plans to Feature Her in Paramount Pictures After Exploitation That Will Make Name a Household Word

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of productions, last week announced a new "find" for the screen in the person of little Lila Lee, prominently identified for the past eight years with vaudeville in Gus Edwards attractions and known as "Cuddles."

This confirms the recent rumor that the big organization was about to announce a young star, who will be given a national exploitation that will make her one of the biggest attractions of the screen.

In making his announcement, Mr. Lasky said:

"The published rumor that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was about to announce a young star of unusual talent and beauty is confirmed in our engagement of little 'Cuddles.' For more than a year, our organization has been searching all branches of the entertainment world for just such a young woman and our hunt has finally been rewarded in the person of Lila Lee.

"Little Lila was first 'discovered' by Gus Edwards eight years ago. It was the time of the first 'kiddie' show in vaudeville, when the song 'Look Out for Jimmy Valentine' demanded a clever little girl to express the real humor of it. Mr. Edwards sought and sought and found no one. Finally, riding along despondently in his machine, one day he spied a lot of little children playing in a street of Union Hill, New Jersey, where his act was to open. They all looked alike to him with the exception of one, who in her childish way and forceful manner, immediately impressed the song writer as just the type he wanted.

"With the consent of her parents, Mr. Edwards put her in his act and the result was that the child 'ran away with the show.' Her subsequent work displayed further genuine histrionic accomplishments that were conceded to be remarkable, considering her youth. Lila has many friends throughout the country and her recent 'discovery' for motion pictures will delight those who have been charmed with her really exceptional work behind the footlights.

"Brought up under the personal care of Mrs. Edwards, who is always with her, Lila Lee has been reared as a daughter. Her general education has been received from Mrs. Edwards and a personal tutor, who will continue the care of their charge along with her enlargement in the dramatic art as expressed in motion pictures under the best directors of Paramount films, for Lila will be a Paramount star in photoplays that will strike a strong human appeal.

"She is tall, faultlessly built, vigorous and athletic, and is fully eligible for the heavier demands of the motion picture drama as well as the finer expressions.

"We have signed Lila Lee for a period of five years. She will be surrounded in her work by the best artists of the film world in its every branch and nothing will be overlooked to make her name, as a result of her talent and beauty, the household word of the motion picture patron.

Lila is now in New York preparing for a sojourn in the west. She will leave for the Lasky studios in Hollywood shortly to start work on her first Paramount picture, which will herald to the cinema theatre and its patrons the coming of one of the favorites of all motion picture stars of tomorrow."

Madge Kennedy in Drama

Madge Kennedy's scope as a star in Goldwyn Pictures broadens with her successive productions, and the choice of her plays is a matter of keen importance to those who direct her destiny.

Always it is aimed to present Miss Kennedy in a part unlike any with which she has yet been identified and in "The Service Star," by Charles A. Logue, in which Goldwyn presents her on June 30, the star is expected to show her admirers what she can do in her first out-and-out dramatic role.

"The Service Star," as its title indicates, is a drama of today. While it is in no sense a war play, not one scene carrying a suggestion of the world conflict, the story is built around the emotions of half a dozen persons who are deeply involved in the workings of the national draft.

Proves Right to Title

"Slippery Slim," hero of many a Snakeville comedy, is present in a new role this week in the current General Film-Essanay release, "Slippery Slim, Diplomat." The bean-pole comedian experiences some lively adventures in proving his right to the title, and succeeds in introducing a few novel laugh getters.

Two Famous Metros to Be Re-Issued Soon

"Destiny" and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" Planned for Presentation Again at the Request of Exhibitors

IN RESPONSE to insistent demands from exhibitors, Metro has decided to re-release "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman" and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" soon. Fans have never forgotten these two productions and requests for another view of them have influenced exhibitors to make so many requests that a re-issue was necessary.

Emily Stevens is the star of "Destiny." Her recent Metro and Screen Classics triumphs have stimulated popular interest in her earlier pictures, notably "Destiny," which has been considered by many the strongest feature in which she has ever appeared. The patriotic Screen Classics picture, "The Slacker," made the name of Emily Stevens popular wherever motion pictures are known and this good impression has been strengthened by such productions as "Daybreak," "A Sleeping Memory," "The Wheel of the Law," "The Wager" and "Alias Mrs. Jessop."

"Destiny" is an allegorical screen spectacle by Anthony Paul Kelly, who also wrote the Screen Classics feature, "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly. It opens with the Three Fates, Clotho, Lachesis and Atropos, weaving the strands of life. Their influence is seen at intervals throughout the picture, in the destiny of Mary Cadman (played by the star).

Mary poses as the Madonna for a painting by her husband intended for a church. The husband learns, through the remarks of a connoisseur who sees the painting, of an incident in Mary's past life in which she was the victim of circumstances. He thrusts her and her child out into the street. The story follows the fortunes of Mary, who in desperation enters "The House of Lost Souls," and in time becomes its owner, and her son, whom she leaves at the entrance of a monastery, and who embraces the life of the cloister.

In later years the paths of mother and son meet in a dramatic manner. The picture is one that combines strong story interest, beauty of photography and masterly handling.

Edwin Carewe directed "Destiny." He has also been associated with the star in "The House of Tears" and will direct her in the forthcoming Metro All-Star Series feature, "Kildare of Storm."

Edmund Breese is the star of the second re-release, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." This is a screen version of the poem of the same name by Robert W. Service, who has been called "the Kipling of the North." Magnificent snow-scenes from the background for most of this five-act feature, which was directed by Herbert Blache, who has directed Emily Stevens in her forthcoming picturization of Rachel Crothers' play, "A Man's World."

The story deals with a piano player, Jim Maxwell. By means of music he conveys all the misery and anguish of a life blasted by a man's perfidy and a woman's unfaithfulness. Fate brings his enemy within reach of his hands and the climax of the story is powerfully told.

Rex Beach Film Draws Crowds

An idea of the esteem in which Rex Beach pictures are held by one of the country's most prominent showmen may be gleaned from the fact that L. N. Scott, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Minneapolis, has just concluded a highly successful week's engagement with "Heart of the Sunset."

"The screen classic of the great Southwest" played to four capacity audiences on the opening day of the run. And on the following days of the engagement there was no abatement of the crowds. Mr. Scott gave "Heart of the Sunset" the same brilliant settings that mark the high-class "legitimate" attractions he plays at the Metropolitan.

Gets Stories from Big Authors

Forrest Halsey, one of the most noted short story writers in America, whose work appears regularly in the leading magazines, has just sold a story to World Pictures. It bears the title of "The Crook of Freams" and it is now being put into scenario form for early filming.

After reading that World is a buyer of stories in record-breaking time, E. Forst, who on the same day had placed a play with Al. Woods for early production, came to the World scenario department last week and offered a scenario. The work was read at once by the scenario staff and Charles E. Sarver, scenario editor, and made such a deep impression that it was purchased at once. Mr. Forst, in the meantime, had been waiting while the reading went on. The present title of the story is "The Prescription."

The screen rights to Elizabeth B. Carpenter's story, "The Quickening Flame," also have just been purchased by World.

Pickford Play Goes Ahead Fast

Work is progressing rapidly on "Capt. Kidd, Jr.," Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture. It is said the picture will be completed in record time.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of the star, has undergone an operation for mastoiditis at Sisters Hospital in Los Angeles, and while the crisis is believed past, she is still quite seriously ill. Mary spends every available minute with her.

Mrs. Wilson Receives Mabel Normand

Talks to Her in Box, Then in Lobby After Special Showing of "Joan of Plattsburg" at Knickerbocker

AT the request of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mabel Normand was brought to her box at Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre in Washington when Goldwyn's patriotic comedy-drama, "Joan of Plattsburg," was presented in aid of the Children's Year Campaign Committee of the Council of National Defense, an organization devoted to the welfare of babies. Miss Normand was in Washington at the direct invitation of this organization, of which Mrs. Wilson is the chief patron.

The audience, one of the most distinguished ever assembled to see a motion picture and meet the star of it, included, besides Mrs. Wilson, Vice-President Marshall and Mrs. Marshall, Secretary of War Baker and Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the secretary of the navy, and various other ladies of the cabinet as well as army and navy officials and leaders in war work.

Among other things Mrs. Wilson said to Miss Normand: "I have always loved you in motion pictures. You have whiled away many a dull hour for me, and now I love the real Mabel Normand even more."

Miss Normand was asked questions about her work and for ten minutes she and the President's wife chatted before the performance began.

Captain Barrie Bulkley opened the matinee with a stirring recital of "The Star Spangled Banner" and then the lights went down and the first scene of "Joan of Plattsburg" faded in on the screen. Midway in the picture Mrs. Blanche Shipert, a singer well-known in Washington, sang "Joan of Arc" with thrilling effect and moved the audience to hearty applause, repeated as the picture gained in cumulative strength.

When finally the end came and Captain Bulkley appeared to introduce Mabel Normand the big audience knew what was coming and applauded some more. When the star emerged it was a full minute before she could make herself heard.

Addressing herself to the center box, in which Mrs. Wilson sat, Miss Normand told the audience how happy she was to be in Washington for the first time and how deeply she appreciated the honor paid her by the invitation.

Previous to this Mrs. Wilson had made known to Manager Arthur Robb that she would like to say au revoir to the star, and in the lobby, surrounded by the crowd, most of them Mrs. Wilson's personal friends, the wife of the President expressed her enjoyment of Miss Normand's work again.

"It is a charming, most interesting play and I enjoyed it because 'Joan of Plattsburg' is different," she said. "You are delightful in the part, and I hope to see you many times."

But this was not the end of her Washington triumph. After a long drive Miss Normand began a series of personal appearances at six of the Crandall Theatres. At each house she was greeted by big crowds.

"Venus Model" Has Good Cast

Realizing that even a star of Mabel Normand's popularity needs strong support, a cast of unusual excellence has been chosen for the Goldwyn play, "The Venus Model."

Miss Normand's leading man is Rodrique LaRocque. Next comes little Nadia Gary, aged six, in the important role of "Dimples," companion and confidant of the star. Una Trevelyn, well known for her many stage successes, is a sympathetic vampire who makes trouble, then wins the star's friendship.

Among the men is Alex B. Francis, an old favorite in Goldwyn productions, who has the role of Braddock, owner of the bathing suit factory where the star meets with many extraordinary adventures. Edward Boulden, Alfred Hickman, Edward Elkas and Albert Hackett are also in the cast.

Clever Expedient Used

The prosecuting attorney, portrayed by Hugh Thompson, in the forthcoming Metro production, "The House of Gold," starring Emmy Wehlen, uses the power of dismissal which is seldom used by men in his office, as the more convictions made by him, the better is his record.

In this picture, which was written by Katharine Kavanaugh of the Metro scenario staff, a girl is found unconscious in her room and at her side lies her husband, murdered.

Circumstances point to Pamela Martin, played by Miss Wehlen, and her arrest follows. When the case comes to trial, Pamela is cross examined by Frank Steele, who years before had been her sweetheart. Their former friendship is not generally known.

Young Steele has made a successful record in office by his number of convictions. He now sees but one way to save Pamela, whom he believes to be innocent, and he dismisses the case, claiming that insufficient evidence has been introduced. Steele ruins his unbroken record of convictions, but eventually wins his reward when Pamela consents to be his wife.

World Picture Renamed

The new World picture in which Madge Evans and Johnny Hines are starred has been re-named "Neighbors" in place of "Clarissa." The picture will be released July 29.

Outing-Chester Series to Start June 30

Mutual Announces First Six Pictures, Revealing Great Diversity in Subject Matter and Locations

OUTING Magazine's extraordinary adventure pictures, one reel travel classics, produced by C. L. Chester in collaboration with the editors, will be released through exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, one a week, commencing June 30. The first release will be "Ex-Cannibal Carnival," a Fiji Island picture.

Formal announcement of the consummation of negotiations for the release of the Outing-Chester series was made following the return last week of James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual, to the executive offices in Chicago from a trip to New York. The negotiations were conducted by Mr. Sheldon and C. L. Chester.

The first six of the series and their release dates follow:

June 30—"Ex-Cannibal Carnival," a story of the camera's search for the head hunting savage of the South Sea Islands.

July 7—"Kaieteaur," an interesting journey through the strange wilderness of British Guiana, two weeks from civilization, to the famous waterfall, five times as high as Niagara.

July 14—"Mountaineering Memory," a trip along untraveled trails in the mountains of British Columbia.

July 21—"Zuni Kicking Races," pictures of a unique race, older than history, whose members live in the pueblos of their prehistoric forefathers in New Mexico.

July 28—"A White Wilderness," the Mount Columbia ice fields of British Columbia, 200 square miles of glaciers, towering mountain peaks and unexplored wilderness.

August 4—"A Coorial on the Orinoco," a trip by native logboat through a tempest of seething waters, to the heart of Venezuela where Spanish buccaneers, three centuries ago, filled their treasure chests.

"The Outing-Chester series excels in subject matter, technical work and human interest qualities, anything that I have ever seen of its kind," declared Mr. Sheldon. "These pictures are fit for the finest screens and for the most discriminating audiences.

"They show the touches of master craftsmanship. The subject matter is so unusual and it is handled in such an original way, the titles are so snappy and the individual pictures are in such contrast, that they are bound to go over big in any theatre.

"Pictures of this kind are a credit to any house. They are the sort that make people talk. When I saw them first they gave me a sense of pleased surprise. I know that they are business building pictures for exhibitors, pictures which will make an exhibitor proud of his show."

The first release is an example of the character and distinctive qualities of the series. The picture is built on the popular conception of the Fiji Islands as a place "all cluttered up with head hunters and cannibals, where if the innocent bystander didn't lose his head he landed in the soup." It registers the disappointment at finding Levuka, the ancient capital, a modern city instead of the "lonely coral strand of the story books."

Feeling that there ought to be a cannibal left somewhere, the cameramen embarked for Bau, ancient stronghold of cannibal kings, and found the Fijian prince wearing "a dress shirt and a gentle smile." The introduction of scenes showing the customs of the inhabitants of Bau is novel and interesting. The picture ends with the ex-cannibals at high carnival, the pretty Fijian maidens at the height of a native dance—and the censor cut it in two.

Reports that the Outing-Chester series was to be released through Mutual have brought any number of inquiries regarding first run bookings to the Mutual branches from managers of large houses.

Film to Present Latest Styles

Some of the most exquisite examples of the art of the modiste will be noticed in the Cecil B. DeMille special Artcraft production, "Old Wives for New," scheduled for release on June 23. The costumes were selected by Alpharetta Hoffman, costume director of the Lasky studios, and offer not only the latest, but the most advanced styles, with beautiful women to wear them. The value of the gowns is said by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to reach nearly six figures.

"Old Wives for New" was picturized by Jeanie MacPherson from the novel by David Graham Phillips and deals with the mystery of love as well as turning the pitiless light on the much discussed subject of divorce.

Begin French Pictures

Important officials and representatives of the French government gathered at the Leonce Perret studio, New York, to dedicate and witness the filming of the first of a series of patriotic films which will tend to portray and bring home to Americans the new brotherhood of friendship and love, brought about by the war, between the people of the United States and the people of France.

The guests of honor were M. Henri Tardieu, head of the French High Commission to the United States; M. Guy, head of the Department of French Propaganda; M. Ratisbone, chief of the French Photographic Division; M. Gaston Liebert, the French Consul; M. Maracini, the French Vice-Consul and M. Aimel, editor-in-chief of the French publication "The New France."

Ebony Comedy Pleases

"A Reckless Rover," said to be the best of the Ebony Comedies produced to date, is released this week by General Film Company. The company of negro players, reinforced by a number of new faces, succeeds in introducing some very lively comedy, General Film reports.

Want a Press Agent Free? Well, Here's How

World Starts Branch Office Departments of Local Publicity That Will Be at the Service of All Patrons

THE service bureau established by World Pictures in all of its branch offices two years ago has, by its success and increasing popularity, justified another innovation.

World now announces branch office departments of local publicity under the supervision of the company's general publicity director.

Strictly in line with its policy, covering several years, of affording the exhibitor of World pictures every possible aid in successfully promoting his business and obtaining box office results, World has inaugurated a feature that will prove of inestimable value to exhibitors who cannot afford a press agent.

This idea grew out of the apparent necessity for showmanship among exhibitors, who seldom edit the advertising and press matter sent out by the distributing companies. This is plainly apparent by analyzing a large number of newspapers. The analysis shows that the copy is being used line for line and word for word the same as it is sent.

It is not the intention of the distributor to have it used as written. The copy is merely to supply a general idea and should be adapted to local conditions, both as regards the policy of the newspaper and the patrons the exhibitor is endeavoring to reach.

This new bureau wishes to impress on the exhibitors that no two pictures should be advertised the same way. Each picture must have an individual appeal just the same as each play and being different from each other must make a bid for approval along an entirely different line.

If the exhibitor would only stop for a moment and analyze the synopsis of the story sent him he can make his press matter conform with local conditions. The stories on which feature pictures are based are supposed to have the human note and by the same token these stories have in one variation or another appeared in the columns of the local papers as news.

If the exhibitor will let his memory aid him in adapting his publicity to events of like character that have been of general interest at different times in his home town, he can "hook" this up with his picture and "cash in" at the box office.

Charles Klein, famous author of "The Lion and the Mouse" and other successes, once stated that he could find the story of a play any day in the reading of the newspapers and that he could see material for a hundred plays in walking down the street and watching the passers-by. Just so, the local exhibitor can make capital out of events that happen in his home town.

The service bureau of World will be placed at the beck and call of those who screen the World program and if exhibitors desire special ideas to excite interest in their offerings the ideas will be theirs for the asking.

Benjamin Chapin Dead

Benjamin Chapin, widely-known impersonator, lecturer and authority on Abraham Lincoln, to whom he bore a remarkable resemblance, is dead from tuberculosis. The end came at the Loomis sanitarium, Liberty, New York.

Mr. Chapin had just completed a series of ten pictures entitled "The Son of Democracy," in which he played the role of Lincoln, tracing his life from his boyhood to his death, when the malady from which he had been suffering intermittently for some time took a serious turn. On Lincoln's birthday his symtoms became alarming, and he was taken to the sanitarium, where he remained until he died.

Mr. Chapin was born in Bristolville, Ohio, on August 9, 1874. From 1892 to 1898 he was a platform lecturer and entertainer, and in 1902 he entered vaudeville in a dramatic monologue entitled "Lincoln," in which he achieved a decided success.

In 1906 Mr. Chapin produced a play in four acts entitled "Lincoln," which later he presented with success in other cities. His remarkable resemblance to the great emancipator attracted much attention and his success spurred him on to write his now famous "Lincoln Cycle" for pictures.

Mr. Chapin died before he could enjoy the financial fruits of his life work, which are estimated at about $500,000.

Start "Young America"

Production of "Young America," the forthcoming George K. Spoor feature, started this week at the Essanay studio in Chicago, following the selection of the cast from the regular Spoor players and the speaking stage in New York and Chicago.

As all sets are ready and all outside locations arranged for, it is expected to finish the picture in record time.

"Young America" is the picturization of the Cohan & Harris stage play of the same name, which came from the pen of Fred Ballard.

Henry Warwick Joins World

Henry Warwick, who did one of Paul Rainey's African Hunt tours and who played with Amelia Bingham in the original presentation of "The Climbers," is a World player now. He will appear in "Just Sylvia."

J. Searle Dawley directing Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a Paramount picture.

Mae Marsh Appears in Person at Buffalo

Addresses Packed Houses at Shea's Auditorium in Behalf of Thrift Stamps and Sells Large Amount

KEEPING a promise made three months ago to Mike Shea, proprietor of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and Harold B. Franklin, his manager, Mae Marsh, the Goldwyn star, made two personal appearances there last Saturday in aid of the War Savings Stamp drive. As a result of her co-operation, Buffalo is $17,629 nearer its quota.

Stamps of the value of $5,764 were sold by Miss Marsh at the principal afternoon performance, following the showing of her Goldwyn picture, "The Face in the Dark." In the evening an enthusiastic crowd that packed the big house to the doors and overflowed into the streets bought $11,865 worth.

At the evening performance three persons, including a soldier in uniform who gave his name as H. Kabberberg, and Edward H. Butler, owner of the Buffalo News, subscribed to $1,000 worth of stamps each for the privilege of carrying away an autographed photograph of the star. Another, Paul R. Kennedy, an architect, bid $1,000 for a beautiful bouquet of roses sent to Miss Marsh by George A. Hickey, manager of Goldwyn's Buffalo branch.

After W. H. Andrews, president of the Pratt & Lambert Varnish Co., and one of Buffalo's wealthiest and most influential men, had made a soul-stirring address urging everyone to buy the government stamps, Miss Marsh appeared and added her personality to the appeal. The response was prompt and enthusiastic. Girl Scouts and sailors from the Buffalo training station went among the spectators selling stamps for cash and collecting pledge cards for the larger amounts.

W. L. Williams had the honor of being the only $1,000 purchaser at the afternoon performance. Mr. Andrews was second on the roll with an individual purchase of $500, though he laughingly told the audience that he was buying the stamps for distant relatives, since all his family and closer kin had been supplied with the maximum quota allowed one person—$1,000.

Before, between and after the hours of her appearances Miss Marsh was made much of by her hosts, who included Mr. Shea, Mr. Franklin and Dan S. White, Mr. Shea's nephew. A big touring car was placed at her disposal, her rooms at the Iroquois Hotel were a living bower of flowers sent by Mr. Shea and his associates, and first-page publicity greeted her arrival.

Miss Berkeley in World Film

Gertrude Berkeley, remembered for her fine work in "War Brides," is cast as a mother in "Just Sylvia," a forthcoming World feature, directed by Travers Vale, with Barbara Castleton and Johnnie Hines in the leads.

A tense moment in Mae Marsh's new Goldwyn picture, "All Woman."

New Vitagraph Pictures Marked by Good Casts

Casts of unusual dramatic power and box-office value will be an important asset of the Vitagraph features scheduled for release within the next few weeks.

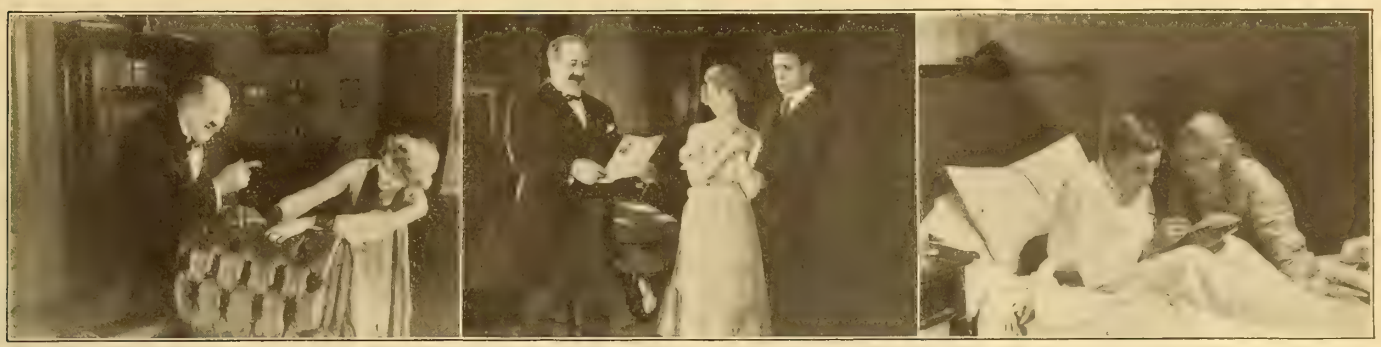
Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, now has in course of production at least four exceptional stories, two of them screen versions of plays made famous on the stage by Billie Burke, and the other two adaptations of widely-read magazine stories.

Anita Stewart is in the latter stages of "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the Pinero satire on class prejudice, which is planned for the first of the special series of Anita Stewart productions. She is working under the direction of Wilfrid North, who directed "Over the Top," and her supporting cast includes Conway Tearle, Vernon Steele, Templar Saxe, Virginia Nordon, Katherine Lewis, Hattie De Laro and others.

Alice Joyce, working under direction of Tom Terriss in Florence Morse Kingsley's romantic drama, "To the Highest Bidder," has in her support Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Jules Cowles, little Stephen Carr and Mary Carr.

Richard Barthelmess, frequently seen opposite Marguerite Clark, has been engaged as leading man for Gladys Leslie in "Wild Primrose," which will be produced under the direction of Frederick Thomson.

Corinne Griffith, working in "Love Watches," under direction of Henry Houry, has in her support a cast which includes Julia Swayne Gordon, Florence Deshon, Alice Terry, Denton Vane, Edward Burns and Charles Stevenson.



All of these players are well known to screen patrons.

Farnum Begins Sequel

William Farnum has begun work at the western Fox studios on the picturization of Zane Grey's "The Rainbow Trail." This story is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," recently completed for early release by Mr. Farnum.

The climax of "Riders of the Purple Sage" came when Lassiter, the terror of the Utah border, rolled a huge stone into a narrow canyon, blocking pursuit by Mormons and at the same time sealing himself and a woman and a child up in a small valley. "The Rainbow Trail" takes up the life in the lost valley ten years later, when the child, now grown to womanhood, is spirited out of the canyon by Mormon agents.

Those who have read the "Rainbow Trail" say it is even stronger than "Riders of the Purple Sage."

Gladys Leslie as she appears in her new Vitagraph picture "The Soap Girl."

Gladys Leslie Stars in Society Satire

"The Soap Girl" Is Story Based on Publicity Seekers Filled with Complications and Laughs

GLADYS LESLIE, Vitagraph's little star, is the Blue Ribbon artist presented for the week of June 17 by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

She will appear in "The Soap Girl," a delightful little satirical drama by Lewis Allen Brown, author of "Little Miss George Washington" and other successful screen stories. It was produced under the direction of Martin Justice and in addition to the star there is a good cast, including Julia Swayne Gordon, Ed Burns and Frank Norcross.

The story is a satire on publicity-mad men and women of higher society. The father of Marjorie Sanford (Miss Leslie) knows little of society and cares less. But he is a practical business man, who made millions in the manufacturing of soap, and from what he sees in the papers he gets the idea that all society leaders live for is personal advertising and publicity, gained through freak dinners, divorces, etc. So when he realizes that Marjorie longs to break into society and cannot penetrate its icy walls, he decides to do some advertising for her.

He sends to Mrs. Van Ruhl, society leader and aunt of Marjorie's sweetheart, a check for one of her pet charities that opens her door to the girl. But before Marjorie can enter, her beautiful fame appears in millions of cakes of soap from her father's factory. The good work is all overturned. Marjory's father has carried his advertising theory a bit too far and society's door is slammed in Marjory's face for good.

Father Sanford rages and storms in vain, nephew Van Ruhl pleads, then breaks with his aunt over Marjorie, is disinherited and starts around the world. But Marjorie, convinced that her father is right in his theory of advertising vs. society, although it worked disastrously for her, determines to try it on Mrs. Ruhl.

"Who's Who," says the original Ruhls sold rum to Indians and so Marjorie buys a distillery and gets up a trademark, nameless but unmistakably the haughty, austere features of Mrs. Ruhl, and presently countless bottles of whiskey and many newspapers and magazines are graced with the emblem.

Society is shaken to its foundation, but Marjorie's triumph is shattered by a damage action because she has no right to the name of Van Ruhl. Nephew Van Ruhl puts off his world trotting trip to pass on Marjorie the use of his name for life.

Auntie Van Ruhl, seeing the error of her ways and in love with Marjorie because she is so clever and pretty, goes straight to Marjorie's home and finding her father at home, gives him the shock of his life by insisting that he invite her to tea.

And there Marjorie and Richard find them and the damage suit is called off.

Theatre Works with Schools

Co-operation between the picture theatres and the public schools is becoming more and more the vogue. William Gervers, manager of the Aragon Theatre, Cincinnati, and of three other theatres, is constantly working in harmony with the schools in his vicinity. He has recently tendered the use of his theatre to the Vine Street School, for the benefit of the Red Cross.

The school gave two performances, the entertainment consisting of various patriotic exercises by the school children, and two films, a Red Cross subject and a comedy.

Mr. Gervers says that it pays to cooperate in this manner with the schools in his community. He states that one time when an educational film was being shown at his theatre, a notice of it was written on the black-board in the school room and all were urged to see it.

Select Managers Meet

Branch managers of Select whose exchanges are situated within proximity of New York are meeting at the home office this week. This conference will be followed by a similar one at Chicago, which in its turn will be followed by others until the country has been covered.

The New York conference will be attended by the following: Henry Siegel of the New York exchange, Max Milder, Philadelphia; Charles R. Rogers, Boston; S. S. Webster, Buffalo; V. P. Whitaker, Washington; Leo F. Levison, Pittsburgh; Sam E. Morris, Cleveland, and T. O. Tuttle, Atlanta. Field Manager J. S. Woody, General Manager Arthur S. Kane, President Lewis J. Selznick, Treasurer Morris Kohn and others will speak.

This is the first occasion since the organization of the company that Select has brought its branch officials together.

The second of the series of conferences, at Chicago, where Select's office is presided over by Fred Aiken, will be held June 19 and 20. President Selznick and General Manager Kane will go to Chicago for that purpose. The Select officials expected to attend are as follows: Fred Aiken, Chicago; A. M. Muller, Cincinnati; S. C. Ragland, St. Louis; C. W. Taylor, Omaha; A. H. McLaughlin, Kansas City; H. A. Rathner, Minneapolis; C. C. Ezell, Dallas; H. L. Knappen, Denver; Sam E. Morris, east central manager, and J. S. Woody, field manager.

Wants War Work Pictures

Have you interesting pictures illustrating war activities in Southern California? If so, send them to William E. Wing, 1543 Council Street, Los Angeles. All such photos should be accompanied by written descriptive matter covering fully the nature of the scenes with mention of names, if prominent persons are shown. Mr. Wing is acting in this work for the pictorial section of the war department at Washington.

"Stolen Orders" Has Successful Premiere

Crowd Packs Park Theatre in New York and Picture Holds Everyone Until the Last Scene

THE premiere of the picturized version of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Stolen Orders," took place at the Park Theatre in New York on Sunday evening, June 2. Notwithstanding the intense heat, with the thermometer dancing in the nineties and with a theatre packed to capacity, William A. Brady's masterly hand in contriving suspense and thrills was evident from the fact that not a single person in the audience left until after the picture was finished and accorded a fitting tribute by unrestrained applause.

The cast is headed by four stars—Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and June Elvidge, with scores of other prominent actors in minor roles and big scenes employing thousands. Every accessory necessary in the making of a patriotic picture was placed at the disposal of Mr. Brady—who, by the way, is a member of the National Council of Defense—by the government.

Battleships, naval launches, hydro-aeroplanes, anti-aircraft guns, sailors, marines and not forgetting commissioned naval officers, participate.

President Wilson, in sympathy with the purpose of the picture, permitted himself to be shown on the screen while delivering a speech in which he hurled an indictment against the enemies within our gates.

The Italian government tendered to Mr. Brady the use of war scenes taken on the Italian front, which are cleverly introduced and lend great zest to a succession of thrills seldom seen on the screen.

In the filming of "Stolen Orders" it became necessary for Mr. Brady to construct a dirgible balloon, which is destroyed by anti-aircraft guns. The very places where the anti-aircraft guns successfully did their work by a strange freak of events are the selfsame locale where the German submarines have been operating.

Kitty Gordon wears gorgeous clothes in "Stolen Orders." It is to pay for these clothes that—in the picture—she finds it necessary to raise more money than is given her by her husband, Admiral Gaveston. So Miss Gordon, in the role of the admiral's wife, steals sealed orders given him by the navy department which he is to open after his fleet has gone to sea; but it is only after John Le Page, played by Montagu Love, has persuaded her that he is a member of a peace society and that she will help him end the war. Le Page is really a German spy. Le Page has a daughter, Ruth, played by June Elvidge. Ruth meets and falls in love with Lieutenant Gaveston, played by Carlyle Blackwell, who is Mrs. Gaveston's brother-in-law.

Admiral Gaveston discovers the loss of the sealed orders while a party is in progress on board his flagship. He orders everyone searched. He starts with his brother, Lieutenant Gaveston. But young Gaveston carries in his pocket an incriminating letter which a German count has written Mrs. Gaveston, so, rather than be searched, he leaps overboard.

The honor of both Admiral Gaveston and the young lieutenant is put in jeopardy. The search for the papers is started by Lieutenant Gaveston and he is aided by Ruth. Ruth discovers that her father has the orders. Le Page attempts to escape to sea in a dirigible balloon, taking his daughter with him. While they are in the air, the pilot of the balloon turns on Le Page. The pilot is a man who has been terribly wronged by Le Page years before and has been waiting his chance to get even.

Ruth gets the sealed orders from her father. In a terrific fight the two men fall from the balloon into the sea. The American anti-aircraft guns set the balloon on fire. Ruth falls into the water, but is rescued by Lieutenant Gaveston, who has been pursuing in a hydro-aeroplane.

New Fox Exchange at Buffalo.

Busy at New Fox Exchange

The office staff of the new exchange of the Fox Film Corporation at 209-211 Franklin street, Buffalo, are busy making arrangements for the formal opening of the exchange the latter part of this month. The manager, Thomas A. Brady, and his force will then be settled in their new building after moving from Syracuse.

New methods, better equipment and additional employes have made it possible to reorganize the office on a more efficient basis. This is especially true in the inspection room, where six young women are busy taking care of films. The correspondence department also has been strengthened through the addition of extra help, and special racks have been installed by an efficiency expert in the shipping and paper department.

Exhibitors will find it particularly easy to get prints of their films, as two or three prints of each picture will be on hand all the time. Manager Brady is also working on an arrangement to make all shipments by special delivery parcel post, as it has been found that express service is too slow. Daily motor service between Buffalo and Rochester also will give added speed to shipments to communities between those two places.

A private telephone exchange will make it possible for exhibitors to get into touch with any department of the exchange. Another feature of the plant, which by the way occupies a whole building by itself, is the largest fireproof vault in the city. A large projection room, with entirely new equipment, is another facility placed at the service of exhibitors.

In all, it is estimated that it cost the Fox Film Corporation more than $4,000 to move from Syracuse and equip its Buffalo office, but the change was made imperative, it is said, by the tremendous growth in the Fox business in the territory served by Buffalo.

No Dialect Used in Ebony Comedies

President Pollard Explains It Would Be Too Difficult to Grasp at Quick Reading

SINCE the Ebony comedies, with all colored casts, have been played generally over the country, comment has been heard upon the sub-titles and inserts of a very favorable nature.

The fact is being commended that the inserts are not in negro dialect. This attitude toward the elimination of dialect bears out the judgment of President L. J. Pollard, who decided at the outset not to attempt forcing the comedy by recourse to dialect.

To an official of General Film Company, Mr. Pollard said at the first review of these comedies, when asked how he had managed to sidestep the pitfall of dialect:

"We had very good reasons for eliminating dialect. First, all dialect is hard to read and understand on the screen where there is such limited time allowed. The simpler the wording of a sub-title or insert, the better.

"Second, dialect is not necessarily representative of the speech of the race, and has really no standard, since the cleverest of writers disagree as to its predominating peculiarities.

"Thirdly, the humor of the negro is mainly in his mannerisms and his actions, and he makes these inimitably humorous when he tries.

"This is demonstrated in the Ebony comedies, because nine-tenths of the spectators, after seeing one run off, are not able to say whether dialect was used or not. Those who have heard colored people talk are led by the screen action to translate the words, not into dialect, but into the habitual tone and inflection of the negro, which is really inimitable in cold type and which is entirely apart from occasional mistakes in pronunciation and grammar."

Cincinnati Exhibitors Vexed

Exhibitors in Cincinnati are somewhat indignant about an ordinance which was introduced in the city council compelling theatre owners to admit soldiers in uniform free of charge. They do not object to the proposed plan, but they object to the manner in which it is being handled, since none of the exhibitors were even consulted about it. In all probability, however, the ordinance will fail to carry. It has been referred to a committee for consideration, and will not be voted on for several weeks.

Outdoor Play for Williams

Earle Williams has begun work on the story "The Man from Brodneys." Jack Conway is directing this production and Miss Grace Darmond plays opposite Mr. Williams. There will be very few interior sets in the making of this feature, nearly all action transpiring out of doors. A great many scenes will be filmed in Montecato, near Santa Barbara.

Constance Talmadge and Norman Kerry, her leading man, in the new Select picture for June release, "Good Night Paul."

Rowland Suggested as Leader of the Industry

Two weeks ago MOTOGRAPHY in an editorial called for a leader to guide the industry to a safe and happy future. The editorial asked: "Who Is the Man?" To this Mayer Silverman, manager of the Liberty Film Renting Company, Pittsburgh, writes:

"I noticed your editorial: 'Where Is the Man?' and say it is best that he be neither manufacturer, distributor or exhibitor. It would take a very brilliant man quite some time to familiarize himself with the necessary essential knowledge to carry out the program. How about Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation?"

An anonymous correspondent suggests "Bill Fox."

This correspondent also protests that MOTOGRAPHY is wrong in opposing Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as it did editorially. The editorial about Elliott said:

"As we understand that Mr. Ochs is not a candidate for re-election (to the presidency of the M. P. E. L. of A.), we are moved to ask another question—of what real practical use is Elliott to the industry now or in the future?"

"He is O. K.; you're wrong," the anonymous correspondent wrote.

The letter bore the postmark of New York.

Paramount Managers Meet

A highly successful convention of the mid-west Paramount district managers, exchange managers and assistants was held Saturday, Sunday and Monday, June 8, 9 and 10, at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago.

J. W. Allen, Famous Players-Lasky special representative to the exchanges, conducted the meeting, aided by the heads of the three districts included, Max Goldstine, who has charge of the Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Chicago branches; A. D. Flintom of the Kansas City, Omaha and Des Moines exchanges, and James Steel of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit exchanges. The exchange managers, their assistants and salesmen were present.

Saturday, the opening day, was given over to a discussion of plans for the coming year and the complete details of release. A larger number of releases than ever before are offered, three features a week in the selective star series being planned. All of the big stars of the past year will be represented, including Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, W. S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks, together with the new Fred Stone pictures. Other features also are planned.

Universal to Make Government Pictures

Gets Contract to Film Series of Single Reel Films Called "The Wonders of Our War Work"

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has again been designated by the United States government as the agency through which to discharge one of its most important and necessary war-time functions.

Ever since the country has been at war with Germany and more particularly since the American troops have been playing such a leading part in the conflict, there has been an insatiable desire to know what America is doing to win the war, what weapons are being used, how they are turned out, what are the actual conditions of training, how the boys live, how they fight and how they play.

There are many things that cannot be told about the war work, but there are many things that can and every government realizes that the telling of these things is the greatest force which can be exerted in improving the morale of the great civilian army supporting the boys at the front.

There are only two ways to build up this morale—through the papers and on the motion picture screen. The government has already utilized the animated weeklies extensively in waking the country up to the reality of war, in stimulating enlistments, Liberty Loan and war savings stamp investments, Red Cross giving and conservation of resources.

The agricultural department entrusted to Universal an important contract dealing with its activities. But the greatest official recognition thus far of the essential character of the screen is the placing with Universal through the Committe of Public Information of a commission to film a series of single reel features on "The Wonders of Our War Work," and to circulate them through the medium of the Universal exchanges, one every other week.

The first five of these subjects have already been suggested and written by Rufus Steele, the famous magazine writer and novelist, best known as author of "The Eagle's Wings," a film which played a remarkable part in preparing this country for the industrial mobilization which is to win the war. Mr. Steele was drafted into the service of his country and is now a member of the Division of Films, Committee of Public Information.

The following letters between Mr. Steele and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, are the result of the negotiations between the government and Universal, and they form the contract on which Universal will start work at once.

Mr. R. H. Cochrane,
Vice-President, Universal Film Co.,
1600 Broadway, New York City.
Dear Mr. Cochrane:

Confirming our verbal agreement of today: The Division of Films will undertake to supply your company with government subjects in detail, with lists of locations and permits to film same, in consideration of your agreeing to picture such subjects and to circulate each as a one-reel release, in a series to be designated and advertised under the general title of "Wonders of Our War Work."

It is understood that the series is to be an every-other-week release. A list of the first five subjects, as discussed with you today, is enclosed. Additional subjects will be proposed to you at an early date, and added to the list upon being found mutually satisfactory.

The government's approval through the Committee on Public Information is to be embraced in a simple formula to follow the title.

Will you please write me, signifying your agreement to these general conditions?

We feel that this series is a really notable undertaking. It should prove a satisfactory commercial venture for you, and more than that, it should serve the high purpose of acquainting the American people with some of the big and important phases of their war. Universal's interest in this series and our own are identical, and we wish to do everything possible to give the greatest merit to each release and to promote its farthest circulation.

Anticipating a harmonious and pleasant working arrangement with your company, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) RUFUS STEELE,
Division of Films Committee on Public Information, Washington, D. C.
New York Office, Times Building, New York City.

Mr. Rufus Steele,
Division of Films, Committee on Public Information,
Times Building, New York City.
Dear Mr. Steele:

On behalf of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, I accept the general conditions outlined in your letter of May 29, whereby you propose to supply us with government subjects in detail, with lists of locations and permits to film them, in consideration of our agreeing to picture such subjects and to circulate each as a one-reel release in a series to be designated and advertised under the general title of "Wonders of Our War Work," every other week.

We gladly undertake our part of the work, not because we believe it a profitable commercial venture (because we do not), but because we feel it highly desirable that the American public be kept acquainted with the great work that is being done. Our attitude from the beginning of the war has been that the screen is the logical medium for telling the American people the whole story of the war and we have been glad to do our share at our own expense.

I want to congratulate you, personally, for hitting upon the most practical and sensible plan yet devised for keeping the public well posted and still handling it in such a manner that it leaves the picture companies free to handle it to the very best possible advantage for all concerned.

Sincerely yours,
UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. COMPANY,
Vice-President.

The interesting character of the subject matter treated in the first five features may be judged by a short synopsis of each:

"RECLAIMING THE SOLDIER'S DUDS."—Soldiering is extremely hard on uniform, shoes and hat. After a few weeks these are no longer fit for use. It has been customary to throw them away. Now the quartermaster's department has put into operation the greatest reclamation plant on record. A cast-off uniform is dry-processed so that it is absolutely clean and fresh. Then all worn parts are replaced. The shoes are recobbled and go back to the same feet that wore them out. Fifty thousand pairs of worn shoes are seen in one pile waiting cobbling. The hat is cooked up and the felt pressed into a brand new lid.

"THE AMERICAN INDIAN GETS INTO THE WAR GAME."—The Indian is the big surprise of the war. Five thousand are in soldier uniform, 85 per cent being volunteer enlistments. They are doing good work. Indian women and girls wear the Red Cross uniform and are turning out quantities of knitting and bandages. Indians are raising cattle, sheep and hogs for the Allies. The tribes together have bought $12,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds. Distant scenes will be filmed and sent in, and for the main part of the reel all the activities of the great Carlisle Indian School, near Harrisburg, Pa., will be used.

"WHEATLESS WEDNESDAYS AND WHAT FOLLOWS."—The quantity of grain saved every time a wheatless Wednesday is observed is shown and that grain is followed through the mills, to the shipping ports and to Europe, where it is shown feeding our soldiers and our Allies.

"SECRETARY LANE MAKES WAR ON ILLITERACY AMONG GROWN-UPS."—A picture interview with striking illustrations in which Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane shows the operation of the new Americanization plan which leaves in the army and out of it no adult person untaught in reading and writing and fundamental knowledge.

"THE MARVELOUS CAMP KITCHEN AND THE MIRACLE OF THE SCRAPS."—How food is selected and prepared for the boys, how they eat it, and how the leavings that used to be thrown away are now preserved, reduced to gisterine and turned into munitions.

Mr. Steele is selecting a list of authorities on other activities of the war. These men will write seven or more features in the series, all of which will bear the official sanction and authority of the Committee of Public Information.

The release date of the first subject will be announced just as soon as it is finished and has received the sanction of the government. It will be available through any one of the forty-nine American offices of Universal and its twenty foreign offices, for the government desires these films to circulate in foreign countries as well as in the United States.

"Over the Top" Breaks Records All Over Country

Aside from being one of the most sensational war pictures on the market today, "Over the Top," the Vitagraph special which was produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey in the leading role, has established a number of records since its release a few weeks ago.

Here are some interesting facts on "Over the Top," obtained from the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization:

It started out with advance bookings of 2,500 days to be played within forty days, the largest pre-release write-up ever accredited to any picture, it is claimed.

It was the first attraction of any kind to play two weeks at Syracuse, New York.

It was the cause of riots at San Diego and Salt Lake City by crowds seeking to force their way into theatres where the film was being shown.

It caused a theatre in Ogden, Utah, the birthplace of Empey, to be kept open until 2 o'clock in the morning to take care of the crowds, the first time in the history of the place such a thing occurred.

It broke the record at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia.

It caused police reserves to be called out at Memphis, Tenn., where it established new records at the Majestic Theatre.

It shattered all box office records at leading theatres in Nashville, Erie, Pennsylvania, Houston, Texas, Minneapolis, Atlanta and other places.

It was the first picture ever played in Joliet, Illinois, where the fourth day's receipts exceeded those of any of the other days.

"Over the Top" is still showing to big crowds in Detroit, Chicago and other cities, and last week saw it open to crowded houses in Oakland, California, St. Paul, Denver and many other cities. It is scheduled to open this week in the big Orpheum Theatre, St. Louis; Tom Moore's Strand in Washington, and the new Liberty Theatre, New Orleans.

The opening of "Over the Top" in Canada was a triumph. It was started simultaneously in Toronto, Montreal and London, Ontario.

First Ince-Sawyer-Lubin Picture Soon

Louis Joseph Vance Now at Work on Story, Which, It Is Expected, Will Set a Record for Action

WITH the recent acquisition of Louis Joseph Vance, the celebrated American novelist, who will act in the capacity of production analyst, Ralph Ince, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have perfected their plans for the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction."

Mr. Vance is now at work on the first story and it is said that the scenario in point of action, suspense and melodramatic thrill will surpass "The Lone Wolf" and "False Faces," two of Mr. Vance's most sensational successes of the past year.

Discussing the formation of an organization to produce and exploit Ralph Ince Film Attractions and the acquisition of Louis Joseph Vance, the man who will direct these productions commented interestingly as follows:

"During a career of screen direction extending over twelve years it has always been my sole ambition to become associated in a production venture such as the one constituted by the recent formation of the company which will offer a series of melodramatic special features bearing the title 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions.'

"I feel that the opportunities for the achievement of remarkable results offered through my association with Messrs. Sawyer, Lubin and Vance will gratify the earnest desire which I possess to make 'out of the ordinary' pictures.

"The usual loose threads of story production, distribution and exploitation have been gathered so closely together through the recognized abilities of the various men involved in the new organization, that success seems assured from the start.

"Mr. Vance needs no introduction to the American reading public, as his name has been one of the most prominently displayed in the Saturday Evening Post for several years. In addition to a long list of successful stories such as 'The Brass Bowl,' 'The Destroying Angel' and 'The Pool of Flame' Mr. Vance is no stranger to the motion picture patron. He wrote the first successful motion picture serial, 'The Trey of Hearts,' produced by Universal, and has also been responsible for Vitagraph's 'Secret Kingdom,' and 'Patria,' produced by Pathe.

"I feel confident that the story he is now preparing for picturization by myself will contain all of the elements which I consider necessary for the making of a real 'special.'

"In the matter of studio management, production supervision and distribution, Arthur H. Sawyer will bring the fruits of feature film production, having organized the original Kinemecolor Company and being thoroughly conversant with the innumerable details of the business.

"As regards distribution, Herbert Lubin earned the right to the title of expert during his handling of the Canadian film situation for several years. As the owner of the Metro franchise for the Dominion, Lubin introduced several successful innovations in the selling and exploiting of special features. He is a keen student of the industry, possesses an intimate knowledge of the needs of the state rights buyers and is conceded to have broken all records in his handling of 'The Warrior' and 'Mother' on a territorial basis during the past year."

Fight Sunday Closing Order

Exhibitors of Tiffin, Ohio, declare that if the mayor's recent order closing all picture theatres of that city on Sunday is put into effect, they will take steps to close all ice cream parlors, bakeries, delicatessens, drug stores, pool rooms and cigar stores.

The citizens of Tiffin are in favor of Sunday pictures, according to a petition containing 4,000 names which has been presented to the mayor, asking that he rescind his order.

Clever Methods of Advertising

PUBLICITY THAT MAKES FOR PROFITS

Toledo Exhibitors Good Advertisers

Edward A. Zorn Particularly Alert, Using Large Space in Every One of the City's Three Papers

THE right kind of newspaper advertising inevitably reflects something of the man who wrote or inspired it. If it doesn't then it is faulty and partially ineffective. There is an "I" element or a "me" element that has to be put into printed salesmanship.

You find this element in the two largest motion picture advertising accounts of Toledo, Ohio. The writer has ranked Toledo as the fourth city in advertising efficiency, but ever since doing this he has wondered if Toledo is not pushing Cleveland hard for third place.

One of the most alert advertisers in Toledo, if not the most alert, is Edward A. Zorn, manager of the Temple and Alhambra theatres—"Edward A." as a literary courtesy and "Eddie" Zorn in point of fact.

Zorn is of the size and dimension that make great infielders in baseball—nervous, full of vitality, rangey and covering much ground rapidly. He has the newspaper temperament and agility of mind. He plays with the plot of a motion picture as a newspaper editor plays with news. To him a picture possesses plot for the sole purpose of being transmitted to the public via the newspapers. In other words, he handles his shows as if they were news, which is, of course, the correct way of exploiting an amusement.

Zorn knows, of course, that humanity is interested first of all in itself and secondly in others. He knows that personality is the biggest and greatest human interest power in the world. He knows that Mae Marsh or Bill Farnum, or Madge Kennedy or Mabel Normand are known to more people individually in Toledo than any citizen of Toledo is known to his fellow citizens.

The mayor might walk down his city's main thoroughfare unrecognized by more than a hundred people, whereas Mabel Normand or Bill Farnum would be followed by sixty per cent of the pedestrians in sight and require the police for protection.

Knowing all of these things, Eddie Zorn and H. C. Horater, his co-manager, advertise on a large, liberal and able scale. In the Toledo Blade on Saturday—almost every Saturday—you find the Temple carrying 200 lines deep by five columns wide or 225 lines deep by five or six columns wide. In the Toledo Sunday Times you will find this space duplicated and in the Toledo News Bee space of large dimension. There are just the three papers in the town and Zorn and Horater use them all. On the same days the Alhambra carries as large or larger space, not as an occasional departure, but regularly.

Other houses in Toledo that are big users of newspaper advertising space are the Princess Paramount Theatre, the Colonial and the Hippodrome.

Exhibitors in certain "hard towns" would consider the newspaper co-operation given in Toledo almost ideal. As a matter of fact, as intelligently as newspaper co-operation has been developed there, it is still limited more than it should be and more than the revenues derived from motion picture advertising warrant.

This is true with the single exception of the Toledo Sunday Times, which carries an eight or ten-page section devoted primarily to the screen and secondarily to the theatre. Incidentally, the theatre in Toledo is effectually and finally drowned by the more progressive motion picture exhibitor, who has cast dignity and dry-as-dust traditions to the winds and learned to be human in print.

Fine Displays Help Theatre to "Cash In"

Central Park, Chicago, Shows "Revelation" a Full Week, Smashing All Records of the House

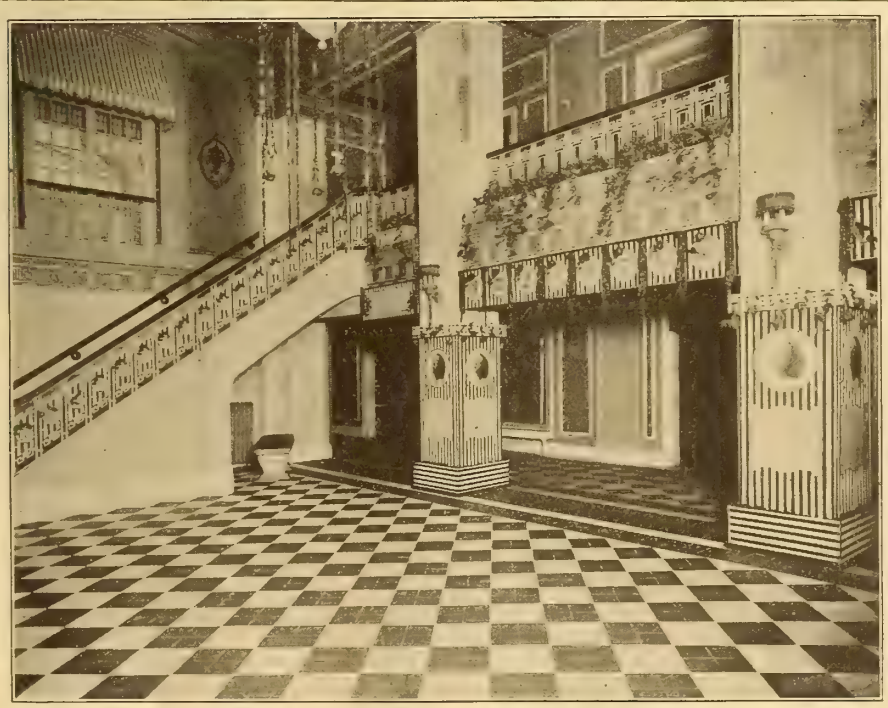
ONE of the most beautiful lobby displays which the Central Park Theatre, Twelfth Street and Central Park Avenue, Chicago, has yet displayed was used in connection with its showing of Nazimova's Metro play, "Revelation." As the accompanying illustration shows, the decoration was simple but rich and beautiful in effect.

Alexander Frank, who planned the display, worked out the decorative scheme with the idea of emphasizing two things, that the star was Nazimova and that the story was about a rose. The star's picture, the roses and the name of the play were the only decorations. This is the way they were used.

The entire lobby was decorated with black and white panels, red fibre roping, four hundred American Beauty roses and red silk ribbon. Ten panels were used around the pillars. Each panel was sixty-six inches high by twenty-six inches wide and contained a circular cut-out of a 22 by 28 inch photo of the star. Under each photo was the caption: "The Great Nazimova in Revelation," and the date of the first showing.

Mr. Frank used very little lettering in the entire display. He mentioned only the star, title of the play and the date. All lettering was done in dark blue and gold. All ornaments were made from gold and red metallics.

A clever use was made of the stair railings. Each square held a card with a single letter and a rose. The letters combined spelled, "Nazimova-Revelation." Four baby spotlights concealed in different parts of the lobby played their 1,000-candle power lights on four of the star photos.



The black and white panel effect was obtained by mounting a good quality wall paper on card-board. The bases of the four pillar pedestals were filled with artificial moss and this was saturated with rose perfume. A very important thing about this display was that not a nail was driven in the walls. All wooden frame work was so arranged that the walls were not injured in the least.

The striking and artistic display proved a wonderful success, as results at the box-office showed. The picture was the first to run a full week at this theatre. The theatre holds 2,600 persons and the film drew capacity business every day of the week, during the warmest weather of the season, breaking all house records.

Mr. Frank states that more new patrons came to the theatre during this week than ever before. Many exhibitors visited the theatre and all complimented the managers on the beautiful decorations.

Mr. Frank's work with this picture won a friendly letter of appreciation from the star herself, who had learned of the effort made to give her play a beautiful presentation and was quick to thank those responsible.

"Toys of Fate," the next Nazimova feature, will also be given a week's run at this theatre and Mr. Frank is already planning an equally beautiful display.

Business Man Assails Theatres

R. L. Miller, manager of the Theatre Supply Company, Akron, Ohio, sends to MOTOGRAPHY a copy of a letter he recently received from the Wilson Mimindex Company, signed by Howard L. Wilson, with the request that it be given publicity. Following is the letter:

May 9,1918.

The Theatre Supply Co.,
Akron, Ohio.

Attention R. L. Miller, Manager.

We ask your pardon for the delay in reply to your request for a quotation on 500 Memindex Junior. We are interested in such requests, and as our reason for not quoting you is rather unusual, it seems necessary to explain so you will have no occasion to conjecture about it.

The word "theatre" has a vivid significance to the writer, resulting from experience and observation of more than thirty years. He is deeply convinced that all that can be said in its favor is not to be compared with the unspeakable damage done to human souls by its influence. It seems to be one of the most powerful agencies of Satan for destroying the conditions which lead souls to salvation—we are speaking now of the class of shows that are usually considered innocent and harmless—such as would not produce any feeling of revulsion in the average conscience but would effectually dispel for the time any concern in regard to salvation or eternity. Therefore, we would not under any condition lend a hand to any business that has the marks of Satan upon it.

Our goods are for sale to the public, and we do not concern ourselves as to how they are used. But we draw the line at any subserviency such as the preparation of your order would be. We regret that we thus have to decline your proposed order and devoutly hope that you will pause long enough to consider what our experience as expressed above may signify to you, now, and in the life to come.

Yours truly,
WILSON MEMINDEX COMPANY,
(Signed) Howard L. Wilson.

Many, no doubt, will be surprised to know that there is a man in the business world occupying a responsible position, as Mr. Wilson apparently occupies, who has such ideas. Such opinions, it had been thought, perished long ago.

Irving Joins Goldwyn

Added distinction is given Goldwyn's roster of directors in the recent acquisition of George Irving, who is to hold the guiding reins in Mabel Normand's new production, the title of which has not been announced.

The engagement of Irving will result in two former stage colleagues appearing under the same film banner just as soon as Pauline Frederick becomes a Goldwyn star. Irving and Miss Frederick both appeared in the "legitimate" with Francis Wilson, before the motion picture industry took the lead in the theatrical world.

Among the pictures directed by Mr. Irving are "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" and "Daughter of Destiny."

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Shipman Gets Big South African Success

Will Exploit "The Rose of Rhodesia" Throughout North and South America—Other New Features Soon

ERNEST SHIPMAN has made arrangements with Joseph Fisher of Capetown to represent Fisher in this country in the purchase of six, seven and eight reel pictures for exploitation in South Africa. He has also agreed to exploit Mr. Fisher's big South African success in eight reels entitled "The Rose of Rhodesia" throughout the Americas. It will have an early showing in New York City.

Frederic Shipman has cabled Ernest Shipman from Australia for additional feature pictures, having already paid the record price for "Neptune's Daughter" and other successes. Mr. Shipman is exploiting pictures throughout Australasia and the Orient and has arranged local representation in all of his territory.

A number of state rights buyers have arranged with Ernest Shipman to represent their interests in New York in the selection and purchase of such pictures as they may require from time to time. This enables Mr. Shipman to negotiate for any desirable pictures available for the open market in the interests of his clients.

Arrangements have been made with Walker Whiteside, whereby he will interpret the part of a Japanese secret service agent in America in a seven reel picture based upon the most up-to-date and stirring episodes of the war.

Nell Shipman's two stories, "The Tiger of the Sea," and "The Coast Guard Patrol," have received additional values from the recent operations of submarines along the Atlantic Seaboard. Both of her stories have vital situations in them based upon these activities. Nell Shipman has kept abreast of the times in her writings and will now reap the reward.

Lloyd Carleton, noted director and head of the Carleton Attractions, arrived in New York from Los Angeles the other day, bringing with him a feature picture for exploitation. Mr. Shipman saw the picture immediately, leaving on the Twentieth Century Limited the same day for the coast. The object of this trip is to close contracts for a number of new productions now in the process of manufacture and to decide some important deals which have been pending for some time.

Mr. Shipman will meet in person progressive state rights buyers with whom he has been doing business for the past six months.

He will have a number of special attractions to announce upon his return.

M. H. Hoffman to Enter Hospital

M. H. Hoffman, long identified with large interests in the motion picture industry, is preparing to enter a hospital this week to undergo a serious operation. Before leaving his offices, Mr. Hoffman stated briefly his intentions for the future.

"I disposed of my interest in Foursquare Pictures, and withdrew from that organization, solely because of my health," he said. "Had I been well I should have bought, not sold. The arrangements provided for my purchasing the New York Exchange of Foursquare, which I will now own outright; but the active manager will be Hy Gainsborg.

"As the smaller part of my future operations is to be the exchange, which I shall conduct under the name of the M. H. Hoffman exchange, I shall devote my time, after the recovery of my health to larger motion picture operations.

"I shall be open to the acquiring of feature pictures—in conjunction with Mr. Gainsborg—but they must be strictly of the finest quality. Whether I shall start another organization or affiliate myself with one of the existing large companies, will depend largely upon my decision on those offers now before me."

New Shipman Sales

Ernest Shipman's office reports the following additional territory sold.

The Shorty Hamilton series: Texas, Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Texas; Mississippi and Louisiana, Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans, Louisiana; Tennessee and Arkansas, Kaufman Specials, Memphis, Tennessee; Illinois, Unity Photoplay Company, Chicago; Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Elliott & Sherman, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Kansas, V. H. Hodupp, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Josh Binney comedies: Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Alabama, R. M. Savini, Atlanta, Georgia; New York state, Doo-lee Film Co., Syracuse, New York.

Metro Buys "Warrior" and "Mother"

"The Warrior" and "Mother" have been acquired for the states of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky by the Metro exchanges. Contracts to this effect have just been consummated between Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., and representatives of the Metro exchanges.

"The Warrior," starring Maciste, hero of "Cabiria," has been one of the state right sensations of the past twelve months, playing return engagements as many as three times in leading houses throughout the country.

"Mother," the George Loane Tucker seven-part offering, featuring Elizabeth Risdon, has been equally successful.

The Metro exchange of New York has also purchased "The Warrior" for New York city and state and it has planned to offer the feature as a special attraction during the summer months.

All territory in the United States and Canada for "The Warrior" has now been sold.

They're Not All in Bottles

Za Su Pitts reported for work at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood one morning recently with one eye discolored and a large bump on her forehead.

Miss Pitts plays Sal Sue in "As the Sun Went Down," a picture starring Edith Storey, now under production, and as she entered the studio gate she happened to meet Miss Storey.

"Why, Za Su, what has happened?" exclaimed the star.

"Snakes," replied the young woman, ruefully, "all kinds of snakes. Big ones and little ones."

"But Los Angeles is dry," interposed Miss Storey.

"I know; but since I've been playing the part of Sal in your picture and have had to carry a rattler around in a cage as a pet, all over the studio stage and even out on location, it's sort of made me nervous. Last night I dreamed that he—the rattlesnake, I mean—escaped."

"Horrible!"

"Yes, and the rattler multiplied. Soon there were a million of 'em, crawling all about me. And I—I—"

"Woke up?"

"No. I fell out of bed," said Miss Pitts, as she rubbed the lump on her forehead.

WITH THE STORY OF THE PICTURE

Artcraft

HIT-THE-TRAIL HOLLIDAY.—(Five reels)—June 16—Featuring George M. Cohan. One of the best pictures ever made.

Jason, a hotel keeper in the little town of Johnsville, decides that booze is bad for boys and closes his bar, giving prohibition a big boost. Wilhelm Worse, a brewer, decides to ruin Jason by opening a rival hotel and bringing from New York Billy Holliday, a famous mixer. Before Billy gets a chance to take the job he falls hard for Jason's daughter, and he doesn't care for the Germans anyhow. So he boosts Jason's temperance beverage and makes the little hotel a big success. The brewery crowd tries to break up a prohibition convention held in the town, and Billy comes to the front and beats them at their own game. Meanwhile he has become a national figure, and is in demand for lectures, but he insists upon first bringing to a successful conclusion his love affair with Jason's daughter, which has been ripening right along.

Director, Marshall Neilan. Cameraman, Walter Stradling. General effect—This is simply a whale of a picture, with speed, comedy, a good sane temperance appeal, and real Mickey Neilan character, so that you can use all the superlatives and still not overpraise it. Star—Cohan's best work on the screen; much better than "Seven Keys." Support—A dandy bunch of types. Production—Good, but it does not call for pretty stuff. Photography—Fine.

It is difficult to see how anyone can fail to clean up on this. Look at the various angles of appeal: George M. Cohan, the Yankee Doodle Boy; Marshall Neilan's direction, that made "Stella Maris" and "Amarilly" Pickford's two best; scenario by John Emerson and Anita Loos, who are now being featured themselves, after having given Fairbanks his best productions; the Billy Sunday, "hit-the-trail" stuff, for don't forget that prohibition is a big issue right now. This ought to be good for the maximum run of any house where they have eyes.

Paramount

Her Final Reckoning.—(Five reels)—June 9—Featuring Pauline Frederick. A high-class story of a woman with an unfortunate past.

Prince Zilah falls in love with Marsa, both of them being Hungarians in exile in Paris, and both wealthy and fashionable. Marsa marries the prince without telling him of a love affair she had several years before with Count Menko. Menko had tried to sell his silence at the customary price, and Marsa turned her savage dogs upon him. He escapes, but takes revenge by sending Prince Zilah on the wedding day letters which Marsa had written to him. The prince is furious and abandons his bride, who goes almost insane while he is brooding in jealousy. The prince's friend then fights a duel with Menko and kills him, after which the prince and his bride are reunited.

Director—Emile Chautard. Cameraman—Jack Bizuel. General effect—This is the sort of story that only the most intelligent audiences, appreciating the difference between European ideals and American, will understand, though the various dramatic scenes are done with great feeling. Star—No one knows how to be unhappy so beautifully as Pauline Frederick, and she was never more fascinating. Support—Excellent. John Miltern and Warren Cooke in well-fitted roles. Production—Beautiful, with wonderful interiors and some of the handsomest gardens ever pictured. Photography—About the best that has come out of an eastern studio recently.

This picture is done so beautifully and the acting is so good that it may get over, but the star, director and cameraman are carrying the whole load, having had no help from the scenario department, so that it is really a picture for the smart set.

The Bravest Way.—(Five Reels)—June 16.—Featuring Sessue Hayakaya. A very sad story of an American Japanese, with a happy ending.

Tamura, a Japanese gardener, is in love with Nume, a half Japanese school teacher. His closest friend is murdered just as his wife and child arrive to join him in America, and Tamura sacrifices his love and marries the woman to protect her. Nume, broken hearted, accepts the offer of Nason, a wealthy man, to supply her with money to cultivate her voice. When she finally makes a success, he insists that she repay the money or give him herself. Tamura, who has been watching over Nume, breaks into the room and rescues Nume. Tamura's wife dies. A merchant dies and leaves his money to Tamura and Tamura pays Nason the money he has spent on Nume and the lovers are united.

Director, George Melford. Cameraman, Paul Perry. General effect—A rather loose story in which deaths and inheritances occur too opportunely to make the tale sound reasonable, but with good atmosphere. Star—Hayakawa in his favorite kind of part, a half-Americanized Japanese. Support—Excellent, Florence Vidor and Tsuri Aoki in particular. Production—Ranks with Lasky's best. Photography—Fine.

This is a curious picture to place and its value depends entirely upon the drawing power of the star and the Paramount trade mark; it cannot be depended upon to make a big hit.

Brady

Stolen Orders.—(Eight reels)—June 2—Featuring producer, William A. Brady. A big melodrama of German spy plots.

There are several plots in this multiple-reeler, all focussing finally upon a thrilling finish. One of these deals with the pursuit of a man who stole certain valuable jewels by the man upon whom he had fastened the crime. Another concerns the means by which German agents play upon the gambling proclivities of the wife of an admiral, thus getting her in their power and making the price of secrecy the interception of certain orders from Washington to her husband. These two plots are linked together by the fact that the admiral's brother in the second plot, is in love with the thief's daughter of the first plot. The story finishes with a chase by an aeroplane of a dirigible in which the stolen orders are presumably being taken to Germany.

Director, Harvey Knoles. Cameraman, Rene Guissart. General effect—This is a story which has timely interest and several big thrills, its weaknesses being simply the inconsistencies of plot, without which there could be no melodrama, and these are soon forgotten in the rapidity of the action. Stars—While none is starred separately, Kitty Gordon, Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell all appear prominently in the cast. Production—Very thorough, though the fight in the car of the dirigible is not convincing. Photography—Very good.

Title, cast and timeliness make this attraction a pretty sure-fire one. A little circusing ought to make it go over big, except where the spy stuff has been overdone, and even here the melodrama itself is strong enough to pull well.

Fox

A Fool There Was.—(Five reels)—(Reissue)—Featuring Theda Bara. The daddy of all the vampire pictures.

A vampire woman ruins one man after another, finally selecting John Schuyler as her next victim. As she boards the same boat with him, starting for Europe, her last previous victim commits suicide on deck, but she only smiles. Schuyler becomes so mad over the vampire that he forgets his wife and children and goes to Italy with the temptress, sinking deeper and deeper in his demoralization until at last he dies, the vampire still smiling.

There are many who regard Theda Bara's early vampire pictures, which founded her reputation, as her best work. This production was made from a story by Porter Emerson Browne, who based his tale on the Kipling poem of the same name. In many respects the mechanical side of picture production has improved greatly since this was made, but so far as the actual story-telling is concerned, this is about the best picture of its type ever turned out. Edward Jose, now a director, was the vampire's victim, and May Allison, now a star, had a minor role.

By playing fair with your public, this ought to get money, as many will want to see this re-edited version of "A Fool There Was," especially where Miss Bara has proved a drawing card. But there is no way of getting in bad with the public like advertising a reissue as a new production.

Director—Frank Powell.

The Bondman.—(Five reels)—Reissue—Featuring William Farnum. A terrific story of hate and sacrifice.

Jason, whose mother was wronged by his father, promises her on her deathbed that he will find and kill the man. The father dies, however, and Jason determines to visit his vengeance on his son, his own half brother. In Iceland he meets this half-brother, not knowing who he is, and they are sentenced unjustly to a sentence in the sulphur mines. Jason saves the other from death, and eventually, after discovering the man's identity, takes his place so that the half-brother may marry the girl they both love.

This was one of the pictures that originally put William Farnum on the map. It is taken from Hall Caine's novel, and has in it the same elements of appeal as "A Tale of Two Cities," only it is more of the cave man type. Farnum puts a lot of ferocity into the part and the film is full of thrills. Few of the supporting cast are now known to the screen, except Dorothy Bernard.

The same remarks made elsewhere concerning the reissue of "A Fool There Was" apply to this picture, both as to its appearance and its value.

Director—Edgar Lewis.

Paralta

Shackled.—(Five reels)—June—Featuring Louise Glaum. A sex story in which the Magdalen fixes things for the others and marries happily.

Lola Dexter is saved from destitution by Walter Cosgrove, who, she believes, will marry her some day. Instead, he loses his money and marries Ethel Danfield, an heiress. Lola is tempted by another man, but refuses to fall again, and is about to commit suicide when she is stopped by Thomas Danfield, father of the girl who married Cosgrove. Lola falls in love with Danfield, and for the sake of saving his daughter, reveals her own past. Cosgrove is so annoyed that he falls down stairs and breaks his neck, so Ethel can marry a soldier she really loves, and Danfield then forgives Lola her mistakes and they also marry.

Director, Reginald Barker. Cameraman, L. Guy Wilkey. General effect—A very ordinary sort of story, saved from commonplaceness by Barker's direction and the seriousness of Miss Glaum. Star—Miss Glaum would be more attractive in less unhappy roles, as there are few actresses who can look sad and beautiful, but she is a clever actress and holds to her well-known record. Support—Good. Production and photography of the best.

It is a question whether or not the public is tired of these sex stories. If your audiences have shown they want them, you can't go wrong on this. It is not done in an offensive way, however, and the thin ice is never broken.

World

The Man Hunt.—(Five reels)—June 10—Featuring Ethel Clayton. A light comedy that has melodramatic moments.

Betty Hammond, owner of many millions, wants to marry her foreman, James Ogden, but he objects because she is so rich. So she kidnaps Ogden and a minister, with the aid of fifty heavily armed men, takes them to a hut in the mountains and declares she will not let them go until Ogden marries her. There are several dramatic incidents in which it appears that Betty's plan has got her into a mess of trouble, but naturally, she gets her man.

Director, Travers Vale. Cameraman, Philip Hatkin. General effect—A breezy story that will get a lot of laughs and that will hold almost any audience on account of the frequent changes in the situation, despite the fact that the outcome is inevitable. Star—Ethel Clayton is always popular and deservedly so. This is one of the last pictures she made with World before going to Paramount. Support—Good; Rockcliffe Fellows in the leading male role, in particular, is beginning to have quite a following. Production—A lot of fine mountain scenes make this picture very attractive. Photography—Good.

This is another of those pictures which, without having any remarkable value, ought to go over in good shape at almost any house, as the star is popular and the story clean and snappy.

Select

The Claw.—(Five reels)—June—Featuring Clara Kimball Young. A snappy production with more pep than recent C. K. Y. productions.

Mary Saurin goes to South Africa to join her brother, who lives at a post where the natives are a constant menace. She falls in love with Major Kinsella, to the chagrin of Mrs. Valetta, an unscrupulous woman who thought Kinsella loved her, and of Maurice Stair, who wants Mary for himself. In a battle with the savages, Stair runs away and brings Mary word that her brother and Kinsella were both killed, he being the only survivor. Kinsella was captured, however, but saves his own life by pretending to be insane, and working upon the superstition of the blacks. Stair convinces Mary that Kinsella wanted her to marry him, and she does so, but the very day of the wedding she discovers Stair's deceit. Finally Stair's better nature is awakened and he helps Kinsella escape from the natives, but is himself killed, thus atoning for his cowardice and treachery.

Director, Robert G. Vignola. Cameraman, Louis J. Physioc. General effect—This story, by Cynthia Stockley, author of "Poppy," is another tale of South Africa and is well told on the screen, Miss Young putting much more animation into her acting than in some of her recent productions. Support—Milton Sills, Jack Holt and Marcia Manon give this picture much class. Production—Unique, with clever flashes of aboriginal dances and rites. Photography—Good.

This ought to get the money, as it is a fine story, well told, and Clara Kimball Young holds her position as one of the best drawing stars, according to reports.

Triangle

The Last Rebel.—(Five reels)—June 9—Featuring Belle Bennett. A long-drawn-out story of two generations, with nothing to sustain interest, except atmosphere.

The Batesfords and Appersons, southern families, are close friends until the Civil War, when they quarrel bitterly, and Harry Apperson loses his sweetheart, Cora, to his rival, a distantly related Batesford. A generation later Apperson's son comes back from the west, where he has made a fortune with his father, and gets the daughter of his father's sweetheart out of a peck of trouble and goes into a clinch with her at the final closeup.

Director, Gilbert P. Hamilton. Cameraman, Jack Mackenzie. General effect—A lot of color, local and otherwise, without much excuse for its being there. Star—Miss Bennett has shown nothing yet to entitle her to stardom, except promise, and she needs better stories. Support—Fine; one of those pictures in which everyone is as good as the leading players. Production—Thorough and well thought out. Photography—Excellent.

This won't make much of a hit with playgoers except those who like to take their southern stuff straight.

Madame Sphinx.—(Five reels)—June 9—Featuring Alma Rubens. A good, swift story, with mystery and melodrama.

Henri DuBois, a wealthy Parisian, has disinherited his son and made his ward, Celeste, his heir. He is murdered and Celeste finds near his body a cuff button with a curiously carved sphinx on it. She sets out to find the owner of the button and the trail leads to a young artist, whom she finally traps and has arrested, though she has begun to love him. It is discovered that he is the son of DuBois, and Celeste, believing in his innocence, sets out on the trail again, and gets the real criminal.

Director, Thomas N. Heffron. Cameraman, C. H. Wales. General effect—A picture that was obviously made by the scenario writer rather than the director or star, so logically and smoothly does it speed along, with its big dramatic scenes, and well-concealed mystery. Star—Alma Rubens gets better all the time, and this is her best work since "I Love You." Support—The customary even excellence of Triangle casts. Production—Thoroughly good. Photography—Excellent.

This is a good picture to boost, not by calling it the "sensation of the year" or any of that fool stuff, but as an A-1 attraction, clean and full of punch. It is better than eighty per cent of the other pictures of the month.

Gets Strange Mark of Favor

Edith Storey, Metro star, received a strange token of esteem the other day. She was returning to the Hollywood studio in her limousine from Topanga Canyon, where she had been working on "As the Sun Went Down," when a delegation of little brown men and women stopped her in a Japanese fishing village.

The spokesman announced that they, allies of the honorable and esteemed United States, had a gift for the woman who graced the honorable "movies." The star, delighted, stepped from her car and nodded pleasantly to the deep bows of her Japanese friends. But her pleasure turned to astonishment when she saw three sturdy Japs dragging the "present" along the beach in her direction. It was a three hundred pound tuna, taken from the ocean that morning.

Although she didn't know what to do with it, Miss Storey made a great fuss over the gift. She diplomatically asked for a bit of tarpaulin, and had her driver load the finny monster on the front of her car. Thus burdened, the machine proceeded into Los Angeles.

But Miss Storey had to give the tuna away because she didn't have an ice-box big enough to hold it.

Big Sets in "Tempered Steel"

"Tempered Steel," the fourth special Petrova production, is marked by a number of unusual stage sets of massive character.

The story, written for the Polish star by George Middleton, author of the Broadway play, "Polly With a Past," calls for considerable theatrical atmosphere, with several scenes laid in a leading Broadway playhouse. To obtain the exact touch of realism required, Ralph Ince, the director, caused to be erected at the Petrova studio a perfect reproduction of the Belasco Theatre. This setting occupied the entire floor space and on the film shows in detail the stage and boxes.

Synopses for the Program

PREPARED IN CONCISE FORM

Artcraft

SAY, YOUNG FELLOW—(Five Reels)—June 16—Starring Douglas Fairbanks, supported by Marjorie Daw, Frank Campau, Edythe Chapman and James Neill. "The Young Fellow" is a cub reporter who makes good on a difficult assignment and is given another hard one. He is to expose fraud in a huge factory. He apparently goes into partnership with the villain, and the girl of the story misunderstands. The manner in which he extricates himself from trouble and wins the girl is highly interesting.

Bluebird

Which Woman?—(Five Reels)—June 10—Featuring Ella Hall, supported by Priscilla Dean, Edward Jobson, Eddie Sutherland and Andrew Robson. Dora Standish runs away on the eve of her marriage to an elderly millionaire. On leaving the house, she is mistaken for Mary Butler, leader of a gang of jewel thieves who plan to burglarize the house, and is aided in her escape by Jimmy, one of the gang. Then she is held for ransom. After much excitement, the gang is captured. Jimmy is able to clear himself of charges and he and Dora are married.

The Eagle—(Five Reels)—June 22—Featuring Monroe Salisbury, supported by Edna Earle and Ward King. John Gregory, disguised as an Indian and known as "The Eagle," becomes a bad man to avenge his mother's death, caused by the loss of her fortune in a western mine. Bob, brother of Lucy, John's sweetheart, is accused of "The Eagle's" crimes. Lucy learns the truth and orders John to save her brother. He does, and is condemned to be hanged. Then Bob kills himself, leaving a note which frees "The Eagle," who later marries Lucy.

Fox

Riders of the Purple Sage—(Five Reels)—Fox Standard—June 16—Starring William Farnum, supported by William Scott, M. B. Robbins, Murdock McQuarrie, Mary Merch, Katherine Adams, Nancy Caswell and J. Holmes. Lassiter seeks to find his sister, who was carried away by the Mormons. He becomes a noted "bad man." He falls in love with Jane, daughter of a rancher. Cattle rustlers, led by a "masked rider," are active and Lassiter and his friend, Venters, attack them. The masked rider, who proves to be a girl, is captured, wounded. Lassiter learns that she is the daughter of his sister, who is dead. Venters and the girl are later married, and Lassiter and Jane.

General

Slippery Slim, Diplomat—(One Reel)—June 22—With Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd. Slippery Slim is in love with Sophie Clutts. He is also postmaster of Snakeville, so when Sophie decides to give a party in honor of her birthday, Slim gives the parson his invitation, but holds the others back. On the night of the big Snakeville society event, Slim and the parson are the only ones at the party, so Sophie consents to be Slim's wife. The next day Slim delivers the delayed invitations and the boys all go, as they think, to Sophie's birthday party. They all faint as Sophie introduces Slim as her husband.

Metro

The Only Road—(Five Reels)—June 10—Featuring Viola Dana, supported by Casson Ferguson, Edith Chapman, Fred Huntley, Monte Blue, Paul Weigel and Marie Van Tassel. Nita is supposedly the daughter of the Mexican family with which she lives. In the same part of the country lives Mrs. Hawkins, who has as her guest Bob Armstrong, a young man sent to her by his father, a friend of hers. Bob and Nita fall in love and are secretly married. Nita runs away from her home, dressed as a boy, and applies for work on Mrs. Hawkins' farm. Her identity is discovered and she is about to be sent away when her guardian reveals the fact that she is really Mrs. Hawkins' own daughter, who had been kidnaped when an infant. The secret marriage to Bob is also announced and all ends happily.

Mutual

Beware of Blondes—(One Reel)—Strand—June 18—Starring Billie Rhodes. Mary and Jack celebrate their engagement by a visit to the beach. A fortune teller warns Mary that a blonde vamp is after Jack. Blonde beauties of all shapes and shades flirt with Jack, and Mary is desperate. Then she has an inspiration. Suddenly a ravishing beauty with luxuriant blonde hair and dark blue eyes appears. Jack falls hard, and wanders to a secluded spot with the latest beauty. The girl suddenly scalps herself, revealing the black hair and mischievous smile of Mary, who had disguised herself with a blonde wig.

Paramount

Her Final Reckoning—(Five Reels)—June 9—Featuring Pauline Frederick, supported by John Miltern, Bob Cain, Warren Cooke, Joseph Smiley, James Laffey, Karl Dane, Florence Beresford, Louis Reinhart and Edith Ellwood. Marsa, gypsy daughter of a Russian prince, is wronged at an early age by a count. When she meets and loves Prince Zilah in Paris at a later period, the count reappears. When he calls at the villa at midnight she sets her Russian wolfhounds upon him. He escapes with his life, and later forwards to Prince Zilah a packet of compromising letters written by her, and in despair she confesses all to her fiance. She becomes ill, the count is killed in a duel, and Prince Zilah takes Marsa to his heart despite her admissions of guilt.

The Bravest Way—(Five Reels)—June 16—Starring Sessue Hayakawa, supported by Florence Vidor, Tsuru Aoki, U. Aoyama, Jane Wolff, Tom Kurahara, Winter Hall, Josephine Crowell, Goro Kino, Clarence Geldart and Guy Oliver. Tamura, a young Japanese, marries the widow of his friend, who has been murdered, in order to provide for her, although he loves Nume, a Japanese-American girl. Nume becomes the protege of a wealthy man and is educated as a musician. Several years later the woman Tamura married dies and he seeks out Nume. He saves her from the unwelcome advances of the wealthy American, pays the man the money Nume owes him and marries the girl.

Fedora—(Five Reels)—June 16—Starring Pauline Frederick, supported by Alfred Hickman, Jere Austin, W. L. Abingdon and Wilmuth Merkyll. Fedora, a Russian princess, vows vengeance on the man who murdered her fiance. She suspects Ipanoff and follows him to Paris. She learns that her lover had not been true to her and she believes Ipanoff justified in killing him. She falls in love with Ipanoff and marries him. Later, his brother, who had been arrested in connection with the murder, dies in prison. When Ipanoff learns that Fedora had caused his brother's arrest he turns against her and refuses to forgive. She commits suicide.

Petrova Pictures

Tempered Steel—(Five Reels)—Starring Olga Petrova, supported by J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, William Carlton, Mrs. Walton, Edith Hinckle, E. J. Radcliffe and Matilda Brundage. Lucille Caruthers goes on the stage against the will of her father, a wealthy southerner. Radikin, famous actor, aids her and she gains success. She refuses to marry Radikin and falls in love with a young doctor, Sheldon. Edwin Archer, producer, becomes interested in her and stars her in his play. Radikin, jealous, comes to her apartment the night the play is to open and in a struggle she kills him. She goes on with the play and succeeds. Then she gives herself up to the police. It is proved, however, that Radikin died of heart failure and Lucille is freed. Later she marries the doctor.

Select

The Claw—(Five Reels)—June 10—Starring Clara Kimball Young. Supporting cast inciudes Milton Sills, Henry Woodward, Mary Metsch, Marcia Manon, Jack Holt and E. M. Kimball. Mary Saurin comes to South Africa to live with her brother's family. Anthony Kinsella and Maurice Stair fall in love with the girl. She loves Kinsella, but when she is led to believe he has been killed in a battle with the natives, she marries Stair. Later she learns that Kinsella is alive and a prisoner. She sends Stair to rescue him. He does so, at the cost of his life. Then she marries Kinsella.

Triangle

Madame Sphinx—(Five Reels)—June 9—Featuring Alma Rubens, supported by Wallace McDonald, Gene Burr, Frank McQuarrie, William Dyer, Dick Rosson, Betty Pearce, Wilbur Higbee, Arthur Millett and John Lince. When Henri DuBois, wealthy French banker, is found murdered, his ward, Celeste, sets out to solve the mystery. Her only clue is a cuff-button, on which a sphinx head is carved. When she finds the man who possesses its mate she learns that he is the disinherited son of DuBois. Later she proves the innocence of the young man and finds the real criminal. She marries young DuBois and shares the fortune with him.

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

New York

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, told a story the other day which justifies the belief that German submarines have been lurking off the Atlantic coast for more than a month.

"On May 3," said Mr. Rothapfel, "while en route to Key West on a coastwise steamer with two camera men to get motion pictures of various United States Marine Corps encampments, we sighted a German submarine off Jupiter Light. The submarine was being towed by a Norwegian tramp steamer and appeared to be between 200 and 300 feet long. It seemed to be only about four miles away from us, and with the glasses we could easily discern the conning tower, periscope and one gun mounted forward. One of the steamer's officers declared that he could see the towing rope with the naked eye. We immediately made an official report of the discovery to naval authorities at Key West, and understand that hydroplanes and chasers were dispatched to search for the craft."

On Mr. Rothapfel's return to New York the marine publicity bureau suggested that he refrain from discussing or publishing the discovery at that time. A peculiar coincidence enabled him to relate the incident. Just before the dispatches telling of a German submarine's work off the Jersey coast were received, Mr. Rothapfel was giving a private screening of the Marine Camp pictures. Among those invited to see the films was Colonel A. S. McLemore of the Marine Corps Headquarters at Washington, and when the extras cried the news of the sinkings Colonel McLemore permitted Mr. Rothapfel to make public the discovery he made a month ago.

Metro stars and employes have responded nobly to the call of the government to boost War Savings Stamps and raise funds for the Red Cross. Rita Jolivet has gone to Cleveland to talk to the audiences at the Stillman Theatre on the value of War Savings Stamps, in connection with the appearance of the Screen Classics production, "Lest We Forget." Viola Dana has been one of the most indefatigable of all Metro's stars in the interests of the recent Red Cross drive. Miss Dana appeared every day of the week at the Loew circuit of theatres, obtaining many thousands of dollars. Baby Ivy Ward is another Metro player who worked hard in the interests of the Red Cross and succeeded in adding materially to its funds. Richard Barthelmess, who will play the leading juvenile part with Nazimova in her next Screen Classics feature, addressed audiences in leading theatres.

Due to the patriotic interest displayed by D. J. Sullivan, assistant general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" will receive a real impetus in connection with "My Lady Nicotine," a one reel Mutual-Strand comedy. Arrangements have just been made between Mr. Sullivan and Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the fund, whereby the comedy will be shown in conjunction with the work of supplying the soldiers with the much-needed "smokes." The thirty-two branch exchanges of Mutual have been supplied with subscription blanks and a series of patriotic posters advertising "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" with which to supply the various exhibitors who run "My Lady Nicotine." The money contributed by the fans will then be turned over to the fund.

Announcement is made by General Film that it has taken over the distribution of "The Ne'er Do Well," the Selig ten-reel production of the famous Rex Beach story. "The Ne'er Do Well" is a red-blooded story, staged amid rich scenes of tropical splendor, and provides an almost endless series of thrills and suspense. It was filmed for the most part in Panama with the canal as the location for many of the scenes. Wheeler Oakman and Kathlyn Williams appear in the leading roles, supported by a capable cast of players. The story recounts the efforts of the scapegoat son of a New York millionaire to make good in new surroundings and has a strong element of romance.

L. D. Wolfe, recently connected with the V. L. S. E. exchange at Syracuse, New York, has been appointed manager of the General Film exchange at Buffalo, succeeding F. Flarity, who resigned last week to enter the national army. C. D. Hill, acting manager of the Indianapolis exchange, also drafted, has been succeeded as acting manager by C. W. McDaniel, who has been transferred to that post from the Chicago exchange, where he has been acting as a traveling representative.

The Famous Players-Lasky district managers adjourned their New York meeting last week, after six days of discussion at which the plans for the season of 1918-19 were thoroughly discussed and decided upon. Details of the new year's releases will be announced shortly. The managers at the meeting were: Harry Asher, Boston; William E. Smith, Philadelphia; James Steele, Pittsburgh; Max Goldstine, Chicago; A. D. Flintom, Kansas City; C. E. Tandy, Atlanta; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City, and Herman Wobber, San Francisco. Territorial meetings are next.

Called to the colors under the draft, Gerald B. Speiro, who has been in the publicity department of the Fox Film Corporation for the last two years, has been sent to Camp Wadsworth at Spartanburg, S. C. Early in the war Mr. Speiro, who is a graduate of Columbia, volunteered for the aviation section of the Signal Corps, but was rejected because of defective eyesight. Before his departure, Mr. Speiro was presented with a wrist watch by his friends.

The appointment of A. J. Nelson, formerly manager of the Washington (D. C.) exchange, as special representative, with headquarters at the home office in New York, is announced this week by General Film. Among the other duties Mr. Nelson will superintend the work of the traveling auditors. He is well-known in film circles, having been employed in the auditing department of the General Film home office prior to his entry into the sales department.

Los Angeles

REGULATION of the motion picture plants within the city limits, rather than the removal of any of them, is the prophesied policy of the Council. The Public Welfare Committee heard both sides of the question and finally decided to take it under advisement, and request the city attorney for advice as to the legal features involved.

Little or no objection was raised to the location of the studios, but some of the persons living near them complained about unusual noises. The city attorney said that most of these objections are of no consequence, because they can be remedied by merely applying the present laws.

Thomas B. Ince conferring over script with Sid Grauman, managing director of Grauman's new million dollar theatre, Los Angeles.

William Mead, representing the Chamber of Commerce, urged the council to take no drastic action, pointing out that the motion picture industry is one of the biggest in Southern California, and should be encouraged.

Mr. Mead said, however, no one would object to an ordinance which will permit the enlargement of the studios upon a small scale.

It is believed more than probable that the zones will be left almost as they now are, and the producers will be compelled to go into the one big zone south of the Hollywood cemetery, if they want larger quarters.

S. C. Burr, assistant to Production Manager O. L. Sellers during the H. O. Davis regime at the Triangle Culver City studios, has been promoted. With the advancement of Mr. Sellers to assistant to President H. E. Aitken, Burr is now production manager. Other promotions have made M. D. Gardner assistant production manager and J. William Russell is confined to his home with a severely injured knee. The accident which resulted in Mr. Russell's injury occurred at the end of a big day's work near Summerland, at the conclusion of which Mr. Russell and his company were to have left for Los Angeles, there to finish the third of the William Russell productions, "Hobbs in a Hurry." A double-action gun has been forgotten and the property boy started back over a half mile of hill-top for it. "Never mind, sonny, I'll get it for you," volunteered Mr. Russell, and he and his horse disappeared. Turning a sharp curve of mountain ledge, the horse slipped and crushed Mr. Russell up against the side of the mountain.

Ashton Dearholt, up to the present time, has enjoyed the reputation of being a man of his word. But he has brought upon himself a task which anyone will admit is a difficult one. It happened the other day out at Universal City, where Ashton in the makeup of Victor King, which role he essays in the serial, "The Brass Bullet," was waiting to rush into a set and King things about a little. Near were several other members of the company. They were talking of scripts and each one confessed to being the author of one or more "corking ones." "Why don't you sell them, then?" asked Ashton. "Why, anyone can sell scripts. There is no trick about that. I could go right tomorrow and—" But that was as far as he got, for at once several manuscripts were thrust upon him and now, as a matter of principle, if nothing else, he has to find buyers for them.

William S. Hart is about to reduce himself to the position of bartender for the benefit of the Red Cross. This drop from his social elevation will take place at the Lasky studio in Hollywood Saturday, when thousands are expected to attend a big Red Cross fair. Mr. Hart is having erected in a conspicuous corner, a typical barroom of the early western days and of sufficient dimensions to accommodate many man-sized thirsts in the course of the evening. The tables will be attended by dance-hall girls, the waiters will be the choice of the studio's cowpunchers, while the bar will be tended by Mr. Hart himself. But remember, Los Angeles is dry, so the beverages will all be soft.

Edward Earle is easy to please when it comes to "the ideal girl." As far as he is concerned, it is only necessary— That her eyes misbehave only in the direction of her escort; that her hair be her own; that she adjust her complexion so that it does not come off on a fellow's coat; that she be neither overdone nor underdone mentally, and that her only decoration be that of the Red Cross. Calling to mind Mr. Earle's leading women in recent Vitagraph pictures, one cannot help but realize that Mr. Earle's taste is beyond reproach.

Here and There

HAL HODES, assistant sales manager of Jawel Productions, has written a letter of congratulations to Erwin J. W. Huber, editor of the Picture Plays News of Rochester, New York, on the recent publication of "The Liberty Blast," a remarkable paper which described, in its one and only edition, the "capture" by the Germans of New York, Boston and other vital sea ports. It was published by Mr. Huber and Rochester newspapermen as an impetus to the last Liberty loan drive and created much talk.

Flaming headlines across the front page announced that the Huns had captured New York and were on their way inland, with details of the atrocities committed by the invaders. How the inadequate defenses of the American cities speedily fell before the attack and how everything of value was captured, was described with vivid terms. At the bottom of the page was a box that announced that "all this has not happened yet, but it will happen if the Liberty loan is not subscribed."

The papers were distributed free to patrons of moving picture theaters, although many other persons obtained copies. Some enterprising newsboys reaped a harvest by selling copies on the street to eager and excited purchasers.

Ready to turn his talents in the photographic line to good account for Uncle Sam, Sergeant Philip J. Armand of New York, a former Metro cameraman, is a student at the United States Army School of Aerial Photography at Kodak Park in Rochester, New York. Armand, who enlisted as a private four months ago, recently won the rank of sergeant, first class, which is considerable jump in so short a time.

Sergeant Armand has been in the picture game for nine years. He was born in Lyons, France, 26 years ago, which has much to do with his eagerness to go back there and help rid the country of the Huns. For the last three years he has been chief cameraman for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Twice since the war broke out Sergeant Armand has been over to France to take pictures, so he is more or less familiar with conditions there. He hopes soon to be sent to Columbia University in New York to complete his course in military work. His wife is Maud Rabel, toe dancer of the New York Hippodrome, which is one reason why he is anxious to be transferred to the big city.

Fred Kimpton Abbott, former director in the studio of David Davidson, Providence, Rhode Island, who is in the photographic division of the aviation corps, was seriously wounded last January and has been in a hospital in Paris since that time, according to a cablegram received by Mr. Davidson. Corporal Abbott enlisted in the French ambulance service a year ago and later obtained his discharge when the branch he was in was taken over by the United States. He then enlisted in the army and was transferred to the aviation corps and assigned to the photographic division. He was later made a corporal. The message does not indicate the nature of Corporal Abbott's wounds, but the fact he has been in the hospital four months indicates they were of a serious nature. Corporal Abbott is well known to the trade in New York, where for several years he was engaged in the Edison studios as assistant director and camera man.

Visualizing the history of the war from the standpoint of the state and government is work in which the David Davidson studios of Providence, Rhode Island, are engaged in. Since the break with Germany Mr. Davidson and his co-workers have been busily engaged in filming war preparations and activities in Rhode Island and vicinity. Camera men have visited many places where soldiers and sailors are on duty. Two former camera men of the studios who are serving in France are filming scenes there which will be sent to this country after the war. In this manner Mr. Davidson hopes at the end of the war to be able to present a complete history of Rhode Island's part in the war at least.

Mr. Greiner expects to spend $2,000 on newspaper advertising alone, besides which he will distribute hand bills and paste billboards all over the city. A miniature barracks will be built in the front of the theatre to attract the attention of the passersby.

Phil Kauffman, the new Canadian general manager of the Select Pictures Corporation, has opened a branch office in Montreal. The manager is Ben Kauffman, brother of the general manager. The head office of the Canadian company is in the Hermant Building, Toronto.

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

AARON JONES, chief executive of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who has a directing finger in a score of Chicago's amusement enterprises, predicts that motion pictures will score as often as Ty Cobb this summer. He thinks it will be one of the best seasons on record, both for the downtown and outlying houses.

"I saw a line extending two hundred feet out into Randolph street at the Colonial Theatre during a heavy downpour of rain last week," said Mr. Jones, "and if people can stand a drenching to see a picture I do not think a little torrid weather will bother them. Of course, Cleopatra, the picture at the Colonial, is an unusual picture, and I think I'd take a little ducking myself if I couldn't see this Fox masterpiece otherwise, but the report from motion picture houses generally is most encouraging. 'Tarzan of the Apes,' which also enjoyed a record run at the Colonial, will have one of the largest bookings locally of any picture in which I have been concerned.

"The war films have done a lot to boost the picture business, too. Some people may say that the public gets enough of the war from the press and from personal relations and prefers light comedy for its amusement, but box office figures do not uphold this argument. The war films are educational and inspiring. Truthful delineation of the European horrors on the screen and stage awakens the public to the real situation and the desperateness of it. It inspires them to 'get into the game,' or, if they cannot actually get into it, to give for the support of those who do.

"Much credit is to be given to men who produce such masterpieces as 'My Four Years in Germany,' 'The Unbeliever,' 'Hearts of the World,' and 'Over the Top.'

"There is no doubt, too, that the popular price of the motion picture is very appealing to the masses these days. We should be glad that we can get such entertainment at from 15 cents to a dollar, and I am quite sure that the public is going to take that view of it throughout the coming warm months."

Dorothy Dalton stopped over for a day in Chicago on her way from the West Coast to New York. Miss Dalton claims Chicago as her home town. On the afternoon of her visit, she greeted her friends at Orchestra Hall. Miss Dalton is enthusiastic over her next picture, written for her by H. H. Van Loan and in which she has the role of a French motion picture actress. The picture will show to the public many incidents in the life at a picture studio. The star's trip to New York is a combined vacation and business trip, since she expects to complete her wardrobe there for this role.

C. W. Bunn, manager of the central division of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., reports a keen interest on the part of exhibitors in the new United plan of distribution.

"Under our system, not only will the exhibitors get better pictures at lower prices," he says, "but the producers will get a quicker and more sure profit, and will therefore have a greater incentive to make fine pictures. The future of the industry depends on good pictures. Anything that brings producer and exhibitor closer together helps both. This is the aim of the United Picture Theatres. We are signing up theatres rapidly, and expect very soon to begin negotiations for features."

An especially charming presentation was given the beautiful Paramount feature, "Prunella," starring Marguerite Clark, at Orchestra Hall last week. A dainty prologue introduced the play, an interpretive dancing act by Helen Dean and Allen York. The dancers wore Pierrot and Pierrette costumes fashioned after those in the play. The musical setting for "Prunella," arranged by Arthur Dunham, the conductor of the orchestra, was unusually fitting. So out of the ordinary was the presentation that it was the subject of a special story in one of the musical magazines.

Sergeant C. J. Daleiden, recruiting officer of the Marine Corps, who has been working with the Kleine-Edison feature, "The Unbeliever," at its presentations in the Chicago territory, has a brother in the theatre business, F. S. Daleiden, who is assistant manager of the California Theatre, Twenty-sixth and Trumbull streets, Chicago. Sergeant Daleiden and other local marines report many recruits through the influence of the picture. The great work of the marines, recorded in last week's war news, also increased enthusiasm. The boys are extremely proud of their brothers overseas.

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, is now releasing several of his novelty feature films, the Spanuth Vod-A-Vil movies. These pictures are one reel in length and are of popular vaudeville acts, directed and produced with exceptionally good photographic effects. W. J. Keane, manager and owner of the Star Theatre on Madison street, is vice-president of the Commonwealth company. The Ziegfeld Theatre, South Michigan avenue, is showing these features each week.

The Ford cars supplied to the salesmen of the Chicago Universal offices may add to the efficiency of the staff, and again they may not. It depends upon how well the salesman can run the car. This is the opinion held by George Le Vine and Morris Hellman, who suddenly discovered there were many things they did not know about a Ford when they got stalled in the country last week, far from help.

Universal Pictures were prominent in the Loop last week. "The Model's Confession," starring Mary MacLaren, was shown for four days at the Orpheum and four days at the Casino, and won favorable reviews in the newspapers. "A Soul for Sale," the newest Jewel, starring Dorothy Phillips, played for three days at the Rose. "Five Thousand Dollars Reward," with Franklyn Farnum, played for three days at the Casino.

Arthur Bates, for years one of Essanay's leading character players, was called last week to join the colors. He left for Camp Wheeler at Macon, Georgia. His best characterizations were as old man parts in "The Man Trail" and "The Kill-Joy." He played comedy parts with Chaplin in his early Essanay comedies and later played leads in the Essanay comedies directed by Arthur Hotaling.

L. C. Wheeler, acting superintendent of the federal bureau of investigation in Chicago, is going to Europe within a few days to direct distribution of United States government war films in the neutral and allied countries. The films show shipbuilding, manufacture of big guns, shipping of munitions, training of soldiers, and Americans in the battle lines of France.

Army officers were plentiful in the audiences at the Auditorium Theatre during the showing of the Vitagraph feature, "Over the Top," featuring Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey. They flocked to each performance for tips on the peculiarities of trench life and stated that they got a better idea of conditions from watching this play than from any other war picture.

D. C. Miller, brother of Harry Miller and his associate in managing the Rose, Boston and Alcazar theatres, has enlisted in the Canadian army. Mr. Miller was twice rejected for physical disability by the United States authorities, but determined to do his utmost for his country he found a way to serve any way.

"Missing," the J. Stuart Blackton production of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's war novel, is the feature at Orchestra Hall this week. The song, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," which plays an important part in the story, is sung at each showing by Permelia Newby Gale, contralto. "The Firefly of France," with Wallace Reid, will follow "Missing."

Prints of the newest Lois Weber Universal feature, "For Husbands Only," starring Mildred Harris, have arrived at the Universal offices. Irving Mack states that the picture is more of a comedy-drama than anything Lois Weber has done before and is a very entertaining play.

The first Paramount-Artcraft trade showing at Orchestra Hall was held Thursday morning. "Viviette," starring Vivian Martin, and "Love's Conquest," starring Lina Cavalieri, were screened. The Cavalieri picture is the week's bill at the Ziegfeld Theatre.

The Harvard Theatre gave a special performance last week for the benefit of the Englewood groups of the Campfire Girls of America. The Taylor Holmes-Essanay comedy, "A Pair of Sixes," was the feature used.

Dorothy Gish, Griffith star, was in Chicago last week and appeared at the Olympia Theatre in connection with "Hearts of the World," in which the played "The Little Disturber." Miss Gish told the audiences something of her experiences in the trenches during the taking of the picture.

A motion picture show for children was given recently for the Food for France fund at the home of Mrs. Harrison Parker, chairman of the children's auxiliary. Specially selected comedy reels were used.

M. J. Weil, manager of the Castle Theatre, left June 7 for a two weeks' vacation trip through the East. He will visit Buffalo, Niagara Falls and New York City.

How "Cleopatra" is going over in Chicago at the Colonial Theatre. This is a typical evening line-up.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

Speed!

This is the keynote of modern, ambitious, hustling America. Fast trains; wireless telegraphy, five-day boats to Europe. Americans employ them all because of their speed. In theatricals the fast, snappy shows succeed. On the screen the snappy, happy, joyous personalities more quickly win popularity. In screen comedy the cleanest, fastest, freshest and most popular of all new personalities is

A laugh in "A Nine O'Clock Town," a Thomas H. Ince production starring Charles Ray, soon to be released. The actress in lingerie is Dorcas Matthews, who plays the role of a New York model whom Charles Ray brings into his father's store to build up a business. Apparently Mr. Ray, as a merchant, is a howling success.

Out with the Vermin!

OUT with the vermin that infest this industry.

This is no time for mincing words.

Bad enough in times of peace, these squirming creatures are insufferable now. Their unclean words and disloyal motives are fast bringing the whole industry into disrepute.

The very great and very important services which the motion picture has rendered the nation thus far in the war are minimized and to an extent nullified as far as proper credit is concerned, by the attention which this scum attracts. To the man outside the motion picture field they are representative of the industry and the industry suffers accordingly.

It is these parasites, who feed upon our good name, that keep the motion picture eternally on the defensive. It is largely because of them that the film business has come to be regarded by the lawmakers and the public as an industry requiring punitory regulation.

And whose fault is it?

It is yours, Mr. Decent Manufacturer.

It is yours, Mr. Decent Distributor.

It is yours, Mr. Decent Exhibitor.

You are indignant at the idea? Stop a moment and think! Have you not until now cultivated these undesirables, instead of driving them out of the field?

You employ them. You buy from them and sell to them. You lower your own standards in order to do business with or compete with them. You make it easy for them to flourish and grow fat.

Is it any wonder that you and the other decent men in the industry get slimed with the filth, the greed, the disloyalty, which form the guiding principles of these scavengers?

Is it any wonder that the industry bears the burden of the stigma which attaches to those who in the past were permitted to prostitute it for the benefit of their pockets and now—even worse—to do so often for the aid and comfort of our enemies?

Before this time—before the nation was at war—perhaps it was not possible to find a sufficiently compelling unity of interest among the decent elements in motion pictures to drive out this filthy crew.

That is not so now.

Today, the man who is not one hundred per cent American is a menace or a disgrace.

For the slacker, the poltroon, whose patriotism is measured from his lips to the outside of his pocket, the American-born traitor and secret Hun, there should be no place in this industry.

They must be dealt with in a fashion which will leave possible no misunderstanding as to where the rest of the industry stands.

To this assertion no one will attempt to maintain the contrary. Yet practically every reader of this editorial knows some, to whom the foregoing description applies, but has taken no action about them, either in one way or another.

The slacking director, the pro-German actor or star, the adroit propagandist, the firm or corporation secretly conniving in a hundred ways to further the cause of our enemies, the exhibitor who avoids booking certain patriotic pictures for fear they will offend his Teutonic patrons and incidentally hurt his own pocket, all these are simply traitors, neither more nor less.

To employ them or to do business with them should not be profitable.

And in a little time it will not be.

The time draws near and nearer when every man must stand up and be counted.

It is well then for each to see to it that his own house is clean. If he does not do so, it is probable that Uncle Sam will one day clean it for him and in a manner not at all to his liking.

The motion picture field must be rid of these vermin. They are dangerous to the nation and to the organization with which they are identified or with which they transact business.

It is said, that some are in high places. So much more imperative is it that the house-cleaning be done the more quickly and effectively.

In order to facilitate this very necessary work, Motography will undertake to investigate thoroughly any reports it receives about any activities of these creatures and will see to it that they receive due and proper attention. All communications will, of course, be treated in strictest confidence.

We believe, however, that the purposes of this editorial will have been fulfilled if the decent, one hundred per cent Americans, who constitute the great bulk of this industry, awaken to the menace which this small minority presents. Once this realization comes to them, they will put aside their personal differences and individual rivalries and get together.

Motography is prepared to furnish the nucleus of the needed black list which this time comes.

Out with the vermin!

Executive Changes in Triangle

THE appointment by Triangle of a new general manager is particularly interesting to the trade because of the long and successful record of the incumbent. The name of Percy Waters is favorably known to the "oldest inhabitant" of the industry, and stands out prominently among the comparatively few whom we may call the founders.

The retiring manager, H. O. Davis, whose successful conduct of Triangle affairs has solidified for him many business friendships, is starting on a needed vacation preliminary to working out some plans which, doubtless, will be the subject of another interesting announcement before long.

The record of Triangle itself has been remarkable in some ways. More closely than is usual in this industry its organization has followed the principles found most efficient in old line business. It early acquired the knack of maintaining its course uninfluenced by executive change, and the simple but oft neglected art of protecting its business reputation.

With Mr. Waters in charge of distribution and Harry Aitkin handling production at the coast, the indications are that Triangle is going in for high class pictures exclusively. The company's conservative habit is an assurance that any new undertakings it may announce later must already have demonstrated their merit.

More Safety in Numbers

THE new Chicago censorship plan—it should be made clear that it is only a plan as yet, and not in effect by any means—has several advantages over the old system. These advantages, let us say at the outset, are dependent upon the fact that there are degrees of evil. A population of two and a half million (to say nothing of suburban populations dependent upon Chicago for their moral code) which has had imposed upon it a one-man dictatorship of what it shall and shall not see, will welcome almost any relief.

A board of three executive censors and nine subordinate censors throws at least a faint glimmer of illumination athwart the dark shadow of medieval and inquisitorial practice. Though we abate not one jot our opposition to all picture censorship, we are willing to concede that, without reaching the top, there is still advantage in a step upward.

If not real safety, there is certainly less danger in numbers. A single, individual censor, endowed with authority without responsibility, given power without accountability, may become as arbitrary as he pleases; as dictatorial as he pleases; as insufferably foolish as he is encouraged to become by the adulation of logicless women with an itch for sociological action and nothing else to do.

A multiplicity of censors has at least the sane control of difference of opinion. With a jury on the job it is hardly probable that utter condemnation will be visited upon a wholly pure and innocent film. If they are human surely some of them will stick for fair play.

Technically the new ordinance reduces to nine members the present Chicago censor board of twelve. Our readers have probably forgotten that Chicago had twelve censors, because their practice has been to pass the buck to Major Funkhouser; and the records show what he did with it. The advantage of the new plan, from our standpoint, is that instead of making one responsible for the verdict of twelve, it makes three responsible for the verdict of nine. It is still bad enough; but we must say it is a little better.

Under the proposed arrangement, the three major censors (no pun intended) will be appointed by the mayor and will draw four thousand dollar salaries. The figure is interesting because it is just about enough to attract men who know something about pictures—if the mayor considers that qualification in his appointments.

Discussing censorship, Acting Chief Alcock of Chicago remarked "We will also ask for revocations where we find false posters advertising photoplays." This phase of the business, strictly speaking, has nothing to do with censorship, and we cannot find it in our heart to criticize the chief's stand. The use of false posters deserves condemnation, and has no support among the better elements of the industry.

The new censorship ordinance is, as we have said, a step forward. Perhaps it is the best immediate relief we can expect; for it is hardly reasonable to look for utter elimination of censorship in a city so censor-bound as Chicago. Therefore we hope the Coughlin bill will pass, as a step toward something still better in another year.

Huge Merger Accomplished, Report

FILM MAGNATES MEET IN SECRET AT NEW YORK

A SECRET meeting at the Hotel Ansonia of some of the big men in the industry and the report in the daily papers that the Government purposes to force the motion picture makers into curtailing a large number of their distributing agencies by combining them into a single office, have given renewed impetus to the report that the $100,000,000 merger of the distributing interests of some of the biggest concerns in the industry as announced exclusively in MOTOGRAPHY some weeks ago, is at last an accomplished fact.

According to a source usually well informed, formal announcement of the plans and details of this new mammoth organization may now be expected at any time. Any specific information as to the reported merger, however, could not be obtained at any of the offices of the companies reported to be interested.

Try to Keep It Secret

The film magnates, who are said to have participated in the conference at the Ansonia, either were too busy to see MOTOGRAPHY's representative or denied categorically that they had been present at the meeting. Some of them seemed surprised, however, to know that MOTOGRAPHY had heard of such a meeting and expressed curiosity as to how the knowledge had been obtained. As the Ansonia is many blocks out of the film zone and not one of the hotels where motion picture men usually congregate, the reason for its selection was in itself sufficient to arouse the suspicion that something out of the ordinary was in the wind.

U. S. Spurs Action

What gives added color to the report is the announcement, already mentioned, in the New York dailies, that the government intends to step in unless the film companies themselves combine to centralize distribution. As far as the economical advantages of the plan are concerned, the government is not interested, but it is pointed out that in every state there are many distributing points, each controlled by individual interests, and by concentrating them there would be released for Government work thousands of men throughout the country.

Whether the possibility of the federal authorities taking action along this line has precipitated the reported announcement of the formation of the new corporation, or whether the details were already perfected, and the meeting at the Ansonia was held merely to decide on a definite course of action, could not be learned.

Other news happenings of the week, however, formed the basis for the belief that the latter is really the case. In fact, it is freely hinted that the premature announcement by MOTOGRAPHY of the plans of the merger prevented definite action at that time.

One of the problems which it was then pointed out the reported $100,000,000 corporation would have to solve was the selection of the right man, the big personality, who would be capable of wisely directing the activities of so complex and widespread an organization. The difficulty of finding a man who would be persona grata to all the interests involved seemed then to be too great an obstacle to be overcome.

The names of several prominent film men were mentioned, but with two exceptions all were found on investigation to be lacking in some essential to measure up to the exacting requirements of the position.

These two, it was reported, were being taken under consideration. It was said that both held important executive positions in their respective companies but that both were in some respects "dark horses" and not actually in the film magnate class.

Another possibility for the place was

Artcraft

Blue Blazes Rawden, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—An excellent picture. Big business. Book it.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Blue Blazes Rawden, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—A very good Hart production, the north woods location being a relief from the western cow-puncher surroundings.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

Amarilly of Clothesline Alley, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—Very fine. One of the best. Business good. Book it and your people will go away satisfied.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Mr. Fix-It, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—Very good. One of the best. Business excellent.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Headin' South, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—Doug. always pleases. Picture good, with plenty of action.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

Selfish Yates, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—A typical Hart picture.—H. C. Miller, Alcazar Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Barbary Sheep, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—A very good picture. Photography superb. Business only fair as the title did not attract.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—This can't compare with Joan the Woman. It is very spectacular and magnificent and that is all. However, it pulled a big house and most people were satisfied.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—Splendid. Drew a good house. It is worth the money, something I can't say for all the Artcraft-Paramount pictures.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Bluebird

The Red, Red Heart, with Monroe Salisbury (Bluebird)—Not up to the standard of Salisbury pictures, but it's very good.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

The Wine Girl, with Carmel Myers (Bluebird)—Just fair. Not up to standard.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

The Wine Girl, with Carmel Meyers (Bluebird)—An average Bluebird.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

The Raggedy Queen, with Violet Mersereau (Bluebird)—A very good picture which pleased. Well acted. Business average.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Fox

Cleopatra, with Theda Bara (Fox)—Second run. Big business all week.—John Hamrick, Rex Theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Mixed class of patronage.

Durand of the Badlands, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—Just an average picture, not up to standard.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

The Rose of Blood, with Theda Bara (Fox)—As good as any, none better. Plenty of thrills. Good business.—W. P. Morehead, Princess Theatre, Winsboro, La.

The Devil's Wheel, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—The best picture this star has played in for some time.—Harold Daigler, Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Ace High, with Tom Mix (Fox)—One of the best pictures turned out on any program in the last six months.—H. C. Miller, Boston Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Goldwyn

Joan of Plattsburg, with Mabel Normand (Goldwyn)—An excellent attraction. Mabel Normand was never better. Capacity business for three days.—New Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

Joan of Plattsburg, with Mabel Normand (Goldwyn)—Big houses well pleased. My patrons cheered the patriotic scenes.—Family Theatre, Le Roy, N. Y.

The Face in the Dark, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—A good box-office attrac ion. Seemed to please all.—Strand Theatre, Allentown, Pa.

The Face in the Dark, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Business very good for two days. Mae Marsh goes well here.—Lincoln Theatre, Neward, N. J.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A good picture, well staged. Business good on a two-day run.—Iris Theatre, Pacific Grove, Cal.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—Business excellent. If other Goldwyns are half as good they will satisfy me.—Empress Theatre, Canton, S. D.

Our Little Wife, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A profitable attraction. Madge Kennedy has a big following here.—Orpheum Theatre, Marshfield, Ore.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—A real farce comedy. Pleased a critical crowd and kept them laughing continually. If Madge Kennedy can repeat, it will be a knockout.—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

The Auction Block, with Ruby de Remere (Goldwyn)—Very good. A super-feature at program feature rental. A big winner if you get behind it.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

The Beloved Traitor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Very well liked. Pleased big crowds on a two-day run.—Community Theatre, Sherrill, N. Y.

The Beloved Traitor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—Brought the crowds. Much favorable comment on Miss Marsh's acting.—Princess Theatre, Deming, N. M.

The Splendid Sinner, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—Pleased our audiences and did good business. As good as Thais.—Gem Theatre, Cairo, Ill.

The Splendid Sinner, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—Attracted bigger crowds than I've had in my house in months.—Majestic Theatre, Fruita, Cal.

The Splendid Sinner, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—All my patrons spoke highly of Mary Garden and this picture. Business fine on a two-day run.—Crescent Theatre, Adrian, Mich.

Jewel

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—A 100 percent picture. Turned them away. A wonderful production.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, with Rupert Julian (Jewel)—An extra fine picture, hurt by rough advertising. My patrons expected to see some rough stuff judging from the advertising. Business very good but far from expectations.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Kleine

The Unbeliever, with Raymond McKee (Edison-Kleine)—A great play. Capacity business for five days.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

The Man Who Was Afraid, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—Good. Well liked. Fair business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Pants, with Mary McAlister (Essanay)—This is great. Grown-ups as well as the kiddies like it. Good business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Metro

The Adopted Son, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—Very fine. One of the best Lockwood pictures.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Breakers Ahead, with Viola Dana (Metro)—An average Metro.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class or patronage.

The Claim, with Edith Storey (Metro)—Not a pleasing picture, but it will get by.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Toys of Fate, with Alla Nazimova (Metro)—This picture is well acted. The star is fast gaining popular favor.—H. C. Miller, Rose Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Mutual

Southern Pride, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—Picture, average. Star doesn't draw. Business poor in rainy weather.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Calendar Girl, with Juliette Day—(American-Mutual)—A very good picture. Star unknown here but pleased our patrons.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Paralta

An Alien Enemy, with Louise Glaum (Paralta)—Not a vampire play. Straight drama. Star fine. Great picture.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

Blindfolded, with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—A good crook picture but the star is better in a different kind of a play.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

Humdrum Brown, with Henry B. Walthall (Paralta)—A fair picture, not heavy enough for Walthall.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

Paramount

Jules of the Strong Heart, with George Beban (Paramount)—Excellent picture, business good. Book it. This star is sure a wonder.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Keys of the Righteous, with Enid Bennett (Paramount)—An average picture but some parts were inconsistent and puzzling.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

A Country Hero, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—Not his best, but plenty good enough to drive away the glooms and send the patrons home with a happy, satisfied frame of mind.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Secret Game, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—A good picture with an interesting spy plot, but the director had clues and evidence fall into the hero's hands too easily.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Jack and Jill, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—A pleasing comedy drama, which should please anyone.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Eve's Daughter, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—Another bloomer. Nothing much to this picture and Billie has completely lost out here.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

A new picture of June Caprice, Fox star.

Watch Your Neighbor, with Charles Murray (Sennett-Paramount)—Our patrons say these Sennetts cannot be beaten. We think the same. This is a little reminiscent of a comedy produced some time ago but it had the punch nevertheless.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—Great. Capacity business on a very warm night. Print in poor condition—R. L. Hensler, Bijou Theatre, Carrollton, Ill.

The Ghost House, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—A good picture but very poor business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Cook of Canyon Camp, with George Beban (Paramount)—Rather a thin story but Beban is great. Average business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Pathe

The Other Woman, with Peggy Hyland (Pathe)—A fine picture, star and subject fine. Plenty of comedy and good laughs.—W. P. Morehead, Princess Theatre, Winnsboro, La.

Sylvia of the Secret Service, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—Excellent. Everyone spoke highly of it. Large crowd.—W. P. Morehead, Princess Theatre, Winnsboro, La.

Pendleton Round-up (Pathe)—A poor print, too dark.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Luke's Lively Life, with Lonesome Luke (Pathe)—The best comedy we have received for a long time.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Twenty-one, with Bryant Washburn (Pathe)—A fine comedy. Washburn is fine. This will go big where patrons like comedy.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

The Great Adventure, with Bessie Love (Pathe)—Star good. Story poor. Miss Love is capable of something better.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

Select

The Lone Wolf, with Bert Lytell (Select)—A very good picture with story, settings, and photography that go to make a picture worth while.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

Her Silent Sacrifice, with Alice Brady (Select)—Very poor. Old stuff that might have gone over years ago but is out of season at this period of production.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Triangle

The Law of the Great Northwest, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—Average good picture of its type.—Harold Daigler, Mission Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

The Matrimanac, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—Big business all week.—John Hamrick, Rex Theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Mixed class of patronage.

Captain of His Soul, with William Desmond (Triangle)—Picture, subject and title poor. A William Desmond picture without a Desmond smile has about as much punch as a gin fizz in a state as dry as Michigan.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—None better than this picture, story and actors. Has Hart skinned a mile. Book it as a special and advertise it strong. Raise your prices and make a killing. Business capacity and then some.—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theatre, Alpena, Mich.

Keith of the Border, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—A good western picture to good business. Stewart is coming on well.—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Flames of Chance, with Marjorie Wilson (Triangle)—We got this in place of a Desmond film. It is just fair.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Man Hater, with Winifred Allen (Triangle)—Slow moving but it gets over fairly well. Not a good drawing card.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

holz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

Grafters, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—Excellent.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Answer, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—A long drawn out subject, better suited for a three reel subject. Beautiful settings.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

The Hard Rock Breed, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—A very good picture of its type.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

The Sea Panther, with William Desmond (Triangle)—Another case of a costume picture not getting over. The story and action however will entertain some.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Mixed class of patronage.

The Shoes That Danced, with Pauline Starke (Triangle)—An average picture but our people do not care for this type of rough stuff.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Vitagraph

Over the Top, with Arthur Guy Empey (Vitagraph)—A real war play. Big business for seven days. A money maker for anyone.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class of patronage.

Over the Top, with Arthur Guy Empey (Vitagraph)—A good picture and very timely. Star well known.—H. C. Miller, Boston Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Soul Master, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—Star well liked. Picture average. Film rather poor. Business average.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Magnificent Meddler, with Antonio Moreno and Mary Anderson (Vitagraph)—Picture excellent. Full of action. Stars are both popular.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

World

Man's Woman, with Ethel Clayton (World)—A dandy, good picture. Drew a large crowd and pleased well.—W. P. Morehead, Princess Theatre, Winnsboro, La.

Masks and Faces, with English stars (World)—A fine costume play with old English settings. Good for high class audiences only.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.—High class patronage.

Journey's End, with Ethel Clayton (World)—An entertaining production. Star very pretty. Good acting. A worth-while production.—E. King, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

Serials and Series

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—The best serial we ever ran. We have run episodes one, two and three, but we can judge from this what kind of a picture it is.—Loeffelholz Brothers, Auditorium Theatre, Cuba City, Wis.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—Chapter 9. We had a slump in business during the last three chapters but on this we were surprised to see an increase, in spite of rain.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—Chapter 10. Business holding about even.—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theatre, Platte Center, Nebr.

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—Chapter 14 still holds about even although the story is somewhat improbable. Excellent drawing card for children.—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

The Son of Democracy, with Benjamin Chapin (Paramount)—This has been consistently good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

State Rights and Specials

Carmen of the Klondike, with Clara Williams (Selaxart)—Very good. Book it. I consider it nearly as good as The Spoilers. It's a money maker.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Calif.

Raffles, with John Barrymore (State Rights)—Not what the people expected. Business poor.—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theatre, Orange, Cal.

The Deemster, with Derwent Hall Caine (Arrow)—A re-issue of the picture taken from Hall Caine's masterpiece. It drew even business with Toys of Fate and W. S. Hart's Selfish Yates, which proves that if they are good, they can come back.—H. C. Miller, Alcazar Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Deemster, with Derwent Hall Caine (Arrow)—A deep subject which will not be enjoyed or appreciated by the majority. It is well acted and directed and the photography is good.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Glory, with Kolb and Dill (State Rights)—A fair comedy drama.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Bar Sinister (State Rights)—Above the average program picture. Not worth the rental asked, however.—Leo Peterson, Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Bright and Early, with Billy West (King Bee)—A fair comedy but over-rated in price and drawing power.—Bert Norton, Kozy Theatre, Eureka, Ill.

Bright and Early, with Billy West (King Bee)—Fast, furious and funny. A very good comedy.—H. C. Miller, Boston Theatre, Chicago.—Downtown house.

WITH THE STORY OF THE PICTURE

Pathe

Kidder & Ko.—(Five reels)—June 16.—Featuring Bryant Washburn. Good light comedy.

Cuthbert Kidder's father has always been in the codfish business and looks down upon his son because the latter learned frivolous ideas at college. When Cuthbert wins a pool championship the old man is disgusted and turns him out, with instructions to stay away until he can show $10,000 he has earned by his own efforts. Cuthbert doesn't worry until he suddenly falls in love and finds money very necessary. So, as he is in a world of codfish, he decides to go into competition with the old fogies and he beats them at their own game. One of the best comedy phases of the story is where Cuthbert pretends to lose his memory, a good travesty on the old amnesia stuff.

General effect—Has a lot more "pep" than Washburn's preceding picture, "Twenty-One," and his comedy is more sincere and spontaneous. Support—Good, especially Harry Jenkinson as the father. Production and photography—Average.

Washburn has never done anything since his Skinner stuff that has shown any great talent, but this comedy is the nearest approach, so where his name still has value this will be a good attraction. It will please any alert audience that wants light amusement.

Universal

Smashing Through—(Five reels)—June 17.—Featuring Herbert Rawlinson. Bang-up melodrama with a lot of laughs.

Jack Maston owns a mine that he needs money to develop. Maston goes east and cannot get money from the man he approaches, but funds are supplied by Holly Brandon, who is amused by Maston's ways. Maston returns to the west and Holly's mother, discovering she has been swindled of all her money, compels Holly to consent to marry Earl Foster, a scheming scoundrel. Foster insists upon an immediate marriage. Maston, his mine having panned out all right, hears of this and starts on a whirlwind trip to stop the wedding. He comes "smashing through" and succeeds in making the gate. It is his adventures en route that provide the title and the punch.

Director, Elmer Clifton. Cameraman, Virgil Miller. General effect—This is a "zippy" yarn that gives them not a minute to stop to think whether it could happen or not, and when they're not thrilled they're laughing. Star—Rawlinson is a corker in this stuff and he is the whole show. Production—Good. Photography—Had to be good to keep up with the star.

Any audience that doesn't like this story ought to see a doctor. Universal specials have been pretty good stuff lately.

The Model's Confession—(Five reels)—June 3.—Featuring Mary McLaren. A sex story that finishes with a wallop after a slow start.

Iva Seldon is the daughter of Bertrand Seldon, who betrayed her mother and refuses to see her or acknowledge her as his daughter. She determines to meet him and having plenty of money, induces a destitute society youth to introduce her to the fast set in which her father moves. Seldon, not recognizing her, tries to make love to her and in trying to force his attentions upon her in a limousine discovers her mother's portrait in a locket she is wearing. The chauffeur, looking back to see the cause of the noise in the car, loses control and the machine falls down an embankment and the father is killed. Iva meanwhile has fallen in love with the young man who had taken her into society.

Director, Ida May Park. Cameraman, King Ray. General effect—This story is a tissue of inconsistencies, such, for example, as the failure to show any reason why this girl was working as a cloak model, and why she wanted to meet her father whom she hated, and the idea of a dissolute father making unclean love to his own daughter is sickening, but otherwise this is a beautifully handled story. Star—Mary McLaren is committing professional suicide by appearing in stuff of this sort, as she is a beautiful girl and very clever. Support—Kenneth Harlan in a good part. Production—Quite de luxe. Photography—Fine.

This is the kind of a picture that will get you into trouble with the censors and when you know that you know everything.

Vitagraph

Find the Woman—(Five reels)—June 10.—Featuring Alice Joyce. An O. Henry story with mystery, jealousy and intrigue.

Madeline Renard, an opera singer, induces an aged jeweler to make a set of wonderful imitation pearls for her appearance in "Marguerite." The jeweler is found dead later, and $20,000 which he had taken to invest for a Mme. Tibault is missing. Madeline is made the subject of suspicion by rumors set afoot by a man who is jealous of her sweetheart, Maurice Dumars. After many disconcerting events she disappears and not until a year later is it discovered that the jeweler had returned the $20,000 to Mme. Tibault, who, being ignorant, thought bonds he had given her for the money were some curious kind of calendar. Madeline is exonerated and reunited to Dumars.

Director, Tom Terriss. Cameraman, Jo. Shelenderfer. General effect—A story that is cleverly conceived and cleverly told, with a typical O. Henry mystery and neat finishing twist. Star—Miss Joyce in the finery that suits her best. Support—Excellent character work by Vitagraph regulars. Production—Satisfactory.

This is a high class offering, good for the best houses. and yet swift enough and with enough heart interest to hold them anywhere.

Metro

Social Quicksands—(Five reels)—June 10.—Featuring Bushman and Bayne. Light comedy romance, with more heart interest and less farce than recent B & B offerings.

Phyllis Lane makes a wager that in four weeks she can bring to her feet Warren Dexter, a wealthy young bachelor who scorns the butterfly set of which she is a leader, and has openly declined even to meet her. She decides to have Dexter find her in a faint on his doorstep, but when she goes to his house she finds a woman burglar on the premises. She forces this woman to change clothes with her, and when Dexter returns and finds her she tells him that she is forced to steal by her brother and father and pleads with him to give her a chance to earn an honest living. Dexter has her installed as assistant to the housekeeper at his country lodge, and then, of course, falls in love with her. The burglars come back into the story unexpectedly, but are soon kicked out by the husky hero, whose proposal of marriage is precipitated by the event. So Phyllis wins her bet, but Dexter, huffed at this unexpected turn, leaves her and goes back to his country place. Phyllis humbly follows and they make it all up.

Director, Charles J. Brabin. Cameraman, Rudolph J. Bergquist. General effect—This will please the Bushman-Bayne fans better than their more farcical pictures, though it is not so clever from the viewpoint of the average fan, but its romance and neat plot place it among the best work of these twin stars. Stars—For once the acting honors go to Miss Bayne, who is charming and full of "pep," while Bushman is little more than a background for her. Production—Very thorough and attractive. Photography—Excellent.

There are no stars upon whose drawing power exhibitors differ more widely, but wherever pictures by these players have any drawing power, this ought to prove their best attraction in months.

* * * *

The Only Road—(Five reels)—June 3.—Featuring Viola Dana. A lively western romance with a flavoring of melodrama.

Nita, who is supposed to be the daughter of a brutal Mexican and his browbeaten wife, is known by Ramon Lupo, an unscrupulous lawyer, to be really the daughter of Clara Hawkins, a wealthy ranch owner. The child was taken from her when it was born by her father, who was embittered by the fact that she had eloped against his will. To get hold of Mrs. Hawkins' money, Lupo tries to persuade her to marry him. Failing in this, he bargains with the Mexican to marry the girl to his son Pedro. Meanwhile Bob Armstrong, son of an old friend of Mrs. Hawkins, has been sent west because he was a failure and scapegrace in the east. He helps Nita escape from the Mexicans, but is pursued by the Lupos and is about to be lynched by a mob when he is rescued by the sheriff and judge, who insist that since he ran away with the girl he must marry her. After various adventures Nita's identity is established and everything ends happily.

Director, Frank Reicher. Cameraman, John Arnold. General effect—A rather original yarn, which could have been made more tense by keeping the girl's identity a secret until the last reel, but still sufficiently unusual to hold the attention. Star—Miss Dana has much the same sort of part as she had in "Riders of the Night," a pathetic and yet comical figure. Support—Excellent. Production—A good, typical California outdoor atmosphere. Photography—Fine.

This is the kind of picture upon which the "movies" thrive; not too high-falutin' nor yet too lowbrow, and so it is a good average attraction for any kind of house.

Paramount

The Firefly of France—(Five reels)—June 23.—Featuring Wallace Reid. A war interest picture dealing with spy plots and full of adventure.

Devereux Bayne, a wealthy young American, voluntarily joins the French forces, before America declared war upon Germany. He goes to France and all his movements become involved with those of a man named Jenkins and a young woman, Esme Falconer, in such a manner that Bayne believes the girl, whom he learns to love, is a German spy, and Jenkins a secret service man. At length they all meet at an old chateau in France, where a mysterious French patriot, called "The Firefly," has successfully eluded his pursuers, and here, after many adventures, the story straightens itself out.

Director, Donald Crisp. Cameraman, Henri Katoni. General effect—This story is full of "pep" and mystery, will appeal to the patriotic spirit of the times, and provide good thrills every few hundred feet, especially at the close. Star—Wallace Reid has always been a good actor and now he seems to be coming to the front as a star, for his work entitles him to the honor and he has a winning personality. Support—Unusually good, including Ann Little, Raymond Hatton, Charles Ogle and other Lasky players. Production—This is a typical Donald Crisp picture, very thoroughly done. Photography—Excellent.

This ought to be one of the best money-getters of the general run of pictures this month, though it is unwise to make too strong a play just now on the patriotic or war appeal of five-reels, when there are so many big war-time specials out. This production can stand on its own merits, the war interest being merely an added attraction.

Vitagraph

The Soap Girl—(Five reels)—June 17—Featuring Gladys Leslie. One of the best Vitagraphs in months; a clean novelty.

Marjorie Sanford's father made millions in soap, and she wants to get into society. Sanford thinks it can be done by advertising, and contributes heavily to charity, but before this can have its full effect, father overplays the advertising game by putting his child's portrait on his cakes of soap, which bars Marjorie for keeps. Meanwhile she and Richard Van Ruhl, nephew of the dictator of the set which has banished Marjorie, fall in love, and the aunt and nephew quarrel over the girl. Marjorie discovers that the Van Ruhl fortune was founded in selling rum to the Indians, and she gets her father to take revenge by buying a distillery and putting pictures of Mrs. Van Ruhl on the bottles. Mrs. Van is about to bring a suit for damages when nephew turns up and marries Marjorie, giving her the right to use the name. There is finally a reconciliation.

Director—Martin Justice. Cameraman—Arthur Roxx. General effect—A snappy society drama, full of pep and comedy, well acted and thoroughly consistent. Star—Miss Leslie's best work since she has been starred. Support—Very good. Production—Vitagraph interiors need toning up, but otherwise the picture is well dressed. Photography—Good.

This is the sort of production that everyone will like, for while there is no blood and thunder to give them the creeps, it tickles all the time, and that is just as good, if you have anything like an intelligent patronage. It is a safe bet.

Wallace Reid in the Paramount picture, "The Firefly of France."

PERSHING'S CRUSADERS

First U. S. Official War Feature

The United States is at war with Germany. Its preparations are stupendous, its achievements great.

All Americans want full and accurate information concerning these activities. More important, the motive and purpose of this conflict should be better understood by all the people of this country.

The Government will use motion pictures to convey this information. These films will be shown in theatres everywhere from the metropolitan city to the rural village. They will be released regularly in various forms, from news service to special features. The first of these is showing not only General Pershing and our boys at the Front, but telling graphically how Uncle Sam is feeding, clothing and transporting these sons of America.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" has already played some of the largest cities of the United States with unusual success. At Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee and at other points the public has registered at the box office its intention to see this film.

What the Newspapers say:

New York Times: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' is far and away the best compilation of war pictures exhibited here since the beginning of the European struggle."

Washington Herald: "It is a picture that makes the cheeks tingle with pr[illegible], and the graphic portrayal of America's coming might is a thing that tightens the throat."

St. Louis Dispatch: "The pictures are . . . extremely thrilling in the realism with which they show what it means to be a soldier in the world's greatest war."

Cleveland Press: "Scenes of staggering immensity."

Chicago Post: "There is a [illegible] in the throat when we mention 'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS'; there is so much that should be said and so little that can be said adequately."

The Milwaukee Wisconsin: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' registers enough facts to have done credit to the United States if three years instead of one had been consumed."

Buffalo Times: "Applause was thunderous."

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" was taken by the U. S. Signal Corps and Navy Photographers and the French General Staff

Cohen Out of M. P. E. L. Race for President

SAYS ONLY CONCERN IS A SINGLE ORGANIZATION

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for the president of the national organization, to be chosen at the convention in Boston in July, made plain this week that under no consideration is he in the field for the office.

"I want no office and will accept no office," said Mr. Cohen. "My only interest is the amalgamation of all exhibitors into a national organization that will stand for something. Personally I favor no especial candidate for the presidency of such an organization and the New York league has none. All we want is a business body, conducted along clean lines in the interests of all exhibitors and without any entangling side issues.

"Unless such an organization is developed by the Boston convention, a national league will amount to nothing. The tendency already is more and more toward independent state leagues, and this is certain to gain in strength, unless the national league divorces itself from politics and the selfish interests of a few. Only an administration of unquestionable integrity and sincerity of purpose will save the national league from completely degenerating into nothing more than a name."

Mr. Cohen, in association with Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the American Exhibitors' Association, has been in the forefront of the efforts to bring the two leagues together into a united, business organization. Mr. Pettijohn has echoed Mr. Cohen's sentiments. He says the suggestions put forth by factions opposing such a merger, that he seeks the leadership of such a body, are "most preposterous," especially in view of his executive association with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

"These statements are made simply to embarrass those who are earnestly desirous of effecting a union of the two leagues along lines that are straightforward and clean," said Mr. Pettijohn. "They are camouflage, put forth to befog the real issues and those who are responsible for such insinuations are in the best position and know that there is no foundation for such statements, because they have correspondence from me stating very clearly and explicitly where I stand.

"It is tactics of this sort which retard honest efforts to develop a united organization which will be representative of the interests of all exhibitors."

Exposition Site a Scene of Activity

Two Model Theatres Containing the Latest in Appliances Are Expected to Be the Chief Feature

PLANS for the National Motion Picture Exposition, to be held in Boston at the Mechanics Building, during the week of July 13, are going on apace and exposition headquarters presents a scene of frenzied activity. Requests are coming in from all parts of the country for space reservations and the committee in charge of hotel accommodations is working overtime.

In the educational and historical side of the work there is much that promises a wealth of interest to those in the industry, as well as to those outside of it. One innovation especially should be of interest to the visiting exhibitor. This is the two model theatres in which will be seen many of the latest accessory machines and improvements. Here the visitor may see new devices in actual use in a real theatre. Opportunities for exhibition will be open to the firms engaging space.

The museum is awakening lively interest among those who were pioneers in the business, and there have been many who have come forward with offers of machines and appliances used in the first days of the industry. The management invites those who wish to loan any ancient appliance to help the cause by getting in touch with the manager of the exposition, Samuel Grant.

The two great novelties of the exposition will be the studio and the laboratory. It is expected that some of the leading producers will take a scene from one of their future releases in this studio where those present may witness the actual filming of a photo-play.

Any visitor may have a motion picture made of himself or family or friend which will be developed in the model laboratory and shown at one of the theatres the following day.

The laboratory will be installed from plans made by Watterson R. Rothacker, who will handle every detail of the installation and its operation. In this he will have the co-operation of several well known expert laboratory operators.

New Director for Miss Brady

Alice Brady has a new director, John Stewart Robertson. This director, who has done effective work for the screen, received a stage training under Charles Frohman with Maud Adams, and under Henry B. Harris, having been two years with Rose Stahl. Mr. Robertson is in charge of the new production which Miss Brady is now starting for Select.

David Powell, well liked for his leading roles in support of Mary Pickford and Elsie Ferguson, will be seen for the first time as Miss Brady's leading man.

Miss Brady herself will again essay a double role. In this case she will play two sisters who strikingly resemble each other in appearance, but whose natures are totally dissimilar.

New Chicago Censor Plan

A new censorship ordinance for Chicago has been drafted by Corporation Counsel Ettelson, following the plan of Alderman John Coughlin, to take the place of the Maypole amendment. The ordinance provides for a department of censorship to include three principal censors and nine subordinate censors. This would take the censorship authority away from the police department.

The censors are to be appointed by the mayor with the approval of the Council, to serve two years. The censors are to receive salaries of $4,000 a year and to have authority to employ a chief clerk and other necessary clerical help.

One of the principal censors would be required to be present on all occasions when films were being censored, and in cases of disagreement a vote of two of the three would prevail.

Alderman Coughlin intends to introduce the ordinance as a substitute for the Maypole ordinance, also designed to eliminate "one-man" censorship.

A vigorous and stern policy with regard to advertising posters used by moving picture theatres, and "pink permits" issued with films not supposed to be viewed by persons under 21, now obtains in the police department.

Theatres Aid Belgian Children

To collect funds for the purchase of milk for Belgian babies, the picture theatres of San Francisco recently placed milk bottles in their lobbies for the contributions of patrons. A total of $532 was collected the first three weeks.

Theatres in Nashville Flout Mayor

Three Houses Keep Open on Sunday Despite His Ban, But Divert Admission Money to Thrift Stamps

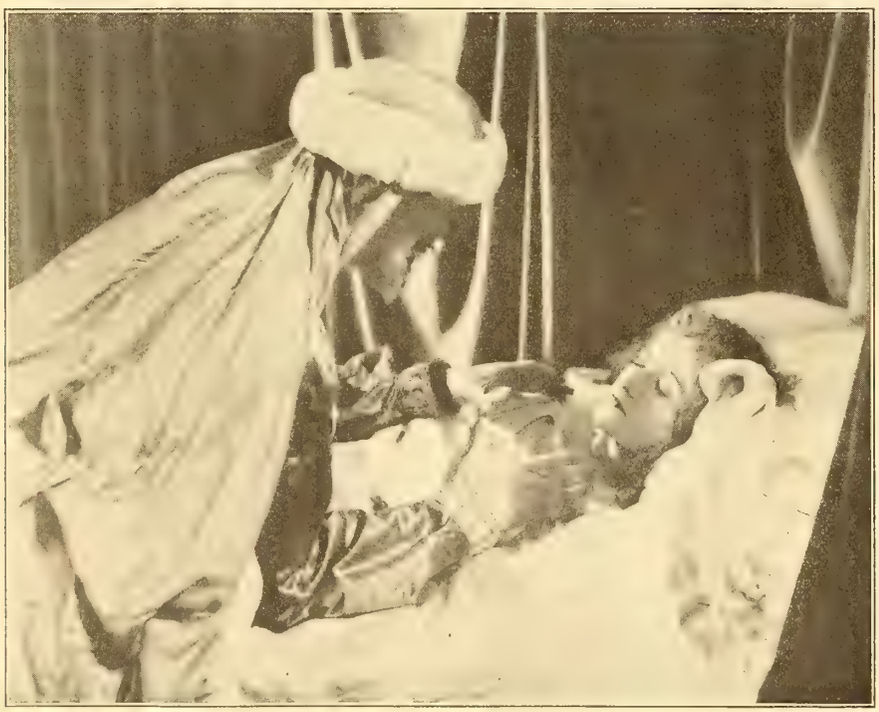
WHILE Mayor William A. Gupton of Nashville still obstinately persists in opposing the various petitions and requests to permit the moving picture houses to open on Sundays, local managers showed pictures on Sunday June 9.

Nevertheless, three of the largest uptown houses, the Knickerbocker, Fifth Avenue and Strand, opened their doors from 2 to 10 for the benefit of the public, and although not permitted to charge admission for their own benefit a plan to furnish amusement and at the same time assist the government was perfected by charging one thrift stamp admission. Each patron bought a thrift stamp at the box office, and of course was admitted free, being allowed to keep the thrift stamp.

While the managers realized no profits whatsoever, the moral effect of running the houses on Sunday is expected to create a still further call for Sunday amusement on the part of the Nashville public. In fact, employes gave their services free and the managers were under an expense in running the films, but just as constant dripping will wear away a stone, constant hammering is expected to bring about the desired object.

The people are actually demanding pictures. As an evidence of the popularity of the Sunday opening, more than $1,000 in thrift stamps were sold at the Sunday shows, with only three houses running—meaning that 4,000 persons attended the performances.

Expressions of commendation were heard on all sides over the plan, both as a method of supplying entertainment and as a means of aiding the Thrift Stamp campaign.



In view of the extreme popularity of the Thrift Stamp shows, it is probable that the policy will be followed each Sunday until pictures are officially permitted, even though the managers are the losers.

Toney Sudekum, William Wassman and Carson Bradford were the managers who patriotically tendered the use of their houses to the Government.

The hand of these men was strengthened through the dismissal of Mr. Wassman in the city court following his arrest several weeks ago for keeping open seven days. He had been admitting the public free, but compelled them to contribute to some charity. Later he joined in the Thrift Stamp plan.

Theatre Changes Hands

J. O. Hostetler of Waterloo, Iowa, has bought the Casino Theatre of Marshalltown from Wilbur D. Lingledue. The theatre will be managed by the new owner's brother, J. E. Hostetler, an experienced showman and at present manager of the Crystal Theatre in Waterloo.

Pray in Theatres for Victory

EVERY DAY at noon the big bell in the tower of the First Presbyterian church at Nashville sounds a call to the people to stop for a moment and pray for the success of American arms.

At the first tap of the bell the projection machines in all houses of the Crescent Amusement Company are instantly stopped and a card is displayed upon the screen asking that all patrons bow their heads.

The policy has met with the approval of the audiences and many, including foes of the theatre, are praising the Crescent managers.

Finish "As the Sun Went

Filming of "As the Sun Went Down," Edith Storey's newest starring vehicle in the Metro program, following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea," and "The Claim," has been completed at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. E. Mason Hopper directed the picture, which was photographed by William Thompson. The director is now editing the film and assembling it for shipment to New York.

"As the Sun Went Down," adapted for the screen by George D. Baker from the drama of that name, of which he is also the author, presents the versatile Miss Storey in the role of a "two-gun woman" of the California mining camps during the period directly following the gold rush of '49. Known as "Colonel Billy," she rises above a sordid career of sin to find happiness and love in the straight and narrow path.

The picture is Miss Storey's last to be made in the West for a few months at least, as she will do her next in New York.

Arbuckle Starts "The Cook"

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has played many widely varied roles in his long comedy career. In his latest comedy for Paramount release the rotund comedian will be seen as the jovial and artistic food specialist of a beach cafe. In other words, Fatty Arbuckle has started production of "The Cook."

Not only will the new travesty have to do with the eccentricities of Fatty as a cook, but the riotous fun to be found on a beach pike with its side-show attractions reveals rare comedy promise. In "The Cook" Fatty will be supported by his usual well balanced cast.

Dr. Paul Smith Invades New York

WILL SPEAK AT RUN OF "THE FINGER OF JUSTICE"

REVEREND DR. PAUL SMITH of San Francisco has arrived in New York to speak at the run of the super-feature picture, "The Finger of Justice," which will appear shortly on Broadway.

Dr. Smith was the spokesman, as president of the San Francisco Church Federation, for the great clean up campaign in Northern California, which resulted in the closing of the world-famous Barbary Coast vice district of San Francisco, the abolition of about three hundred resorts in various California cities, the crippling of a corrupt machine which had dominated politics since '49, and bringing about a revolution of public opinion.

Not a Reformer by Choice

At the office of the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York City, which is handling the commercial side of the distribution of this picture, Dr. Smith said:

"By temperament or choice I am not a reformer. Nothing was ever further from my thought than to get involved in a tremendous political campaign like that which has swept San Francisco this last year.

"Neither did I ever expect to be a motion picture producer. Our one weapon in the California battle was publicity, and when this scenario was brought to me by Miss Sanderson, our group saw at once the possibility of reaching the voters of California with our message through this picture.

"The political boss of the picture is a composite of the three big bosses in San Francisco whose power was largely broken in our campaign.

Not as Sensational as Subject

"In a general way 'The Finger of Justice' is a dramatization of that great battle. While some have thought that the melodrama of the picture was sensational, as a matter of fact it is not nearly so sensational as the melodrama of the actual fight it represents.

"One night the wife of a police judge came to the evening service in my church and shrieked out 'You lie!' and insisted on making a speech which almost broke up the meeting.

"At another time we had definite reports of a large fund which had been raised to hire a woman who would defame my character. By making this attempted frame-up public it was stopped.

"On another occasion, just as I was about to speak in my pulpit, my good friend Senator Grant came up and informed me that a notorious gunman, a big mulatto who had served time in prison, was seated in the congregation very near an exit.

"A candidate for city attorney whom we were opposing because we believed he represented corrupt interests, plastered the city with 24 sheets, 'Elect ——— city attorney. He represents you and not the Reverend Paul Smith.'

Propaganda and Entertainment Both

"While our picture was designed primarily for propaganda purposes and while it has received the endorsement of distinguished clergymen and social leaders throughout the country, it is none the less a thrilling entertainment picture. I have never been able to see why big ideas could not be dramatized in a fascinating form.

"I believe that entertainment has got to be paramount in pictures produced for the theatre constituency. I do not believe that this in any sense precludes the possibility of using the screen for propaganda in behalf of the serious point of view.

"Some people say that these great problems of city government which have to do with the control of vice, gambling and crime should not be discussed on the screen. I think that depends entirely upon the manner of presentation, the type of publicity, and the theories which are advocated.

"You cannot have propaganda against evil without picturing the evil.

"We studied long and carefully in producing "The Finger of Justice" to make it tell a convincing story without the portrayal of anything suggestive or in bad taste. The universal opinion of ministers and others who have endorsed the picture testifies to our success in this matter.

"For instance, Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts of the International Reform Bureau in Washington says: 'Every adolescent girl in America ought to see this picture with her mother.'

"J. Frank Chase, secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society in Boston, has said: 'The conditions centering in the disorderly cafe which you have pictured are actually or potentially present in every American city. We need your picture in Boston.'

Upholding the Law Is Theme

"The theory of vice control advocated by the picture is the merciless enforcement of the law against the profiteer, the promoter of viciousness, and the merciful restraint of the underworld woman with a chance for her to begin a new life. I do not believe that the Magdalen should be thrown into jail. She ought to be sentenced to a hospital—just what we are doing with her in San Francisco.

"The picture shows the shortcomings of toleration or attempted segregation of viciousness.

"It presents a tremendous argument by parents of children for their protection against the exploitation of innocence which exists.

"One of the very dramatic episodes of the picture is the story of the raid of 300 underworld women upon the church headed by a clever and brilliant woman, a resort keeper, who asked the question: 'What will become of us if you close up the town?'

"'With shoes at $16 per pair, and wages at $8 a week, what is a girl to do?' inquired this woman. The story of that episode was flashed by the Associated Press and accounts of it appear in papers throughout the world.

Backed by Much Publicity

"The picture and the campaign have commanded columns of publicity; we have clippings literally by the bushel in San Francisco.

"I believe that the tour of 'The Finger of Justice' over the country, during which I shall make many speeches myself, and social leaders likewise will appear with the picture, will have pro-

Maryland Censors Again Rouse Industry

Cause Lessee of Picture to Be Fined Because Cuts Ordered Were Exhibited with Film by Mistake

THE industry has been aroused once more by the arbitrary Prussian-like methods of the Maryland board of censors.

The heavy hand of the censor board has fallen upon a film that has been shown without official interference in five other states. The film is "It May Be Your Daughter," and because, through an error, it was exhibited at Baltimore without all of the eliminations ordered by the powers that be, Milton Caplan of the Varieties Pictures Corporation has been fined $25 and costs for leasing it to Joseph Bleachman, proprietor of the Picture Garden, a West Lexington street theatre. Bleachman also was compelled to appear in court, but the charge against him was dismissed.

The film, described in posters as educational, shows, according to the censors, "scenes in a house of commercialized vice, the woman head of the establishment lolling on a divan and smoking cigarettes, a woman kidnapped into the place, and women dancing together."

In accordance with the usual procedure in such cases, it was testified at the hearing that the picture was exhibited before members of the Motion Picture Board on March 21 last. Certain eliminations were ordered. On April 15 the film was again exhibited to the board. More eliminations were ordered, because, it is claimed, the expurgation of all the features to which the board originally objected was not carried out completely, as it would have destroyed the continuity of the play. Caplan then agreed to eliminate all of the objectionable scenes before showing the picture in the state and the film received the official seal.

On Monday of last week, Mrs. Marguerite Harrison of the board complained that all of the objectionable features had not been eliminated and the picture was being shown to the public. She then swore out warrants for Caplan and Bleachman.

Bleachman's defense was that when the film came to him it bore the official seal of the censors, and Caplan contended the film had been shown in five states, and that, after having eliminated the scenes objected to in Maryland, he put them back in the film and sent it to Hopewell, Virginia, for exhibition. When the film was returned to him it was inadvertently sent to Bleachman with the objectionable scenes still in it.

"A boy in my office failed to block out the necessary parts," Caplan added in explanation. The film is now properly cut, clipped, expurgated and otherwise trimmed to suit the exacting taste of the censors."

The fact that the picture in its entirety had raised no disturbance in other states has revived resentment against the Maryland censors, whose decisions have been anything but in harmony with the opinions of the guardians of morals elsewhere.

Compiles Film Album of Players

What he believes to be the only film album of players in existence is the proud possession of Horace Williams, casting director at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

Mr. Williams, who before he entered the motion picture industry was a practicing attorney, is a stickler for efficiency. His present position requires an elaborate filing system as an aid to his memory in cataloguing the great number of screen players according to their specialties and qualifications.

Some time ago he hit upon the innovation of making use of the various odds and ends of film that invariably are left over after a big production has been cut, titled and assembled in its final form. So the cutting room turns over to him leftover pieces of scenes that fail to get into the completed picture. These invariably contain acting "bits," by supporting players as well as some of the work of the star.

Thus far Mr. Williams has collected nearly 200 strips of film, ranging in length from 15 to 70 feet, showing players in action. When his collection has progressed further he intends to classify the players into 1,000-feet reels. He will have a reel of "heavies," one of character men, one of character women, one of ingenues, and so on, for instant reference in the projecting room.

World Gets "Eight Bells"

Byrne Brothers' "Eight Bells," one of the best known comedies of the stage, has been picturized in five reels and will be distributed by World.

The comedy when presented on the stage toured the United States for fifteen years, during which time it was seen by millions and became a household word wherever clean comedy and a hurricane of laughs were appreciated.

John Byrne, the eldest of the famous Byrnes, directed the filming of the picture. He was aided both in the development of the scenario and its manufacture by his brothers and several members of the original cast.

Edgar Hopp in U. S. Work

Edgar Hopp, son of Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, has been transferred by the Government to Washington as cameraman in the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. Edgar enlisted sometime ago at Great Lakes. Last week the order was received for his transfer to the other branch of government service.

F. P.-L. Gets Washburn and Dorothy Gish

EACH TO APPEAR IN PARAMOUNT PICTURES

BRYANT WASHBURN and Dorothy Gish have been added to the list of Paramount stars. Announcement to this effect comes from Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, who reveals that Washburn has signed a three year contract and will make eight pictures in the coming year, while Miss Gish under the auspices of D. W. Griffith will make seven productions.

The addition of these players adds two notable names to the long list of Paramount and Artcraft stars recently lengthened by the addition of Fred Stone, John Barrymore, Ethel Clayton, Shirley Mason and Lila Lee.

Lasky Praises Washburn

"Mr. Washburn's engagement," said Mr. Lasky, "is one of the most satisfactory, not only to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, but to exhibitors and the public, of all the recent additions to our forces. There is a scarcity of light comedy stars on the screen—artists of the type represented by Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, or combining their characteristics to a certain degree—and as such Mr. Washburn is prominent among the limited few who may be said to possess real merit.

"Like Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Cohan he laid the foundation for his later success on the speaking stage. It was in 1907 that he began his stage career, appearing in several successes with George Fawcett, and it is an interesting coincidence that this announcement should come on the heels of the announced appearance of Mr. Fawcett in a leading role in D. W. Griffith's Artcraft production of 'The Great Love,' soon to be released.

Started with Essanay

"Mr. Washburn's motion picture career started in 1911 with Essanay, for whom he made many comedies of uniform excellence during succeeding years, including 'Skinner's Bubble,' 'Skinner's Baby,' 'Promised Land,' 'The Golden Idiot,' 'The Fibbers,' and 'The Girl God Made for Jones,' 'Skinner's Dress Suit' and others for K-E-S-E. His more recent appearances have been as a Pathe star.

"Mr. Washburne's first Paramount picture will be an adaptation of William Hurlbut's comedy, 'Saturday to Monday,' which probably will be released in the early fall."

Mr. Lasky was also enthusiastic over the acquisition of Miss Gish. The young star, who is an Ohioan by birth, is just twenty years old. She has been identified with the stage and screen since 1902, Dorothy Gish.

Bryant Washburn.

when, at the age of four, she made her debut before the footlights. Like so many of the greatest stars of motion pictures she began her screen career with the old Biograph company, her first appearance being in the Biograph production, "The Mountain Rat."

Her association with the productions of Mr. Griffith, thus formed at the outset of her career in photoplays, has continued unbroken to this day. With him she went to the Reliance-Majestic, where she appeared in "Old Heidelberg" and other productions. When Mr. Griffith formed Fine Arts Miss Gish became one of the most popular stars of that organization, notable among her productions being "Atta Boy's Last Race," "Stage Struck," "The Little Yank," "Children of the Feud," "The Failure" and "That Colby Girl."

Played in Big Successes

When Mr. Griffith projected "The Birth of a Nation," with which he was destined to write one of the most brilliant pages of screen history, it was natural that he should choose Miss Gish for an important role. Her work was an outstanding feature of that production and earned for her a place in the affections of the millions of picture-lovers throughout the United States and Canada.

Later she achieved equal success in the second big Griffith special production, "Intolerance," while her wonderful characterization in the role of the charming little French girl, Grizette, in "Hearts of the World," is making the impression it so richly deserves in the large centers where the production is now being shown.

Start "Gentleman's Agreement"

Vitagraph Director David Smith has taken the Nell Shipman-Alfred Whitman feature company away from Hollywood on a two weeks' location trip. The company will make scenes at Ransburg, Kernville, Bakerville, Oakland and San Francisco. It took several trunks to convey the wardrobe which Miss Shipman finds it necessary to use.

The picture Director Smith is making is a screen version of Wallace Irwin's novel, "A Gentleman's Agreement."

Juan de la Cruz, an actor of ability, is a new member of this company. He plays the part of Professor Andree.

Farnum Starts "Rainbow Trail"

William Farnum, the Fox star, has begun work on "The Rainbow Trail" at the West Coast studios in Hollywood. "The Rainbow Trail" is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," which has just been completed by Mr. Farnum. Both stories were written by Zane Grey.

"The Rainbow Trail" is being filmed under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Some of the scenes in it will necessitate the entire company traveling again to the wilds of Arizona, where, it is expected, they will remain several weeks.

Setting used by Manager Flossie A. Jones at the Colonial Theatre, Waukesha, Wisconsin, for "The Bluebird."

Gives "The Bluebird" a Beautiful Setting

Flossie A. Jones of Waukesha, Wisconsin, Puts Spectacle on as a Benefit and Whole Town Turns Out

FLOSSIE A. JONES followed out her custom of making a special occasion of a very special picture when she showed "The Bluebird," that beautiful Paramount production of Maeterlinck's story, in her Colonial Theatre, Waukesha, Wisconsin, recently.

When she booked the picture, after it had been screened for her, she resolved to make her people appreciate it as much as she had. As usual, when she wants to give a picture an elaborate presentation, she had only one performance an evening. She ran it two days, giving a matinee and a night showing each day, charging fifty and twenty-five cents in the evening and twenty-five cents straight in the afternoon.

A dance prologue was given with the picture. Miss Jones got a clever professional solo dancer from out of town, so that she could advertise her big, and had three local girls who could dance, and two little children, whom she dressed like the children in the play, for her performers.

When the curtain went up the dancers, dressed as fairies, were sleeping in the moonlight. The children entered on tiptoe. The lights gradually turned to the blue of morning. The leading dancer came to the front of the stage and danced while the light gradually increased to full daylight. Then the little girl sang the "Bluebird" song. One of the fairies then put her arms about the children and told them not to look for happiness in fairyland, for it was to be found right at home. Then the lights went out, the screen was lowered and the picture was on.

The prologue helped put them into the mood of the play and proved an excellent advertising point. The picture itself aroused great enthusiasm. It was shown under the auspices of the Parent Teachers' Association as a benefit for the French and Belgian orphans. The association received thirty cents on the dollar for all the tickets it sold.

"No picture," says Miss Jones, "could be more appropriate for a benefit of this sort because the principal characters of the picture are two Belgian children. It is a picture of happiness and by attending, one helped to make some little orphan happy for a year. It was a big success all the way through and when exhibitors feel it too big a picture to handle alone I would suggest they use it as a benefit."

In advertising the picture beforehand, Miss Jones had five hundred paste-board bluebirds cut out, the title, theatre and date printed on them, and hung them on tree branches and bushes all over town.

She also had a lobby display in another of her theatres, the Auditorium, in which an electric shadow box was used. The figures of the two children were cut out from a one-sheet and pasted on a green wooded background, with a round hole cut out, red tissue paper pasted over it and an electric light back of it to represent a moon. There was a real blue bird in the cage and the whole thing was very effective.

As a result of this presentation, the entire town saw and appreciated one of the most delightful of recent productions. Business was good and the theatre gained in prestige.

"Photoplay City" Planned

"Photoplay City of America" is being planned at Echo Mountain Park, Brompton, near Birmington, Alabama. Charles H. Frank of Columbus, Ohio, is president of the company back of the enterprise. A big hotel and sanitorium will be erected some time this year and will be thrown open to wounded and recuperating soldiers from all sections of the country. These soldiers will be used in the pictures that will be made.

Exhibitors Give Dinner

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis gave a luncheon recently to the leading business men of the city. The league intends to become more closely connected with the business interests of St. Louis and help in promoting the general welfare of the city.

Buy New Theatre

Louis R. Lurie and Howard J. Sheehan, owners of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, have bought the Hamblen Theatre in Alameda. The original cost of the building was about $75,000, with equipment costing $25,000 more. James Hamblen, the former owner, is going east.

Mutual Makes War on False Economy

ACTS TO STOP MISGUIDED MOVEMENT IN LOS ANGELES

AN APPEAL to the public to stand by pictures as a war-time necessity has been issued to the people of Los Angeles, where a thrift movement threatened the existence of the motion picture theatres, through the advertising columns of the Los Angeles newspapers by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

When Mr. Sheldon learned of the jeopardy in which Los Angeles theatres stood he ordered an advertisement prepared and published pointing out the service the motion picture has given and is giving in the conduct of the war.

"Ad" Appears in All Papers

The advertisement went forward simultaneously to the Los Angeles Times, Herald, Examiner, Express, Tribune and Record, under the caption "Motion Pictures a War Necessity." It read as follows:

"War time economy properly consists of both saving and spending wisely.

"Two great institutions demand your war time patronage, both in value to you and in service to your country. They are: The newspaper and the motion picture.

"It is your obligation to be well informed, to know the will and purposes of your government, to share in its successes, to laud its heroes, to succor the wounded, to keep the home fires burning.

"The motion picture brings you the story of the war and our nation at war that words can not tell. The picture, too, has a function of entertainment. The United States is not in sack cloth and ashes.

"While we war we live.

Industry's Rights Proven

"The motion picture industry's war time right to existence is proven in the large uses to which the pictures are being put by the United States government, notably the Committee on Public Information, in behalf of the War and Navy Departments, by the United States Food Administration, the Liberty Loan Committee, the Shipping Board and all kindred arms of our war administration. The pictures live because they serve. The motion picture industry has enlisted for 'duration of the war.' That enlistment has been voluntary, enthusiastic and with whole-hearted fervor of patriotism.

"Your motion picture theatre presents you not extravagance, but wholesome opportunity to buy of knowledge, experience and entertainment, to know your country and the affairs of the warring world.

"Patronize your theatres."

Pictures Perform Real Duty

"The war has proven in France and England," said Mr. Sheldon in commenting on his message to the people of Los Angeles, "that the motion picture is essential to a warring people. It has performed an important and vital duty in sustaining the morale of the mothers and wives of the men on the firing line, in providing a certain and complete relaxation from the horrors of existence, in addition to the blessing it has been to the men in the trenches and in concentration camps.

"In the year of hurried preparation through which the United States has passed the motion picture has performed many duties. It was the first medium of entertainment to be adopted for the great cantonments where thousands of boys, taken from their homes, were helped over the pain of separation by picture entertainment. It has been a valuable ally to the various departments of the government as a means of propaganda.

"I thought the time had passed when the motion picture was to be considered a luxury or an extravagance. Nowhere is more value delivered for the money than in the picture theatre. It gives more, dollar for dollar, in entertainment, relaxation, regeneration and education than any other agency.

"The battle cry of the home line of defense is thrift, and quite rightly so. 'Buy only what you need' is an excellent rule to follow, but the public needs the motion picture. Mothers with sons in France, wives with husbands on the battle line, cannot stand the strain and do their part in winning the war without diversion. Workmen cannot work at highest efficiency in our munition shops and ship-building plants without relaxation. Deprive the nation of its entertainment and it will grow tense and break.

"The motion picture is the most valuable and most efficient agency to fill this need. It has proven itself to be.

"Let us in the motion picture business do all that we can in the future as we have in the past, to assist the government in the raising of its loans, in the exploitation of its savings and thrift campaigns, in the education of the people to economy and efficient effort, in the spreading of patriotic propaganda, in the dissemination of information, but let us combat the hysterical shoutings of the overzealous against the picture as a luxury and an extravagance.

Boost in Railroad Fares to Aid Pictures

Theatrical Companies Being Taken Off the Road and "Legitimate" Houses Will Turn to Films as Result

THE tremendous boost in passenger rates, which went into effect on June 10, will prove of immense benefit to the picture industry, in the opinion of World Pictures.

Many of the big "legitimate" theatres throughout the country are planning to show pictures next year and making preparations now for this change, as the managers realize it will be impossible to keep their houses open night after night with the limited stage productions that can survive.

This condition is the inevitable result of the passenger rate increase.

Just how big this increased railroad fare is, as it affects road companies, can be graphically shown by taking dramatic movement from New York to Buffalo. It is a railroad rule that twenty-five fares must be purchased to obtain the use of a baggage car and as a baggage car is always needed, the computation is made on the basis of twenty-five fares:

Old rate, one person	$ 8.00
Sleeper	2.00
Total	$10.00
Eight per cent War Tax	.80
Total	$10.80
New rate	$13.20
Sleeper	2.00
Excess for sleeper	2.20
Total	$17.40
Eight per cent War Tax	1.40
Total	$18.80
Old total fare	10.80
Increase per person	$ 8.00

This means for a company of twenty-five (the number of tickets necessary to get a baggage car free) an increase of $200, which of course is prohibitive.

Consequently there will be fewer attractions on the road next season, which makes it necessary for theatre owners to look for other forms of entertainment with which to keep their houses open. Naturally they are turning to films and as a consequence pictures this coming year will be seen in "legitimate" theatres never before open to them.

World is watching the new conditions alertly and the World men in the field have been instructed to co-operate to the utmost with theatre owners seeking to find attractions for the coming season.

Timely Ince Films Due Soon

Two unusually timely subjects will be released under the Paramount trademark early in July by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Both are Thos. H. Ince productions, the first, scheduled for July 1, being "The Kaiser's Shadow," featuring Dorothy Dalton, and the second, released July 8, being "The Claws of the Hun," in which Charles Ray is starred. While neither is essentially a war picture, both productions are closely interwoven with the great struggle on the other side of the Atlantic.

A Brand New One!

PUBLICITY by telephone is the new wrinkle contrived by Metro in advertising the big sensation-production, "To Hell with the Kaiser."

Each Metro Exchange has been instructed to conclude all telephone conversations with "Well, to Hell with the Kaiser" instead of the conventional "Good bye." The novelty appeals immediately and is rapidly spreading in popularity.

As a publicity idea this ranks with the best in the history of the profession. It is simple, inexpensive and tremendously effective advertising.

Says Small Towns Make Stars

It's the small down demand that makes a star of the motion picture actress, declares Fay Tincher, comedienne, who has just affixed her signature to a contract with World Pictures. Miss Tincher backs up this idea in a logical manner.

"In the small towns," she says, "the motion picture star reigns supreme. She does not have to divide attention with theatres, skating rinks, dansants, concerts and opera, the way she does in the big cities. Her only competition is with other motion picture actresses.

"If the small town people like her then a tremendous demand for more of her pictures arises from the small towns —where the bulk of the motion picture business is done—and she is made. But if the only demand is from the big cities and her pictures fall flat in the small towns, then she is a failure."

New Pickford Play Due

"How Could You, Jean?" Mary Pickford's next Artcraft vehicle, will be released June 23.

The story is a narrative of a domestic nature, involving a thoroughly winsome romance and much action of a humorous as well as exciting nature. Miss Pickford appears in a new role as a girl of about eighteen, naively charming, who is cast in an unfamiliar environment owing to a sudden decline of fortune.

The photoplay is from the novel by Eleanor Hoyt Brainard. Frances Marion, who wrote the scenario, has woven about the star a wholly appropriate web of circumstances. William D. Taylor, director of the Tom Sawyer stories for Paramount, as well as "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall" and "His Majesty Bunker Bean," all starring Jack Pickford, was in charge of "How Could You, Jean?"

Two interesting scenes from the new Artcraft feature, "Hit-the-Trail-Holliday," starring George M. Cohan.

Affiliated About to Start Releasing

Board of Directors Will Meet in New York This Month, When First Pictures Will Be Decided Upon

RETURNING to New York from an organization trip in the middle west last week, Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, announced that the organization would start the distribution of pictures within the immediate future.

"The co-operative booking movement has swept the country," said Mr. Pettijohn. "The Affiliated simply started the ball rolling along right lines. The exhibitors have pushed it to the front almost over night.

"The first meeting of the national board of directors will be held in New York this month, at which time the selection of the first pictures for release will be made.

"While the Affiliated was organized primarily for the benefit of the average theatre owner, in the belief that they constitute the main strength of the industry, a remarkable number of 'first run' houses have allied themselves with this movement.

"In Buffalo, Detroit, Philadelphia, Indianapolis, Denver, Los Angeles and other cities these houses are the foremost of their communities. Contrary to other exhibitor organizations, however, these larger exhibitors will enjoy no advantages not shared by every other exhibitor.

"One of the reasons why the Affiliated has made such a universal appeal is the fact that none of the national directors have had to advance any money for promotion expenses, nor do they hold notes to be paid back out of exhibitors' funds. The exhibitor's money is at all times under his own control in his own territory.

"Evidence of the confidence which such a plan engenders is the fact that of the seventy-five officers and directors thus far chosen by exhibitors for their local association, not one has declined to serve.

"The Affiliated will never be used to injure any man's business. On the contrary, its sponsors are so bound that they at all times can act only as the agents of the exhibitors—never as their dictators.

"These sponsors have asked nothing for themselves but an equitable share in the excess profits. They have spent their money to develop the idea of co-operative booking, believing that the exhibitors of the country would rally to an organization under the exclusive control of exhibitors. The results which have been obtained in so short a space of time prove that their confidence was well founded."

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York state, and of the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Greater New York, who, as chairman of the exhibitors' committee, was largely responsible for drafting the Affiliated plan, also returned to New York last week from an organization trip in eastern Pennsylvania.

"If there ever was any doubt as to the soundness of the co-operative booking movement as developed by the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation," said Mr. Cohen, "it certainly must be dissipated by the success which the New York unit has achieved in handling two productions which is acquired for the purpose of testing the merit of the plan.

"While we were in no sense organized to operate on the scale which we shall be in association with the Affiliated, the benefits accruing from this plan of bringing the market direct to exhibitors have been so substantial that at the present time more than eighty per cent of the theatres of Greater New York have booked our first two pictures and we are arranging now to take over another production. We will be a bigger success when we can enjoy the co-operation of the other nineteen units.

Artcraft Plays Strong Card

In releasing the two Artcraft productions, "Say, Young Fellow" and "Hit-the-Trail-Holliday," the week of June 16 the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation offers exhibitors the opportunity of presenting to their patrons foremost exponents of light comedy, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, the same week in what will undoubtedly prove to be their greatest successes.

The double offering, it is pointed out by Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, comes at a psychological moment when the American public, now becoming more and more engrossed in the morbid contemplation of the events transpiring on the battlefields of France, is most in need of the diversion of light entertainment.

World Spikes Rumor

"Inside the Lines," the screen version of the play of the same title with Lewis Stone, will be distributed by World Pictures and the release date set for the near future. This announcement is made to dissipate rumors to the contrary.

Pathe to Release New Serial Soon

"Hands Up" a Tale Based on Ancient Incas, but with Modern Theme of Love and Adventure

"HANDS UP," the Astra production that has been selected for Pathe's next serial, is to be released shortly. The date, it is expected, will be announced within the next few weeks.

"Hands Up" was produced from a story by Gilson Willets and scenario by Jack Cunningham. It stars Ruth Roland as the heroine, with George Chesebro as the hero. It is a Western story dealing with a field of material not yet touched for the screen—the traditions and legends of the Inca Indians with a modern story of romance and adventure.

In addition to Miss Roland and Mr. Chesebro in the two leading roles, the cast includes Easter Walters, George Gebhart and William A. Carroll, the picture being under the direction of James Hall, who produced "The Bull's Eye."

Mr. Hall has had the production advice and co-operation of such men as Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra, and George Fitzmaurice, supervising director of the Pathe Astra West Coast studios.

Gilson Willets, the author, is the writer of more than twenty published books and novels. In preparing the story of "Hands Up," he has made a thorough investigation of the material with which he has worked and his ability as a builder of fiction assures a story of love and romance that will have the same appeal that his many works have had.

Ruth Roland, the star, won the hearts of screen enthusiasts by her work in "Who Pays," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife," also in several five reel features released by Pathe. The star of "Hands Up," whose return to the screen is marked by this big serial, has been on the stage thirteen years and yet is only 22. She made her debut as a child on the Pacific Coast and was regarded as a phenomenon.

When playing "Little Lord Fauntleroy" at the age of six, she attracted the attention of David Belasco, who did not hesitate to state that she was the best child actress he had ever seen. Her versatility was such that she played both comedy and drama.

She first appeared in motion pictures in Western and Indian plays and later was seen in comedies and then followed "Who Pays," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife." "Hands Up" is her first Western picture since the old days.

George Chesebro will be remembered for his recent work in "Broadway Arizona," in which Olive Thomas was recently starred. He has been in the show business since a small boy, having been born in Minneapolis, and played in stock all over the country, as well as in musical comedies not only in America, but in China, Japan and the Philippine Islands. He played leads with Olive Thomas for many months, also with Mae Murray, Dorothy Philips and others. Before his present engagement for "Hands Up," he was leading man with Viola Dana.

Many Want "Over the Top"

Among the scores of inquiries for "Over the Top," which reached the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, last week were some from small towns which do not even have a motion picture theatre. The inquiries were made on behalf of schools, churches and civic organizations.

Mr. Irwin says that despite the fact that the picture, in most sections of the country, is still booking on first run and that the first run accounts will keep all of the prints in practically every branch working until the latter part of July or the first of August, requests for first and second run bookings continue to pile up.

In the big centers, where "Over the Top" is running on an indefinite basis, it is reported that the business has been phenomenal. In Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Louis and other big cities crowded houses have greeted every performance and the fame of Sergeant Empey, the soldier-star, and Vitagraph is increasing with each showing.

Ebony Starts New Picture

A distinct departure from the broad comedy vehicle for the Ebony colored performers is announced for the early future by General Film Company.

The Chicago producing company has begun the work of filming "Luck in Old Clothes," a story by E. K. Means, a well known American writer, which appeared in one of the Munsey publications. This is a delightful story of negro life of a humorous character and, it is predicted, will make one of the most entertaining of screen offerings.

Departing from its usual custom, the Ebony Company has selected a mixed company of white and negro players for the filming of the story, and a high order of treatment is planned.

The current release in the Ebony comedy series is "Are Working Girls Safe?" one of the liveliest and best of these ludicrous productions.

Deplores Tragic Themes

Tom Moore, the Goldwyn standby, has definite ideas as to what should and what should not be pictured on the screen. He considers not only what he prefers to play when he says that the public wants light comedy-drama at this time.

"The American spirit," says Moore, "is what I like to reflect on the screen, and the American character without an ever-present sense of fun is not true to type. It is for this reason that I do not think American photoplays dealing with heavy, tragic themes reveal Americans at their best."

"The Girl in His House" Released June 24

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Declared to Be the Best Picture Starring Earle Williams in a Year

"THE GIRL IN HIS HOUSE," declared by an advance notice from Vitagraph to be the best picture in which Earle Williams has appeared in a year, is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, as the Blue Ribbon Feature release for the week of June 24. Mr. Williams is supported by Grace Darmond. The picture was made at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood under the direction of Tom Mills.

"The Girl in His House" is from the book of the same title by Harold McGrath, which ran as a serial in the Ladies' Home Journal. To the exhibitor the film affords a rare opportunity for bookstore, department store and window display exploitation in addition to the regular mediums.

The story deals with wealthy young James Armitage (Earle Williams), who is jilted by a girl and after turning his estate over to his lawyer, sails for Burma. There he is engrossed in engineering work for six years—until a stray newspaper informs him the girl, who had married another, has been widowed.

The old love still strong, he returns home to resume his interrupted suit. No one knows he is enroute, yet when he arrives home he finds his beautiful home brilliantly lighted and occupied by a girl, who lives alone.

Armitage learns from a friend that in his absence his lawyer had made away with half his fortune and one of his deals was to sell the house for $80,000 to the father of the girl. Armitage meets the girl and, impressed by her charm and loneliness, resolves to keep from her the fact she has no moral claim to the place. He also meets his old sweetheart and finds his love for her dead. He applies himself vigorously to rehabilitating his wrecked fortune and giving full sway to his love for Doris Athelstone (Grace Darmond), "the girl in his house."

The girl's father, it appears, is an explorer always about to return to her but who never comes. From letters she receives from him, which Armitage sees, he discovers that the father is the lawyer who stole his fortune. In his love for the girl he keeps this a secret.

Armitage attempts to get into a safe in his home to obtain valuable deeds and is discovered and shot in the arm by Doris, who learns his identity by his handkerchief which he drops. This forces him to admit the transaction of the house and results in her confession of her love for him.

He then starts out to unravel the mystery of her father and finds him dying in Yucatan. The father tells how he stole to protect his daughter from want; and forgiven by Armitage he dies, happy that she will always be secure in the love of the man he wronged.

Armitage returns and he and Doris are married, his only secret from her being the fact her father had been a thief.

Kolker Becomes a Director

Henry Kolker, one of America's most distinguished actors, has decided to add to his attainments by becoming a motion picture director. He will learn every angle of the "game" under the best possible auspices, as assistant to the celebrated French director, Albert Capellani, at the Metro studio.

Mr. Kolker will be associated with Mr. Capellani in the production of Mme. Nazimova's forthcoming Screen Classics picture, "L'Occident," a screen version of the play by the famous Belgian, Henri Kistemaecker.

After he has been associated with the French director in three productions, he will make up his mind whether to return to the speaking stage as actor-manager or remain in the new field permanently.

Garson Signs Up Blanche Sweet

Owing to her good work in "The Hushed Hour," which was recently completed at D. W. Griffith's Fine Arts studio in Hollywood, Harry Garson has signed up a long term contract with Blanche Sweet.

Miss Sweet's next picture will be "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes. The production will be made in New York and it is Miss Sweet's intention to leave for the east the first part of July, so as to start work at once.

It has not yet been decided as to how "The Hushed Hour" and her other pictures will be released, but this will be determined upon Mr. Garson's arrival at his New York office about July 15.

New Lytell Picture Chosen

"Boston Blackie's Little Pal," a screen adaptation of the popular "Boston Blackie" stories which have been appearing in the Red Book Magazine, will be Bert Lytell's next starring vehicle under the Metro banner, following "The Trail to Yesterday" and "No Man's Land." Mr. Lytell, having finished work in his second Metro picture, will start on his third in the fore part of the coming week.

A. S. Le Vine has prepared the scenario of "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," and Mr. Lytell will be directed by E. Mason Hopper, who recently finished directing Edith Storey in "As the Sun Went Down."

Regains Select Franchise

J. J. Allen, head of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, of Canada, has announced that the Canadian franchise of the Select Pictures Corporation has been regained by his company.

Phil Kauffman, who became Canadian general manager for Select a few weeks ago, will still handle Select features in the Dominion, however, and Select exchange offices will be continued in Montreal and Toronto. But Famous Players will exercise final control.

Baby Marie Osborne in Straight Drama

Makes Debut in New Line of Art in Pathe Program Feature, "The Voice of Destiny"

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, tiny Pathe star, has gone in for serious drama. Her first appearance as a bona fide dramatic star is announced in "The Voice of Destiny," a five-part play which heads the Pathe program to be released the week of June 23.

Baby Marie plays the role of Marie Lind, a winsome bit of femininity who is the prime favorite of an indulgent uncle, the brother of her father. The uncle is suddenly stricken blind. Marie's father, a weakling, takes over the uncle's business.

Marie helps her blind uncle by reading his mail to him every day so that he can dictate replies into a dictating machine. She learns that her uncle keeps valuable jewels and a revolver in the bottom of the machine and reveals the fact to her mother and father.

Marie's father loses money on stocks and confesses to Marie's uncle. In a quarrel the father attacks the blind man and when later the uncle is murdered, his brother is held for the crime. How Baby Marie saves her father from conviction is cleverly shown and the picture has a powerfully convincing finale.

Episode 16 of "The House of Hate" also is released on this program. This chapter is called "The Vial of Death" and in the two reels there is a full measure of thrill, mystery and suspense. Antonio Moreno is nearly poisoned by a woman substituted for a nurse by the Hooded Terror, but is saved by the last-minute intervention of Pearl White. The action is fast and the suspense well sustained.

The Toto comedy, "Cleopatsy," a two reel travesty on the story of "Cleopatra," is another release on the program.

"Are Crooks Dishonest?", a Harold Lloyd comedy, part seven of "Britain's Bulwarks," "Fighting the Hun at St. Quentin," a Post Travel Series picture, and two news reels complete the bill.

Petrova Starts Across the Continent

Visits Boston Following Trip to Washington and Baltimore, Where She Strikes Out for the West

FOLLOWING the personal appearance of Madame Olga Petrova in Washington and Baltimore, which marked the opening of her country-wide tour in behalf of the War Savings Stamp movement, she returned to New York last week to witness a special screening of "Patience Sparhawk," her fifth production.

Immediately following the showing she departed for Boston, accompanied by Beulah Livingstone, her personal representative, and Bobbie North, studio manager, where she will commence her tour in reality. N. H. Gordon of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of that city will co-operate with the Polish star and has guaranteed to have an audience of forty thousand persons on Boston Commons to hear her talk.

Before leaving New York, arrangements were completed between the actress and the New York War Savings Stamp Committee whereby the official government War Savings Stamp inscription will be carried on all the star's stationery. In addition to this privilege, the committee is furnishing all of the cuts for publicity purposes, together with various patriotic posters and booklets.

Miss Livingstone, Madame Petrova's personal representative, has arranged to have a special government poster for Madame Petrova's big drive, which will be produced in all the government publicity. This poster will be stamped with the W. S. S. insignia and used for lobby displays and one sheets in the houses where the Polish actress makes her personal appearance.

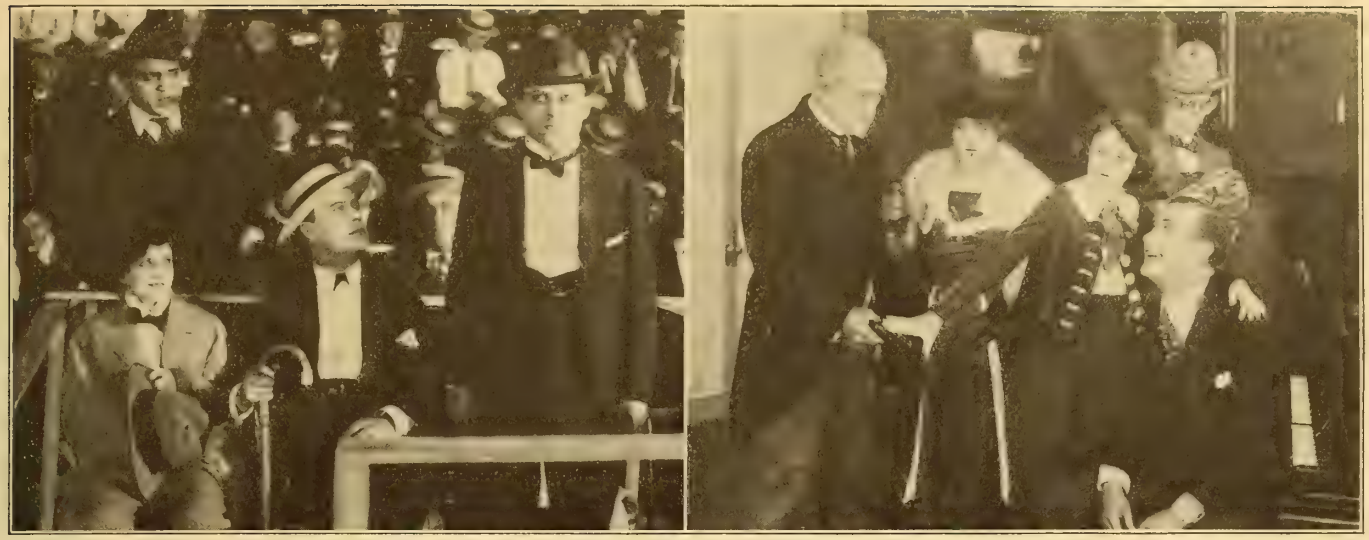
A new picture of Geraldine Farrar, Goldwyn star.

Goldwyn-Farrar Picture Due to Be Started

That Goldwyn is all in readiness for Geraldine Farrar to begin her first production was evidenced this week by the arrival in New York of Reginald Barker, Miss Farrar's director, from Los Angéles.

Mr. Barker completed his last Pacific Coast picture on Sunday, June 2, and left the following day for New York, bringing with him the scripts and continuities of three big Farrar productions which had been sent to him weeks before and gone over with him in all details by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, with whom Mr. Barker signed his Goldwyn contract.

Miss Farrar's first Goldwyn production is going to be one of the big surprises of the fall season.



Dexter Stays with Lasky

Elliott Dexter, accounted one of screendom's most talented and best looking leading men, has cast his fortunes for another year with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Dexter will probably remain at the West Coast studio for some time.

Among his first appearances with the Lasky company were those wherein he supported Marie Doro, who afterward became Mrs. Dexter. He supported Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redwoods" and later went East, where he was leading man for Mme. Cavalieri in her first Paramount Picture, "The Eternal Temptress."

Metro Forced to Get More Studio Room

Top Floor of Biograph Plant in New York Engaged and David Thompson Is Put in Charge

METRO has rented the top floor of the Biograph studio in New York for the use of Metro and Screen Classics stars and companies. This was found to be a necessary measure on account of the firm's many activities, which have expanded to such an extent that there is no longer room enough in the East and West coast studios, the capacities of which are crowded to the utmost.

Viola Dana will be one of the stars to work in the "deepest Bronx" location. Her new production, "Flower of the Dusk," a picturization of Myrtle Reed's famous novel, will be made there under the direction of John H. Collins. Emily Stevens will probably make "Kildare of Storm" there under the direction of Edwin Carewe. "Kildare of Storm" is a screen version of Eleanor Mercein Kelly's novel of the same name, published by the Century company.

Whether Mme. Nazimova and Ethel Barrymore, in their forthcoming productions will be at the Biograph or Metro's home studio is as yet undecided.

David Thompson, assistant to Maxwell Karger, Metro's production manager, will take charge of Metro's "extension studio" and will take his own working crew with him. Leander de Cordova will for the present take Mr. Thompson's place at the home studio.

Every star, director and company of Metro Pictures Corporation is busily engaged. Activities in all lines are almost without precedent.

Exterior locations for Mme. Nazimova's Screen Classics production de luxe, "L'Occident," by Henry Kistemaecker, have already been chosen by Albert Capellani, the French director in charge.

The honor of the flag of France is the central thought in this supreme story, the counterplot being the unchangeable differences between the Orient and the Occident.

"To Hell with the Kaiser," the Screen Classics multiple reel patriotic feature directed by George Irving, with Lawrence Grant and Olive Tell in the leading roles, is practically ready for release.

Popular Edith Storey, who has returned from Metro's Western studio at Hollywood, is choosing her costumes and aiding her director, Herbert Blache, in selecting her cast for the new Lois Zellner screen romance that has been written for her.

May Allison will soon finish work in "A Successful Adventure," an original story by June Mathis which Harry Franklin is directing.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are deep in the preparation of "Both Members," the original story by Luther A. Reed which Charles J. Brabin is directing.

Viola Dana has just completed "Opportunity," the adaptation by John H. Collins of Edgar Franklyn's story, originally published in the All-Story Weekly.

Emmy Wehlen is enjoying a brief vacation until Miss Allison's picture, "A Successful Adventure," is completed, as her next feature photodrama will be directed by Harry L. Franklin, at present her sister-star's director.

On the West coast, Metro stars and companies are equally active.

Ince Gives Up Idea of Moving

Announcement is made by Thomas H. Ince that all negotiations for the removal of his organization to the Brunton studios, with the idea of procuring additional facilities, are off.

It was Mr. Ince's intention to have his three Paramount stars, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, work at the above named studio, though in no manner affiliating, or having the remotest connection, with the Paralta Company.

However, Mr. Ince has decided to retain the old Biograph and Selig studios, enlarging each to meet the requirements of his organization.

Big Paralta Booking

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the Paralta portion of Hodkinson Service will play throughout the Poli circuit in the following towns: New Haven, Waterbury, Hartford and Bridgeport, Connecticut, and Worcester, Massachusetts.

This adds to the long list of circuits throughout the country which are already playing Paralta plays with success and demonstrates that these productions are of the consistent quality claimed for them.

Pictures to Help in Harvest

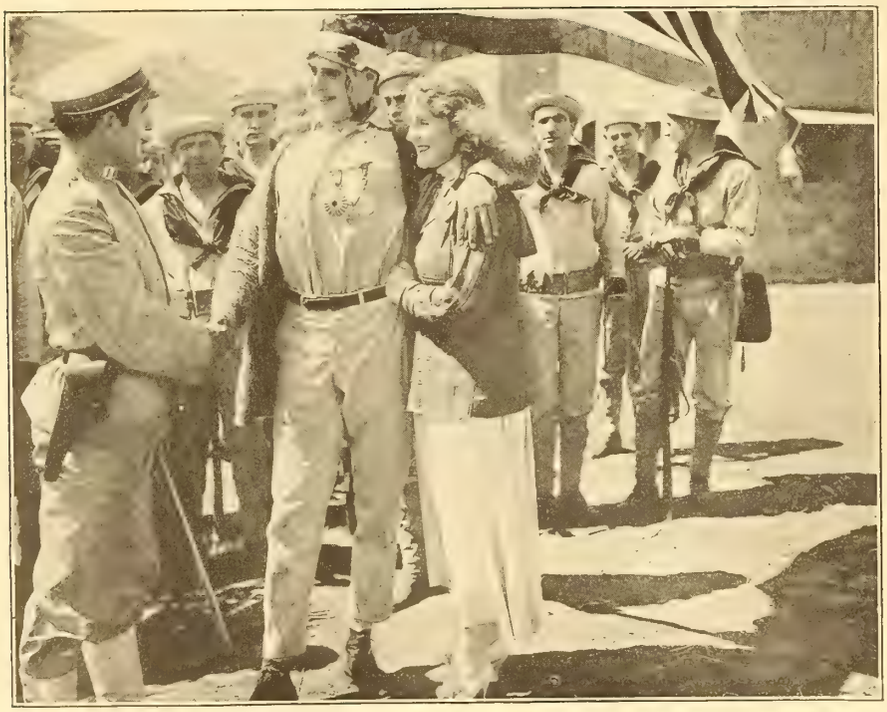
Needs of farmers in obtaining help for the harvest season will be told in moving pictures to be shown in 15,000 theatres throughout the country during the next month, the federal employment service has announced. The pictures will urge all who can to enlist for farm work as a vital war duty and will give information for prospective workers.

Fox About to Release "The Kid Is Clever"

Picture Is a Film Within a Film and Is Put Forth as "One Long Laugh From the Beginning to the Final Fade-Out"

A RAPID-FIRE comedy of South American revolutionists, an adventure-loving young American and an eccentric motion picture director is supplied by George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever," which is announced by Fox as the next Special Feature release. The picture, which is a film within a film, is described as "one long laugh from the beginning to the final fade-out."

The picture tells the difficulties which George Walsh experiences when word comes to the studio that his director is ill. In the message announcing the director's illness, Walsh is authorized by William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, to employ his own director.



While George is wondering where he can pick up a director, Monsieur Jules De Hoe Beaux, the great French cinema director, appears in the studio and applies for a job. George Walsh immediately gives him a job directing the new picture and work is begun.

A month later the picture is completed and in one of the projection rooms Walsh, his cameraman and the new director view the result. The story is as follows:

Kirk White, a college athlete, upon graduation decided to see some adventure before settling down to business. His uncle, who had amassed a large fortune in South America, dies, leaving his fortune to Kirk, provided the latter is in South America by August 1 to claim it. Otherwise the money will go to one Lopez, a South American bandit, who once had befriended the uncle.

Lopez is in New York trying to persuade Kirk's father to finance a revolution. When the old man refuses, Lopez decides to kidnap Kirk, who is about to sail to South America, and hold him until after August 1, when the money will then go to Lopez. The adventures that befall Kirk then come at a fast and furious rate, but in the end, Kirk vanquishes his captors, wins a bride and also the fortune.

But the star, sitting in the projection room, is displeased with the result. After some debate, he and the cameraman throw the director out of the studio and pursue him down the street.

One of the many laughs in the new Fox picture, "The Kid Is Clever," starring George Walsh.

"Stolen Orders" Makes Good

The conclusion of the first week's showing of "Stolen Orders" at the Park Theatre, New York City, has thoroughly vindicated the unanimous judgment of the New York motion picture critics, who declared that the picture should be a box office magnet. Not only has "Stolen Orders" made money on the Park Theatre engagement, but it has set a record for engagements at high box office prices.

Goldwyn to Star Tom Moore

Goldwyn has decided to star Tom Moore. The first picture under the new arrangement has been completed and is now being cut and assembled. It has received no previous publicity because it was decided to keep Moore's leap into stardom a secret for the time being.

In starring the man who for so long has served as a foil for Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand, Goldwyn says it is acting in response to insistent demands from exhibitors and the public alike.

"Just for Tonight" is the name of Tom Moore's first vehicle. The story is both adventurous and romantic, as befits a young Irishman with a fascinating smile, a handsome face and a pair of laughing, "come-hither" eyes.

Moore has a long string of successes behind him. Following his personal triumph in "Brown of Harvard," his advent into Goldwyn pictures came in the role of Tony Quintard, the hungry poet in "The Cinderella Man," in which he played opposite Mae Marsh.

The public next saw Mr. Moore as Jack Forsythe, the son of the corset king who fell in love with and won Mabel Normand in her first Goldwyn production, "Dodging a Million." Following that, Miss Normand again obtained Mr. Moore as her leading man in "The Floor Below." Then Madge Kennedy had him in "The Danger Game."

Charles Giblyn is Mr. Moore's director.

Star Auctions Off Clothes

Clara Kimball Young, with the aid of her manager, Harry Garson, put the "punch" into the big bazaar at the Lasky studio at Hollywood Saturday night for the benefit of soldiers' families, by auctioning off her clothes, each piece that she wore, one thing at a time, to the highest bidder.

Miss Young disrobed on a platform in a crowd of several thousand persons behind a large screen. Her novel and original method caused the keenest interest and high bidding.

Miss Young's dress, an exquisite Lucille gown, was the first article sold. It was bought by Mr. Tally of Tally's Theatre, Los Angeles. Cecil De Mille, after much spirited bidding, received her stockings and garters, Elliot Dexter, her corsets, William S. Hart, her slippers, and Douglas Fairbanks, a most sheer and shimmery bit of negligee.

The last garment which was auctioned off caused most spirited bidding between De Mille, Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and Hart, and Chaplin got it for $185.

Miss Young will return East in a few weeks, immediately after the completion of "The Savage Woman."

Sample of the sensational action and picturesque beauty in "A Fight for Millions," the new Vitagraph feature soon to be released.

Hodkinson Tells How His Plan Works Out

Corrects Belief Held in Some Quarters That It Is the Same as a Film Exchange Business

W. W. HODKINSON, in a statement last week, corrected the idea held in some quarters that his co-partnership plan is, in effect, a film exchange business.

"Of course this idea is due to a lack of complete information and understanding of our plans," remarked Mr. Hodkinson. "To begin with, I wish to make it clear that we are not conducting a film exchange business in the usual meaning of the word. Our function is to gather together a large group of representative theatres throughout the country and to utilize the enormous force they would represent to do the very things which the exhibitors themselves would do to protect their business, but which they individually and singly are powerless to do.

"The capital furnished by our prospective stockholders will not be employed as investment in branch offices, nor used for overhead expenses while we organize. We already have a going business fully financed and showing a profit every week. The capital is required as advances to producers to assure ourselves of additional quality product for further expansion.

"We do not contemplate the establishment of new film exchanges. One of the strongest planks in our platform is the economy we have effected through our utilization of an exchange organization already established.

"Our present contract with this exchange corporation gives it a certain commission for handling our sales, which is always fixed and reduced with the volume of our sales. In other words, there is always a profit between the commission we pay them and the percentage received by us from the producers.

"The central organization does not prosper at the benefit of the subsidiary corporations throughout the country, as we only retain a small percentage for administrative expenses and any deficit on that account will not, of course, interfere with the dividends of the local corporation stock.

"We have no financial interest in any producing companies nor is any producer going to hold stock in our corporation. The product we handle is acquired on a percentage basis only with no risk on our part whatsoever.

"But would a producer give us his entire output on such terms if he knew that its distribution was controlled by the exhibitors, by a group or groups of men, who, despite their integrity and sincerity had no knowledge of the distributing end of the business? The exhibitor's business is to run his theatre, the manufacturer's to produce pictures. We furnish the means of contact in such a way as to avoid domination of one faction by the other.

"That film exchanges as a rule are unprofitable is a result of the existing unstable conditions in the industry which we aim to remedy by our Co-partnership Plan. When we have an assured market and an instant representation for our product without having to peddle it and to sell it over and over again our distributing organization will make money and the more self-sold customers —or co-partners—we get, the larger will our profits be."

Chapter Titles of New Serial Are Announced

Episode titles for the fifteen chapters of "A Fight for Millions," the forthcoming Vitagraph serial starring William Duncan, are given out by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, as follows:

Episode 1—"The Share."
Episode 2—"Flames of Peril."
Episode 3—"The Secret Stockade."
Episode 4—"The Precipice of Horror."
Episode 5—"The Path of Thrills."
Episode 6—"The Spell of Evil."
Episode 7—"The Gorge of Destruction."
Episode 8—"In the Clutches."
Episode 9—"The Escape."
Episode 10—"The Secret Tunnel."
Episode 11—"The Noose of Death."
Episode 12—"The Tide of Disaster."
Episode 13—"The Engine of Terror."
Episode 14—"The Decoy."
Episode 15—"The Sealed Envelope."

Prints on the early episodes were shipped last week to all of the Vitagraph exchanges. This marks the opening of the campaign on this newest chapter photoplay, which was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, authors of "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman" and "The Woman in the Web."

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, previously had instructed the sales organization not to offer "A Fight for Millions" until they had seen some of the episodes themselves and permitted as many exhibitors as possible to see them. Thus this week will be "A Fight for Millions" week in all Vitagraph exchanges, with the exhibitors in all parts of the country being invited to see the early episodes before they book it.

New William Russell Picture June 24

"Up Romance Road" Presents Athletic Star in Distinct Character Type Amid Romance and Thrills

WILLIAM RUSSELL succeeds in creating a distinct character type in "Up Romance Road," his big mystery melodrama, released by Mutual June 24.

As Gregory Thorne, a young chap of wealth and position who is bored by pink teas and social chatter and yearns for the high-lights of adventure, he will appeal to every red-blooded American.

Gregory, in a spirit of mischief, pretends to his fiancee's father, a millionaire ship owner, that he knows the plotters who have threatened to blow up his plant if a ship loaded with supplies for the Allies is allowed to sail. The old man is riled and forbids Gregory to see his fiancee unless he divulges the identity of the crooks. Then the excitement begins. When Gregory attempts to elope with his fiancee, they are both kidnaped by the gang of spies and held as hostages.

How Gregory escapes and frustrates the crooks makes a thrilling drama. There is action in every foot of film, more action than Gregory bargained for when he went "Up Romance Road." A spectacular fight, a wild ride in his racing car with the leader of the gang riding astride the hood of his machine, and the suspense in finding the bomb before it explodes, supply the thrills.

The story and scenario are by Stephen Fox, a well-known magazine writer. The production was under the direction of Henry King, who was responsible for Russell's success, "Hearts or Diamonds?" It is the second picture made by William Russell Productions, Inc.

Russell is supported by an admirable cast, including Charlotte Burton, who plays the lead, Carl Stockdale, Emma Kluge, Claire DuBrey, John Burton and Joseph Belmont.

Billie Rhodes will appear in a Strand comedy, "Her Spooney Affair," released June 25. Jack falls in love with Mary at first sight. When he calls at her aunt's house, Mary is disguised as the maid, in order to test the sincerity of his affection. All sorts of embarrassing situations ensue and Jack is accused of trying to get away with the silverware when he is found in the cellar with the silver spoons in his pocket. It all ends happily, however, when Jack learns he has been the subject of a little joke and realizes he has won out with Mary.

Issues Nos. 34 and 35 of the Screen Telegram are released June 26 and 30.

Donates House for Benefit

G. L. Hooper, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Topeka, Kansas, recently donated his house, orchestra and films for one afternoon to the Social Service Club of that city for a benefit, the proceeds of which went to help the poor of the city. The feature film shown was Select's "Over There," and an Arbuckle-Paramount comedy.

Goldwyn Distribution System a Year Old

Goldwyn's releasing organization, the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, last week celebrated its first birthday, its offices having been opened throughout North America in the second week of June, 1917.

What one year ago was but the beginning of a distribution system has now expanded until it covers every part of the habitable globe and not only releases Goldwyn's own productions, but independently made pictures of other producers.

At no time in film history has any company succeeded in girdling the globe in its first year of existence. Goldwyn's achievement has been due to almost superhuman labors and the unceasing activities of Samuel Goldfish and his aids.

The United States offices of Goldwyn are in Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Washington, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, St. Louis and Seattle—nineteen offices in all.

Writes Photoplay in Trenches

Snatching a moment whenever possible in the vigils of the night while serving in the trenches in France, Lieut. Howard Irving Young of the American army wrote a picture-play which he named "Song of the Heart." Into it he poured the longings of his soul, his human desire for life's supreme happiness, his unswerving determination to do his soldierly duty under all circumstances. And when he had made of his picture-play a great, vital human document he sent it to World Pictures.

"Song of the Heart" was received by World last week. The manuscript was in bad condition. Part of it was written in pencil and part in pen. Such scraps of paper as Lieutenant Young could obtain in the trenches had been used. And yet, despite these physical handicaps, the virile soul of the story gripped and held. It was purchased at once and the continuity for it is now being written. It will be Louise Huff's second World starring vehicle.

Lieutenant Young was in the old Seventh regiment of the New York National Guard and with it saw service in Mexico before going to France.

Well, That's One Way

Five Blue Bibbon Features in July

Pictures Present Harry Morey, Edward Earle, Corrine Griffith, Alice Joyce and Shipman and Whitman

FIVE BLUE RIBBON FEATURES, all of them from stories written by world-famous authors, are scheduled for July by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company. The program for the month follows:

July 1—"Tangled Lives," featuring Harry Morey with Betty Blythe. Written by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by Paul Scardon.

July 8—"One Thousand Dollars," featuring Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres and Florence Deshon. Written by O. Henry. Directed by Kenneth Webb.

July 15—"Love Watches," featuring Corinne Griffith. Written by R. De Flers and G. Caillavet. Directed by Frederic A. Thomson.

July 22—"To the Highest Bidder," featuring Alice Joyce. Written by Florence Morse Kingsley. Directed by Tom Terriss.

July 29—"A Gentleman's Agreement," featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. Written by Wallace Irwin. Directed by David Smith.

This appears, at first glance, to be one of the strongest programs for a single month which has been scheduled by any company in the feature lists. It is especially well chosen from the exhibitor's standpoint, Vitagraph offering some of its strongest stars in plays by writers of recognized power.

"Tangled Lives," in which Mr. Morey will appear, is described as a high-class drama by James Oliver Curwood, whose newest story of the north woods, entitled "Nomads of the North," now is being read by Red Book followers.

"One Thousand Dollars" is a drama of New York life, with some fine light comedy touches. It is the fourth of the O. Henry works to be reproduced as a five-reeler, and is given rank with the others. It is worthy of note that each of this series of O. Henry Blue Ribbon features presents a different Vitagraph star. In "I Will Repay," Corinne Griffith was featured; "An American Live Wire" had Earle Williams for its star, and "Find the Woman," Alice Joyce. Now it is Edward Earle.

"Love Watches," in which Corinne Griffith is to be seen, will be a reproduction of the famous Frohman play in which Billie Burke scored one of her biggest triumphs on the speaking stage. It is from the pen of two French writers, who were honored for it by the French Academy, and scored a huge success in Paris and London before it was produced in this country.

"To the Highest Bidder" will present Alice Joyce in another appealing role, in a play which is strong both in title and in theme. Miss Joyce has been seen in excellent pictures during the last eighteen months, dating from the time before "Within the Law" and "Womanhood" were produced,

"A Gentleman's Agreement," with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, marks the advent of Wallace Irwin to the ranks of Vitagraph's literary geniuses, and under the handling of David Smith, who produced such a wonderful picture in "Baree, the Son of Kazan," the story should make a powerful screen play.

Danish Actress in World Film

Valda Valkeyrian, the young Danish actress and dancer, who has created so very favorable an impression in pictures, will be seen in support of Louise Huff in her forthcoming World feature, "T'Other Dear Charmer," which William P. S. Earle is directing.

"Tempered Steel" Savors of South

In addition to the melodramatic "punch" which characterizes practically every scene of "Tempered Steel," the fourth special Petrova production, this latest vehicle of the Polish star, written especially for her by George Middleton, will delight lovers of the south.

Many important scenes are laid below the Mason and Dixon Line. Several weeks were spent by Madame Petrova and company under the direction of Ralph Ince in North and South Carolina for the purpose of getting the proper atmosphere. Included are scenes of the cotton fields with their picturesque colored workers.

Jack Marks Opens New Theatre

One of the finest motion picture theatres in the south threw open its doors on Monday, June 10, when a special invitation performance was followed by the first public showing of Goldwyn's "Joan of Plattsburg," starring Mabel Normand, in Jack Marks' new $150,000 opera house at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Mr. Marks already owns the Orpheum there.

Clarksburg, with 11,000 population, points with pardonable pride to the opera house. Its seating capacity is 1,400. The lobby is finished in Italian marble, with a floor of black and white tile. The screen is of gold fibre adjusted to a throw of 115 feet from two motor-driven machines installed in a concrete projection booth fourteen feet square. All of the seats are leather upholstered and there is not a post in the house. Music will be supplied by an orchestra and a large organ.

The opera house is the twenty-fourth amusement place Mr. Marks has either built or owned, or both. He began in the show business at Anderson, Indiana, with a house seating 198.

Goldfish Cheered By Prosperity in West

Returns to New York and Advises Other Producers to Get Away Often If They Would Shake Off Pessimism

READY to carry into immediate execution the doubling of Goldwyn's annual output, Samuel Goldfish has returned from California expressing greater confidence in the development of Goldwyn and the expansion of motion picture popularity than he has shown at any time in the last two years.

Mr. Goldfish while away covered ten thousand miles of territory, saw important exhibitors in most of the large cities and came in contact with the owners of both the big and little houses in the western half of America.

"Every producer should take at least a semi-annual trip to the Pacific Coast," says Mr. Goldfish, "for such trips would destroy the cynical and ofttimes pessimistic outlook which New York associations and lobby lounging induces.

"The exhibitors of the West, large and small, are too busy, too prosperous, too busily devoted to building bigger houses to take care of their patronage to take time for pessimism. In Los Angeles the Kehrlein brothers are finding their handsome new Kinema theatre taxed to capacity and I was happy to arrange with them to become the first-run customers of Goldwyn pictures, thereby giving our productions a home where increased house capacity will enable vastly more residents of Los Angeles to see them.

"Sid Grauman has made an instantaneous success with his new $1,000,000 Grauman Theatre and deserves all possible praise for his courage in building such a costly and beautiful structure. Always fine and aggressive showmen, the Graumans are now attaining the greatest success of their lives, which they well deserve.

"In San Francisco I learned from Mr. Turner of the big Turner and Dahnken circuit, that patronage conditions have never before come anywhere near equalling their present levels. These two showmen's greatest regret is that their popular Tivoli theatre is not twice as large.

"Eugene Roth's faith in the present and the future of the motion picture is advertised to the world in his beautiful and remarkable California Theatre, which from the day that its doors were opened has played to capacity business without lessening even in the smallest degree the attendance at his Portola theatre, which immediately adjoins the California.

"Howard Sheehan of the Sheehan and Lourie partnership, which owns the Rialto, has made a tremendous success by good showmanship and a skilled knowledge of presentation, and since my departure from the Coast has purchased two other theatres in nearby cities.

"Contact with men of this sort has built anew my increased faith in the solidity of American exhibitors. All of these men have the big, broad viewpoints that prevail in all other successful businesses, and the bigness of their viewpoints should and does stimulate every producer in the industry."

Mr. Goldfish points out to Secretary of War Baker and Provost Marshal General Crowder the vital essentiality of the motion picture in war time and urges both of these officials to give earnest attention before depleting the picture industry of too many men.

"It has been a pleasure to find our governmental officers recognizing the essentiality of the stage and screen," says Mr. Goldfish. "The government view that the theatre and other amusements should be encouraged and sustained is both just and wise.

"The motion picture industry is the biggest help the government has in winning the war. Through the picture theatres is the one great way of spreading propaganda and information. The pictures have helped in all the great drives for money. There are more than 18,000 four-minute men speaking in the theatres and other amusement places of the country. Take away the pictures and you at once lower the morale of the nation.

"The screen is supporting the morale on the other side, too. The government called in the producers and asked us to hurry and send pictures to Europe to foil the German propaganda, which is telling that America is as autocracy ridden as Russia, so we sent the pictures of American homes and the way people work and play here.

"The government also must have pictures for the soldiers of the cantonments and camps. Amusement is necessary to keep them happy. You can only have a stage show once in a while, but you can have the motion picture theatre all the time, on the ocean as well as at home. Motion pictures are essential and the men who act in them, distribute them and produce them are of vital service to the nation, especially at this time."

Lees Entertain Belgians

A feature of an entertainment given recently at Bayside, Long Island, by the residents of that town for 300 visiting Belgian soldiers, was the singing, dancing and speech-making of Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "baby grands," who went to the Long Island town between scenes in their latest production, "Doing Their Bit."

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Katherine, "this is my sister, Jane. I am Katherine. We have both worked in moving pictures a very long time and we like it very much and we're very glad to be with you."

Jane's speech was in verse and made a big hit with the audience. Jane said:

You'd scarce expect a little girl like me
To come up here where all can see
And make a speech as well as those
Who wear the grandest kind of clothes.
But I like you
And if you like me;
Then size don't count,
We will agree."

As souvenirs of the occasion Jane and Katherine were presented with a cartridge brought from the front, a button from a uniform worn in battle and a button from the uniform of a German prisoner.

Exhibitors Welcome Short Subjects

Approve New Universal Plan by Booking First Two-Reeler Fast—Eighty-Seven Prints Now Out

THAT there is a steadily growing demand for two and three reel dramatic subjects such as Universal has decided to issue, and that this demand is sufficiently great to be given recognition, is the consensus of opinion expressed in reports which Universal's exchange managers have forwarded to President Carl Laemmle.

These reports came as the result of a promise made by Universal's chief executive that his organization would seriously consider placing the short subjects on its program of weekly releases if it were definitely ascertained that exhibitors wanted them. This promise was made by Mr. Laemmle during his recent tour of his company's exchanges.

A report sent in by Barney Rosenthal, manager of the St. Louis exchange, contained the following:

"Not even in the palmiest days of the program was there such a strong demand for short subjects. The exhibitor is in desperate need of two and three reel dramas to round out his show and he doesn't know where to lay his hands on them. In fact, this need is so great that some of the showmen who formerly looked down upon serials, are now running them because they've got to show something with the feature.

"Nothing we've done in a long time, has afforded the exhibitors in this territory more satisfaction than our recent announcement concerning Universal's issuance of two reelers."

From John J. McAleer, the Pittsburgh representative, came this report:

"The enclosed bookings for the two reel dramas we are releasing tell their own story. So far as this territory is concerned, you couldn't do better than to make the short subject a permanent fixture of our weekly program."

That the sentiment on the West Coast is also in favor of the short dramatic subject is contained in a letter written by G. A. Metzger, manager of the Portland office.

"The day after the trade papers containing the story of Universal's plan to release two and three-reel dramas reached this corner of the country, two of my most important accounts came to me with the stories in their hands and requested that I confirm the announcements. When I told them it was 'honest Injun' they booked the pictures on the spot. I've been deluged with requests for bookings since."

As the result of this demand, orders for extra prints of the short subjects have been steadily coming in from all exchanges.

The first of the short subjects was a two reel western drama entitled, "Play Straight or Fight," featuring Helen Gibson of railroad series fame.

It is stated that the eighty-seventh print was shipped a few days ago.

Dr. Smith Invades New York

found influence upon American thought relative to this oldest of social problems.

"The program advocated by the picture is in direct support of the policy of the Federal government for the protection of soldiers as worked out by the Commission on Training Camp Activities in Washington. The breaking of the political protection of vice is demanded by Secretary Daniels, and the failure of officials of certain cities such as Philadelphia, and Vallejo, California, to obey the warnings of the secretary resulted in the government assuming control of the territory in the vicinity of the navy yards.

"Especially on this account did Secretary Daniels establish certain 'dry' sections. Through our own organization in California Commandant George of the Mare Island Navy Yard was furnished much of the data upon which he based his fight in that territory.

"The coming of 'The Finger of Justice' to certain cities like Sacramento, was the occasion of the turning of the tide of public opinion relative to these matters. We believe that such will be the case throughout the country.

"We are using the theatrical machinery of distribution on sound commercial lines, because that is the only way in which we can reach the millions of the American public.

"Dr. W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Film Corporation has assumed personal direction of the distribution of the picture. Wherever it is booked we shall co-operate with the local exhibitors in developing the propaganda value of the picture. It has been found that ministers are glad to announce its coming in their pulpits, and that social workers generally see the value of the campaign and are glad to co-operate."

Completes Big V. Comedy

Director J. A. Howe has just completed a Big V. comedy entitled, "Wounded Hearts and Wedding Rings," featuring the well-known team of Montgomery and Rock. "Shines and Monkey-Shines" is the name of the new Howe picture under production.

Ethel Barrymore Returns to Metro

First Picture Following Her Season on the Stage Will Be the Screen Version of "Our Mrs. McChesney"

ETHEL BARRYMORE, the dramatic star, having completed a brilliant season of stage successes at the Empire Theatre, New York, will return at once to her motion picture activities under the auspices of Metro, the only film concern with which she has been identified.

Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, has acquired for Miss Barrymore the screen rights to her famous play of a season ago, "Our Mrs. McChesney," which was dramatized by George V. Hobart and Edna Ferber from the famous Emma McChesney stories by Miss Ferber, including "Roast Beef Medium," "Personality Plus," and "Butterside Down."

Luther A. Reed is completing the picturization of "Our Mrs. McChesney" for Miss Barrymore's use, and it will be placed in production at once under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, who has been engaged for this production by special arrangement with Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin. A supporting cast of a high grade of excellence is being engaged.

"Our Mrs. McChesney" traces the fortunes of the clever saleswoman of the Featherloom Petticoat company. When the story opens Emma is shown "on the road," at the Sloane House, Sandusky, Ohio, where she is endeavoring to sell a large bill of goods. Her "deadly rival" is Abel Fromkin of the "Fromkin Form-Fitting Petticoat—It clings."

Emma discovers that the affairs of the Featherloom company are in a precarious condition and she refuses Fromkin's offer to identify herself with his firm, preferring to "stick by the ship." She is influenced in this decision by a fact at the moment unrecognized by herself—the existence of T. A. Buck, the junior member of the firm.

How she invents an entirely new "garment" to suit the dictates of fashion's whim, and incidentally sends the Featherloom stock soaring, and the way in which the marriage of her son Jack to a chorus-girl further affects the fortunes of the Featherloom company, are incidents in a story packed with heart interest.

Huge Merger Accomplished?

said to be a man of international reputation, a multi-millionaire known for his executive ability and gift for organization, but who had hitherto not been identified with the film industry.

It was thought, at the time this rumor was current, that it referred to a well known downtown banker, especially as it was asserted that three of the largest banking interests in the Wall Street district were behind the proposed merger.

Billie Rhodes as she appears in her latest Mutual-Strand comedy, "Her Spoony Affair."

The announcement, made early this week, that Col. Jacob Ruppert, the millionaire brewer and president of the Yankees, had investigated the motion picture business with a view to entering it in a large way gives another slant to the situation which is distinctly interesting. In the published report, which first appeared in "Wid's" and later in some of the other trade papers, it was said that Col. Ruppert contemplated forming a clearing house for exchanges with which he intended to simplify the distribution of films for all the exchanges now in existence.

This announcement is in itself, very significant, and it is certain that if Col. Ruppert is the man selected to direct this gigantic enterprise there will be ample capital to back it.

In this regard it may be said that the lack of new capital was one of the problems which has prevented the concerns involved from going forward with their plans up to this time.

The clearing house idea, as previously worked out, has proven economically sound in the vaudeville field and it is declared that if the same principles of the centralization of distribution were applied to the motion picture industry, an immediate saving of between $200,000 and $250,000 weekly would at once be effected in the reduction of selling costs and excessive overhead charges now borne by the various companies.

Later this saving would be paralleled by a similar reduction in the manufacturing costs, by relieving the different companies of the necessity for producing a given quantity of pictures during the year, as they are now required to manufacture, in order to maintain their programs and sales organizations.

In connection with the possibility that Col. Ruppert may be the man selected to head the new organization it was pointed out that Percy Waters, recently made general manager of Triangle, might be chosen to serve with him. It was even said that Mr. Waters was one of the two motion picture men whose names had been under consideration to head the alliance of the big film interests.

However this may be, Mr. Waters is by training and executive capacity well fitted for either position.

Certain it is if Col. Ruppert enters the motion picture business he will require as his lieutenant, some one as familiar with the details of film production and distribution as Mr. Waters is.

Mr. Waters could not be seen at the Triangle offices to confirm or deny this report. It was said, however, that the Triangle officials had no information yet in regard to the matter.

Clever Methods of Advertising

PUBLICITY THAT MAKES FOR PROFITS

Goldwyn to Supply Editorial "Ads"

Believes Success of Noted Newspaper Genius with This Style of Appeal Warrants Extensive Use

IF the editorials of one great newspaper genius are principally responsible for the 840,000 copies of a great New York newspaper that are sold daily, for the 450,000 copies of a Chicago paper and upwards of 250,000 copies of dailies in four other American cities, why will not an editorial style of advertising sell paid admissions by the thousand for motion picture theatres?

Goldwyn has asked this question of its exhibitors and found many of them in the large cities who are willing to spend their own money to test the innovation.

Therefore, beginning with Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star," by Charles A. Logue, Goldwyn increases its advertising exploitation features placed at the disposal of exhibitors by providing all customers with an editorial advertisement built to feed the great American demand for "human interest."

The first editorial advertisement of Goldwyn exploits "The Service Star" in the following manner:

A MESSAGE TO YOU FROM THE BLANK THEATRE
On the Most Important Subject in All the World.

TWENTY ODD MILLION AMERICAN WOMEN have formed the Republic of Love and Devotion.

They are bound together more closely by a common tie than any women have ever before been bound—in prehistoric times, in pagan times or in the days of modern civilization.

They are held together in a common cause by the ties of Love and Loyalty.

And they worship their men.

Mothers have pledged their hearts and souls.

Sweethearts are held by the passions of youthful affection.

Sisters are held by the ties of blood.

And even the old men give this indescribable Republic the approving recognition of reverence.

There is a new flag afloat in the world today.

It is not the flag of our country that brings millions to their feet with an emotional clutch in their throats.

It is not the flag of the Red Cross—the badge of the Armies of Mercy that floats over the fields of pain.

It is an insignia and emblem of the heart:

The new honor decoration of the American home:

The pennant of millions of doorways and windows that betokens to humanity that "This house has given a son or a husband; this house has given a MAN to the world-wide legion of humanity."

The flag of a single star—

THE SERVICE STAR of the warm-blooded, nation-loving millions who have made this the greatest country the world has ever known.

The star of the negro cabin in Alabama where a black boy has gone from the Cotton Belt.

The Star of a Columbia River salmon fisherman.

The star of a waiter in a Chinese restaurant in New York's submerged civilization.

The star of the millionaire or the millionaire's son rubbing elbows with the son of his mother's laundress.

The honor token of a Great Lakes deck hand and a California fruit packer.

One hundred million people are today thinking of these assorted products of our American civilization who are being re-made in the crucible of war.

We are today showing in THIS THEATRE a Goldwyn motion picture that will reach the heart of every man, woman and child in..... This picture is a drama of the American home and of mothers', daughters' and lovers' hearts. Not one scene of it is laid in Europe. Not one scene reveals a battle or preparation for battle. There are no spies, no struggles, no tense, unhappy moments to bring grief or pain to the womanhood of the nation.

But there is A WONDERFUL STORY, and all the way through it you see A WONDERFUL GIRL who through the power that God puts into the souls of women sends away A WONDERFUL BOY to make this A WONDERFUL WORLD TO LIVE IN.

Whether you are hard or soft of heart, whether you think you wish to or not, THERE IS NOTHING IN THE WORLD THAT CAN KEEP YOU FROM COMING TODAY TO THE ..... THEATRE to see

in
THE SERVICE STAR
By Charles A. Logue.

Goldwyn, in offering these editorial advertisements, points out that similar copy proved immensely successful in carrying to success two New York stage successes, "Rolling Stones" and "The Eternal Magdalene," three seasons ago—so successful in fact that the producers, Selwyn and Company, discarded ordinary display advertising for these attractions when they took to the road and employed editorial advertisements in the newspapers of every large city in America.

Tom Moore, Goldwyn leading man, delights in telling stories illustrating the Irishman's penchant for "bulls." This is his newest: Pat was on a sinking ship and was watching with interest the frantic passengers grabbing life preservers, putting them on and jumping overboard. "Shure," said he, "if everybody is stealing, I can, too." So he picked up a heavy piece of iron and jumped overboard. He is still at the bottom of the sea.

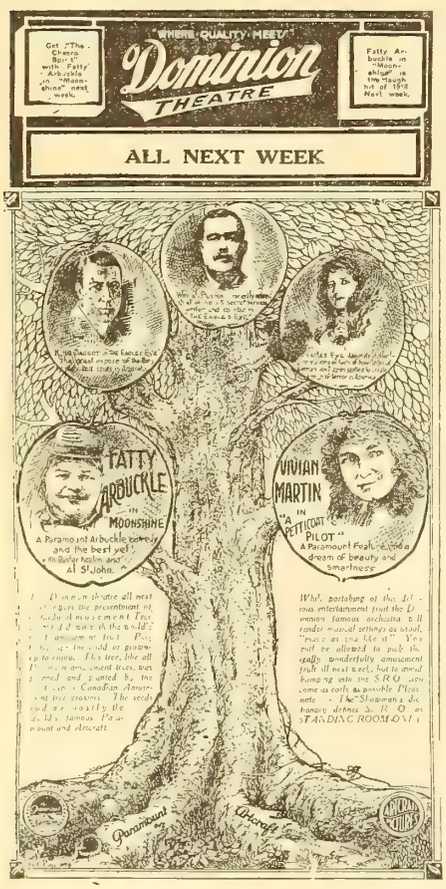
Writer Scores Misleading Theatre "Ads"

Mae Tinee in Chicago Tribune Protests Against Way One House Exploits "Up the Road with Sallie"

MAE TINEE, photoplay critic of The Chicago Tribune, took the occasion of some nice remarks about Constance Talmadge's new Select picture, "Up the Road with Sallie," to deliver a broadside against misleading advertisements in a recent Sunday issue of the paper.



"There's always something to throw a fit about, isn't there?" she says. "This week suppose we speak scathingly of the great, big, red-lettered, pernicious signs that advertise the most harmless and sometimes the most delightful of pictures.

"I asked a man, whose name you would all recognize were I to mention it, if he had seen 'Up the Road with Sallie.' I mentioned it to him because he often asks where he can see a really good picture.

"'Up the Road with Sallie'?" he asked me quizzically. "Why I saw that picture advertised in front of one of the loop theatres. Isn't it the one where they say, 'Don't miss the big bedroom scene'?"

"With reluctance I nodded. 'Yes,' I said, 'it is. But they had no business to mislead the public in any such manner. The bedroom scene in question is so funny and delicately handled that you could take your little 12 year old daughter to see it."

"This man said to me: 'Then the people putting out such misleading advertisements should be taken in hand by the police.' He grinned. 'I don't pretend to be one of the pure and righteous, Miss Tinee, but let me tell you something: The average decent male citizen is ashamed to be seen going into places that flaunt such signs as this. I'll go to see 'Up the Road with Sallie' some time when it comes out our way, but, for the very reason I've just given you, I wouldn't go to see it under its present guise downtown."

New $75,000 Theatre Opened

A beautiful new theatre—the Princess—has been opened in Cheyenne, Wyoming. Douglas Fairbanks in "Mr. Fix-It" was the initial feature.

The Princess was erected at an outlay of $75,000. The house will accommodate 1,300 persons, allowing 450 for the balcony and 850 for the ground floor. And every one of these 1,300 seats commands a full and unobstructed view of the stage.

Along each side is a row of eleven loges provided with four seats apiece, and three more loges are located in the rear. Two long aisles traverse the length of the auditorium.

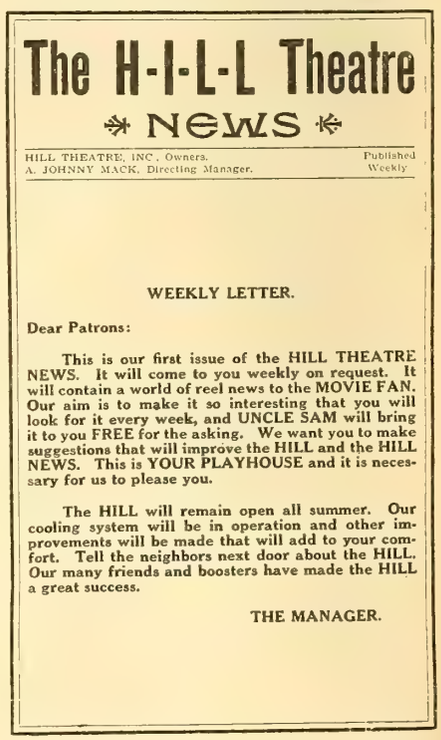
A modern system of ventilation has been provided which completely changes the air in the room every three minutes.

The lighting system and decorations comprise the chief feature. The theatre is literally the "house of a thousand lights," for there are three hundred lights in front and seven hundred on the interior. On the interior the lights are shaded with colored globes which add to the witchery of the scene.

The floors, seats and wood work are finished in steel gray, which forms a pleasing contrast to the blue of the carpets and draperies. The walls are decorated in designs blending copper, blue and old ivory, with blue, orange and copper colors in the ceiling. On the two angling walls verging to the stage are beautiful panels representing art and music.

The stage will afford ample room for vaudeville and road shows, possessing a depth of 28 feet and an interior width of 60 feet, while the front opening is 35 feet wide. The girders above the stage are 50 feet above the actors.

War Develops Ingenuity



In a letter to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, Harry Engholm, who is publicity representative of the United Kingdom branch for Fox, shows how the war is developing various devices to conserve the supply of war materials in England.

"With regard to our big productions," writes Engholm, "I have issued a novel form of synopsis, printed on a card ten inches by eight, one side of which contains a brief description of the play and the other an artistic portrait of the star in question. These synopses have secured for us universal praise, and in this country, with conditions as they are, they meet all the needs of the moment. The card is somewhat easier to get than paper for the time being.

"The closing of all houses of entertainment and restaurants in the southern counties of England at the hour of 10:30 at night does not seem to have affected the picture palace to any great extent—in fact, the picture palace, from my observation, is the one paying entertainment from the box office point of view. Of course, the farther north one goes, the less thing are affected by these war measures."

A picture theatre of 1,800 seating capacity is to be erected soon in Torrington, Connecticut, by Rossi C. Cabol.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

U. S. Lifts Export Ban for Time Being

Allows 2,000,000 Feet of Film to Be Shipped Abroad Without Examination Following Committee's Visit to Washington

HELD UP by the decision of the treasury department to censor all films for export, 2,000,000 feet of film finally were permitted to be shipped without examination last week when a committee of film men went to Washington and explained what a disaster the ruling would be if enforced without advance notice.

The committee also learned there was nothing definite yet in regard to an order from the Committee on Public Information requiring one reel of educationals with every five reels of fictional matter for foreign distribution.

The committee consisted of Paul H. Cromelin, David P. Howells, Sidney J. Garrett, Reginald Ward, P. A. Powers and Millard Johnson.

Their clear presentation of the practical aspects of the case convinced the government officials that there should be an immediate modification to the extent of allowing all films now held up to be exported. The attitude of the Government toward future exportations remains to be determined when the merits of the questions involved have been more carefully considered by the department.

The committee conferred with members of the War Trade Board as well as with Treasury officials.

When the committee met these officials it was found that the government officials responsible for the ruling were determined upon carrying on censorship. Mr. Cromelin explained that if the order requiring customs censorship before application for export license were rigidly enforced it would result in bankruptcy for firms which would be required to employ much capital, which would be lost on prints subject to rejection by the customs censors. The contractual relations involved were explained, as well as the practice of granting rights for the display of films in a particular territory.

The merit of the statement made by Mr. Cromelin's committee so impressed the chief of the customs bureau and the War Trade Board officials that they decided to allow waiting film to be shipped, and telegrams were sent from the treasury department in Washington to the different collectors or customs permitting these shipments to go forward.

Ralph Ince, Sawyer and Lubin Organize

Producing Company to Be Known as "Associated Pictures, Inc."—Films Designed to Fill Want in State Rights Field

FOR THE PURPOSE of producing the Ralph Ince Film attractions, Herbert Lubin, Arthur H. Sawyer and Ralph Ince have formed a company that will be known as Associated Pictures, Inc.

The forming of Associated Pictures, Inc., marks the final step in the completion of the plans of the Lubin-Sawyer-Ince combination. Louis Joseph Vance is now nearly done with the initial story and it is expected that the camera will begin turning within the next two weeks.

In a statement concerning the plans of the organization, Mr. Sawyer says:

"The pictures bearing the brand name of 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions' will consist of big melodramatic stories dealing with subjects whose entertainment value has been fully tested. We believe that the combination of Ralph Ince and Louis Joseph Vance should make for the production of extraordinary screen offerings, inasmuch as the latter is conceded to be the foremost American writer of modern melodrama, while Ralph Ince is past-master in the art of injecting thrill and 'punch' into picture plays of a virile nature.

"Casts of players, whose names will faces will be immediately recognized by followers of the motion picture and stage, will be assembled to interpret each story, and we feel that the series of 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions' which are to be produced will answer the ever-increasing demand of the state rights buyer for 'better productions.'"

New Swedish Film Company

A new film company has been organized in Sweden which will be the largest in that country. The new concern will take over Hasselblads Film, with its facilities for taking pictures in Göteborg, and also Pathé Fréres' branch business throughout Sweden.

Many Fox Pictures at Front

William Fox pictures are being shown in dugouts behind the trenches in France, according to Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez, assistant editor of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, in a statement which has been issued from the Fox offices.

Messengers mounted on motorcycles are braving German shot and shell to carry the films to the dugouts, declares Mrs. Dessez, who adds, that if they were humanized they could not follow the flag more faithfully than they do.

"The films of the Fox Film Corporation sent to France to be shown for the American soldiers in the trenches and training camps," Mrs. Dessez says, "far outnumber those of any other company The fact that the Fox Corporation has control of the foreign rights on pictures shown abroad does away with much red tape and considerably facilitates the task of the Community Motion Picture Bureau in providing entertainment for the American troops."

The Community Motion Picture Bureau is conducted on behalf of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., under the supervision of the Commission on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departments.

Sherry Gets Alexander

William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, announces that one of the latest accessions to his forces is William Alexander, recently with Fox. Mr. Alexander spent about two years abroad, opening Fox exchanges. He will have general supervision of the Sherry exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle, with assistants in charge of the individual offices.

Another new Sherry acquisition is A. L. Widner, who probably will manage the Kansas City exchange. B. F. Lyon, now temporarily manager of the Cleveland office, will be the Pittsburgh representative and Walter L. Lieb will take charge at Cleveland.

Mr. Sherry now has offices in Chicago, Kansas City, Boston, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Seattle and New York. He will shortly open up exchanges in Buffalo, St. Louis, Atlanta and Dallas.

Mr. Sherry's general manager, N. J. Sennott, has just returned from a tour through the territory between the eastern coast and Kansas City.

Frank Hall Negotiates Large Deals

Makes Arrangements for Wide Distribution of Five Specials and Opens New Headquarters

FRANK HALL, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, whose policy of buying big special productions for cash and renting them to exhibitors through independent exchanges has resulted in the acquisition by the U. S. of some of the most important special pictures of the past year, has just closed several large deals of unusual interest.

The U. S. plan of distribution aims to force each production to stand on its own merit and make a profit dependent only on its box office value. An efficiently operated exchange in each territory is selected to offer the productions to exhibitors, while an extensive advertising campaign is carried on by the home office, introducing each picture independent of the other U. S. subjects and continued at intervals during the life of the picture instead of being limited to only a few weeks before the release date as in the case of program offerings.

The new deals consummated by Mr. Hall include new arrangements for the distribution of Tom Ince's "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay"; Sidney Olcott's "The Belgian"; Julius Steger's "Just a Woman," and the initial Authors' Film Company offering, "The Crucible of Life." Among the prominent exchanges with which arrangements for the handling of the various pictures have been completed, are the following:

New York, Liberty Distributing Corporation, all U. S. subjects; New Jersey, Frank Gersten, Inc., all U. S. subjects; New England, Globe Feature Film Company, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," "The Belgian," "Just a Woman"; Eastern Feature Film Company, Inc., "The Crucible of Life" and all future releases for one year; Eastern Pennsylvania, Max Milder and John Hennessy, all U. S. productions; Western Pennsylvania, Quality Film Corporation, all U. S. productions and all future releases for one year; Michigan, Dawn-Masterplay Company, Inc., all U. S. productions; Indiana and Illinois, Doll-Van Film Corporation, all U. S. productions and future releases for one year; Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia, Super Film Attractions, Inc., "Just a Woman," "The Crucible of Life"; California, Nevada, Arizona, Hawaiian Islands, All Star Features Distributors, Inc., all U. S. productions and future releases for one year.

While Mr. Hall will continue to buy pictures upon the open market, he is also contracting for twelve special pictures to be made by two prominent directors during the coming year. His plan calls for the purchase and distribution of twenty-four pictures in the next twelve months and he promises an interesting announcement regarding these productions in the near future.

Elaborate offices on the third floor of the Longacre building overlooking Broadway and 42nd street, New York, have just been fitted up by Mr. Hall as the headquarters for his new activities.

Apfel Talks of Script

Oscar C. Apfel, World director, is a three-in-one man in the screen world today. He is a master of technique and mechanical effects, he knows how to handle his players in a way that gets the best results, and he can write or adapt a story to suit his purpose if one is not otherwise available.

Oscar Apfel.

"Getting good stories is the hardest part of the business," says Mr. Apfel. "These are tense times and the creators of picture drama must learn that audiences care more for wholesome, sane, human little things of everyday life than for so-called 'spectacles' and distorted glimpses of life as it isn't.

"As for adapting 'best sellers'—how many do we have at the present time? —Six, or possibly eight. We need a new story every week. Best sellers and magazine stories are not always suitable. Many of our best books are merely epigrams—bright conversation, extremely interesting to read, but nothing to screen. I firmly believe in picturizing good books, but it's a crime to mutilate them until the author's idea is entirely lost.

"Generally speaking, I prefer long stories for the screen. As a rule they are more artistic, more worth while to an audience and are popular with all classes of people. And I believe in allowing any story all the footage it requires. Even in a small town a good feature is often shown two days in succession and that's a real test—because small town audiences are the real critics."

Get Fine Doris Kenyon Posters

Some of the most beautiful and artistic posters ever gotten out for a motion picture have been contracted for by De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and the William L. Sherry Service for Doris Kenyon's first production at the head of her own company, "The Street of Seven Stars."

The artistic trend of the photoplay will be fully maintained in the posters, lobby display material and all other exhibitor helps, of which an unusually large and varied assortment has been contracted for. Original drawings by two famous artists, Haskell Coffin and Charles Chambers, will be used.

An intensive and nation-wide publicity campaign has been inaugurated, which will include many of the foremost publications.

While it has not been definitely decided upon, Mr. Sherry expects to release "The Street of Seven Stars" on June 30.

Bara Picture Nearly Done

Theda Bara is nearing completion on a new super-production at the Fox studios in Hollywood.

"The Message of the Lilies" is the tentative title of the picture, but this is to be changed, it is understood. The story was written by Betta Brueil and the scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon. J. Gordon Edwards is directing.

Start on Four Jester Comedies

Work on the four Jester comedies that will make up the first year's output has commenced. This will bring the releases in complete form up to and including January, 1919.

Seiter to Direct Twede-Dan

William A. Seiter, the director, has been engaged by the Jester Comedy Company to direct Twede-Dan, "the international mirth maker."

Notes of the Industry In General

BRIEF NEWS OF NEW YORK IN PARTICULAR

New York

THE two enterprising spirits of General Enterprises, Inc., Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, have been observed recently dining at Delmonico's and the Biltmore on two successive days. The attitude of mystery assumed by these successful exploiters of "The Warrior" and "Mother," when questioned regarding the impressive looking strangers with whom they were seen eating tends to the belief that General Enterprises, Inc., may be "starting something." Oh yes, Ralph Ince was also present.

James E. MacBride, president of the New York Municipal Civil Service Commission, has tendered his resignation to Major John F. Hylan, to take effect before July 1. Mr. MacBride is to take an executive position with the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. MacBride, who formerly was a newspaper man, was in charge of the publicity of the Business Men's League, which conducted Mr. Hylan's campaign for Mayor.

Frances Marion has signed a contract to write for Artcraft and Paramount for a year. During the past year Miss Marion has written almost exclusively for Mary Pickford, and among her notable recent successes have been "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Stella Maris," "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Ally," "M'Liss" and "How Could You, Jean?"

Lila Lee, the new fourteen-year-old star of Paramount pictures, recently announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left New York for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, where she will start work immediately on the first of the series of productions in which she will be starred under the terms of her five-year contract.

Director Travers Vale, who is now engaged on a big World Picture, has been named as a member of the advisory board, division of films, Committee on Public Information. Charles S. Hart is the director of this division.

A Unit of Red Cross nurses, passing through New York on their way to France, were the guests of Manager Edel of the Strand Theatre the other day.

Virginia Pearson, Fox star, who has just completed work on "Her Price" at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn, recently delivered a patriotic address before an audience of 15,000 soldiers at Camp Upton, Long Island.

Los Angeles

AT the first meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture War Service Association, William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, was unanimously elected vice-chairman to be in charge of all work connected with the organization east of the Mississippi River. The motion was made by Jesse L. Lasky.

The following telegram from Mr. Fox was read to the committee members by Director J. Gordon Edwards of the Fox organization:

"I have your wire relative organization named Motion Picture War Service Association formed in Los Angeles. I think it excellent idea to mobilize our industry for all war charities and other efforts to win the war. I give my full support to any such worthy movement and will appreciate further details so as to enable me to give it vigorous attention. During recent American Red Cross drive, in which I served as captain of Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team, our industry raised more than $1,000,000, showing plainly that the stage and motion picture are an essential in the winning of the war. Congratulations on the fine spirit of our associates in Los Angeles."

The latest patriotic act of the Lasky studio in Hollywood is the contribution of sets for use in the soldiers' theatre at the Y. M. C. A. clubhouse at Fort Rosencrantz, California. The boys at the Fort had a brand new stage and they were all set to give private theatricals, but the drawback was lack of scenery. Dwane Lyons, who was formerly assistant to Wilfred Buckland, art director at the Lasky plant, heard of their predicament. Lyons is now a member of the anti-aircraft battalion at the fort and he volunteered to put the matter up to the studio people on his next furlough and see if sets could be arranged.

Accordingly he visited the Lasky lot the other day and told Director Buckland and Director General Cecil B. DeMille that the dramatic talent of the boys at Camp Rosencrantz was being held in abeyance because of lack of scenery. The two directors put their heads together and planned and inside of an hour orders had been sent out to the scene construction department to build a complete set of interiors, which will be forwarded to Fort Rosencrantz in a few days with the kindest regards of Mr. DeMille and his associates.

Montgomery and Rock, Vitagraph comedians, have a habit of disappearing when thinking of some difficult business for their Big V pictures. They choose such hiding places as the projecting board near the roof of the light studio, the limb of a pepper tree on the Vitagraph lot, or any other so-near-and-yet-so-far hiding place. They are accustomed to hearing Director J. A. Howe send scouts out in search of them, with the caution:

"They're within thirty feet of me, I know, so look under every box and everything."

Henri D'Elba, the most recent addition to Triangle's directing force, has a new assistant in Dick Oliphant, formerly with the Heffron company. D'Elba, who came to Triangle with several years experience as a director of feature pictures abroad, and has been making a careful study of American methods for more than a year, had William Crinley as his assistant on his first Triangle feature, "Marked Cards." Crinley is now assistant to Director Christy Cabanne, also a new director with Triangle. The title of Director D'Elba's latest Triangle subject is "Alias Mary Brown," a crook story written by E. Magnus Ingleton.

Tom Mix, noted portrayer of Western roles for Fox, who will soon appear in a Sunshine comedy.

Bessie Barriscale has been a very busy young lady since her return from New York in more ways than one. Besides starting "The Rainbow" at the Brunton studios under the direction of Howard Hickman (Mr. Barriscale), she has been very busy finding places in her Hollywood home to put the many things she purchased while visiting her sister in the metropolis. Just at present Bessie doesn't know whether she should buy a larger home or give some of the things away. Right now it looks as if her generous spirit would prevail.

Mary Niles, until recently a stenographer at the Triangle Culver City studios, is now an actress. When President H. E. Aitken took over the active management of the studios he saw Miss Niles on the lot one day and was struck by her beauty. "Have tests made of Miss Niles," was Aitken's order. So well did the tests come out that Miss Niles is now a full-fledged actress and may have a part in the coming production, "The Mayor of Filbert," which is being directed by Christy Cabanne.

Al Ray has not been seen in the handball courts of the Los Angeles Athletic Club for the past week and his disappearance caused quite some comment, as Al makes it a habit to play a few games before supper every day. The reason for Al's disappearance was accounted for, however, when it was learned that he had started to work playing the juvenile in Earle Williams' latest Vitagraph feature and hadn't returned early enough from location to get up to the club.

Alfred Whitman has returned to the Vitagraph studios in Hollywood again after being on location in Northern California for some exterior mining scenes in his latest feature, "A Gentleman's Agreement." Incidentally, Al has forsaken the mining clothes he wore for some of the latest styles in clothes, which he wears during the interior scenes for this feature. He enjoyed his location trip immensely, spending his nights sleeping in the open under tents.

Mary Pickford has commenced work on a new Artcraft feature, "The Mobilization of Johanne," by Rupert Hughes, with William D. Taylor directing. Taylor has not quite finished with his star in "Captain Kidd, Jr.," but as they had to wait several days to get some special sets they required, he decided to go ahead with the new story in order not to waste the time. Doing two pictures at once is quite a novelty for both Mary and Taylor.

Jack Cunningham, one of the well known script writers of the Los Angeles colony, had a picture on at the New York Rialto during the past week, "More Trouble," starring Frank Keenan, was the picture, and those who knew the story previously will recognize the script, due to the fact that Mr. Cunningham effected the commendable change of injecting a treatment which took away the curse of an obvious plot, on which many of our scenario writers fail to make good.

Gloria Hope has purchased a touring car and has been spending the last few days trying to master it. She thought she had progressed far enough to invite her sister for a ride the other day and the sister eagerly jumped at the invitation. But when she saw Gloria put the car in reverse instead of low, and almost back through the rear wall of the garage, she remembered a very important letter she had to write—and Gloria went riding alone.

Herbert Howe, who handled the fan-publicity for the Vitagraph Company at the latter's New York office, is heard from in the tank service at Camp Colt, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. It was Mr. Howe, too, who, as an exhibitor, though just a boy out of school, first saw possibilities in Charles Ray and Louise Glaum. His theater in a middle west city exploited these two stars all of two years before their respective companies put them on the trail to stardom.

H. Tipton Steck, ten years production manager for Essanay, has come to Universal City to take over the management of a newly created department, that of the reconstruction bureau, which has as its work the "making over" of scripts. Mr.

Steck is the adaptor of "Graustark," "The Man Who Was Afraid," "Primeval Strain," "The Golden Idiot," "Gift o' Gab," "Get There Hawkins" and "Hawthorne of the U. S. A."

Following close on the heels of the gymnasium, plunge and tennis courts for Triangle employes, O. L. Sellers, in charge of the Culver City studios in the absence of President H. E. Aitken, is making another improvement. Two reading and lounging rooms, one for women and the other for men, are being decorated and furnished. All of the current papers, magazines and motion picture trade papers will be kept on hand.

Ora Carew took a party of friends down to Ocean Park, Sunday, to enjoy a special fish dinner that she had prepared for them there and at the end of the meal even Mr. Hoover could not find the slightest bit of waste. Ora refuses to state who ate the most, but says that they all did their share, and that the meal was such a success that another one has already been planned for the near future.

Claire DuBrey has resumed her dancing again now that she has moved to her spacious summer home at Venice. Dancing is Claire's hobby and when she gets time away from the studio she makes the most of it by donning her dancing costume and starting to work. Between swimming and dancing Claire always keeps in perfect health and says that she has yet to hear of a better recipe.

Edward Sloman is getting along very nicely with his new story, "Beauty to Let," in which he has Margarita Fisher as his star. This is the first time that Sloman has ever directed Margarita, having been piloting Mary Miles Minter previously. He has some ideal locations picked out which have never been photographed before and which he thinks could not be improved upon.

Henry King is rapidly putting the finishing touches on the third William Russell feature, "Hobbs in a Hurry," at the American studios in Santa Barbara, and hopes to complete the picture by the end of the week. King would have finished earlier, but Russell's foot was injured during the taking of a scene and King was compelled to go along without his star's service for several days.

Lloyd Hamilton expects to commence work on a new comedy for the Fox program in a few days. The story is being whipped into shape by the scenario department and "Ham" is out scouting for a new outfit, or several of the same kind, as he has ruined on an average of two suits to every picture. He will again be seen without his famous mustache, but will stick to his character of "Ham."

Ethel Clayton, one of the new stars in the galaxy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has arrived in California in her limousine, accompanied by her brother, her dressmaker and a chauffeur. The trip from New York was made by easy stages and, though enjoyable, was uneventful except for a brief struggle with Iowa mud, from which the big car was extricated by a tractor.

Ashton Dearholt threatens to go back to his home town, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and start a school of motion picture acting should the war conditions further affect the Los Angeles film colony and make things hard for good-looking young leading men, such as Ashton. At present he is serial king in "The Brass Bullet'" at Universal City.

Gerald C. Duffy is the new publicity man for the William S. Hart studio. Mr. Duffy but recently came to the coast from New York. Though but little over twenty-one years of age, for the past four years he had been the editor of Pictureplay magazine. His father was a well known magazine writer and was a chum of O. Henry.

Billy Patton, one of the Triangle's daring cowboys who works under Cliff Smith in western thrillers, has a broken hand. He was dragging his hand on the ground when his horse stepped on it, according to his own confession. The accident took place during the filming of some scenes in the latest Triangle western, "By Proxy."

"The Rustlers of Wind River" is the title of the Bluebird feature in which Monroe Salisbury is being starred at the present titme. Monroe plays another Western character in this play, and befriends the homesteaders against a band who try to drive them out of the state.

Charles Ray has returned to the Ince studios after enjoying a four weeks' vacation after finishing his latest Paramount feature, "The Humdinger." Charlie expects to start in a day or so on a new feature, the title of which has not as yet been decided upon.

Edna Earle gives a good demonstration of western riding in the forthcoming Universal feature, "The Eagle," in which she plays opposite Monroe Salisbury. Miss Earle had her early training in the management of horses in Texas and Oklahoma.

Among the distinguished visitors at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood last week was Captain Richard Pearson Hobson, hero of Santiago. Captain Hobson has been speaking in Los Angeles on "America and the War."

William Duncan, director and star of Vitagraph western serials, claims to have thrills thought out which he will not get to, by way of puttting them into production, until almost a year from now. That surely is what one might call "futurist" thought.

Alice Brady, Select star, as she appears in her June release, "The Whirlpool."

Seventy-five members of the Thomas H. Ince organization have joined the army and navy to date. The Ince studios contributed nearly $200,000 to the Third Liberty Loan and $50,000 to the Second Red Cross Fund.

William Russell will be host to James Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Company, which releases the William Russell productions. Mr. Sheldon will arrive in Los Angeles within the next week.

Eddie Ring Sutherland has joined the Canadian Royal Flying Corps and has already left to take up activities in this branch of the service. He is known in filmdom as a juvenile leading man and also the nephew of Blanche Ring.

Will M. Ritchey is still on the search for a story for Mary Miles Minter, and has spent the greater part of the week reading manuscripts.

Here and There

TEN members of the Vitagraph distributing organization entered the service of Uncle Sam during the last ten days, seven branch offices giving men to the colors. Burt King, manager of the Vitagraph branch in New Orleans, was called into service in the midst of a campaign on "Over the Top." Among the others were G. E. O'Brien and J. J. Doherty of the Dallas office, C. H. Zerner, salesman in the New York branch; Frank Klose, cashier of the St. Louis office; J. E. Beck, assistant branch manager at Cleveland; Martin Niederberger and Harry Pape of the shipping department at the Chicago office; George Meyers, assistant bookkeeper at Chicago, and H. Donald Reyes of the Washington office.

"A Little Journey Thru Nevada" made its initial run before a packed house at the Rialto Theatre in Reno, on July 15. The film, containing 7,806 feet, is the first produced in Nevada in its entirety, and though of the travelogue character it contains enough action and scenes of historical interest to give it a place among the historical films. The picture was filmed under the direction of Hale Ayres, formerly of the Premier Company of California. It has been booked by every theatre in Nevada and after being shown throughout that state will probably be released for general distribution. It took Ayres five months to complete the picture.

The Al Jennings Production Company has been incorporated in Phoenix, Arizona, for $200,000. The officers named are: Al Jennings, president; B. F. Robbins, Chelsea, Oklahoma, first vice-president; Harry K. Shields, Glendale, California, second vice-president; Frank H. Jennings, secretary and treasurer. These men also are the incorporators.

Latest News of Chicago

OF INTEREST TO ALL THE TRADE

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra, one of the Saxe theatres in Milwaukee, took a group of Chicago picture critics to that city last Saturday to see his theatre, to hear the community singing, which is an unusual feature of its program, and to show them how Milwaukee does things. The party consisted of Kitty Kelly of the Chicago Examiner, Oma Moody Lawrence of the Chicago Evening Post, Beatrice Barrett of the Exhibitor's Trade Review and Genevieve Harris of MOTOGRAPHY. Ann McMurdie, photoplay editor of the Milwaukee Journal, and Helen Ryan of the Milwaukee Sentinel were also included in the group.

Under the leadership of Mr. Fischer and Miss Henryett Luscher, who handles publicity for the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, the writers visited the Alhambra, Miller, Princess and Theatorium theatres. Then Mr. Saxe took them in his car to Waukesha Beach for dinner, stopping en route to say "Howdy" to Flossie A. Jones of the Colonial and Auditorium theatres in Waukesha.

The community "sing," which is under the direction of Fred Carberry each evening, and in which the entire audience of the Alhambra joins, proved an entertaining and truly inspiring feature. Its fascination indirectly added a true "movie" thrill to the day, for the guests lingered so long that they missed the train they "simply must get" back to Chicago. But Mr. Saxe came to the rescue with his car and in a wild race overtook the train, giving the critics of Helen Holmes' daring a chance to experience some of her sensations. Mrs. McMurdie insisted that to be "real movie stuff," Mr. Saxe should have been arrested for speeding, but the others breathed a sigh of thanks that he was not. Anyway, it was a wonderful day and Mr. Saxe and Mr. Fischer demonstrated completely that they know how to entertain either theatre audiences or personal guests.

L. A. Roselle came back from his New York trip full of enthusiasm for the new World Pictures and the new plan under which they are now produced. "Before a picture is made in the World studio," said Mr. Roselle, "a conference of all directors is held. The picture is planned out in detail before a scene is shot. The public taste is taken into consideration in every way, because the aim is to please the public. Clean subjects of the type the average person likes are chosen and the director best suited to each particular play is chosen. I don't see how the coming World pictures, made under this plan, can help hitting the public favor."

Joe Farrell comes from the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, to become Harry Miller's assistant in the managing of the Rose, Alcazar, Boston and Acme theatres. "Debs" Miller, Harry's brother and former assistant, is now in Toronto, on his way "over there" with the Canadian forces. "Debs" had been rejected by the American army on account of physical disability. When he heard of the wounding of a boyhood friend with the American army in France he determined to get over some way and show the Huns how he felt about it, so he joined the Canadians.

Miss Katherine Melcher, who has been playing the organ for the big feature pictures at the Auditorium the last few weeks, this week began a permanent engagement at the new Woodlawn Theatre. Miss Melcher is one of the best organists in the city. Previous to her Auditorium engagement she played at the Kedzie Annex Theatre, Kedzie avenue and Madison street, for several years. Last winter she attained much prominence by her work in the fight against the music tax.

Jackson J. Rose, head camera man of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, after working for the past year on his new invention, the "Cinema-Trycycle," has finally obtained a patent on the contrivance. The "Cinema-Trycycle" is a minature auto truck with a flat top, six feet square, with an electric motor. The machine will start slowly and will attain a speed of fifteen miles an hour, and can be used both in the studio and for exterior scenes, for long shots and following scenes at close range.

H. A. Spanuth, president of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has now completed five of his first "Vod-A-Vil Movies." The following Chicago theatres have contracted for the series: Drury Lane, Casino, Woodlawn, Twentieth Century, Harper, Vista, Shakespeare, Karlov, Atlantic, Halsted, Hub, Ziegfeld, Star, Calo, Roseland, Twentieth Century (Prairie avenue), Howard, Franklin, Strand and States.

"The Bluebird" was enthusiastically received at the new Woodlawn Theatre, where it ran for two days. Part of the proceeds were given for the purchase of a flag for the third regiment of the Illinois reserve militia, the members of which are recruits from the South Side. The colors of the regiment were on display at the theatre and a formal presentation was made at one of the evening performances.

T. W. Chatburn has received a wire from Walter W. Irwin announcing that the home office had viewed six episodes of "A Fight for Millions," the next Vitagraph serial, and believed it excelled anything in the serial line ever offered. The entire fifteen chapters will be complete before the first is released. If they live up to the first six, box-office records are going to be smashed in the fall, Mr. Irwin believes.

Max Levy is offering $25 a day for a man who will impersonate the Kaiser during the week "To Hell with the Kaiser" is shown at the Playhouse. So far no one has volunteered for the job. It isn't as dangerous as it sounds, for he will be enclosed in an iron cage and further protected from the mob by two soldiers and two sailors, who will guard him faithfully.

Nino Marcelli, conductor of the orchestra for D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" and "Intolerance," has been summoned by the government and is now connected with the base hospital in Camp Grant. Mr. Marcelli is known as a conductor in Italy, France, and Russia. He has given up an earning power of $8,000 a year for patriotic duty.

The Woodlawn Theatre issues an attractive and ambitious weekly program. It has a distribution of 5,000 weekly and is well supported by neighborhood advertisers. E. J. Ryan, head of the publicity department of the Woodlawn, edits it. Mr. Ryan has been in newspaper and magazine work for the past twenty years. He is one of the founders of Photoplay Magazine.

"Hearts of the World," the Griffith masterpiece playing at the Olympic, goes into the Colonial Theatre June 24. The theatre has been leased from Jones, Linick & Schaefer and the picture will be handled by the same staff as at the Olympic.

Billy West was in town last week. The comedian made a personal appearance at the Circle Theatre, West Madison street, to a large and excited crowd. He expects to return to Chicago soon and will appear at Harry Miller's houses.

F. W. Redfield, who has been assistant manager of the Milwaukee Vitagraph exchange, is now T. W. Chatburn's assistant in Chicago, and W. R. Van Courtland, who held that post, has been transferred to Milwaukee.

Four hundred days' bookings in the Chicago territory for showings before July 30 is the record for "Over the Top." Every district in the city has been closed. The feature is exceeding all expectations the Vitagraph Company had for it.

The motion picture censorship club of Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, at a meeting recently, decided that pictures shown in Chicago and passed by that board were not suitable for Oak Park, but must be still further censored.

The stores and offices in the Pantheon Theatre building have been completed and many of them occupied. Work on this new Lubliner & Trinz house is progressing, and it will be ready for the public early in the fall.

F. Mahin, private secretary to M. E. Smith of the George Kleine offices, has enlisted in the navy and gone to the Great Lakes station for training. His associates gave him a farewll dinner at the North American.

Fred Hartmann is in New York working with the men who have charge of the coming exposition and convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to be held in Boston, July 8 to 15.

Aaron J. Jones accompanied Samuel Goldfish to New York early last week, and finding one ride left on his commutation ticket, used it for a return passage to Chicago Saturday.

Complete Record of Current Films

BROUGHT UP TO DATE EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

WID SAYS:

"I certainly would advise you to play A Pair of Sixes, featuring Taylor Holmes, and if you have already played it once, I would play it for a return. . . . Anyone who has seen it will recommend it to their friends—which should make a return engagement profitable.

"It is one of the few farces that is clean, smooth, well produced and truly funny. . . .

"You are doing yourself an injustice if you don't get this."

Goldwyn's Supreme Achievement

MARY GARDEN
IN THAIS

by Anatole France

Directed by Frank H. Crane

Released throughout North America December 30

GOLDWYN has the unusual honor of introducing for the first time to the millions of devotees of the photo-drama this exceptional dramatic artist in a production from a story by one of the foremost figures in the literature of the world. In "Thais" Mary Garden is the thrilling, electric, vital personality of flesh and blood—the daring, sensational, unusual woman who constantly challenges the attention of the world; the artist who is the most-admired genius of our time.

A Prediction:

MARY GARDEN is receiving more publicity, more attention from the critics, more attention from all classes of the public, than any star who has ever been presented in your theatre.

"THAIS" is the one production of recent years that is so certain in its box-office appeal as to justify you in playing it for double the time you ever have given any other picture.

MITCHEL H. MARK, president, and Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre, who have as their New Year's week attraction at one of the world's greatest amusement institutions, Goldwyn's remarkable presentation of MARY GARDEN in "THAIS," make this unusual announcement:

"We know of no picture with which Mary Garden in 'Thais' can be compared and we expect to break every attendance record of The Strand with this unrivalled production."

And Still More:

ASCHER BROS., Chicago, telegraph: Mary Garden in "Thais" will prove the greatest attraction ever offered patrons of the screen. It is the most remarkable production of the year and we offer our congratulations.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM, of Philadelphia, one of America's greatest exhibitors, writes: "Thais" is perfect to the smallest detail. Mary Garden and the production are both wonderful. "Thais" is an artistic knock-out.

SERVICE

NEVER was a word more abused—and misused.

Every quack who has had anything to sell, from thumb tacks to automobiles, has employed that word "SERVICE" in some form or other.

In the film business service means a whole lot. It means first—picture quality, measured by the power of a production to fill a theatre, second—it means the proper delivery of film, and third—it means co-operation in connection with exhibitors' aids, publicity and especially systematic, fair and square methods of doing business.

The Triangle code defines service as "SATISFACTION"—pure and simple.

If the above is true, let's apply it to Triangle and see where we come out.

Triangle is buying the best stories that are available, realizing that a good story is the foundation of a good picture. This is the one element of a successful picture that cannot be eliminated.

Triangle is producing its pictures at the best equipped studios in the world where every facility is available to insure high quality production. These studios are efficient manufacturing establishments, where waste is eliminated and every possible economy practiced. The entire cost of a production always appears on the screen.

Here is what S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theatre, New York, has to say about Triangle productions: "It gives me
